Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from Oregon had done me the honor to listen to my remarks yesterday, he would have found the whole subject of lifeboat handling had been treated. The first requisite is that there shall be an officer on the bridge who handles the boat in a proper way. It is necessary that the boat be headed toward the wind and the waves. If it is not, a boat which is lowered will meet waves dashing against the side of the ship, and no effort in the way of lowering it can be successful.

We must take into account that there are a number of qualifications required for the handling of lifeboats. First of all, the mechanism at the top, the lowering, the meeting of the sea, skill in rowing, whether in a heavy or a light sea. I have studied that subject somewhat thoroughly. When you have a gale of 40, 35, or even 30 miles an hour it is exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to handle a lifeboat. No one has insisted more strongly than I have on general boat drills both in the harbor and at sea and in all kinds of weather. Most of that work is necessarily done in the harbor, because there boatmen can gain more practical familiarity with the mechanism, with taking off the boat, with letting it away so that it shall go down to the water evenly without spilling out the occupants. In addition to that, they should practice rowing in all kinds of weather, rough weather as well as smooth. They should also become familiar with their stations.

Competency as a lifeboat hand is not a question of three years' service as a seaman; it is based on physical capacity and drill. That is what makes a good lifeboat hand. If a man is muscular, has courage, and has had the practice which enables him to handle a boat, then he will be a good lifeboat hand whatever title you give him. If he lacks those qualities, he will not be. In the conditions which exist in our merchant marine the stewards, the firemen, and others of that class are much more constantly with the boats, so that the drills, to which all should be subjected and in which they all should take part, can be enforced with them better than with any of the others. The letter from which I was reading proceeds to say:

I respectfully request that you offer an amendment to the present seamen's bill making it compulsory that members of every department on a steamer shall be compelled to drill both in fire and lowering of boats, and that every member of the crew shall be assigned a station in case of accident or fire, and there should be a penalty attached to those who do not comply.

Have you given any thought to the fact that if the present bill passes as it reads, that 60 per cent of the day outing and excursion boats will be put out of business, owing to the fact that they were not constructed to carry this heavy weight of so many lifeboats on the upper deck? As you know, most of them are side-wheelers and are operated in shallow water, and they must be light in construction. It is this class of boats that give the working and the middle class a day's outing at a very reasonable fare, and if the bill is passed 60 per cent of the people now employed on the Great Lakes would lose their positions. I therefore respectfully request that you insist upon the Great Lakes being excepted from the bill.

Mr. President, this bill puts an ocean-going steamer, or one crossing the ocean, on the same footing with a boat that goes no more than 5 miles from land; it puts a boat which never goes in water deeper than 20 or 30 feet, or even less, where the hull would not be submerged, on the same footing with a boat that in its voyage sails over water 20,000 feet in depth.

This has been a very perplexing and difficult problem. Our supervising inspectors in their various meetings each year have taken it up and prepared the most careful regulation covering it. They make certain exemptions in the summer season; they provide for the use of rafts in certain seasons of the year and in some localities for boats in other seasons; they grade their requirements according to risks, and do not attempt to make universal regulations which shall be applicable in all places. This bill would apply to Lake George and to Lake Champlain, to excursions which simply round the corner in going from New York to Coney Island, to boats which go across from the piers in New York City to Sandy Hook, having an enormous traffic with New Jersey, a line on which, I believe, there has never been an accident, and on which the boats are of the very best construction. There would be three obstacles which would be fatal to compliance with the provisions of this bill—first, the number of men required—that is, perhaps, not the most important; second, the place for the stowage of the boats on the deck; third, the weight which would be created by placing these boats on the deck.

There has been much discussion between German and English experts in reference to the places for the stowage of lifeboats.

On some of the German boats the smaller boats are placed on the second deck from the top. The English experts of the board of trade have rather opposed that plan, first, on the ground that the boats could not be quickly handled, and, second, because in a high sea the water would come up so high that they could not readily be lowered.

Why, Mr. President, what does this substitute attempt? It seeks to wipe out all the regulations of these many years and to substitute a standard of requirement that has been repeatedly considered and repeatedly rejected. While it is true there have been casualties which we all deplore, nevertheless the operation of our merchant marine has been attended by a degree of safety in travel unsurpassed by rail, by foreign steamers, by sailing vessels, or by any other means of transportation in the world.

I wish to call attention briefly to the question of the control of foreign ships in American ports. If there is any one thing that is clear in this decision in the Wildenhuis case, it is that the Supreme Court regards international law as giving to the foreign boat the control of the relations between the master and the seamen, under the jurisdiction of its consuls.

Chief Justice Waite says, in speaking of this subject:

From experience, however, it was found long ago that it would be beneficial to commerce if the local government would abstain from interfering with the internal discipline of the ship and the general regulations of the rights and duties of the officers and crew toward the vessel or among themselves. And so by comity it came to be generally understood among civilized nations that all matters of discipline and all things done on board which affected only the vessel or those belonging to her, and did not involve the peace or dignity of the country or the tranquillity of the port, should be left by the local government to be dealt with by the authorities of the nation to which the vessel belonged, as the laws of that nation or the interests of its commerce should require.

If there can be any plainer language than that in the enunciation of the general international law on the subject, I should like to hear it. The learned justice proceeds:

But if crimes are committed—

This was a murder case, where one man had killed another—

But if crimes are committed on board of a character to disturb the peace and tranquillity of the country to which the vessel has been brought, the offenders have never by comity or usage been entitled to any exemption from the operation of the local laws for their punishment, if the local tribunals see fit to assert their authority. Such being the general public law on this subject, treaties and conventions have been entered into by nations having commercial intercourse, the purpose of which was to settle and define the rights and duties of the contracting parties with respect to each other in these particulars, and thus prevent the inconvenience that might arise from attempts to exercise conflicting jurisdictions.

I read this yesterday, Mr. President, but some Senators are now here who were not here then, and I now repeat it, because the plain language of this judicial decision has been interpreted in a way which it will in no way justify.

It is said that treaties and conventions have been made affecting this matter. We have made a treaty or convention providing that—

Consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, or consular agents shall have exclusive charge of the internal order of the merchant vessels of their nation, and shall have the exclusive power to take cognizance of and to determine differences of every kind which may arise, either at sea or in port, between the captains, officers, and crews, and specially in reference to wages and the execution of mutual contracts. Neither any court nor authority shall, on any pretext, interfere in these differences, except in cases where the differences on board ship are of a nature to disturb the peace and public order in port.

Now, we have made that kind of a treaty, and yet without any notice of abrogation or any consultation with the other Government, without even putting a clause in this bill that the treaty is to be abrogated, we are proposing a regulation under which the wages, which by their contracts are paid at the end of the return voyage or wherever they please, shall be paid in the United States, no matter what the contract may be, and that the courts of the United States shall be open for the enforcement of that rule. Whether there should be in force such a rule as that is not the question. Right here we are riding roughshod over the provisions of this treaty, without so much as a note of warning even in this bill itself.

As I interpret it, there is still an even worse provision than that. It will be noted, beginning at the top of page 16, in section 12, the substitute bill makes the following provision:

Provided, That no vessel carrying passengers, except those navigating rivers and harbors exclusively, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she is provided and equipped with a sufficient number of seaworthy lifeboats to carry and transport at one time every passenger and every member of the crew licensed to be carried on board such vessel and unless she shall have a sufficient crew to man each lifeboat with not less than two men of the rating of able seaman or higher, who shall be drilled in the handling and lowering of lifeboats under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

And on the preceding page it is provided:

Sec. 12. That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 40 per cent in the first year, 45 per cent in the second year, 50 per cent in the third year, 55 per cent in the fourth year after the passage of this act, and thereafter 65 per cent of her deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers, are of a rating not less than able seaman.

Clearly that provision in regard to the proportion of so-called able seamen in the crew of the boat and relating to the requirements for the management of lifeboats applies to foreign vessels. How are you going to find out whether the men are able seamen or not? Either that clause means something or it means nothing. It is evident from the very drastic penalty proposed on the following page that it is intended to mean something, because it is there said:

The collector of customs may, upon his own motion, and shall, upon the sworn information of any citizen of the United States setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section—

That is, having a requisite number of able seamen—

Provided, That the collector of customs shall not be required to cause such muster of the crew to be made unless said sworn information has been filed with him for at least six hours before the vessel departs, or is scheduled to depart.

That is, on his own motion or on the sworn information of any citizen of the United States a boat can be stopped, and, no matter how fast her schedule is, no matter how heavy the penalties are which may be imposed upon her for not starting with the mails at a certain time, up to six hours within the time fixed for her departure the complaint may be made, and the collector of customs shall order a muster of the crew to see whether there is the required number of able seamen on board. How are you going to find out? The provision on page 16 is:

No person shall be rated as an able seaman unless he is 19 years of age or upward and has had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes.

Then it goes on to provide how the status of an able seaman is determined, as follows:

Any person may make application to any board of local inspectors for a certificate of service as able seaman, and upon proof being made to said board by affidavit, under rule approved by the Secretary of Commerce, showing the nationality of the applicant and the vessel or vessels on which he has had service and that he has had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes, the board of local inspectors shall issue to said applicant a certificate of service, which shall be retained by him and be accepted as prima facie evidence of his rating as an able seaman.

Each board of local inspectors shall keep a complete record of all certificates of service issued by them and to whom issued and shall keep on file the affidavits upon which said certificates are issued.

That is, a specific way of determining whether a man is an able seaman or not is provided by making this application and the issuance of the certificate. A foreign vessel comes in to one of our ports. What must it do under this provision? It must compel its seamen, before they can establish their status as able seamen to comply with this law, to take out certificates in the United States under our inspectors, and allege as the basis that they are at least 19 years of age and that they have had three years' service at sea or on the Great Lakes. Does anyone suppose for a moment that any foreign nation is going to submit to any such regulation as that? More than that, is it just that we should demand that no boat shall leave our ports except with a certain number of a specified class, and then prescribe the manner in which that specified class shall be determined by the issuance of certificates, requiring them to have our certificates before we will permit them to go forth?

There is another point concerning this which, however, does not assume very great importance. The German and the Norwegian rule is 18 rather than 19 years; indeed, the world over the majority of the most active sailors are young men. It is stated that on Admiral Sperry's fleet, which went around the world, the average age of the men was only a little over 21 years. I do not wish to express any opinion as to which is the better age limit, but the fact is that the age limit prescribed here would conflict with that of foreign nations.

So that I may not be misunderstood, let me repeat what I have already said, that not a single one of these nations—Germany, Norway, France, England, Russia—has a general requirement like that in this bill for any special proportion of able seamen.

Among the great maritime nations this bill, if passed, would be the first regulation of the kind. I want to add in this connection that it would be utterly impracticable to obtain the men. What is the condition of our merchant marine regarding service at sea? The work is not of a type which affords a pleasing prospect to the average American, whether he be native born or naturalized. After a few years of service, certainly after three years, they seek some better positions. In the same length of time that you provide in this requirement for able seamen a man can apply for a license as mate of a vessel or to be an engineer. As I stated yesterday, in one year less than is provided in this requirement for an able seaman—that is, in two years—if a man is on a river or on inland waters he can apply for a license as a mate.

It would be utterly impossible to tell how many men we have; but I wish to read from a memorandum by Mr. Chamberlain, the Commissioner of Navigation, in a report that he made last year on a similar bill:

On June 30, 1911, excluding vessels on western rivers, there were 24,143 documented vessels of the United States. How many of these are employed in navigating other rivers exclusively I can not determine. Probably 20,000 would come within the section as I understand it. I can not determine the deck crews of these 20,000 vessels, which range from 1 to about 40. The bill, however, will probably require about 40,000 certificated able seamen 90 days after its passage. In April, 1911, the British census showed, excluding masters and mates, 36,927 able seamen, or those of higher ratings, including quartermasters, boatswains, carpenters, etc.

That is, with their enormous merchant marine, far and away in the lead among all the nations of the earth, the British have only 36,000 able seamen, and that, too, under a system which has been in vogue for a great many years, under which they give certificates to able seamen. We have had no such system. We have had no such classification.

The bill as it passed the Senate last winter provided for a classification of that kind, so that we might make a start, if it were thought desirable, to require that a certain number of able seamen should be on every boat. If the system works well, it might be best, although these other maritime nations have no such requirement, that we should have it. But here you are proposing in this bill a requirement which it is estimated will require 40,000 men of a certain class, and yet you do not have a single man certified for that purpose.

Does anyone suppose for a minute that you are going to find it possible within 90 days to carry out the provisions of this bill, or within a year, or even two years? Your men, when they serve a year or two, and especially when they serve three years, are going out into some other line or calling. They are not going to stay by the sea. It is true that in England, and especially in Norway, and in Germany as well, there live a class which follows the sea generation after generation—father, son, grandson, all of them. But in this country the son of a sailor, under the beneficent opportunities that are afforded by our public schools, studies for some other position more to his taste. Perhaps he becomes a lawyer; perhaps he becomes a merchant. We have no such class of sailors to draw from, and you can not obtain them.

I make the statement with the utmost confidence that if you pass this bill, or any such measure, you can not enforce it. You will not be able to get the men. It will not be a question of wages; it will, I say, be a question of men. You will have a law providing that a boat shall not leave a port, except in a river, or when it plies inside a harbor, unless it has this proportion of able seamen, which you can not find even if you should look to the four quarters of the earth. The Germans could not find them for their boats. The English could not find them for their boats. It would be far and away more difficult for us to enforce this law upon our ships, and it would not only be out of comity with other nations, but it would be imposing on them a regulation with which they could not comply.

That shows the danger of framing bills in accordance with an ideal, or introducing a bill or a substitute for it that is based on the contention of one side only. The subcommittee took up this matter last winter, and every member gave it the most elaborate attention. I think I am safe in saying that no one argued more strenuously than our colleague who is now absent, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], that this provision could not be enforced.

There is a provision in the Nelson bill to the effect that there must be a sufficient number of men to interpret the orders given on a boat. It makes the same general provision as the proposed substitute, that 75 per cent must be able to understand the orders of the officers. As I recall, "75 per cent in every department" is the provision in the bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I read the language:

Not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel.

Just what that means probably would be a matter for the executive department, and perhaps ultimately for the courts to determine. Does it mean that a man in the fire department must understand the language of the captain and his orders? Does it mean that a man in the steward's department must understand the language of the chief engineer?

It is very desirable that all the men on board a boat shall speak the same language, just as it is desirable in our rolling mills that all the men shall understand English perfectly. But such has been the tremendous growth of our industries and the scarcity of men that there are thousands of persons in our furnaces and iron mills handling red-hot ladles who do not understand English. So rapidly has our whole industrial and commercial population increased that we are bringing in great numbers of those who at best only partially understand our language. I should be glad to see some change effected, so that the men in those mills will not have their lives endangered by a sudden emergency.

The committee considered that matter, and I will say with the utmost frankness that they had more doubt about it than some other provisions in the bill. There was one consideration that weighed considerably with us. We wanted, if possible, to preserve the American flag on the Pacific Ocean in the trans-Pacific trade. I have always opposed ship subsidy as strenuously as anyone in the Senate; but there are, I believe, only five or six ships left that sail to the mainland of Asia from the western coast of the United States. They are placed in sharp competition with a great Japanese line, which, as stated yesterday by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], receives a very large subsidy. They are also competitors with the Canadian Pacific Line, which receives a very considerable mail payment. They do not call it "subsidy," perhaps; they prefer to call it by some other name. Our boats, on the other hand, do not receive a dollar of subsidy. All these other boats have oriental crews, outside of the officers.

There are some pretty good reasons for that. In crossing over to Hongkong, under this bill, you could not have in the fire department a Japanese or a Chinese fireman unless he understood the English language. In a part of that trip the temperature is exceedingly severe—so severe that the Caucasian, certainly the American, will not perform the work. Indeed, he can hardly endure it. These Chinamen—and they are not of the small type that we are accustomed to see engaged in the laundry business and similar occupations in our own country—were put upon the boats as stewards, as furnace men, and as sailors.

Take the case to which I have referred, that of furnace men. Without an exception, every single line employs these orientals because they can better endure the heat. Our American transports tried for a while to have native Americans or Caucasians in the fire department, but they continually had trouble and were forced to give it up, and to-day they are using Filipinos for the purpose.

In view of all these things—the disadvantage at which our boats are placed in competition with others and the kind of work to be done—the committee thought the adoption of this provision as it stands in the substitute would drive our flag out of the trans-Pacific trade. I for one do not like to take that responsibility.

What would be the result of the adoption of this provision? The six boats engaged in the business on the Pacific no doubt would be forced to withdraw. The traffic, both freight and passenger, between the ports of the Pacific coast and the Orient would be turned over very largely to the Japanese. I can see one town that would benefit very much by it, and that is the town of Vancouver, in British Columbia, where they have no such regulation, where they will still allow boats having Chinese firemen and Chinese crews to come in, and to which the boats which otherwise would come to Seattle and Tacoma and Portland would go instead.

Mr. President, it is not a matter of a language test on boats. The skilled sailor can understand what is desired by a few words. When the Titanic was in extremis there was such a rush of steam that, at least at one time, in manning the lifeboats none of the crew could hear the words of the officers, but they were directed with just as much certainty as if he had spoken to them in a language that they understood. I do not know what sort of tests would be adopted.

Right in this connection I may say that it would require a very large force to carry out this bill. Our collectors of customs are asked to ascertain whether this 75 per cent of the crew understand the orders of the captain. I have the highest opinion of our collectors of customs, but I do not believe a third of them could understand, if all spoke English, the orders which the captains and masters gave to their crews, and much less if the officers spoke another language. What are you going to do? Put in a great force of interpreters, and thereby determine whether the crew understand the language of the officers? It would be vesting a great degree of discretion in persons who are not qualified, however excellent their abilities may be, in a matter of this kind.

I repeat that I do think it most desirable that so far as possible the language of all should be the same; but in view of the conditions of trade on the Pacific and on some portions of the Atlantic I do not believe it will be practicable or will afford encouragement to our shipping to enforce this rule in the form in which it appears in the substitute bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERN in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. In reference to that requirement regarding the language, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the substitute no reference is made to the language. There is nothing said there about requiring a certain percentage of the crew to understand the language of the officers. It simply requires that there shall be 75 per cent in each department able to understand any order given by the officers.

Mr. BURTON. Yes. That, of course, implies, however, an understanding of the language.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was in Senate bill 136 that we inserted the word "language."

Mr. BURTON. Yes. I think it is better to have it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me the point the Senator is making applies rather against the provision of Senate bill 136 than against the provision of Senate bill 4 or the substitute.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so, because the requirement is sweeping and absolute in the case of Senate bill 4, but is not in the other.

Mr. FLETCHER. It says, "understand any order given." The Senator has just said that orders may be given without a word being spoken.

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. As in the case of the Titanic, orders were given where no one was heard, but they were given by signs and by signals. I am inclined to think that if the order is understood that is the main point to gain, without reference to whether the crew understands the language of the officer giving the order.

Mr. BURTON. I thank the Senator from Florida for the suggestion. It is, however, manifest that this provision in Senate bill 4 would be much more severe and much more difficult of application; but the Senate committee in considering it did not feel justified in leaving out all reference to the language. There should be some understanding of the language and there should be picked men to act at any time in case of emergency.

Mr. President and Senators, I want to call attention to one thing in this bill which shows the way in which it is drawn, as I think, with regard for only one side. On page 9 of the substitute, as now pending on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, and in subdivision 6 is the following in the list of punishable offenses by seamen:

For assaulting any master or mate by imprisonment—

And so forth.

All agreed that discipline should be enforced on board the boat, but it was suggested that it was just as serious an offense to assault an engineer or a chief steward as it was to assault a mate. Indeed, in the fireroom, farther removed from the open space on deck, there would be stronger probability of a seaman or sailor assaulting an officer. So it was proposed by the committee that those words be changed to assaulting "any master or licensed officer," thinking that without that this bill could not be made complete. I see the word "mate" is retained here in the substitute.

Now, when there is a provision which looks the other way let us see what is done. On page 11, section 4611 of the Revised Statutes is to be reenacted in this form:

Flogging and all other forms of corporal punishment are hereby prohibited on board of any vessel, and no form of corporal punishment on board of any vessel shall be deemed justifiable, and any master or other officer thereof who shall violate the aforesaid provisions of this section, or either thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than two years.

In the one case it is the master or the mate. They are the only persons for whom, if attacked, punishment can be inflicted. In the other case, where the offense is against the subordinate on the boat, then it is the master or other officer, which will include not only the master but the other licensed officers and the petty officers on board. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that that is quite fair, that it is keeping the scales quite equal.

Another thing. After long discussion, the Senate committee thought it just to insert a provision to the effect that punishment should be provided for attempting to prevent anyone from seeking employment or to prevent anyone from remaining with the boat by threat or force. I will read the whole section. It is on page 15 of Senate bill 136:

If any person shall demand or receive, either directly or indirectly, from any seaman or other person seeking employment as seaman, or from any person on his behalf, any remuneration whatever for providing him with employment—or shall by any threat or force dissuade or prevent or endeavor to dissuade or prevent any person from taking employment on board any vessel, or shall by any threat or force dissuade or prevent or endeavor to dissuade or prevent any person from remaining in the service of any vessel on which he has shipped, or by any threat or force induce or compel any person to disregard or disobey any lawful order or orders of the master or other licensed officer of the vessel on which he is shipped he shall for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500.

In order to maintain discipline, in order to secure the departure of boats on time and without undue delay, it was thought desirable to impose a penalty not against mere persuasion but against threat or force.

Mr. President, let me read the law with reference to those who seek to get men on the boat, and it has been the law for some years. It is found on page 61 of the Navigation Laws of the United States, edition of 1911, punishing those who induce anyone to go on board.

Whoever, with intent that any person shall perform service or labor of any kind on board of any vessel engaged in trade and commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or on board of any vessel of the United States engaged in navigating the high seas or any navigable water of the United States, shall procure or induce, or attempt to procure or induce, another, by force or threats, or by representations which he knows or believes to be untrue, or while the person so procured or induced is intoxicated or under the influence of any drug, to go on board of any such vessel, or to sign or in any wise enter into any agreement to go on board of any such vessel to perform service or labor thereon; or whoever shall knowingly detain on board of any such vessel any person so procured or induced to go on board thereof, or to enter into any agreement to go on board thereof, by any means herein defined—or whoever shall knowingly aid or abet in the doing of any of the things herein made unlawful, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Why should you have a penalty in one case and not in another? Our laws should be fair to all. If force or threat or causing a man to be intoxicated or inducing him by misrepresentation to go on board a boat is an offense, then there should be an equal penalty for the use of force or threats brought to bear to get him off the boat or to induce him to disobey orders on board ship.

In all these matters our sympathy naturally would be with the seamen, but it is a question as to what is fair and equitable in a system of law covering this subject, that it may be just and uniform in its relation to all classes. I insist we are not justified in making this an offense in one case and refusing to make it an offense in another.

There is one point to which I will not call extended attention, but to which I wish to refer for a few minutes, that I think disproves the idea that the main object of this proposed substitute is the safety of life. In the bill as it passed the House there was a section known as section 14, on page 26. I mean the bill as it passed the House and came to the Senate on the 5th day of August, 1912. It is as follows:

That towing of more than one barge or other vessel 50 miles or more through the open sea is hereby prohibited, unless such barges or vessels so towed are provided with sail or other motive power and a crew sufficient to manage such barges or vessels.

The section then provides a severe penalty.

Mr. President, there has been no one kind of navigation in this country in which the proportion of loss of life has been so large as in the navigation of barges. We all know what happens. A tug may go out with barges attached. They may be schooners no longer in use as such. They may be barges specially constructed. If a storm arises it may be necessary to cut them loose, and, unless there is motive power on the barges, sail or otherwise, and a sufficient crew, the result of this cutting loose is certain death. The committee were ready to report upon this feature of the measure when from various influential quarters protests came against it, the advocates of the bill abandoned this clause, and it was dropped and a very harmless provision was substituted.

First, let me show the loss of life that has happened on these schooner barges. The number of barges lost in 1911 was 35, the number on board, 33; the number of lives lost, 11.

In 1906 the number of schooner barges and barges lost was 40 and the number of lives lost 27.

In the six years there was a loss of 234 and a loss of life of 121.

In no other department of our navigation—river, lake, or ocean—has the proportion of loss been so large as in that. Let us see what we have in this bill regarding that.

SEC. 16. That the owner, agent, or master of every barge which, while in tow for 50 miles or more through the open sea, has sustained or caused any accident, shall be subject in all respects to the provisions of sections 10, 11, 12, and 13 of chapter 344 of the Statutes at Large, approved June 20, 1874, and the reports therein prescribed shall be transmitted by collectors of customs to the Secretary of Commerce, who shall transmit annually to Congress a summary of such reports during the previous fiscal year, together with a brief statement of the action of the department in respect to such accidents.

This provision, which came in here so ambitiously as the means for promoting safety of life, was boiled down to statistical information.

I do not wish to detain the Senate much longer, but I desire to file as an exhibit a list of losses of vessels. The available statistics on this subject for foreign countries are not altogether satisfactory. I will go over, briefly, the list of losses of our own merchant marine, beginning September 16, 1903. This was furnished by the Supervising Inspector General's office. It seems to me it can not be altogether complete, but I file it, especially because it shows the kind of casualties, the causes of the loss of life, and the causes of wrecks.

September 16, 1903, the tug Spartan was lost on Browns Shoal, in Delaware Bay; cause, foundering; loss of life, 2.

May 5, 1903, steamer Saginaw, Atlantic Ocean, off coast of Maryland; collision with steamship Hamilton.

October 19, 1903, steamer South Portland, near Cape Blanco, Oreg.; struck rock and beached.

Then, going over the list, the steamer Clallam foundered with loss of 50 lives.

The next struck a reef. It will be noted here that the main cause of wrecks or losses is collision either with another vessel or what is the same, if you may call it a species of collision, running on a rock or running ashore in time of fog or storm.

Next to that in frequency, the loss of vessels is caused by foundering. The Lloyd list for all boats of a thousand tons gross or more lost for the year 1907 shows 273 boats.

I want to have this printed in the RECORD. It will be interesting to note that of this number 6 were abandoned at sea; there were broken up and condemned, 1; burned, 17; collision, 40; foundered, 35; not classified, 3; missing, 19.

Then comes a very general subdivision, which diminishes somewhat the value of the figures: Wrecks, stranding, rocks, and so forth, 152. But these figures go to confirm the general statement that I made, that the principal cause of wrecks has been running on another object, either a collision or a rock or stranding on shore; next to that comes foundering. Next to that perhaps fire is one of the most dangerous of all calamities under modern conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio ask to have the paper referred to incorporated in the RECORD?

Mr. BURTON. There are two papers—a list of wrecks of vessels of the United States since 1903, and the general list, which is a summary of a list in Lloyd's for the year 1907.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, without objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. BURTON. I have already partially referred to the injustice of this bill in making no distinction between boats which sail close to land and boats which go long distances at sea. Such regulations would certainly do away with a large part, indeed I am not sure but a major part, of our excursion traffic. In this connection I received the following telegram from Put-in-Bay, Ohio:

Put-in-Bay's commercial life depends absolutely on the excursion business. If the La Follette seaman's bill is passed, it will prohibit the operating of all excursion steamers on Great Lakes, as they can not carry and man full lifeboatage as required by this bill. These excursion steamers should be classified with river and harbor excursion steamers instead of ocean-going vessels. We look to you to see that bill is amended along lines of Senate bill, which is fair.

S. M. JOHANNSEN,
President Put-in-Bay Board of Trade.

I read from a telegram from the Sandusky (Ohio) Business Men's Association:

This association most earnestly urges you to vote against the La Follette seaman bill. If this bill goes through, it would prohibit the operation of all excursion steamers and would paralyze excursion business out of this port.

THE SANDUSKY BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATION,
J. C. HAUSER, Secretary.

It may be asked, Is there not great danger in those cases? Are they not liable to be caught in a storm? Mr. President, if a gale of 40 miles an hour is blowing, and I think I might say correctly 30 miles, they do not go out of port at all. They go only for very short distances, for the most part through shoal water, where the hull would not be submerged, and, too, only a very short distance from land. But this bill makes just the same regulation for that class of boats that it makes for a boat going on a voyage of 6,000 miles. There is no distinction between an excursion steamer that goes 2 miles, 10 miles, and 20 miles, and one that goes around the globe. What kind of a bill is that? Is that fair? Is that going to do any good? Is that practical? No.

I shall offer, in the first place, an amendment which I wish to have clearly understood. I offer it because there was a difference of opinion among Senators as to what this clause on the second page meant. It will be noticed that there is a provision here on page 2 of this proposed substitute:

Seamen serving in one department of a vessel shall not be required to do duty in another department.

That clearly means that no one in the steward's or engine department shall be called upon for fire or lifeboat drills. It means a separation of the functions of the different portions of the crew—stewards one, firemen another, and sailors still another. It was maintained that that does not prevent the drilling of the stewards. I think it clearly does.

Now, let us have an understanding about that, and in order to make it clear I offer an amendment. I think perhaps it might be drawn in longer form, but in order to make it perfectly clear I am going to introduce it in the fewest words possible. It is to insert, after the word "limit," in line 13 of page 2, these words. I refer to line 13, page 2, of the substitute bill: "The obligation of the crew to take part in boat drills and fire drills, or," and then strike out the word "either," making it read:

But these provisions shall not limit the obligation of the crew to take part in boat drills and fire drills or the authority of the master or other officer.

I have drawn that in somewhat longer form, but in view of the fact that only a few Members of the Senate will perhaps be present while it is being discussed, I thought best to present it with such brevity that everyone could understand it. I think it would be better to insert after the word "limit" the following—or you can put it also after the word "jeopardy," in line 19:

And all members of the crew, including officers and members of every department, shall participate in regular lifeboat and fire drills, which drills shall be subject to regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and by him enforced through the Steamboat Inspection Service, and every licensed officer who refuses or neglects to take part in such drills according to said regulations may have his license suspended or revoked, and every other member of the crew who willfully refuses or neglects to engage in such drills in accordance with such regulations shall be subject to the same penalties, as are provided for violations of the fourth subdivision of section 4596 of the Revised Statutes as amended by section 6 of this act.

That, Mr. President, is a more complete form, and I prefer it; but in view of the situation and the attendance I am disposed to use the shorter form.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Ohio criticizes the substitute in that it does not make a distinction sufficient between a long-distance trip and a short-distance trip, and between lake service and sea service and river service and other service. I would like to say that it seems to me he pressed that point of it too much.

If the Senator will remember the case of the General Slocum, which, I think, went down between New York City and Coney Island, and was in reach of the land all the time, and in sight of it all the time, he will remember that those people huddled together upon that boat, upon a pleasure excursion trip, as I remember it—though my memory is not perfectly accurate about the way the accident occurred, it having occurred seven or eight years ago—and they died like rats in a burning barn, with bulldogs around keeping them in the barn, and they died because there were not enough—

Mr. BURTON. Life preservers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Life preservers and enough lifeboats and enough boats of other sort to take them off the ship. If the Senator had ever been upon a Mississippi River boat in the middle of the stream when the boat caught afire, and caught afire in the engine room, where it usually catches afire, he would conclude that being in sight of land did not have much to do with this problem.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, first I wish the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to this: Is he aware that the Slocum was sunk in a place near Blackwells Island, and that a boat in that locality would have been exempt from the regulations of this bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I say frankly I was not aware of that.

Mr. BURTON. This bill would not cover a case like that of the Slocum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not aware of that.

Mr. BURTON. Is the Senator also aware that the Mississippi River is exempt from the provisions of this bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That merely proves that the Senator's criticisms are more wrong than I thought. The bill, instead of going too far in the way of protecting those who are traveling upon the Hudson and the Lakes and the Mississippi, does not go far enough.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, that may sound very well; but everyone who has had experience in navigation knows that it is utterly fallacious. What was the cause of the great loss of life on the Slocum? Probably they could not have saved a hundred of them by the use of boats. It was near to land. Those who were on board would not have sought boats to save their lives. They would have sought a life preserver or some such device. If there had been an attempt to lower a boat with that crowd, it would have ended in a panic and the swamping of every boat. You can not talk with an inspector who has had experience in these matters and has studied them but who will tell you that. Everyone knows that the loss of the Slocum was due to miserably improper life preservers, a fraud amounting to a crime, and, further, that their life preservers were not of a proper type.

I take it from the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi that he would put on every one of the boats on the Mississippi River a number of lifeboats. Does the Senator know that you could not carry the number of boats required here without danger of capsizing and sinking a Mississippi River boat? If you put them in the only place available, they would tip the boat over. Does the Senator know that if this requirement in regard to lifeboats as it applies to ocean steamers were carried out on the Mississippi it would make such a boat so top-heavy that it would be in danger, I may almost say, of foundering?

We might perhaps build a boat on a different model, but it would be less speedy and more difficult to manage, and would by no means answer the purposes of modern navigation.

The problem in regard to these excursion boats is not a new one. It is merely obscuring the issue to bring up such a case as that of the Slocum, and is especially obscuring it when this substitute, as offered here, would not have covered such a case. Every life that was lost in that disaster would have been lost if this bill had then been a law, because the accident was not only in a river but it was in a harbor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I dislike very much to take issue with the Senator from Ohio, who has made a very much longer, and, I take it for granted, that, with equal ability, he has made a very much abler study of this question than have I, although I have been interested in it for some 18 years; but the object of this bill is to safeguard human life at sea. That is one of its objects. I merely called attention to the fact that the bill did not go too far in that direction. The Senator from Ohio reminded me of the fact that the bill did not go far enough, and immediately upon his reminding me of it I recognized the fact.

It may be true that upon river craft life preservers ought to be substituted very largely for lifeboats; but whatever is necessary to safeguard human life ought to be required by legislation. If it were necessary to safeguard life upon river craft and in harbor and upon excursions, that there should be a larger number of life preservers rather than a larger number of lifeboats—that is, a larger number of things enabling the individual to get to the shore in sight rather than to enable a whole lot of people to get into a boat and keep at sea until picked up—that does not disturb at all the argument or the point which I was trying to make. On the contrary, it reinforces it.

The Senator from Ohio has said something about obscuring the issue. It is the Senator who is obscuring the issue, not I, and not those who are advocating the position which I take upon the pending bill. At almost the very last moment we are confronted with international questions that have nothing to do with the merits of the bill outside of our international relations, and then we are confronted with arguments about the fact that this bill would not protect life upon river craft and in harbors. That has nothing to do with the question that we are trying to protect life upon the deep seas and elsewhere. With that amount of deference which I owe to the Senator from Ohio from long acquaintance with him in both Houses and from long acquaintance with the fact that he is a careful student of all public problems, I hazard the opinion that it is not I, but he, who is obscuring the issue.

Mr. BURTON. I do not know, Mr. President, whether the stenographer's report will show that I said the bill obscured the issue or that the Senator from Mississippi obscured it; but whatever the discussion here, it was claimed that there was a very strong reason for passing this bill because of the Slocum disaster. The Slocum disaster would have occurred under this bill and could not at all have been prevented by it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, if the Senator will pardon me a moment for one more suggestion, the Slocum disaster would not have occurred even under the law as it then existed if the law had been obeyed.

Mr. BURTON. That is the whole fact of it. The disaster was due to the lax enforcement of the law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. And, indeed, from what the Senator from Mississippi has said it seems to me he does not differ greatly from what I have argued, in that he lays stress on the importance of providing for the individual by life belts or life preservers, rather than by lifeboats.

But why is it that you are putting these short runs near to shore in shallow water on the same footing with an ocean voyage and exempting boats on rivers and harbors from the regulations provided by your bill? It is altogether unfair.

I shall offer another amendment in this connection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator from Ohio offered an amendment?

Mr. BURTON. I say I shall offer an amendment. I am merely reading it now, but I shall offer it later. I propose, on page 16, line 2, of the so-called La Follette substitute, after the word "rivers," to insert the words "lakes, bays," so that the clause will read:

Except those navigating rivers, lakes, bays, and harbors exclusively.

The bill is not fair or equitable unless you do that. This amendment aims to place one class of navigation on a certain footing, while another class, the over-sea and long-distance class, is placed upon another footing.

Now, just a word further. One inference might be formed from the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] which would be altogether incorrect. It is this, that we have failed to pass laws in regard to life preservers and in regard to safety at sea. Why, Mr. President, we have passed laws on that subject as strict as those on any statute book in the world. I think I may say further that their enforcement by our inspectors and their assistants has been as good as in any nation in the world—indeed, I do not know but better. We are at the very fore in that regard. Two things are alike to be avoided: First, that which touches us most nearly, avoiding disaster and loss of human life, and, over on the other extreme, to avoid making your regulations so strict that boat traffic is not only hampered, but even destroyed. When we learn of an accident on a railroad we do not forbid trains running, we do not stop people from traveling on railroads, but we adopt the most perfect safeguards which can be enforced without destroying traffic or unduly hampering the operation and management of railroads. But this substitute aims at a class of business where, in these localities, for years there has not been a loss of life. It imposes such restrictions that it will be impossible to comply with them.

Mr. President, I believe that I have said all that I care to say, and I should now like to ask for a vote on my proposed amendment on page 2, line 12, after the words "shall not limit," to insert the words "the obligation of all the crew to take part in boat drills, fire drills, and so forth," and to strike out the word "either."

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words bearing directly upon the pending subject. I do not know anything about what effect this law will have upon our international relations. I do have an idea, however, that if we do not guard this measure well we will become involved in international disputes. I think that it is a matter of great importance that we should do nothing which we are not justly entitled to do in our general business and friendly relations with other nations. I even go further. I fear that if we are not careful we shall cause this Nation to become engaged in considerable international difficulties. Some of the other nations are very jealous.

The nations who breed good sailors breed good fighters, and they are men who resent interference with their method of doing business. A nation which has good able seamen, as I have said, is a nation which has good, strong, able-bodied men, and they are jealous of their rights. I hope, therefore, that we shall take good care of that portion of this bill and see that we do not give unjustifiable offense to any nation.

In relation to the matter of manning ships and lifeboats, however, I have been considerably interested in the arguments which have been made on the floor of the Senate. I have gone over the side of a ship in the open sea with the lines paid out by sailors, and I know something about that. I have crossed in on a beach from the open ocean through the surf and have gone back out through it again. I have pulled a boat into the suds and headed her into the wind in a heavy sea—not in the open sea, but in harbors that were not much protected. I know something about that; and the logic which is in evidence here in this case in the discussion of this bill by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is interesting, to say the least.

Attention has been called to the wreck of the Slocum. The Slocum was an excursion boat. If you have love for your wife and your children—you might send your wife on an excursion, you know, for sometimes you do not get along with her well—but if you have love for your children, keep them off of an excursion boat, for such boats are notoriously ill fitted for the saving of life in case of a disaster. The Slocum lost hundreds of passengers for the reason, if you please—and I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact—that she did not have enough lifeboats aboard of her to care for her passengers.

Mr. BURTON. What is that?

Mr. LANE. The Slocum lost hundreds of her passengers for the reason that her lifeboats were ill equipped and ill manned; they went over the side with the plugs out of them, and they went down like lead and drowned every passenger that was aboard of them. They were a fraud and a snare and caused the loss of the lives of hundreds of people who would never have been lost if those lifeboats had not been aboard the Slocum. Those who tied life preservers about their bodies and went over the side went down to the bottom like plummets, for the reason that the life preservers contained no cork. After they passed the inspection, which the Senator from Ohio has called attention to, and were registered as good and sufficient safeguards for life, it was found on subsequent inspection that they were filled with dead, hollow, decayed cork or with tulle, if you please; and any gentleman who has gone over the side of a ship with a tulle life preserver under his arms as a means of consolation has had food for thought, and not a great time in which to expend it, as his time is short. Tulle will not hold you up very long when it gets into the water—more particularly a dead and 3-year-old tulle. If you get young and new last year's tulle, it will last you six or eight hours in the water, but tulle that has been bound up in a piece of canvas for five or six years will not last long under your arms out at sea or even in fresh water. It will not last as long in fresh water as it will at sea, for the reason that sea water is more buoyant. Every person on the Slocum that had life preservers under his or her arms or who tied one under the arms of a poor little babe or a child whom he pitched into the sea to save it from the fire, in the hope on the part of its mother or its parents that it might float into the hands of a boatman, with its life preserver put on by the Government inspectors of this country, went down to its grave in the bottom of the river, and the father and mother, if they had known what was going to happen to their child—

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President—

Mr. LANE. No; I have the floor now, if you please. If they had known what was going to happen to their child, in merciful kindness to it they would have knocked it on the head and spared it the horrors which followed. Now I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. As regards the loss of the Slocum, I am not familiar with the details—of course, the fire was an important feature—but I think it is universally conceded that the essential feature of that disaster was insufficient and fraudulent equipment.

Mr. LANE. It was.

Mr. BURTON. And that there had been carelessness on the part of the inspectors.

Mr. LANE. Indeed, yes; gross carelessness.

Mr. BURTON. But we have profited by that frightful lesson. There were criminal prosecutions, the captain, I believe, being sentenced for a considerable term. I know something of the work of the inspectors at this time, and I am satisfied that no insufficient equipment would get by them.

Mr. LANE. The Senator has called attention to one other feature of this bill wherein it is made obligatory that a sailor shall not be called upon to do other duty. The Senator is of the opinion, apparently, from what he has said, that that would prevent the captain or the first mate or the second mate or the third mate, or anyone in command of the vessel in the absence of the captain, from calling upon a sailor or a fireman or a cook or a cook's helper or the cabin boys to do boat duty in case of fire or in case of a wreck. The sailor has no such idea in his head. The able-bodied seaman is a man who has learned his profession, the same as an attorney or as a physician has learned his profession, by experience and by study. He resents being required to do duty for which he is not qualified, and he has asked that this provision be put in the bill to keep him from being called upon to stoke fires in the hold of the ship or to do duty as a waiter, or something of that sort. That is all that provision means; it means nothing else, and the sailor asks for nothing else. I know that for the reason that I have been aboard ship many times, and I know what the sailor's duty is and how he resents having to do duty for which he is unfit.

Calling attention to the matter of drills, the Senator thinks that if a ship the crew of which has been drilled, in a harbor for instance, in the handling of boats goes to sea, a fireman or one of the waiters aboard the ship or one of the men from the steward's department can handle a lifeboat as well as an able-bodied seaman, and can lower a lifeboat away from the side of a ship in a storm as a sailor knows how to do it. That is absolutely out of the question. The best trained crew of freshwater oarsmen will make fairly good oarsmen at sea—much better than the landlubber, much better than the inexperienced greenhorn hand—but he has not had the experience and knows nothing of the water in comparison to the able seaman or the man who has been raised about a harbor or near by the coast and has worked in his youth as a fisherman or a boatman about a harbor. It is an entirely different proposition. Even the matter of putting an oar into the tholepins or into rowlocks in rough water is an entirely different proposition from shipping an oar in still water. In still water you merely slip the oar into the rowlock and commence your stroke, but in rough water, with the boat pitching so that you can hardly sit in her, with a 10 or 12 foot oar that weighs 40 or 50 pounds on the scale, water-soaked and water-logged, and with the sea breaking about you, it takes a degree of craftsmanship that is gained only by experience to know even how and when to ship an oar into the tholepins, when to hold the oar out of the sea, and when to dip it into the water. A green hand will "catch a crab" every time; and "catching a crab" means that he puts his oar into the water at the wrong time, the end of the oar comes back, hits him in the breast, and throws him out of his seat. If it threw him overboard it would be a godsend to the remainder of those on board, but it throws him onto the oarsman behind him, interferes with his stroke, and the boat "yaws" and comes about broadside to the sea, upsets, and drowns everyone aboard her.

I have handled a boat; I have pulled an oar in rough water; and I know that it is from experience, and every sailor knows that it is from experience, that skill is gained in the matter of lowering away a boat, if you please, from the side of a ship. There is no drill which you can give to a set of seamen, sailors, firemen, and other hands aboard a ship in a harbor which at all approaches the test which comes to them at sea in a storm or in the case of a wreck with the wind whistling through the rigging at, say, 35, 40, 50, or even 60 miles an hour, if the Senator please.

If this bill could be altered—and I should like to offer an amendment to it, if I had any hope that it might be adopted—so as to provide that the drills and the lowering of lifeboats should be at sea under circumstances in which there was blowing a wind of not less than 25 miles an hour, and then, following the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, that the lifeboats and the davits should be manned by firemen or men from the lower decks and inner cabins, one at each end of the davits to lower away the lifeboat, and then, that it should be made obligatory on the owner of the ship that he should go over the side of the ship in all such drills in the lifeboat manned, as I have indicated, by firemen, by waiters from the passengers' cabin, and by landlubbers, you would hear a howl to change that law raised so quickly that you would hardly have time to consider it. The shipowners would refuse the test and demand able-bodied seamen for every lifeboat.

The outfits which are ordinarily provided for saving life on ships which go down to the sea—I am now making no reference to the "greyhounds," the great steamships which ply between our Atlantic coast and Europe, for the reason that I have not traveled upon them; the only trip that I ever made across the Atlantic was many years ago on the old Etruria, and since her day they have built up a different class of ships; but I am referring to the Pacific, where we take your worn-out ships, the ships which grow too small for the passenger traffic on the Atlantic; we make use of them, and in them we travel up and down the coast, from Lower California up through the North Pacific into Bering Sea and into the upper stretches of Alaska in Seward Peninsula. Upon those ships I have traveled as well as in small boats in and out of harbors on that coast. With those I am familiar, and my remarks apply to those things with which I am familiar. The outfit which is provided for saving life aboard those ships is notorious. The life preservers in many cases are not filled with cork, but most of them pass the inspection filled with tulle, and, as I have said before, tules do not stay long in the water until they become water-soaked.

The Senator from Ohio has called attention to the fact that the use of steam as a motive power has displaced the sailor from the sea, and that in consequence our steamers are now navigated by crews composed in greater part of men who are engaged in making and applying steam and whose vocation keeps them below decks, all of which is true. The Senator claims that this being true, it is unreasonable to expect a steamer to carry a quota of two able-bodied seamen for each lifeboat to be held in readiness to meet a disaster which may never come.

The suggestion opens up a question which is of great importance. It is only on rare occasions in this life that a man really needs either a gun or a lifeboat; but when he does need it, as they say out in the West of a gun, he needs it "most awfully bad." Anyone who has ever tried to pull a boat in a rough sea knows that a person unused to handling such craft is not only useless but actually is a source of danger to others in the boat. He knows that it requires experience to know how to ship the oars into the tholepin or into the rowlocks or to make an effective stroke of the oar. He knows that the first thing an inexperienced hand does is to "catch a crab," and that, not knowing how to feather an oar, he can make no headway against the sea, pull hard as he may; in fact, that he is a nuisance, and worse than a nuisance.

Every sailor knows better than to let one end of a lifeboat go down on the run, as happened in the case of the ship which burned the other day, when a number of women and children, some 50 or 60 in all, were placed in a lifeboat; and, if you read the dispatches, you will remember that the boat spilled every one of them into the sea and that they were all drowned. Why did that happen? It happened for the reason that the men who were assigned to lower away the boat at each end of it, at the bow and the stern, and handle the lines, which run through a block and tackle on the davit, were not experienced seamen, were not sailors, and did not know how to lower a boat one in unison with the other. Skill in such work comes only from experience; it is a species of craftsmanship; it comes from long years of handling block and tackle; it is the result of discipline. A good sailor would no more think of lowering away a boat on a block and tackle in connection with another sailor, or, for that matter, lower anything into the hold of a ship, and pay out his rope faster than his mate than he would think of doing any other impossible thing.

He has been taught from his earliest life, from his earliest experience, that the boat, or the piece of cargo, or whatever he is loading or unloading, must land on what he calls "an even keel." He watches his mate, and his mate observes what he is doing; they lower away steadily, and they sing "Heigh ho" to one another, calling the time in which they lower in unison, just as a musician obeys the wand of the bandmaster; and it is out of harmony for the sailor to let one end of a boat go down "on the run," as they call it. A green, inexperienced man, on the other hand, will take hold of the rope running through a block and tackle, supporting, perhaps, a boatload of people, weighing, say, a couple of tons, and let it go through his hands too fast. When he does that the friction will burn his hands; he will let the rope go faster and faster, and the attempt to hold it will burn his hands until he can no longer stand the pain, when he will let go of it, and one end goes down into the sea faster than the other, and the passengers are spilled into the sea and lost.

It is nothing short of murder to upset a load of trusting people into the sea—women and children as a rule. Think of the law of chivalry which gives the woman and the child the preference, the first place in a lifeboat, if you please, in a wreck, in a storm at sea, which puts the helpless folk aboard this lifeboat, and then sets a couple of landlubbers, a couple of firemen, if you please, or steward's helpers, to lower away that cargo of precious freight into the sea. It must be launched on the spur of the moment, as the side of the ship goes down to meet the water, just at the time it can be gotten away in safety, with a good crew on board to put their oars in the water and lift her out of the way of the vessel. Yet they put two greenhorns in charge of her, and let them go lowering her down. The greenhorn burns his hands, and down goes your family, or the family of some other man, into the depths—helpless, worse off by a thousand per cent than if they had stayed upon the deck.

That is what has happened and what is likely to happen at any time under present conditions. That is why we ask here, and have asked, for experienced sailors. An experienced sailor, when the line runs too fast through his hand and the friction becomes too great, has sense enough to take a half turn around something to check the boat's speed, and he can lower her down on the water so gently that she will not break an eggshell.

It is discipline, it is experience, it is knowing how to lower the boat when she swings clear of the ship and when the side of the vessel goes down to meet the water that makes the difference of your life or your death when you go over the side into a lifeboat.

Do you suppose there is any gentleman wearing shoe leather who could get me aboard a lifeboat to go over the side of a vessel in a storm, with a couple of firemen or steward's helpers to lower me down after I got into it? No, sir. I have been to sea too much for that.* I should like to see the Senator from Ohio make a trip or two of that kind. If he did, he would have an entirely different opinion of this matter, I think.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LANE. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. I take it, from the Senator's description of the consequences resulting from the effort, that the Senator from Ohio might make the first trip, but he never would make the second trip.

Mr. LANE. He would not be back here to tell of his experience unless he had the great good luck to make a grab for a line, or something of the kind, and catch it. If we are going to use lifeboats, what shall we provide about them? The word "lifeboat" is an indefinite description of a small craft which is put aboard a ship to save life in case of a storm. A good lifeboat is a different proposition from an ordinary lifeboat. They are all termed "lifeboats" just the same. The lifeboats which I have been used to, many of which I have seen, and which are upon the majority of ships, are not lifeboats in reality. A good many of them could be more truthfully described as "deathboats," for as a rule they cause more deaths than they save lives.

If people traveling upon ships at sea, human beings who go down to the sea in ships, are to be compelled to depend upon lifeboats for their salvation in case of wreck, then those lifeboats should be handled by men who know every trick of lowering them safely, how to manage them, how to keep their heads up in the wind after they have been launched, when to put an oar into the water and how to do it, and, what is equally important, when not to do it.

A lifeboat in the hands of a crew of landlubbers, in a heavy sea, is a more dangerous thing to be aboard of than would be a plank or a chicken coop, for the reason that neither of the latter is easy to upset, and if it does upset the bottom side is just as good as the top; whereas if a lifeboat upsets its sides are so smooth that they afford no handhold for the man who is trying to use the boat to keep himself above water.

If there are to be no sailors or other men trained to handle lifeboats aboard ships, lifeboats should be kept off ships, and should be no longer held up before the eyes of passengers as a means of safety in the hour of danger. As a matter of fact, since vessels are being propelled by steam, and sailors have become, as it were, a thing of the past, all vessels should be compelled to carry surfboats of the type and pattern used by the life-saving stations—craft which either can not be upset or which will right themselves in the event that they do upset. It is only a reckless disregard of life and a miserly, wretched, murderous economy of money which has prevented the installation of such boats on every ship afloat. Every master of a vessel and every owner of a vessel knows this to be true. Properly equipped with such boats, and with a handy device for launching them, not a soul need ever be drowned from a wreck on the high seas. If a ship should go ashore the chances for safety would be infinitely greater with such boats than they are with the so-called lifeboats in common use at this time. To have a steamer manned with landlubbers or Lascars or Malays, who either can not understand an order or do not want to in time of stress, and who when in peril will take their knives in their teeth and fight for a place on the lifeboats, is a condition of affairs which is dangerous to people who travel on steamers.

I wish to correct a statement which was made here awhile ago in relation to storms at sea where there are heavy seas and combers caused by heavy winds. A heavy wind at sea, a storm at sea, a gale of 40, 50, or 60 miles an hour, kicks up no sea at all, practically speaking. It flattens the face of the sea. It is not the sea that you have to fight so much as it is the force of the wind. The sea comes after the wind dies down, and then you have the pitching and the rolling at sea.

In one of his poems Kipling calls attention to the conditions which exist aboard ships with green hands who are notoriously ill provided with clothing, whose wages are half stolen from them by the process of blood money—leached out of them by shipping agents, and who in the old days ate hard-tack which they had to hammer on the table in order to knock out the skippers before they could eat it soaked in their coffee, who ate salt horse; referring to which state of affairs he sang of—

Grub that would bind you crazy and crews that would turn you gray.

We are 25 years behind in our duty, perhaps, in endeavoring to pass a bill which will relieve that condition of affairs; but I am in favor of it. I do not say anything in derogation of firemen or stokers, for they are men who are useful in their place and artists at it, if you please—men of tireless energy; men of tireless strength and muscle; men who have to stand greater hardships in some ways and have more strain on their physical endurance than does the sailor; but it is a different kind of work. A sailor could not stoke a vessel in the manner in which she ought to be stoked, nor can a fireman do a sailor's duty. It is, as I say, a different proposition.

Two men in a lifeboat are little enough. Barring those provisions in the bill which bring us into conflict, unjustly perhaps, with the rights of other nations, which I hope will be well guarded by the author of the substitute, this bill ought to pass.

I regret that I have taken so much time, but there were certain statements made regarding the handling of lifeboats which I could hardly let go by without a protest.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire at this time to present an amendment, which at the proper time I will offer to the bill. I say I will offer it, because I prefer to offer it at a time when the matter will be more directly before us for action, rather than to offer it now. In other words, I wish to offer it so that it may be voted on at the same time the bill is voted on, as one of the amendments offered to it. I ask that it may be now read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 20 it is proposed to add, as section 19, a new section, as follows:

Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to operate to have the effect to abrogate, annul, or in any manner affect any part or provision of any treaty now in force between the United States and the government of any other nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which will be stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I believe the amendment I offered is the pending amendment. I do not understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio was offered to the amendment which I have pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is offered to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If that be true, Mr. President, I claim the right to perfect the amendment myself, and before other amendments were offered to it I gave notice that I purposed to offer an amendment or two. I have the right, I think, to modify the amendment and to perfect it before it is open to amendment by anybody else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a perfect right to modify his own amendment. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio has not, however, been stated, as the Chair understands.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to inquire if an amendment is pending other than the one I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, who asks the privilege, which, of course, he has, of modifying his amendment. The Chair announced that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio had not been stated. It will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 13, in the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, after the word "limit," it is proposed to strike out the word "either" and to insert the words "the obligation of all the crew to take part in boat drills and fire drills, or."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as I stated at yesterday's session, the last three sections of the substitute as offered by me are not in the form in which the seaman's bill passed the House of Representatives at the last Congress, that being the measure which I have introduced at this session, and which I have offered as a substitute. I modified the bill as it passed at the last Congress, and as I reintroduced it at the beginning of this Congress, to the extent of striking out the last two sections—sections 14 and 15—and substituting for them sections 14, 15, and 16 of the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce at this session. I did that because those provisions dealt with the matter of treaty relations in a more elaborate way, and I hoped to harmonize some interests and secure some additional support for the measure by taking so much of the bill as it had been reported by the committee. Those provisions had been dwelt upon at great length by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who had reported the bill. So I adopted them and incorporated them in the amendment which I have offered as a substitute. I did not observe that they were defective in two respects.

As reported from the committee, section 15, as it appears in the substitute, in its reference to treaties, refers only to treaties containing provisions regarding desertion. Of course, the bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Commerce dealt with many other matters of importance as to foreign vessels which are the subject of convention between this country and foreign countries. Therefore, if the committee had intended to make the provisions of their bill effective as to anything except deserters, they would have provided that the bill should not be limited in its application to treaties that dealt with desertion. In other words, they adopted a provision regarding treaties that destroyed many of the provisions of their bill which seemed to give some of the needed concessions to the seamen of the country.

In order to make the last three sections of the proposed substitute meet every requirement of the preceding sections of the bill, I wish to propose two amendments. I will state them both together, because they will be better understood in that way, and then will call for votes upon them separately.

On page 18 of the proposed substitute—I think I have the right copy; there have been so many prints made that I am not absolutely certain, but I think I have, and I beg to be corrected by the Secretary if I have not—on page 18, line 23 of section 14 of the substitute, the pending amendment, after the word "imprisonment," in that line, I propose to insert "and any other treaty provision in conflict with the provisions of this act," so that the section will read, if amended, as follows. I will read down to where this amendment would be inserted in order that Senators may see the application of the amendment.

SEC. 14. That in the judgment of Congress articles in treaties and conventions of the United States, in so far as they provide for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of the United States in foreign countries, and for the arrest and imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and the Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment—

Now I come to the amendment—

And any other treaty provision in conflict with the provisions of this act ought to be terminated, and to this end the President be, and he is hereby, requested and directed, within 90 days after the passage of this act, to give notice to the several governments—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). The Senate has heard the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin. All those in favor—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will just follow that with another amendment as to the notice that will, when taken with this one, perfect these provisions. I will not divert the Senate now from the consideration of this amendment if it is ready to vote upon it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator has a right to incorporate that modification in his amendment without a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands. It is only a modification of the Senator's own amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With that privilege, I send this matter to the desk. I will say to the Secretary that the references at the top of the page are to a different page. I had a different print of the bill before me when I drafted it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Wisconsin modifies the amendment offered by him on October 16 by inserting, on page 18, line 23, after the word "imprisonment," the words "and any other treaty provision in conflict with the provisions of this act."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, Mr. President, as to section 16. I think any Senator reading that section will agree that it is a bit obscure in its phrasing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the Senator offered the amendment which provides that no provision in the bill in conflict with any treaty shall take effect until after the expiration of the period fixed?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is just what I have in hand now. I will say to the Senator that I was just going to offer that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I propose to modify my amendment, on page 19, by striking out all after the comma, on line 23—

Mr. BURTON. What is that?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 19 I propose to strike out all after the comma, on line 23, to the end of section 16, on line 3, page 20, and insert the following:

Except that such parts hereof as are in conflict with articles of any treaty or convention with any foreign nation shall take effect as regards the vessels of such foreign nation on the expiration of the period fixed in the notice of abrogation of said articles as provided in section 14 of this act.

I send that to the Secretary's desk, and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Wisconsin further modifies his amendment, on page 19, line 23, after the words "its passage" and the comma, by striking out the remainder of the section, and in lieu of the words stricken out inserting the following words:

Except that such parts hereof as are in conflict with articles of any treaty or convention with any foreign nation shall take effect as regards the vessels of such foreign nation on the expiration of the period fixed in the notice of abrogation of said articles as provided in section 14 of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does that conclude the modifications which the Senator desires to make?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not quite.

In line 13, page 16 of the proposed substitute, as a part of section 12, after the word "Commerce," I propose to insert:

Provided further, That the board of supervising inspectors be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to prescribe rules and regulations, to be approved by the Secretary of Commerce, to provide, in harbor and at sea, for lifeboat drill and fire drill to be held for the training of the crew in fighting fire, in abandoning the vessel, and in caring for the passengers, and to provide for the assignment of each passenger to a particular place in the lifeboat, said assignment to be made at the time the person is taken aboard the vessel as a passenger, who shall thereupon be informed of such assignment. Every failure to comply with the rules and regulations authorized by this proviso shall, upon conviction, subject the master or the vessel to a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $200. The provisions herein with respect to lifeboat drill, fire drill in training the crew and in fighting fire and in abandoning the vessel, in so far as the same relates to such drill at sea, shall not apply to vessels of foreign nations; but as to foreign vessels at sea, said board shall deliver to the master of every such vessel departing from a port of the United States a copy of said rules and regulations, together with a recommendation that the master of such foreign vessel comply with such rules and regulations at sea.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask if that is identical with the one that was read by the Senator from Wisconsin yesterday. If it is not, I should like to have it read again.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not quite identical with it. It is substantially the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 13 of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, after the words "Secretary of Commerce" and before the period, insert a colon and the following words:

Provided further, That the board of supervising inspectors be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to prescribe rules and regulations, to be approved by the Secretary of Commerce, to provide, in harbor and at sea, for lifeboat drill and fire drill to be held for the training of the crew in fighting fire, in abandoning the vessel, and in caring for the passengers, and to provide for the assignment of each passenger to a particular place in the lifeboats, said assignment to be made at the time the person is taken aboard the vessel as a passenger, who shall thereupon be informed of such assignment. Every failure to comply with the rules and regulations authorized by this proviso shall, upon conviction, subject the master or the vessel to a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $200. The provisions herein with respect to lifeboat drill, fire drill in training the crew and in fighting fire and in abandoning the vessel, in so far as the same relates to such drill at sea, shall not apply to vessels of foreign nations; but as to foreign vessels at sea said board shall deliver to the master of every such vessel departing from a port of the United States a copy of said rules and regulations, together with a recommendation that the master of such foreign vessel comply with such rules and regulations at sea.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter upon a discussion of the various provisions of this bill, but I want to say just a word or two with reference to it before the vote is taken. I have given it such study as my time would permit, and I have brought to the study such intelligence as a landlubber could command.

I am persuaded that the substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin is wise and just and necessary, and because I think so I intend to vote for it. I realize, as has been said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], that some hardship may result, and quite likely will result, from putting into operation provisions of this character, which in some respects radically alter the provisions of the existing law; but I am also persuaded that the reforms which are to be put into operation by this substitute have been already too long delayed.

There are two ways, Mr. President, by which an employer of any kind of labor, whether an employer of labor in a factory, on a railroad, or upon a ship, can be compelled to do justice by his employees. One of those ways is by an appeal to his self-interest and the other is by legislation. Whenever you can appeal to the self-interest of an employer so as to induce him to do exact justice to his employees, that is the better way to deal with him, because then his action becomes to a very large extent automatic.

At the time when ships on the sea were under sail, before the invention of steam, the self-interest of the owner of the ship demanded that he should employ seamen of skill and efficiency, because the ordinary and everyday handling of a sailing vessel required efficient and trained service. But when the sail departed from the sea and steam took its place in the ordinary operations of the vessel that skill was no longer required. Skillful seamanship is required now upon one of the large steam vessels only in cases of emergency. No great amount of skill is required in fair weather. So the self-interest of the owner of the vessel is no longer appealed to to employ able seamen and skilled men in navigating vessels, but the necessity of skilled seamen upon occasions of emergency and danger is just as great upon a steam vessel to-day as it ever was upon the sailing vessel of past time, and the only way that that can be certainly enforced under existing circumstances is by legislation.

I also recognize the force of some objections the Senator from Ohio has urged with reference to making the provisions of this proposed law apply to foreign vessels; but I am consoled by the reflection that the provisions are right and are just and are not unduly burdensome. They are rules that we are willing to put into operation with reference to our own vessels because we believe them to be necessary and we believe them to be just, and if our conclusion about that is correct—and we can only justify our votes for the substitute upon that theory—then we are not imposing any unjust or discriminatory burden upon foreign-owned ships.

So far as the question of the treaties is concerned, when the matter was suggested I will confess that it gave me some uneasiness; but I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin has obviated any objection which could be made upon that score. We have provided in these various treaties that they may be abrogated upon a year's notice. Having made that provision, of course it was within the contemplation of both parties to a treaty that that power might be exercised by either nation; and that being so, it being clearly within the contemplation of both parties that it was a power which might be likely exercised at any time, I can not see upon what theory any foreign nation can complain if we have determined that the occasion has arisen, that the time has arrived, when we ought to give that notice. We are not violating any treaty if we do that, but we are acting in pursuance of the terms of the treaty.

Mr. President, just a word or two with reference to one or two of the features of this proposed substitute. I think one of the most important provisions in the substitute, and one of the most necessary, is that providing for the employment of able seamen and the provision requiring that there shall be two able seamen for each lifeboat upon the vessel.

I have been looking over the report made to the House upon a similar bill May 2, 1912, and I have been very much struck by the statement contained in that report with reference to the station assignments made upon some of the ships with regard to the manning of lifeboats. To my mind the statement contained with reference to that matter in this report constitutes the strongest kind of circumstantial evidence in favor of the provision in this proposed law with reference to providing upon every lifeboat one or more able seamen. The matter to which I call attention is on page 11 of the report, headed:

Station bills showing how boats are manned in case of disaster, who are in charge, and the number of seamen in each boat under present regulations.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.: Boat stations—Steamship Governor—I may say that the Governor is a boat plying upon the Pacific—

Boat No. 1. Located, boat deck, starboard side; captain in command; No. 1 quartermaster, No. 3 oiler, No. 1 seaman, No. 1 stewardess, No. 64 waiter, No. 77 waiter, No. 2 fireman, No. 26 fireman, No. 1 deck boy, wireless, No. 86 fireman.

That is the crew of that boat. The provision having been made in advance, in the case of the necessity of manning a lifeboat the various persons named shall take their positions in that particular lifeboat in that way. The significant thing in that is that one seaman is provided for. That standing alone, of course, would not be significant, but when you go through the entire list, taking boats Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and so on, down to boat No. 12, you find in each boat that provision is made for a seaman; that is, No. 1 seaman in boat No. 1, No. 2 seaman in boat No. 2, No. 3 seaman in boat No. 3, No. 4 seaman in boat No. 4, No. 5 seaman in boat No. 5, No. 6 seaman in boat No. 6, No. 7 seaman in boat No. 7, No. 8 seaman in boat No. 8, No. 9 seaman in boat No. 9, No. 10 seaman in boat No. 10, No. 11 seaman in boat No. 11. It appears there were only 11 able seamen on that ship, so that when they came to the twelfth there was no able seaman to go in that boat, but they recognized the necessity all the way through of providing for an able seaman in every boat just so far as the able seamen would go.

There is no such coincidence with reference to any of the other employees. It was a matter of unconcern as to whether or not there should be one waiter on a particular lifeboat or two waiters or half a dozen waiters or none at all, but just as far as those 11 seamen would go provision is made for 1 of them on every boat, and when they came to the twelfth boat provision would have been made for a seaman upon that boat as well, only there was no twelfth seaman upon the ship.

The question arises, it being recognized by the people in control of this ship that it was an important and a necessary thing that these seamen should be distributed among these lifeboats so far as they would go, is it not the duty of Congress to provide by legislation in such a way that the twelfth boat would be taken care of just as well as the other 11?

Take the next boat, No. 1, upon the Atlantic coast:

Crew stations of the steamer Governor Dingley.

I will not stop to go through the detail of that, but it appears that boats Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 were provided with a sailor. In that tabulation they are called sailors instead of seamen, but the same sort of an employee is meant. Boats No. 9, No. 10, and raft No. 1 were provided with one seaman each. It appears that upon that ship they did not have as many seamen as upon the Pacific ship, but again it appears that just as far as these sailors would go they are distributed among these boats. But boats No. 6 and No. 7 and rafts Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 were not provided with sailors, because there were none to provide. Again, it being clearly recognized by the people in control of this ship and upon all the others that I have had any opportunity of looking into that seamen were necessary upon the lifeboats, the question arises whether it is not the duty of Congress to enact such legislation as will require seamen upon these boats that are now not provided with them as well as upon those which can be thus furnished.

I find another striking thing in this report, and that is that of the lives saved at sea during the year 1909-10 from British ships abroad 131 were saved by rocket apparatus and from ropes from shore and 47 by lifeboats; but the majority were saved by the ships' own boats, 3,339, and by passing ships, 1,057. That is, out of the 5,595 lives that were saved at sea more than 5,000 of them were saved by the lifeboats of the vessel itself and the lifeboats of passing ships, indicating the great value of the lifeboat and the tremendous necessity for perfecting the lifeboat service in order that it may be efficient.

Mr. President, I do not care to say anything further about the bill, but I desire to call to the attention of the Senate a statement which was made recently by Mr. Andrew Furuseth, whom most of us know. He does not attempt to discuss it in detail, but to my mind it is so graphic a statement of the situation in its broad features that I am going to ask the indulgence of the Senate while I read it. I will ask, before I read it, for fear that I may forget it when I finish, that in addition to going into the Record it may be printed as a Senate document. (S. Doc. No. 216.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is headed "The decay of seamanship in Europe and America," and by way of text in the beginning of it this statement is made:

"The Caucasian is leaving the sea; the oriental is filling the vacancy. Sea power is in the seamen; vessels are the seamen's working tools; tools become the property of those who handle them."

This is not a prophecy; it is a fact. If the reader needs proofs, let him visit the docks where the ocean cargo carrier—the tramp—is taking in or delivering cargo. He will find that while the officers are white, the sailors and firemen are very largely from the races which inhabit Africa, Asia, and the Malay Islands. If he be fond of statistics and knows the way they are made up, so as to hide from John Bull the loss of his sea legs, the decay of his sea power, let him examine the reports issued from year to year by the board of trade. If he be told that the tendency is sporadic, let him ask the boys along the seacoasts of Europe and America north of the Mexican line what they are going to be when they grow up, and the answers will be truly illuminating. Let him ask the seamen if they will accept a job on shore, and he will find that they are willing to accept anything to get away from the sea. The men are leaving the sea; the boys are shunning it.

The compelling cause of this drift from the sea is a great wrong, which can only be cured by legislation. National commissions and international conferences have sat and inquired into losses of life at sea; they have reported vessels to be undermanned both in individual skill and in numbers of seamen employed. Recommendations have been made and forgotten. The General Slocum was lost with about 1,000 lives. The coroner's jury said, "Inefficient crew"; the commission appointed added, "Not enough life preservers; inefficient inspection." The net result was more life preservers, better inspection, but no improvement in the crews. The Titanic was lost. The senatorial commission said, "Not enough lifeboats; the crew inefficient in skill and number." There are some more lifeboats, but no more or better men. The drift from the sea is growing and safety diminishing, while vessels are steadily growing larger. Seamen have sought proper legislation in vain for more than 20 years. Congress after Congress have been appealed to, but without substantial results. The seamen are poor; they are lowly; few of them are voters; fewer still can vote, being at sea; they have nothing with which to quicken sympathy and induce action except their plainly told tale. And yet the questions arising from the drift from the sea are of great racial importance; they are of great national importance; they are of great economic importance, and of serious personal importance to those who travel the sea for business or pleasure. The cause of the drift from the sea is simple; the remedy easy, if honestly applied.

1. When a citizen becomes a seaman he surrenders all rights of citizenship, he voluntarily places himself outside of the protection of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. President, I may pause at that point long enough to say that my attention was recently called to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the One hundred and sixty-fifth United States, in which I was somewhat astonished to read the opinion of the majority of the court, holding substantially what is stated here, that a seaman, notwithstanding the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution, could be bound to involuntary servitude, provided he had agreed in advance to serve upon the vessel for a particular length of time.

I say I was astounded to read that, because I had always believed that the provision of our Constitution with reference to involuntary servitude was wider than the question of slavery; that it meant precisely what it says; and that nobody could be compelled against his will to serve another for a single day. The Supreme Court said that because he had agreed in advance to accept this service or to bind himself to this service, he therefore voluntarily entered the service, and that the fact that he might conclude thereafter to quit the service would not render it involuntary.

It seems to me that the fallacy in the argument of the court is perfectly plain, because although a man has made a contract to serve another for a particular length of time, the moment he concludes to repudiate the contract he becomes liable, of course, to an action for damages; but if having concluded to repudiate the contract he be compelled to comply specifically with the terms of the contract, his service from that moment becomes involuntary. Otherwise a man could bind himself for life to serve another, and in that way bind himself to a condition of slavery. I think the decision of Justice Harlan, who dissented from the majority decision of the court, proceeds upon the better reasoning.

But I proceed to read from this document:

2. He accepts and surrenders to the plenary power of Congress and the President over his personal freedom, the wages he has earned, the work he is to do and with whom he is to do it, and thereby unreasonably increases the burden of his toil and the risks, naturally and unavoidably great, to his life.

One century since the status of the worker was either that of a slave, a serf, or one who labored under term contracts enforceable by imprisonment. The seamen belonged to the last-named class. Being among the freest of the workers, his social and industrial condition was, in comparison with the others, favorable. Other causes contributed to this result.

1. The shipowner might lose his all through local riots or other social disturbances in port, through piracy or other dangers of the sea.

2. He was liable to the traveler and the shipper for the amount of damages caused, if traceable to him, not being "acts of God" or "the public enemy."

The self-interest of the shipowner was sufficient to cause him to carry men skilled in their calling, acquainted with the use of arms, physically able to use them, and with sufficient courage to defend and protect his employer's property, whether the attack came from men or from natural elements. The shipowner appreciated this to the extent of obtaining legislation which gave him the power to punish the laggard or to reduce the incompetent in rating and wages, according to his demerit. The shipowner still has this power. He was bound by law to carry a national crew, either in whole or in part. These conditions compelled him to look for his workmen among his own people, among the strong, the healthy, and the skilled. If he employed his slaves or serfs, they became free.

These several causes worked automatically toward a wage rate, under which the seamen could and did keep a family in as much well-being as the average skilled mechanic.

During the last century a great change came over society. Slavery and serfdom were abolished; term contracts to labor, enforceable by imprisonment, either by law or in equity, were abolished here in the United States and in some countries in Europe, while in others they were reduced in number and remained applicable only on servants, in houses or in husbandry. As freedom came to men it carried better treatment and better wages. Wages rose gradually until they doubled, trebled, and quadrupled; the legal testimony of the worker became creditable, being untainted by his status. The seaman was not permitted to share in any of these changes; his status remained. His wages stood still or were actually lowered. The cost of living rose with the advancement of the wages; the purchasing power of the seaman's wages went down, and he became unable to care for a family.

Other causes contributed to this result:

1. A system of marine insurance was perfected, through which the shipowner guarded himself from the dangers of the sea and distributed the losses upon the general community.

2. Limited liability laws were enacted through which the main risk of travel fell on the passenger, the risk of merchandise in transit upon the shipper, who through the insurance shifted it to the general public.

3. Piracy ceased and losses through revolts or revolutions became collectible from the nations or communities held responsible.

4. Lighthouses were built, channels marked, deepened, and widened, storms were studied, warnings were given, and navigation became more safe.

5. Laws compelling national crews were repealed, modified, or disregarded.

Having rid himself of the risk by insurance of the liability by legislation and of limitation as to the nationality of the men employed through the repeal of laws, the shipowner cared no longer for skill, ability, nationality, or race. The wages to be paid became his main consideration. He might send his vessel to sea with men, none of whom were trained in the work or who understood without an interpreter the orders given. The seaman was compelled to compete with the unskilled from all strata in society, from all nations and all races, and when at sea he was compelled to do the work which these men could not do. This is the condition to-day. Hence the increasing shipwrecks, the great losses of life, such as the General Slocum, the Elbe, the La Bourgogne, the City of Rio de Janeiro, the Norge, the Valencia, the Oceanic, the Titanic, and almost innumerable others; hence, also, the constant increase in insurance rates. White men are leaving the sea. Modern education and the worn-out ancient status can not continue together. Men refuse to go into or remain in any calling which will not furnish sufficient upon which a family may be kept. More and more men come to sea as does the sewage. The last Congress passed a law providing for more reasonable hours of labor for officers of vessels, and it is largely disobeyed, either secretly or openly, with the excuse that the shipowners can not find men from whom officers can be made. Let this thing continue a few more years and the Asiatic will have to be accepted on the bridge in command, because none others will be available. Men from the Mediterranean, from Arabia, India, and South Africa sail the vessels on the Atlantic; men from China and Japan sail the vessels in the trade between our Pacific ports and Asia. The number of Asiatics and Africans from the south of Africa in the merchant marine of Great Britain is about 100,000. Norway, with her former surplus of seamen, has not enough for her own vessels, and the number is steadily decreasing. Germany's seamen come from the interior, and are diminishing. The drift from the sea on the part of the Caucasian is general and growing. There must be a change. It must be fundamental, and it must be soon, or the sea must become the domain of the oriental. His status and standard of living corresponds to the status and earning capacity of seamen of to-day.

These facts have been presented to Congress after Congress. The seamen have been met with the answer that to change the condition as urged would be to still more widen the difference in the wage cost of operation now existing between foreign and domestic vessels taking cargoes or passengers from American ports, and thus drive the few remaining American vessels from the ocean. The seamen then went into the study of the real causes of the difference and found—

1. That wages are determined by supply and demand; that it is the same to all nations' vessels in the same port if the vessels are going in the same or a similar trade.

2. That wages are dependent upon the standard of wages and of living in the port and in the territory adjacent thereto and upon the port to which the vessels are going.

3. Upon the standard of skill demanded and the chances of getting away from—deserting from—the vessel at her port of destination if such be a high-wage port.

Thus it was found that when a Norwegian shipowner wants men to join a vessel sailing between ports of the United States and the West Indies or Central America (the fruit steamers), he pays 50 per cent more wages than if the vessel was going to the Black Sea. He does this to keep the men now, when by treaty he can have them arrested, detained, and delivered back to him. The fugitive-slave law is in full force and operation between nations through treaties entered into. If the men coming to the United States from other countries could quit their vessels in ports of the United States and reship in some other vessel, the wages would become equalized. It is not suggested that seamen should be paid off. It is suggested that they should be able to obtain one-half of their earned wages and that they should not be arrested and delivered back to their masters (owners?) against their will. The only difference in the cost of operation of vessels that does not arise out of the cost of building is in the wage. All other supplies are obtained upon the same terms by vessels in the same trade. The price of the port controls. The wages of the port would control if the law of supply and demand was permitted to act, but this law is set at naught by laws made by the several nations and given vitality in foreign countries through treaties. Such arrangements are solely in the interest of low-wage countries. Abolish the fugitive-slave law now operating upon the seamen, cease being the slave catcher for foreign nations, and the economic value to purely American-owned vessels would be equal to a greater sum than was ever asked for as a subsidy, and all talk of subsidy or necessity for discriminating duties would at once be at an end.

Give to the seamen, while the vessel is in port and in safety, the freedom that has been given to other workers; give them half of the money due to them (others get all) in such ports in order that they may have the means to exercise and to protect their freedom; provide a standard of skill in the men employed (and thus make it possible for them to save life at sea, their own included); provide such regulations as to working hours as shall keep the skill available (they work 7 days a week and 12 hours per day at present); make the freedom, the standard of efficiency, and the right to one-half of the money due applicable to foreign vessels coming within the jurisdiction of our laws, and there will be a reasonable assurance of safety at sea. The American vessel will be on equality with foreign vessels in American ports, as they already are, through law enacted in 1884, in foreign ports, and the "drift from the sea" will cease. There will be a better class of men available for the merchant marine and the Navy; there will be more safety at sea, lower insurance rates, and no necessity for either a subsidy or for any discriminating duty. England regulates all the matters dealing with safety, including the number of men, on vessels coming within the jurisdiction of her laws, and we will be doing nothing except what is truly American by doing the same.

Compulsory labor in private employment has few friends to-day, and the hope of the thinking seamen has been that freedom will come to them also. In this hope they have waited and worked. They believed that the nations would come to realize their need of seamen for national purposes and that disasters, which were sure to multiply as skill decreased, would cause the people to demand such changes in the law as should be found needed in the interest of safety of life at sea. Vessels that can not burn and will not sink are not built; the best vessel ever built is unseaworthy unless manned by skilled officers and men, who can understand the orders and who know how to obey them. Real seamen know that in any serious struggle with the forces of nature the human element is the determining factor. They have been waiting, watching, and praying for relief. Senate bill 4 is the remedy and will give the relief needed.

An international conference on safety of life at sea is coming, but we fear that little of real value will come from that, unless it is preceded by proper legislation here setting a minimum. We fear that the forces which have been and now are engaged in destroying the customs upon which skill and safety rested, and which have succeeded in preventing legislation so long needed, will in some way dominate the conference.

With the proper legislation enacted here and thus a minimum set, that conference would be valuable. Other nations would have to follow our lead, owing to pressure of economic conditions; they would therefore make a virtue of necessity and the conference would very likely recommend similar legislation to other countries.

Sea power is in the seaman. Ships are but the seaman's working tools. If there be a desire in the white race to retain its sea power, the Caucasian must be brought to sea again. Nations which desire to share in that sea power must depend upon their own citizens or subjects. If a reasonable safety at sea be desired, men of strength, courage, and skill must be induced to again seek the sea and they will not come to accept existing status nor tolerate other existing conditions.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, at the proper time I wish to offer a very small amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. The little Lake Champlain has probably no point from the extreme northern end of navigation to the south end where the lake is more than 6 or 7 miles wide, and in almost the entire length the steamer travel rarely gets more than 1 or 2 miles from land. They have only a short period of business that is profitable, and they have a very fine boat, the Vermont, one of the safest that I know of anywhere. The men who man that boat are intelligent young men from the borders of Vermont and New York, men who are thoroughly competent to man the boat, although they would not, perhaps, be classified as "able seamen."

I have been conversant with travel on Lake Champlain for at least 50 years and I do not recall, at least within this generation, a serious accident on that lake. It seems to me that we ought not to burden that little traffic with the added expense which this substitute proposes to compel. Therefore, on page 15 of the substitute bill, after the word "exclusively," in line 15, I move to insert the words:

And the smaller inland lakes where the line of travel pursued is at no point more than $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from land.

On the following page it will be necessary to make a slight change to conform to this amendment by inserting, after the word "harbors," the words "and the smaller inland lakes as hereinbefore specified." If amended as I have proposed, the language will read:

SEC. 12. That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and the smaller inland lakes where the line of travel pursued is at no point more than $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from land, and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart—

And so forth.

It is very patent to me that this amendment ought to be made, and I can not believe that anyone will oppose it; but protests have come to me from our little lake in such numbers that I felt that it was my duty to offer the amendment. I hope there will be no objection to its adoption at the proper time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment prior to this amendment. The preceding amendment has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. PAGE. I understand that, Mr. President; but it occurred to me that we were coming very near to the hour of 4 o'clock, when debate is to cease, and I wanted to make this brief statement, so that when the matter came up the Senate would understand my reason for offering the amendment.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, may I add just a word to what my colleague [Mr. PAGE] has said? He has referred simply to Lake Champlain; he might, of course, have referred to Lake George; but all through New England there are lakes of this character—lakes which freeze over in the winter—and the traffic upon which occurs only during the summer season. I would be afraid to state the number of such lakes in New England alone, but in the Adirondacks and in all the different parts of the country they abound.

The impression has gone abroad that such lakes would be classified as rivers under the terms of this bill. I took occasion a little while ago to have a conversation with Mr. Furuseth, who has been very frequently quoted here, and he told me that he supposed under the direction of the board of navigation, or whatever body it is that has charge of this matter, lakes of this character would be classed as rivers under the terms of the bill; but when I told him the character of the waters he became satisfied that such would not be the fact. Such not being the fact, it seemed to me perfectly pertinent that this amendment should be offered and adopted, so that the navigation on this class of inland waters should not be burdened with the provisions of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. CUMMINS. May the amendment to the amendment be again stated, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Mr. BURTON proposes the following amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. LA FOLLETTE: On page 2, line 13, after the word "limit," strike out the word "either" and insert "the obligation of all the crew to take part in boat drills and fire drills or," so as to read:

But these provisions shall not limit the obligation of all the crew to take part in boat drills and fire drills or the authority of the master or other officer or the obedience of the seamen when, in the judgment of the master or other officer, all the sailors, etc.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not see how there can be any objection to this amendment. Without it the language is ambiguous and doubtful. Indeed, I think the law would be interpreted as not requiring any steward or fireman or engineer to take part in the lifeboat drills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted. It aims simply to break down the provisions of the substitute bill regarding the classification of the service. It is simply in line with the proceedings and the attitude of the Committee on Commerce and the committees of Congress generally in dealing with this seaman's problem. The men who are desirable in this branch of the service can only be expected to enter that branch of the service if there is some opportunity for fair remuneration and for some development in rank and skill. I sincerely hope that the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin certainly entirely misapprehends the object of this amendment. There is no one who will deny that it is desirable when a boat is at sea and an emergency arises that the greatest possible number should be available for saving human life whether on boats or in fire protection. It is proclaimed that this substitute means greater safety for human life. If you vote down this amendment, you say that a man who is a steward, a man who is a fireman or an engineer, can not be required to prepare himself for the emergency to which that boat may be subjected. It is in line with a disposition to so divide all the different departments that each shall have control of only one branch of activity.

It has been shown here in the argument that some of the very best service that has been rendered has been rendered by those who were members of the fire crew or who were stewards, and that life has been saved by them. Unless you adopt this amendment you say that they shall have no part in boat drills, that they shall have no part in fire drills. In fact, the engineers and firemen, as is the case now, should have the leading part in fire drills, because it is largely a matter of mechanism.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has from the beginning of this debate—I will not say purposely, but purposely or not he has misstated, distorted, and misrepresented the provisions of the substitute bill. I am bound to say that I can not believe that he intended to do so.

There is nothing in the provisions of the bill which when danger threatens, when there is need to save the ship's cargo or to render aid to other ships in distress, would prevent the men engaged to serve in one department of a vessel being assigned and compelled to perform service in another department. There is not a thing in that provision which prevents their being all called out whenever, in the opinion of the master of the vessel, it is necessary to work them in any department for the preservation of the vessel or for the safety of the passengers or crew at sea or to train them for that work. To endeavor to make it appear that because it is desirable that men who are accepted and assigned as able seamen shall not be sent into the hold to shovel coal this substitute provides that in the ordinary work of the vessel the men of one department shall not be required to serve in another—I say to attempt to distort a provision of that sort into meaning that the captain of the vessel can not call men from every department and assign them to any kind of work when he thinks it is necessary for the safety of the vessel is—well, if I did it, I should think it was not quite fair. I will not say it is not fair in the case of the Senator from Ohio.

Let us consider it for a moment and think of the way this paragraph has been treated in this debate. Here is the language:

And seamen serving in one department of a vessel shall not be required to do duty in another department; but these provisions shall not limit either the authority of the master or other officer or the obedience of the seamen when, in the judgment of the master or other officer, all the sailors or all the firemen or the whole crew is needed for the maneuvering of the vessel or the performance of work necessary for the safety of the vessel or her cargo or for the saving of life aboard other vessels in jeopardy.

This gives the widest latitude. Under it the captain of a vessel does not need to wait until the storm breaks; he does not need to wait until the sides of the vessel shall have been gashed by an iceberg before he calls the men from the different departments for service wherever needed for the good and the safety of the vessel in time of danger to be drilled and prepared for that hour. No; this provision, notwithstanding the argument of the Senator from Ohio to give it a more limited construction, gives ample and specific authority to the officers at any hour from the time the ship leaves her wharf to call the men from any department of the vessel and from all departments of the vessel and put them into service and into drill outside of their departments. He can call these wonderful men from the stewards' department, these most remarkable of all the life-savers of the sea, these waiters, who, with a little harbor drill, the Senator from Ohio would make the only means of saving from destruction at sea all those on a vessel. These can be called out of the kitchen and put into any sort of service on the vessel that he pleases and deems necessary with a view of providing safety whenever danger is involved.

The provisions of this section, if they had been especially drawn to meet that contingency, could not have been better drawn. I did not draw them; I am not the sole author of this bill. No man can claim that distinction. This bill is the evolution of a struggle of 19 years, not only to emancipate thousands of men from slavery, but also it is the work of able, patriotic men who would see the American merchant marine restored to a place of importance in the commerce of the world by legitimate, honest, and economic methods, rather than by some dishonest subsidy scheme.

More than that, this bill is the result, Mr. President, of the combined efforts of men who would save, if possible, seamanship to American seamen. The policy pursued in Congress has had as admirable an exemplification as it could possibly have in the person of the Senator from Ohio and in his speech. It represents exactly the attitude of the American Congress for 19 years toward this question. Blind to everything else, excepting, as it seems to me, the interests of the shipowners, the policy that has been pursued with respect to seamen has driven thousands upon thousands of them out of the business and into other lines of business. Why? Because the laws of the United States made every representative of this country in every country of the world a fugitive-slave catcher for every seaman who shipped in any vessel and subsequently left it. Such are the hard conditions of the law. Since the fugitive-seaman law was enacted in 1790 there have been scarcely any modifications to ameliorate the conditions of the seamen.

Mr. President, when I sought and obtained, from the Senate an agreement making this subject a special order, I did so because it seemed to me that it ought to be given precedence over any other business which could by any possibility come before the Senate at this time. I will except nothing. I assert that adequate legislation to establish and maintain the highest standard of efficiency in our marine service is supreme in its importance.

At the session of the Senate on Monday, October 13, there was some discussion criticizing the making of these special orders for the consideration of legislation other than the currency measure, which is still in committee. The order for action upon the seamen's bill can not possibly block the way of the currency bill, because it is well understood that the hearings upon that bill will not be concluded before October 25. And the order for the seamen's bill expires by limitation on the 23d of October at 4 o'clock, when a vote is to be taken. I did not on Monday feel called upon to defend the action of the Senate in ordering the consideration of the seamen's bill. But I can not refrain from noticing at this time some of the views of Senators then expressed regarding the relative importance of currency legislation and the legislation on the seamen's bill. It was said that the measure to establish reserve banking associations is the "greatest problem with which the Senate has to deal"; that it "affects bankers and business men from all sections of the country"; that "we should give to its consideration all of our time until it is passed"; that it "affects the vital interests of every community and the business fortunes of hundreds of thousands of men." The opinions generally expressed placed it above and before all other subjects demanding prompt action at the hands of Congress.

Mr. President, the issues affecting business interests have back of them power and influence sufficient to dominate all other considerations. Whenever property rights are involved, the Senate is keen for prompt action. But, sir, against legislation affecting business prosperity and property rights, I place above and before any bill which merely concerns business interests and property rights this measure which involves the right of thousands of men to be free men. It involves the safety of the lives of hundreds of thousands of men, women, and children. And, sir, upon the success or failure of this measure depends ultimately the rank and standing of the Navy of the United States before the sea powers of the world. I say that it is vital, not at some other time, but at this time, that we should deal with this bill thoroughly and comprehensively with the single purpose of serving the public interest.

Mr. President, arrayed against this legislation are the powerful steamship companies and the great shipowning corporations not only of this, but of all countries whose commerce comes to American ports. And, sir, it is well for us to understand at the outset the difficulties, the halts and delays and devices which have so long prevailed and which must be overcome here and now if this measure is to be made effective for the public good.

The attempt to secure legislation for the emancipation of the sailor from serfdom and the safety of human life at sea repeats the history of every attempt to secure legislation against organized corporate power, no matter how urgent the need, no matter how widespread and general the public demand.

For 40 years the people had vainly petitioned Congress for postal savings banks; the bankers of the country opposed the legislation. For a quarter of a century the people prayed for the establishment of the parcel post before Congress grudgingly enacted the law; the express companies were opposed to it. For more than 40 years the people have urged Congress to pass legislation necessary to ascertain and enforce reasonable transportation rates and services; the railways have been powerful enough to prevent the fixing of such rates down to the present time. The people campaigned for a pure-food law for 17 years before they secured from Congress the present imperfect statute.

In 1905 more than 10,000 passengers and more than 48,000 employees were killed on the railroads of the United States. The English railroads at that time, where the traffic was twice as dense as ours, were killing and injuring only one-tenth as many as we were killing and injuring on the railroads of the United States. To reduce this awful and increasing injury and slaughter of innocent people in our country, appeal was made year by year to Congress for legislation requiring the railroads to adopt approved safety appliances and regulations in the operation of their trains. Session after session the railroads successfully resisted this humane legislation. A moiety of safety-appliance legislation was after a time allowed to pass to ease off the rapidly increasing public demand for protection; but so imperfectly has Congress discharged its duty to the public that there is an appalling increase in the human sacrifice which we are compelled to make because of the determination of these corporations to save money on equipment, repairs, men, wages, and hours of service. In 1912 the steam railroads alone killed and injured 180,123 people in this country.

Conservative Senators and Congressmen can not comprehend the ever-growing demand of the citizen for a more and more direct control of his Government. The election of United States Senators by direct vote; the nomination of congressional and other candidates for office by direct vote; the election of delegates to national conventions by direct vote; the naming of candidates for President and Vice President by direct vote; the initiative, the referendum, the recall, one and all, are the logical outcome of the failure of the United States Senator, the Congressman, and public official, National and State, to represent the people. The citizen is aroused at last. He is determined to make his Government faithfully represent the public interest in all things affecting the public interest.

The status of the American seaman, Mr. President, may be traced in the legislation which has been enacted to cover men employed in this service.

The act of July 20, 1790, provided for the arrest and the forcible bringing on board of any seaman who had signed a contract for a voyage and deserted or failed to report, to be compelled to fulfill the contract. This act provided that he could be arrested upon a warrant.

Section 4553, approved July 20, 1790, denied to seamen the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus, provided the proper officer found that the vessel was fit to go to sea and the sailor who had signed the contract refused to fulfill its provisions.

Section 4690 of the Revised Statutes of 1873 made punishable the harboring or secreting of seamen. This was part of the act of July 20, 1790.

March 3, 1835, Congress enacted a statute for the "better protection of seamen," and which provides punishment for a master or other officer who—from malice, hatred, or revenge, or without justifiable cause would beat, wound, or imprison any of the crew of such vessel.

September 28, 1850, Congress enacted a statute purporting to abolish flogging on board of merchant marines, but it carried no penalty for its violation.

On June 7, 1872, Congress enacted "the shipping commissioners' act." That modified the statute of 1790 and provided that a seaman could be taken aboard a vessel with which he had signed articles without a warrant and without being taken before a magistrate, as was provided in the law of 1790, and at the same time provided that if he was wrongfully taken aboard of such a vessel that those who were guilty should be liable to a penalty of not more than $100, but if the penalty was inflicted it would be a bar for recovery in any action for false imprisonment.

The act of June 9, 1874, provided that none of the provisions of the shipping commissioners' act of 1872 should apply to the coastwise trade, except between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, or in lake-going trade touching at foreign ports or in the trade between the United States and British North American possessions.

The effect of this was to make inapplicable in the coastwise trade the provisions of section 4596 of the act approved June 7, 1872, and of section 4599 of the same act.

The act of June 26, 1884, prohibited the payment of advance wages or blood money, and authorized the master of the vessel, in section 20 of that act, to ship a crew in a foreign port for a round trip to the United States without imposing upon him the obligation to reship them in a port of the United States. The effect of this was to reduce the wages on the American vessel to the level of the ports from which the crew was shipped.

The act of 1886 gave permission to pay advance wages under the name of allotment to original creditors. It further extends the law of 1874 so that the shipping commissioners' act is not to apply in the treaties between the United States, the Dominion of Canada, or in Newfoundland, or in the West Indies, or the Republic of Mexico. This, in effect, so far as this trade was concerned, repealed all of the provisions of the act of 1872. This, so far as this trade was concerned, repealed the law of 1884 prohibiting the payment of advance money.

The act of August 19, 1890, provided that if the seamen shipped before a shipping commission in the coastwise trade and in the trade between the United States, the Dominion of Canada, in Newfoundland, or the West Indies, or Mexico the penalty clauses of the shipping commissioners' act of 1872 should apply. The penalty clauses of this act are those that are included in sections 4596 to 4599. Immediately upon the enactment of this statute the shipowners gave instructions that all of their men must sign before a shipping commissioner, and the shipowners on the Lakes requested that shipping commissioners be appointed for that territory. These commissioners were not appointed upon the Lakes, but so far as the coastwise trade was concerned the most oppressing features of the statutes affecting seamen were reenacted.

The result of this act on the Pacific coast was a strike which lasted for 15 months. The strike was against shipping before the commissioner. In this strike 11 men were killed, and at its conclusion three-fourths of the sailors had left the sea or had left this country. The records of the seamen's union on the Pacific coast show that more than 2,000 left the calling.

The act of February 18, 1895, shows the effect of this protracted strike and agitation among the seamen of the whole country because of the act of 1890, as it repealed, so far as the coastwise trade is concerned and the trade with the West Indies and Mexico, Canada, and Newfoundland is concerned, the penalty clauses of the act of 1872 that by the act of 1890 were made applicable to this trade.

Upon the passage of this statute the shipowners planned to circumvent the statute providing shipping articles in which a vessel would sail in the coastwise trade. For example, from San Francisco to Columbia River, and at Columbia River for a foreign port, such as Valparaiso or Shanghai; and the shipping articles at San Francisco were made to read for Valparaiso and Shanghai by Columbia River, and the men in the coastwise trade between San Francisco and Columbia River were subjected to all of the penalties that were provided for in the act of 1872 covering seamen in the foreign trade.

The seamen on the barkentine Arago shipped at San Francisco for a voyage to Knappton, in the State of Washington; thence to Valparaiso; and thence to such other foreign ports as the master might direct, and return to a port of discharge in the United States; but becoming dissatisfied with their employment, they left the vessel at Astoria, in the State of Oregon, and were arrested under the provisions of sections 4596 to 4599. They were taken before a justice of the peace and by him committed to jail until the Arago was ready to proceed—some 16 days—when they were taken from the jail by the marshal and placed on board of the Arago against their will; they refused to "turn to" in obedience to the orders of the master and were arrested at San Francisco, charged with refusal to work in violation of Revised Statutes, section 4596; were subsequently examined before a commissioner of the circuit court and by him held to answer such charge before the district court for the northern district of California.

The case came up on appeal before the United States Supreme Court and the majority of the court, seven members, joined in a decision sustaining the lower court. The decision is found in the case of Robertson v. Baldwin (165 U. S., p. 275).

Justice Harlan filed a dissent from the opinion and the judgment of the court. This case was decided January 25, 1897. It fixed the law and the status of seamen employed in the coastwise trade, where that trade could be coupled up with a foreign trade, to be the same as those who were in the foreign trade.

In the opinion the court held—

The question whether sections 4598 and 4599 conflict with the thirteenth amendment, prohibiting slavery and involuntary servitude, depends upon the construction to be given to the term "involuntary servitude."

We are also of the opinion that, even if the contract of a seaman should be considered within the letter of the thirteenth amendment, it is not within its spirit a case of involuntary servitude.

After giving a review of the legislation affecting seamen, the court continues:

In the fact of this legislation upon the subject of desertion and absence without leave, which was in force in this country for more than 60 years before the thirteenth amendment was adopted, and similar legislation abroad from time immemorial, it can not be open to doubt that the provision against involuntary servitude was never intended to apply to their contracts.

The definite finding by the court that the thirteenth amendment did not apply to seamen was the hardest single blow that was ever struck against the maritime power of the United States.

It brought conviction to the minds of the men who had followed the sea that they could have no hope but that they must be slaves. The result was that when the call came for volunteers in 1898 in the Spanish-American War that comparatively few skilled seamen volunteered for the service. The Navy was filled with men, and while the records have never been made public, it can be ascertained at the Navy Department that the crying need was for skilled seamen.

The best seamen in that struggle came around on the Oregon into the Florida Keys. In order to get some skilled men upon some of the other boats the skilled seamen were transferred from the Oregon and their places were filled with the unskilled men from other boats. In other words, the few skilled men had to be distributed around and spread out just as thin as it was possible to do. From the date of this decision down to the present the seamen have sought in every way to secure employment in other occupations, and the drift of Americans from the sea has been steadily increasing, until their places on the merchant marine of this country are being taken by foreigners, even by the Asiatics, and the laws have been such as to drive men imbued with the spirit of free men away from the service, and it is turned over to a class of men who, should the hour of danger ever come, will turn our instruments of commerce against us.

There are not available official statistics from which may be obtained accurate information with respect to the drift from the sea. The statistics given with the report of the Commissioner of Navigation upon the number of men shipped can furnish no accurate guide, for the reason that the same man may be accounted for ten or twelve times in the year, or even more.

The Sailors' Union of the Pacific have for a great number of years kept an accurate record of the number of sailors who have entered and who have left the service upon the Pacific coast. These figures were furnished to the merchant marine commission and may be found in Senate Report No. 2755, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session, which contains the report and the hearings of this commission. These figures show that during the years from 1885 to 1904, inclusive, 17,237 sailors entered the Pacific coast trade, and of these 1,392 were natives of the United States. The figures furnished the commissioner contained nothing to show the number of men who departed in the years 1885 to 1888, inclusive, nor in the year 1890, but in the other years, covering the same period—that is, 1889 to 1904—the number of sailors who discontinued service in the Pacific coast trade and went away from it was 13,796, and of these 1,195 were natives of the United States, and there remained a total of only 197 of the sailors natives of the United States in the service at the date that these figures were compiled.

The act of December 21, 1898, made many amendments, some of them very beneficial amendments, liberalizing to some extent the laws under which American seamen are compelled to labor and repealed imprisonment for desertion or failure to join the vessel, except in a foreign trade, where it was reduced in a foreign port in a foreign trade from 2, 6, and 12 months to 1 month in any case. It also repealed practically the act permitting corporal punishment and improved the food standard, the compliance with which has resulted in the wiping out of scurvy and beriberi in the American merchant marine.

The Senator from Ohio referred to many improvements that have been made in our shipping laws. They were all, Mr. President, improvements which in some cases incidentally benefited the American seamen, in some cases directly benefited the American public, in every case directly benefited the shipowners, or they would never have gotten through the American Congress, so subservient has it been for a score of years to the interests of these powerful masters of the commerce of the sea.

The attitude pursued by this Government has driven thousands upon thousands of liberty-loving, independent men away from the sea. Do you know what that means? Do you know what it means that the American lines running between the Pacific and the Orient carry 80 or 90 per cent orientals? Why, Mr. President, a little disturbance occurred in California a few months ago because there was an effort on the part of some of the yellow men to acquire title to a little bit of land in that State. A rebellion almost started, and yet the policy pursued by the American Congress has handed over the American merchant marine to the Chinese and the Japanese. I will cite as an example a ship of the Pacific Mail Steamship Line, which runs from San Francisco to Hongkong. It leaves that American harbor every time it sails with just barely men enough on board who speak the English language to attend the wheel, the lookout, and a few such positions, not to exceed a dozen, fifteen, or twenty in all, while 210 of the sailors are Chinese. That is a line which the American people have been asked to subsidize.

The whole policy of this Government toward our merchant marine, in Congress after Congress and for decade after decade, for a generation of time, has been one of entire subserviency, in the executive department as well as in the legislative department, to the control of the great ship concerns.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has quoted the Commissioner of Navigation several times. Did it ever occur to any of you gentlemen on the other side that the present Commissioner of Navigation has managed to weather several administrations? He was a newspaper man. I came into public life a mere boy when I was elected in 1884 to the House of Representatives. I may be wrong about this; I do not want to be unfair to anybody; but it is just my recollection that during those earlier years of my service I was told that this gentleman, Mr. Chamberlain, wrote an effusive biography of President Cleveland, and as a reward he was named to be Commissioner of Navigation.

If I had time I should like to present to the Senate the analysis I have made of his reports. They are interesting. I think he ought to be removed from office. He was for free ships under Cleveland. When a new administration which favored ship subsidies came in he faced about and in his reports was a vehement advocate of subsidies. He has trimmed and turned and twisted with every changing political wind to hold his job.

Study his reports! I have marked copies over in my room in the Senate Office Building. If time permitted I would like to go through these reports, as I am sure Senators would find them entertaining and instructive. I can not now take the time. I have here a little synopsis. It would be interesting to you Democrats to see how the recommendations of this chameleon commissioner at all times fit into the interests of the shipowners all the way through.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin what the present attitude and policy of this gentleman is?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will just give you a little skeleton of it. I am wandering somewhat away from the amendment that is pending.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose his present attitude might be known by finding out what the attitude of the administration is?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is not a bit of doubt about it. He has always been for the shipowners. He is always for the administration. He is always for his job. [Laughter.]

Now, while I can not take the time to thoroughly analyze his reports, I will read this synopsis which I have prepared:

THE COMMISSIONER OF NAVIGATION.

References to passages in the reports of the Commissioner of Navigation, Hon. E. T. Chamberlain. From 1894 to 1912. Dealing with free ships, subsidies, and legislation in regard to seamen.

Report of 1894, pages 27-28, et seq., discusses the decrease of American seamen and reasons. Favors free ships.

Report of 1895, on page 12, renews recommendation in favor of the free-ship bill.

On page 18, same report, the commissioner urges extension of the act admitting the New York and Paris.

On page 21, same report, strong condemnation of discriminating duties on foreign ships.

On page 27, same report, he condemns the prevalent method of shipment of seamen, and urges changes in the law and its administration in respect to the interference of saloon keepers and boarding-house keepers.

On page 31, same report, under the caption "Allotment notes," he condemns the system of permitting allotments of original creditor (advances) and regrets that the law of 1884, which prohibited advances, was not given a more extended trial.

Allotments to original creditors and imprisonment for desertion were abolished in the coastwise trade by the law of February 18, 1895.

On page 40, same report, the commissioner condemns imprisonment of seamen for desertion in the United States.

REPORT OF 1896.

On page 7, under caption "The free-ship bill," regrets the adverse report on this bill by the Senate committee, and refers to the former reports and reasons for the enactment of the law as being unimpaired.

On page 8 the recommendation for the extension of the act admitting the New York and Paris to American register is renewed.

On page 11 the arguments against discriminating duties on shipping are renewed and extended.

On page 17, under caption "Subsidies," there is a qualified indorsement of subsidies or bounties coupled on the next page with free ships.

During the session of Congress in 1896 the House passed a bill which abolished corporal punishment, imprisonment for desertion, and made sundry other beneficial amendments to the navigation laws. The Senate committee reported another bill, which did not do either.

On page 20, under caption "All treatment of seamen," there is a qualified indorsement of the House position.

On page 21, under caption "Laws relating to seamen," reports upon the differences between the House and the Senate committee on pending bills.

On pages 22, 23, and 24 he reports upon conferring with the New York shipping interests and prints the substance of the two reports, leaning to the Senate, which in this case was the shipowners' side.

On page 24, under caption "Penalty for desertion," he urges the repeal of imprisonment for desertion, but indorses the proposition that the men may be taken on board the vessel by force and compelled to fulfill the shipping contract.

On page 28, under caption "Allotment of wages," he urges that to abolish allotments entirely is too radical and gives indorsement to the Senate bill, which would permit the evil to continue in the foreign trade.

REPORT OF 1897.

On page 17, under caption "Foreign subsidies," foundation is first laid for a reversal by the commissioner of his former position.

On pages 28, 29, and following, he adversely criticizes the seamen's bill which had passed the House, and gives much space in showing that it would be unwise to enact such legislation, giving as his opinion on page 30 that any experimenting with it is inopportune.

Appendix 95, comparison of Frye-White bills and then existing law.

REPORT OF 1898.

On page 19, under caption "Adverse conditions," he lays a foundation for his support of navigation bounties on page 40.

The seamen's bill introduced by Senator White, of California, and in amended form agreed to by Senator Frye, had passed the Senate when this report was issued, and it received the commissioner's qualified approval.

On pages 57, 58, and 59, under captions "Imprisonment for desertion" and "Allotment of wages," he discusses what to him were apparent difficulties in the administration of the proposed law, and on page 69,

Appendix A, he prints the bill as passed by the Senate in parallel columns with the law as it then stood.

The House had not yet acted; its action came after this report.

REPORT OF 1890.

From page 11, "Maritime growth of nations," to page 76, "Tonnage taxes for the year," there is a continuous argument for subsidy with question raised as to the value of free ships, and suggesting that the two may very well be adopted. Comparative cost of food, pages 57-58.

On page 87, under caption "Act of December 21, 1898," he reports the passage of the act and greets it as boon to seamen, which if found good may influence the seamen under other flags favorably.

REPORT OF 1900.

From page 14, "Instruments of ocean commerce," to page 53, "Hawaiian act," runs an argument in favor of subsidy, showing its benefits in building up our shipping; the greater cost of building here and the greater cost of operating American vessels. Comparative wage cost is given in table printed on page 37. (The table does not give a really fair test, because the vessels are not in the same trade.)

On page 58, under caption "Allotment of seamen's wages," the commissioner reports that the law works well in so far as the wages of seamen is in question. He admits that the crimping evil rests upon the advance.

On page 60, under caption "Boarding of vessels," he recommends, or rather suggests, further restrictions on boarding of vessels. This is the beginning of an effort to restore compulsory service, because if none can board a vessel none can quit her if laying at anchor.

REPORT OF 1901.

This report from page 9 to page 64 is an argument for subsidy. On page 65 is a recommendation to abolish compulsory pilotage of sailing vessels in certain southern ports. Pages 37-38, comparison of wage cost, American and British vessels.

REPORT OF 1902.

On page 24, under caption "Desertion of seamen," he deals with the effect of the law of December 21, 1898, and comes to the conclusion that it should not be changed; on next page he reports that desertions are only about 2 per cent abroad.

On page 27, under caption "Allotment notes," he reports that the law restricting allotments in the foreign trade and its abolishment in the coasting trade has been beneficial and has reduced the crimping.

The report then goes on to deal with the nationality of crews, and on page 41 defends the use of Chinese.

The report further deals with wages, showing the higher wage cost on American vessels, resulting largely from the higher wage in ports of the United States, all being a further argument for subsidy.

REPORT OF 1903.

On page 27, "Nationality of crews of American vessels," with table of different nationalities. On page 28 and page 29 it deals with the act of December 21, 1898, as to allotments and desertions, and that the act is a success. Compares the number of desertions from foreign vessels and finds them greater. It again deals with subsidy on pages 48, 49, 50, 51.

REPORT OF 1904.

On page 23 recommends enactment of bill to inspect sailing vessels and barges to protect life and property at sea. On page 28, reports desertion rather decreasing; on page 29, on allotment notes, the application of law to foreign vessels beneficial. On page 31 reports upon the sail area as basis for manning of sailing vessels. Prosecution of crimps, page 30. (The bill as first introduced by you had then been introduced.)

REPORT OF 1905.

On page 7, under caption "Legislation recommended," several recommendations are made, closing with merchant marine commission bill, page 34.

REPORT OF 1906.

On page 16 again recommends merchant marine commission bill, part of which was a naval reserve under which seamen would become members in order to obtain employment, because the payment would come through the shipowners, and would mean a general reduction in wage to correspond. An argument for the bill is made at some length. (We were opposed.)

On page 39 desertion is again dealt with and reported as decreasing. On page 40 allotments are reported upon, showing that the number of notes issued are decreasing, hence no further law needed. (We were asking that all allotments to original creditors be abolished.) Further reports the enactment of shanghaiing law. (No convictions under this law.)

REPORT OF 1907.

On page 15, "Profits of shipbuilding," reports it unprofitable in the United States; on page 16 reports square-rigged vessels going out of use; and on pages 17 to 21 argues in favor of mail subsidy.

REPORT OF 1908.

On page 16 reports decrease in desertions; on page 17 reports decrease in allotment notes issued. "Appears to be accomplishing results anticipated by its advocates."

On pages 18 and 19 recommends extension of the ocean-mail act and the increase in the compensation or subsidy.

On page 25 reports that the President has created a commission to make recommendation for revising of navigation laws to better protect the lives of passengers and crews of vessels of the United States.

This commission, made up of officials, submitted a report and recommendations which failed of legislative action or support. They were of such nature and tenor that the enactment would have been of little or no value.

REPORT OF 1909.

Beginning on page 15, with "Trade on ocean steamers," and running to page 67 are reports and arguments in favor of subsidies in different form.

On page 68 power of shipping commissioners is continued, on page 69 with recommendation to make shipping before the commissioner mandatory on vessels voyaging 500 miles or more.

A bill known as the Greene bill, introduced by Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, came before Congress. This bill, if enacted, would have restored imprisonment for quitting work in ports of the United States. It had the support of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It failed.

In this Congress, as at all other times, the commissioner appeared in opposition to the seamen's bill then introduced by Mr. Spight, of Mississippi.

REPORT OF 1910.

On page 7, under the caption "Ocean-mail bill," there is an indorsement of subsidy in the form of increased pay for carrying the mails.

On page 9 there is a recommendation that tolls to be collected from vessels passing through the Panama Canal shall be refunded to American vessels by the Treasury.

On page 19 desertion is again reported upon as decreasing, and on pages 20 and 21 the international petition for redress of grievances endured by seamen, adopted at a convention held in Copenhagen August 27, 1910, is commented on, and the imprisonment of seamen on American vessels in foreign ports for desertion is recommended; but there is no recommendation that the United States cease to arrest, detain, and surrender foreign seamen who have deserted from their vessels in the United States.

In the hearings granted on the seamen's bill by the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate in 1910, 1911, and 1912 the commissioner always appeared in opposition.

REPORT OF 1911.

On page 23 ocean mail bill is again urged and "earnestly recommended."

On page 24 free ships for foreign trade is urged with much force. He contends shipbuilding being unprofitable, ships should be bought.

On page 27 he urges free materials for shipbuilding.

On page 76 he recommends that statutes imposing imprisonment upon seamen for desertion in foreign ports be repealed, and that the allotment be retained.

In the hearings on the seamen's bill he had contended against any interference with the treaties which provide that seamen shall be mutually arrested, detained, and surrendered. Thus the seamen would leave the vessel under the law and be arrested under the treaty.

REPORT OF 1912.

On pages 19, 20, and 21 safety of life at sea is considered, and it is strongly advocated that no action be taken until after the international conference. The propriety of dealing with the questions of skill that was raised by the Titanic disaster without first consulting the other powers is seriously urged. He admits that foreign standards are higher than our own, but suggests that this rests upon military ideas.

On pages 25 and 26 he deals again with desertion and allotments, repeating former recommendations, but admitting that the abolition of the allotment system may be now experimented with.

On page 27 he deals with fore-castle space; recommends improvements; and on page 179 he reprints foreign rules about fore-castle space and hours of labor.

If I could take time to read in full these various reports, it would be a much more interesting recital; but I want to give my friends, particularly upon the other side, these references in order that they may be able to check up the record of this gentleman.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator is certainly not addressing me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am on this side, on the other side from the Senator; but I am frank to say that had I my way he would not be there 15 minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think this recital may help you to get your way.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. God help you!

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In reading these recommendations you perhaps noted that with reference to legislation forbidding the giving of allotment notes the Commissioner of Navigation thought Congress too radical in making the law apply to foreign ships in our ports. You must remember that only about 10 per cent of our foreign trade is carried by vessels of this country, and 90 per cent of that trade comes into and goes from our harbors in foreign vessels. Senators should understand there can not be any reform, any progress in ameliorating the condition of our seamen or for increasing the safety of life at sea, unless the provisions of law are applicable to the foreign vessels that come into our ports. We can not control foreign vessels after they go to sea, but we can say in what condition they shall leave our ports. We have a right to deny their coming in at all, and we have a right to modify by statute either the provisions of international law or the provisions of any treaty. In the case of treaties the notice provisions should be observed and notice be given, as has been provided in this bill.

I want to say to you that you can not pass any effective measure affecting American seamen, American shipping interests, or the safety of life at sea unless that measure is made applicable to the foreign vessels that depart from our ports as well as to the American vessels.

I stop right where I am to say that American sailors on the vessels of our merchant marine, on the ships of the Jim Hill lines, and the Pacific Mail steamship lines that run to the Orient have been displaced by Chinese and Japanese because they can get them cheaper and board them cheaper, and that they will live under conditions that no American sailors will tolerate, but which puts more money in the pockets of the ship-owners. On the Atlantic coast our merchant marine is largely manned by Spaniards, Portuguese, Greeks, and Austrians. These men for the most part do not understand our language. On the Pacific we are training men in our merchant marine for what? To man the ships of war of the Japanese or Chinese Governments. We are training their men and we are taxing our people to maintain training ships to train our boys. The minority report of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House last year says that the American Navy at that time was 9,000 men short. We can not enlist them. The Navy issues its advertisements all over the country to tempt boys to enlist in the Navy. Trips to Panama are offered in alluring language. They are offered a chance to see the world. It does not tempt them. They will not enter the service and we are short of men. Every great sea power in the history of the world has drawn the men for its warships from its fisheries and its merchant marine. It has become almost axiomatic that you can measure the sea power of a nation by its commerce and its merchant marine.

I think even men who were chary about the element of protection in tariff measures affecting general pursuits would go further if the matter under consideration touched in some way our fisheries than they would as to almost any other class of American citizens. Why? Because, one and all, they recognize that we ought to have some source of supply, some recruiting ground for our Navy. But, yielding to these gentlemen who throng the gallery now, the men who have constituted the shipping lobby for many years, the men who have delayed action session after session, we have so shaped our legislation as to drive American sailors from American ships and to keep our young men from going to sea and getting the training to fit them for the service.

The only Americans who are left in the merchant marine are those who have such love for the sea that they would not be driven from it; they would not give it up; they could not see entirely disappear that which had been an ancient and honorable calling, and which, by its sentiment and the elements which appeal to the emotions of certain men, has from the very beginning of organized society sent men out of their communities to sail the seas.

There was a band of American seamen left after all these years of defeat and disappointment and baffling and betrayal. Their ranks kept thinning, but there were some of them who held on. There was this man, Andrew Furuseth. I have known him, almost. I was going to say, ever since I have been in the Senate. I have seen old lines plowed deeper and new lines deepen in his face in just that time. He is a Norwegian by birth. He loves the sea. He is a perfect sailor. He was referred to by the Senator from Ohio here the other day as "a man who had been on pay." Let me tell you that he lived in a dry-goods box when he was trying to wring from you and your associates some legislation. To liberate his associates from bondage he lived, and lives now, on the common fare of a sailor. Although he is president of the American Sailors' Union, he will take from his union no more pay than that which the common sailor receives. That is what he is doing here; and he and a few thousand like him have saved a nucleus of American seamen to preserve its traditions and around which may be builded a merchant marine of strong, powerful, and skilled sailors.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin just long enough to say that I am informed, and I believe, that Mr. Furuseth has never received any pay of any sort except what he himself agreed to take, in spite of very much higher offers, from the sailors' union—a sailor's pay. How much a sailor's pay amounts to I do not know accurately. It amounts to his board, it amounts to his food, and it amounts to some $13 a month, I believe; but I do not know exactly what it is.

I want to say further, that long before the Senator from Wisconsin knew Mr. Furuseth I knew him, as Democratic floor leader in the House of Representatives. When he first came to me I tried to sidetrack the thing he wanted me to do, with the natural inclination which every man has with plenty to do, to keep from taking on any new tasks. I found out afterwards that the man was not only representing a real interest of humanity, but that he was representing it fairly. In talking to me he always tried to take care of the interests of the shipowners as well as the interests of the sailors. Of course, he did not always do that perfectly, because he was a sailor, and his bias was in the other direction, just as I, in questions between North and South, might not be perfectly impartial, although I try to be; but he has succeeded in being wonderfully impartial, considering it all.

I do not think any compliment is too high to be paid to any man who comes to Washington, not as a common paid lobbyist, but as a representative of a real interest of humanity and of laboring people.

As far as I have learned, Mr. Furuseth has kept in view these three things: The public interest, the shipowners' interest, and the sailors' interest. Of course he has been now and then a bit blind to the shipowners' interest, because he could not help it, but he has never been blind to the public interest. He has never been blind to the humanitarian interest involved in this matter.

What the Senator from Wisconsin is trying to do to-day is in the main what Furuseth has been trying to do for some 14 years, as far back as I can remember, and something that I have sympathized with for a long time.

I want to say this further, if the Senator will pardon me—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, a ship at sea must be under an arbitrary government. The captain and commander must have the power of life and death, if necessary, because there is nothing between the ship and God, nothing between the ship and heaven or hell except the deep blue sea; and in order to take care of what is aboard the captain must have absolute, despotic, and arbitrary power.

It strikes me as curious that men, in consequence of that premise, come to the conclusion that there ought to be absolute, arbitrary, and despotic power when the vessel reaches the land. The contrary is true. To offset the absolute and despotic power that is necessary at sea, sailormen ought to have larger liberties on land than any other class of men in the world, and a larger opportunity to go to courts of justice and to say what their grievances are. If they are true sailormen and loyal sailormen, loyal to their business, loyal to their ship, loyal to their pursuit, they will make no complaints at sea except those that are made in the regular routine way, through their immediate superior officers. So the really loyal man at sea subordinates himself to the ship, and must do it; and when he reaches land, by George, it is not very wrong to have the ship subordinated to him for a little while.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was very glad indeed to yield to my friend from Mississippi to pay this splendid tribute to Andrew Furuseth.

We now come, Mr. President, to another test of corporate power arrayed against human rights. It is worth while, Mr. President, to briefly review the long struggle to bring this vital question to issue before the Senate of the United States.

Twenty years ago several thousand white men appealed to Congress to be made free. They were American citizens, but they were slaves. They were bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, yet they were bought and sold as property. Their work involved the greatest hazard. It called for spirit and courage and devotion. Life and property were committed to their skill and their fidelity. Their business required them to endure every hardship, and on the instant, at the command of their masters, to sacrifice themselves to save others or to preserve the property of their owners.

They were American sailors. Their calling was an ancient and honorable one. But the greed of great steamship companies and great shipowners and their power and influence with Congress had wrought such changes in our maritime laws that no sailor could secure employment unless he bound himself by contract to a service which made him the property of the ship in which he sailed. He was compelled to sign away a part of his wages in advance before he was accepted by his master. Once signed, the contract chained him to the ship. No matter how imposed upon, there was no escape during the term of the contract.

If he found that the vessel was overloaded, or that there were not men enough to safely man the ship or that they were so unskilled as to make destruction imminent every hour after she put to sea and he failed to appear at the appointed time, or if he left her even when she was in a safe port, under the barbarous laws enacted by a Congress ready to do the behest of the shipowners our representatives in foreign countries were made slave catchers and he could be seized and imprisoned on the orders of the ship's master.

Thousands of these brave, high-spirited men, who loved the life, turned their backs upon the sea and sought employment on land. Their places were filled by men willing to accept slavery—men from the Mediterranean, from Arabia, India, South Africa, China, and Japan. They were cheap men. The steamship companies wanted cheap men—men who would work for low wages and live on cheap fare.

The shipowners secured from a willing Congress legislation limiting their liability to passengers and to the owners of freight and cargo. With heavy insurance on the ship, paid by the public in excessive and unrestricted charges for the transportation of passengers and freight, the loss of a ship at sea became a matter of less and less concern to steamship companies and shipowners. What mattered it to them that the sailors were inferior in character and intelligence? What mattered it to them that there were not half enough lifeboats to provide for passengers and sailors? What mattered it to them that the crew were unskilled in handling lifeboats or required, even in an hour of supreme peril, the services of interpreters to make known the orders of the captain? Their liability was strictly limited by the laws of Congress.

But, Mr. President, a few thousand American seamen refused to abandon the sea. They believed that Congress would free them from their bondage; that through legislation the working hours and conditions generally would be regulated so that real men would seek the service; that their vocation would be restored to the dignity due a calling full of sacrifice and hazard; and that a standard of skill and efficiency would be established which would make it possible to save life at sea when disaster overtakes a ship on her voyage.

These American seamen did not understand the power of the steamship companies with the American Congress. They understand it now. Their bill has been introduced and reintroduced. There have been endless hearings and delays ingeniously planned. Again and again the bill has been smothered in committee. Sometimes it has been reported to die upon the calendar.

But the plucky seamen fought on. It was an uneven fight—the sailors without funds; the shipowners with unlimited wealth, represented by a powerful lobby always on the ground.

Finally, in the last Congress, the House passed the seamen's bill. It was an excellent measure. It abolished the fugitive-slave law now operating on seamen. It gave the sailor the same freedom as to his contracts of service which the law gives to other workers. It established a standard of skill for "able seamen." It required a sufficient number of able seamen to safely man a vessel. It required that 75 per cent of the crew should be able to understand any orders given by the officers of the vessel. It required a sufficient crew to man each lifeboat, with not less than two able seamen to each lifeboat, drilled under rules prescribed by a board of supervising inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The Committee on Commerce struck out every line of that bill and reported a substitute which gave to the seamen a stone when they had begged for bread. As reported it would have driven every remaining white sailor from the sea. It was considered and passed in the expiring hours of the last Congress. I urged a number of amendments and secured the adoption of several, working some improvement in the bill. As passed it was a weak, inefficient, compromising measure. In some of its most important provisions it was less acceptable to seamen than the harsh terms of the existing law. President Taft vetoed it, not because he thought its worst provisions bad but because he thought its best provisions bad.

President Wilson was elected upon a platform which contained the following pledge:

We urge upon Congress the speedy enactment of laws for the greater security of life and property at sea; and we favor the repeal of all laws, and the abrogation of so much of our treaties with other nations as provide for the arrest and imprisonment of seamen charged with desertion or with violation of their contract of service. Such laws and treaties are un-American and violate the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, I intend to show that the bill reported by the committee fails to carry out the promises made to the seamen.

A critical examination of Senate bill 136 will show that wherever it grants some relief to seamen, or makes some concession in favor of greater safety for travelers, it modifies by proviso, and sometimes leaves the situation both as to sailors and the public in worse condition than before.

For example, in sections 4 and 5 a seaman is entitled, upon demand, to one-half of his wages at every port where the vessel stops to discharge or load cargo. This is made inoperative on the Lakes and on coastwise vessels by the following:

Provided, That the wages earned during the first five days shall not be subject to demand prior to the completion of the voyage or expiration of the contract.

No matter in what condition the sailor finds himself after having shipped for a voyage on the Great Lakes or in the coastwise trade—he may find the vessel so overloaded or so unseaworthy or so badly manned as regards the men shipped with him that his life is in peril, and would gladly surrender one-half of his wages to escape the hazard—he is nevertheless chained to the vessel to the extent, at least, of losing all his wages should he quit the vessel. So this concession, which seems to promise something to the sailor, is destroyed of its value as applied to vessels on the Great Lakes or coastwise trade.

But the committee went further and added this:

Provided, That this section shall apply to seamen on foreign vessels owned in major part by American citizens, corporations, or holding companies.

This practically destroys its application altogether, for the sailor would never be in a position to know by whom the vessel is owned. And when the helplessness of the sailor's situation in such a controversy is considered it will readily be seen that it wholly destroys the value of the concession which the section professes to make to the sailor.

Section 2, lines 18 and 19, page 2, provides that—while the vessel is in safe harbor no seaman shall be required to do any unnecessary work on Sundays and the following legal holidays * * *

On line 23, page 2, is this language:

This provision shall not prevent doing work necessary to dispatch of vessels on regular schedule.

"Work necessary to dispatch of vessels" would include all kinds of work done on board a vessel, including the handling of cargo.

On page 3, line 1, is this language:

While the vessel is in a safe harbor nine hours, inclusive of anchor watch, shall constitute a day's work.

Then comes the fatal proviso:

But this section shall not apply * * * to vessels of less than 300 tons gross, or vessels whose regular schedule between terminal ports does not exceed 24 hours: Provided, That no member of the crew shall be required to be on duty more than 12 hours, except in cases of emergency.

It promises 9 hours, but really establishes a 12-hour day, because 12 hours is made the limit.

Section 7 provides 120 cubic feet of air space and 18 square feet on the floor for each man in the forecabin, but on page 7, line 10, is a proviso that the space may be reduced 20 per cent in case separate space is provided for mess room, so that it reduces the space per man below the requirements fixed in the substitute.

On page 8, lines 21 and 22, and further, it provides for "one light, clean, and properly ventilated wash room," with other proper requirements, but on line 22 it provides that this shall only be furnished if there be twenty or more sailors.

Any boat with a deck crew of twenty or more, exclusive of licensed officers, is a very large vessel. At present there are not more than 10 or 12 such vessels in the merchant marine of the United States.

In section 10, page 13, provision is made for the arrest of any officer who applies corporal punishment to any seaman, and that the master shall turn such offender over to the proper authorities on arrival at port. If the master fails in this, the seaman may recover damages from the master or the vessel, "provided he (master) has actual knowledge of the misdemeanor, or complaint thereof is made within three days after coming into port."

Section 8, section 17, and section 18 give to the seaman the right to quit the vessel, but section 12, page 15, has the following, on line 15:

Any person who * * * or shall, by any threat or force dissuade or prevent, or endeavor to dissuade or prevent, any person from taking employment on board any vessel, or shall, by threat or force, dissuade or prevent, or endeavor to dissuade or prevent, any person from remaining in the service of any vessel on which he has shipped, or by threat or force induce or compel any person to disregard or disobey any lawful orders of the master or other licensed officer of the vessel on which he is shipped, shall for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned for not more than six months or fined not more than $500.

Under this provision any seaman or other person inducing a man to leave a vessel may be arrested and detained until the United States grand jury meets and, if indictment is found, until trial. The seaman would stay in prison because, being a stranger, he could get no bail.

Paragraphs 4 and 5 of section 8, on page 11, provide proper penalties for any disobedience at sea, and section 445, page 436, Navigation Laws of 1911, provides penalties for endeavoring to stir a revolt or mutiny on board such vessel, and for any person who combines, conspires, or confederates with any person on board to make such revolt or mutiny, or solicits, incites, or stirs up any other of the crew to disobey or resist the lawful orders of the master or other officer of such vessel, or to refuse or neglect their proper duty on board thereof. This is part of the mutiny section and applies at sea, so that the proviso in section 12 which I have cited will have application or be intended to have application in harbor, and thus it will destroy the value and purpose of section 8, section 17, and section 18, which aim to give the seamen liberty.

Section 14, on page 18, from lines 8 to and inclusive of line 13, provides that 75 per cent of the crew in each department thereof shall understand the language of the officer of the vessel; and in lines 14 to 22, page 18, provides that this shall not apply if there are a number of interpreters, equal to the number of lifeboats, who understand the language of the officers and the crew.

This is a statutory elimination or repeal of the decision in re Pacific Mail Steamship Co., volume 64, page 410, where the court of appeals held that the vessel manned with such a crew as described in this proviso is not entitled to the benefit of limited liability.

This proviso, if enacted, would leave the seamen and the passengers without that protection to life which comes from prompt understanding and execution of orders.

On page 18, lines 23 to 26, provision is made for two lifeboat hands; and on page 19, lines 3 to 9, a standard of their efficiency is provided. According to these alleged standards the men may come from the deck, from the fireroom, from the saloon, or from shore. Nothing but an exhibition drill is required to determine efficiency, and no more than two such men are required for each lifeboat, the crew of which, according to its size, is from five to nine. This standard of skill is below the existing standard. If enacted, it will protect the shipowner at the expense of the seaman and the traveling public.

Mr. BACON and Mr. STONE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do, for a question.

Mr. STONE. The time is nearly up. One thing that troubles me about this bill relates to treaties.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I will come to that in a minute.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator mean to cover that?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I did not anticipate that I would not have an opportunity to say a word in reference to the amendment I have offered. I should like to have the Senator give me a few minutes before 4 o'clock.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wanted a moment or two to devote to that subject myself. The Senator spoke for nearly an hour on that subject last night, and I supposed he had pretty fully discussed it.

Mr. BACON. I have had nothing to say about my amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I interrupted the Senator last night, but as he did not seem disposed to yield, I said I would defer what I had to say until later. I should like to say just a word or two about the treaties.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should like also to have a few minutes in which to address the Senate—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have no doubt that is so. The Senator from Ohio has had only about six or eight hours of the time that has been taken in the debate on this bill.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Wisconsin has made some rather startling statements here at the end of the discussion, about which I should like to be heard.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is the only opportunity I have had to get in, on account of the time the Senator from Ohio has had the floor.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Georgia also wishes—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will not yield just at this moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield before 4 o'clock, if I can do so.

I want to say this, Mr. President: The Senator from Ohio has made assertions regarding the standard of efficiency which this bill sets up and which the proposed substitute sets up—that is, three years on deck at sea or upon the Great Lakes. He has asserted again and again that it was a ridiculous standard, a preposterous standard, an unreasonable standard, and I think I would not misquote him if I said he had asserted that there was no other country in the world except Australia that prescribed it.

Mr. President, I do not want to take the time to present the matter I have here if I can avoid it. I will simply say that Great Britain prescribes on passenger and emigrant steamers a higher and more rigorous standard of efficiency, in which is incorporated the provision that so many of the men shall be able seamen, and in which it is provided that the able seamen shall have had three years on deck at sea.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should be very glad if the Senator from Wisconsin would publish his material and give it to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Ohio makes that suggestion as though I did not have it. I have it in my hand, and I think the Senator from Ohio knows I have it, and knows that it is the law in England.

Mr. BURTON. No, sir.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not true? The board of trade have been authorized by Parliament to prescribe these regulations and have prescribed them, and I have them here and will give them.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Wisconsin had best print them, I think.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will print them; and I will print something else.

Mr. BURTON. On passenger ships there may be regulations of that kind—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The regulations prevail as to the trade just exactly as I stated them.

Mr. BURTON. There are no general regulations except in Australia.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator is now beginning to evade and quibble. Mr. President, I want to correct another misstatement of his, and that is this: He stated on yesterday that in the first section of this bill there was an amendment of the Hardy law. It is not true. The Hardy law is an amendment of another section of the statute, and not of the section of the statute amended in the first section of this bill. I will put into the Record the exact fact with respect to that, and I will say this: Mr. HARDY was not only the man who reported the Hardy bill, but he was the man who reported this bill from the committee.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator mean to say that this relates to the time of service of the men?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just a moment. I say the Hardy Act relates to officers, and this relates to seamen; you must own it; one is dealt with in one section of the statute and the other in another section of the statute.

Mr. BURTON. Put the statutes side by side.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not yield, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will put in the Record the statutes, The provisions of the English statutes and the regulations issued under them are as follows:

Paragraph 713 of the merchant shipping act of 1894, as published in the Merchant Shipping Act, issued by Eyre & Spottiswoode (Ltd.), Government and general booksellers, London, 1908, reads:

713. The board of trade shall be the department to undertake the general superintendence of all matters relating to merchant shipping and seamen, and are authorized to carry into execution the provisions of this act and of all acts relating to merchant shipping and seamen for the time being in force, except where otherwise provided by those acts, or except so far as those acts relate to the revenue.

Other paragraphs compel consular and customs officers abroad, marine boards, and superintendents to make and send reports to the board of trade, and such returns or reports on any matter relating to British shipping or seamen as the board may require, and empowers the board to compel the production of log books and other documents, and to take any legal proceedings under the act. The board of trade may appoint and remove surveyors of ships and fix their remuneration.

Section 459 of the merchant shipping act of 1894 provided that where a British ship in a port of Great Britain is an unsafe ship by reason of enumerated defects, the board of trade can detain such ship. By the merchant shipping act of 1897 this law was amended so as to include among the reasons for detention the words "or by reason of undermanning."

The provisions applicable to British ships were made applicable to foreign vessels.

[From the merchant shipping act, fourth edition, published 1908, p. 287, sec. 462.]

462. Where a foreign ship at a port in the United Kingdom is unsafe, by reason of the defective condition of her hull, equipments, or machinery, or by reason of overloading, or improper loading, or by reason of undermanning, the provisions of this part of this act with respect to the detention of ships shall apply to that foreign ship as if she were a British ship, with the following modifications:

I. A copy of the order for the provisional detention of the ship shall be forthwith served on the consular officer for the country to which the ship belongs at or nearest to the said port;

II. Where a ship has been provisionally detained, the consular officer, on the request of the owner or master of the ship, may require that the person appointed by the board of trade to survey the ship shall be accompanied by such person as the consular officer may select, and in that case, if the surveyor and that person agree, the board of trade shall cause the ship to be detained or released accordingly, but if they differ the board of trade may act as if the requisition had not been made, and the owner and master shall have the like appeal to a court of survey touching the report of the surveyor as is hereinbefore provided in the case of a British ship; and

III. Where the owner or master of the ship appeals to the court of survey, the consular officer, on his request, may appoint a competent person to be assessor in the case in lieu of the assessor who, if the ship were a British ship, would be appointed otherwise than by the board of trade.

I desire also to place in the RECORD a quotation from the British rules applying to foreign-going passenger steamers leaving the ports of Great Britain. This quotation is from a publication ordered by the House of Commons and is signed by Sydney Buxton, president of the British Board of Trade. This document is headed as follows:

LIFE-SAVING APPLIANCES.

Rules made by the board of trade under section 427 of the merchant shipping act, 1894, at the council chamber, Whitehall, this 17th day of January, 1913.

Present: The Right Hon. Sydney Charles Buxton, M. P.

In pursuance of the provisions of section 427 of the merchant shipping act, 1894, the board of trade do hereby make the following rules relating to life-saving appliances, in substitution for the rules dated 10th February, 1902, 24th May, 1909, 19th April, 1910, and 14th June, 1911; and do hereby direct that these rules shall come into operation on the 1st day of March, 1913.

SYDNEY BUXTON.

The quotation which I wish inserted in the RECORD from this document is as follows:

FOREIGN-GOING.

CLASS I.

Rules for foreign-going passenger steamers, including emigrant ships.

Rule A: A ship of this class shall carry lifeboats in such number and of such capacity as shall be sufficient to accommodate the total number of persons which is carried or which the ship is certified to carry, whichever number is the greater.

The master or owner of a ship of this class claiming to carry on any voyage fewer lifeboats than will provide sufficient accommodation for all the persons for which the ship is certified must declare before the collector or other officer of customs before the time of clearance that the lifeboats actually carried will be sufficient to accommodate all persons that will be carried at any time during the voyage to foreign ports and the voyage back to the United Kingdom.

I also desire to insert in the RECORD the rules made by the board of trade in conformity with the authorization provided for in the merchant shipping act. These are as follows:

Extracts from the instructions relating to emigrant ships issued by the British Board of Trade and published in 1911.

Manning.

Crew: Every emigrant ship must be manned with an efficient crew to the satisfaction of the emigration officer, and the following rules will assist the emigration officer in securing compliance with this requirement.

Deck hands: In steamships deck hands should be carried in accordance with the following scale, which is based on the total boat and raft capacity with which the ship is required to be provided under the statutory rules relating to life-saving appliances:

Total capacity of boats and rafts required under the life-saving appliances rules.	Number of deck hands to be carried.

The term "deck hands" means the master and the mates and all bona fide able-bodied seamen. The carpenter, boatswain, quartermasters, lamp trimmer, and other petty officers who have served or are fit to serve in the capacity of A. B., may be regarded as bona fide able-bodied seamen for this purpose. Of the total number of deck hands carried one in five may be an ordinary seaman, and two boys may be taken in place of each ordinary seaman so allowed. One cook and one steward may be reckoned as bona fide able-bodied seamen if they produce proof that they have served as A. B.'s and the emigration officer is satisfied by actual trial that they can pull an oar and are fit to serve in that rating. Tradesmen, such as joiners, etc., are not to be counted.

In the case of vessels having such a number of passengers as to necessitate the carrying of the maximum boat capacity, sufficient only for the number of persons carried on that particular voyage, the scale should be applied in the following manner: Add to the number of passengers to be carried the total number of crew, calculating the deck hands at a minimum of 25 men, then allow 10 cubic feet of boat capacity for each statute adult, and the result will be the boat-capacity figure in the manning table to be used for that voyage. For example, if there are 300 passengers and a crew of 90, including 25 deck hands, the number will be 390 and the boat capacity 390; the number of deck hands required for this boat capacity in the scale is 28.

The scale should be applied in all cases, unless the board of trade have previously allowed the ship under similar circumstances to clear with a smaller number of deck hands.

The Commissioner of Navigation must have had a copy of this document in his office when, last winter, he made the statements which misled the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and caused him repeatedly to assert that no nation had such regulations.

Any statement that the first section of the pending bill will repeal the Hardy Act is an error. The Hardy Act amended section 4463 and added to that section provisions with respect to the licensing of officers, the establishment of three watches for mates, determining the number of officers which vessels shall carry, and fixing a penalty for an officer taking charge of a watch immediately after leaving a port, unless he has had at least 6 hours off duty within the 12 hours immediately preceding the time of sailing.

Section 4463 provides that if a vessel—is deprived of the services of any number of the crew, without the consent, fault, or collusion of the master, owner, or any person interested in the vessel, the vessel may proceed on her voyage if, in the judgment of the master, she is sufficiently manned for such voyage.

Section 4463 deals with the officers, not the crew, and section 1 of this bill in no way contravenes the provision of section 4463 as amended by the Hardy Act. Section 4463 provides for the number of officers and fixes their hours of labor; section 1 of this bill fixes the hours of labor of the men. In one particular the two sections are almost identical in language, as section 1 of this bill provides that in case of desertion, and so forth—

The master must ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number of those whose services he has been deprived of by desertion or casualty, who must be of the same or higher grade or rating with those whose places they fill.

I shall ask to have inserted in parallel columns in the RECORD the Hardy Act and section 1 of the substitute bill, so that Senators can see at a glance that this bill in no wise modifies or changes the Hardy Act.

HARDY ACT.

(Public—No. 420.)

An act (H. R. 23676) to regulate the officering and manning of vessels subject to the inspection laws of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4463 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 4463. Any vessel of the United States subject to the provisions of this title or to the inspection laws of the United States shall not be navigated unless she shall have in her service and on board such complement of licensed officers and crew as may, in the judgment of the local inspectors who inspect the vessel, be necessary for her safe navigation. The local inspectors shall make in the certificate of inspection of the vessel an entry of such complement of officers and crew, which may be changed from time to time by indorsement on such certificate by local inspectors by reason of change of conditions or employment. Such entry or indorsement shall be subject to a right of appeal, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to the supervising inspector, and from him to the Supervising Inspector General, who shall have the power to revise, set aside, or affirm the said determination of the local inspectors.

If any such vessel is deprived of the services of any number of the crew without the consent, fault, or collusion of the master, owner, or any person interested in the vessel, the vessel may proceed on her voyage if, in the judgment of the master, she is sufficiently manned for such voyage: Provided, That the master shall ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number of those whose services he has been deprived of by desertion or casualty, who must be of the same grade or of a higher rating with those whose places they fill. If the master shall fail to explain in writing the cause of such deficiency in the crew to the local inspectors within 12 hours of the time of the arrival of the vessel at her destination, he shall be liable to a penalty

SECTION 1 OF THE PENDING BILL.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4516 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 4516. In case of desertion or casualty resulting in the loss of one or more of the seamen, the master must ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number of those whose services he has been deprived of by desertion or casualty, who must be of the same or higher grade or rating with those whose places they fill, and report the same to the United States consul at the first port at which he shall arrive, without incurring the penalty prescribed by the two preceding sections. And in all merchant vessels of the United States of more than 100 tons gross the sailors shall, while at sea, be divided into at least two and the firemen, oilers, and water tenders into at least three watches, which shall be kept on duty alternately for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing and management of the vessel, and seamen serving in one department of a vessel shall not be required to do duty in another department; but these provisions shall not limit either the authority of the master or other officer or the obedience of the seamen when, in the judgment of the master or other officer, all the sailors or all the firemen or the whole crew is needed for the maneuvering of the vessel or the performance of work necessary for the safety of the vessel or her cargo or for the saving of life aboard other vessels in jeopardy. While the vessel is in a safe harbor no seaman shall be required to do any unnecessary work on Sundays or legal holidays, but this shall not prevent the dispatch of a vessel on regular schedule or when ready to proceed on her voyage; and at all other times while the vessel is in a safe harbor nine hours, inclusive of the anchor watch, shall constitute a of $50. If the vessel shall not be manned as provided in this act, the owner shall be liable to a penalty of $100, or, in case of an insufficient number of licensed officers, to a penalty of $500."

SEC. 2. That the board of local inspectors shall make an entry in the certificate of inspection of every ocean and coastwise seagoing merchant vessel of the United States propelled by machinery and every ocean-going vessel carrying passengers, the minimum number of licensed deck officers required for her safe navigation according to the following scale:

That no such vessel shall be navigated unless she shall have on board and in her service one duly licensed master.

That every such vessel of 1,000 gross tons and over, propelled by machinery, shall have in her service and on board three licensed mates, who shall stand in three watches while such vessel is being navigated, unless such vessel is engaged in a run of less than 400 miles from the port of departure to the port of final destination, then such vessel shall have two licensed mates; and every vessel of 200 gross tons and less than 1,000 gross tons, propelled by machinery, shall have two licensed mates.

That every such vessel of 100 gross tons and under 200 gross tons, propelled by machinery, shall have on board and in her service one licensed mate; but if such vessel is engaged in a trade in which the time required to make the passage from the port of departure to the port of destination exceeds 24 hours, then such vessel shall have two licensed mates.

That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent local inspectors from increasing the number of licensed officers on any vessel subject to the inspection laws of the United States if, in their judgment, such vessel is not sufficiently manned for her safe navigation: Provided, That this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels, yachts, or motor boats as defined in the act of June 9, 1910.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for the master, owner, agent, or other person having authority, to permit an officer of any vessel to take charge of the deck watch of the vessel upon leaving or immediately after leaving port, unless such officer shall have had at least 6 hours off duty within the 12 hours immediately preceding the time of sailing, and no licensed officer on any ocean or coastwise vessel shall be required to do duty to exceed 9 hours of any 24 while in port, including the date of arrival, or more than 12 hours of any 24 at sea, except in a case of emergency when life or property is endangered. Any violation of this section shall subject the person or persons guilty thereof to a penalty of $100.

SEC. 4. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Approved, March 3, 1913.

Now, Mr. President, just one word about the treaties. This bill proposes changes in our laws which will change the conventions or treaties with nearly all of the maritime nations with which we have treaties; but as to foreign ships it makes no change for one year, or until the notice provision of the treaty has been complied with. It provides time enough—90 days' notice to those countries by the President—for making the amendments in accordance with the provisions in those treaties for amendments.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. Is there any treaty the Senator knows of where there is any provision for giving notice of abrogation—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is a German treaty. That is one.

Mr. BACON. The Senator has not heard my question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am in a hurry.

SECTION 1 OF PENDING BILL—contd.

day's work. Whenever the master of any vessel shall fail to comply with this section, the seamen shall be entitled to discharge from such vessel and shall, upon demand, receive wages then earned. But this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels or yachts."

Mr. BACON. Is there a provision which looks to the notice of the abrogation of a part of the treaty—not the whole treaty?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President; and if men of sense they will understand that it is that part of the treaty affected that must be modified, and if they want the other portions of the treaty to go on, as men of reason and common sense, representing their Governments, they can easily come together with the representatives of our Government; their minds can meet.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will recognize—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The German treaty, to which the Senator referred and on which he has laid so much stress—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock has arrived.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not say—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment proposed as a substitute by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I make a request as to the publication of some matter? If it is proper to do it, I want to do it; if it is not, I will not ask to do it.

Mr. VARDAMAN and others. Do it afterwards.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well; I will defer it. I want to get in the entire Chamberlain record; that is all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in my remarks certain data which I will furnish.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator will be complied with.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present two cablegrams and a telegram:

LONDON, October 21, 1913.

FURUSETH,

National Hotel, Washington:

Great opposition being worked up here by shipowners against your seamen's bill. We are making our side heard. I am to take part as delegate at international seamen's conference. Pleased you are coming. Have wired LA FOLLETTE in favor of bill.

HAVELOCK WILSON.

LONDON, October 21, 1913.

Senator LA FOLLETTE, Washington:

Seamen in every port of Great Britain urge the passing of seamen's bill, as they are of opinion it will do much to ameliorate the condition of seamen throughout the world.

HAVELOCK WILSON,

President Seamen's Union, Great Britain.

WATERTOWN, S. DAK., October 21, 1913.

Hon. R. M. LA FOLLETTE,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Accept hearty congratulations on your magnificent fight for a humane seamen's law. Our flag would float on more ships if our American seamen were treated as American citizens have a right to demand. My best wishes for your success.

H. L. LOUCKS.

I present an important letter descriptive of a recent sea experience of Arthur M. Churchill, now of Portland, Oreg., but until recently an attorney of this city and well known to many Senators on this floor. The letter is as follows:

YOUNG'S HOTEL,
Boston, October 20, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Saturday evening's Transcript states that your seamen's bill will be voted on not later than Thursday. I hope this letter may be in time for your use. The experience which I relate below occurred only three days ago, and, in my opinion, should by itself be sufficient to convince the most doubting of the urgent need of the immediate enforcement of at least one provision of your bill. I refer to the clause requiring at least 75 per cent of a ship's crew to understand the language of the officers.

I was a passenger on the Cunard liner Icarnia, which arrived in New York from the Mediterranean last Friday afternoon. At about 8 a. m., while we were approaching Ambrose Channel Light, a steward jumped overboard. The word was passed to the bridge at once and the ship was brought about as rapidly as her speed and the difficulty of making a quick turn permitted. Meantime a small boat with a crew of about eight men was lowered to within 10 feet of the water and made ready for use the moment field glasses on the bridge could pick up any object floating in the water. The weather, I should add, was perfect and the sea quite calm.

After 20 minutes or half an hour the man was seen, and the order came to get the boat away. But, as my information stands, our crew were largely Hungarians. My recollection is that I was told we had only about 10 good English sailors out of a crew of 50 seamen. In any event, the man having in charge the tackle at the stern of the small boat began lowering away much faster than the man at the bow. Officers and men alike shouted at him, and there was time enough to have saved the situation a dozen times. But he couldn't understand any English, and the more they shouted the more confused he seemed to become. In a moment more the boat was dangling end up from one of the davits, and the crew were hanging for their lives to the ropes from the ship above. Whether some other Hungarian who was stationed above couldn't speak English enough to tell the officers what had happened I do not know. At any rate, the propellers were kept going for some 10 or 15 minutes after that. One sailor dropped off, was swept under the screw, and never seen again. Another was dragged along at a clipping pace under water for some 10 minutes. Only the fact that he had a grip of iron and many years of sea experience saved him. And the New York Times of the next morning (front page) says the captain was not aware that the seamen were overboard.

Meantime another boat, manned by English sailors, got away without the slightest difficulty. But so much time had been lost that the body of the steward was likewise no longer to be seen, and after cruising around for some time there was no course left but to abandon the search.

If the loss of this sailor's life seemed otherwise so needless, it taught some 2,300 of passengers and crew aboard that ship one thing, namely, that all the lifeboats in the world are useless if your crews are inefficient and can't understand orders of the officers. The Ivernia's decks, under the recent orders of the board of trade, were so littered up with lifeboats and liferafts that one could scarcely see the ocean at all. Promenade room was almost nonexistent and space for steamer chairs at a premium, with only 130 first-class passengers aboard. But we slept at night in the fancied security that if the decks were uncomfortable at least there were plenty of lifeboats if anything happened.

Friday morning's accident taught us differently. After witnessing the attempt to launch that small boat passengers and crew alike came. I think, to realize that Providence and the Ivernia's splendid seaworthiness had been our only safeguards. We might as well have pitched the lifeboats overboard and had plenty of deck space for all the use they would have been in time of emergency with a crew like that. We had had seven days of continuous gale in crossing. If they couldn't launch that boat under the conditions described, what would they have done with 30 or 50 boats in a raging sea in case of such a fire as destroyed the Volturno or under the excitement of a collision in a fog?

The objections of English shipowners to your bill on the ground that an insignificant part of the shipping affected is American owned seems to me absurd. I notice that English-owned ships have no objection to accepting good American dollars for trans-Atlantic passage, holding out the assurance that every precaution against danger has been taken. And the trans-Atlantic passenger traffic, in the first cabin at least, is, in my observation, very largely of Americans. To take the position that under these conditions the United States is impertinent in interfering seems to me rather untenable, to use a mild expression.

I have not had opportunity to study the remaining provisions of your bill, but if they possess equal merit with the clause referred to I hope and believe they will receive a unanimous support.

With best wishes for your success, I am,

Very truly yours, ARTHUR M. CHURCHILL.
Home address: 809 Chamber of Commerce, Portland, Oreg.

I also present a letter of Gus Brown, a Swedish sailor, an able seaman of 12 or 15 years' standing. He sailed as quartermaster on the ocean for years, and as wheelsman on the Great Lakes. He is now the agent of the Eastern and Gulf Sailors' Association. It is his duty in part to give protection to sailors and aid them in securing occupation.

He was requested by Mr. Andrew Furuseth, well known to many of the Members of the Senate, to interview sailors belonging to the crew of the Volturno, whenever any of them reached New York, to procure their statements as to the character of the crew and any facts bearing upon the disaster which might be pertinent to this legislation, and to report their statements to Mr. Furuseth. His letter is as follows:

EASTERN AND GULF SAILORS' ASSOCIATION (INC.),
New York, October 18, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. FURUSETH: Your letter received. In regard to the first, I may say that I tried very hard to get the carpenter, boatswain, one sailor, and one of the stokers to give a statement as to the way the lifeboats were handled during the disaster. These men all agreed that there was not enough efficient men aboard to man the boats. The Volturno carried 8 able seamen, 2 ordinary, 4 quartermasters, 2 boatswains, and 2 carpenters. Nineteen lifeboats were carried in double rows on the top deck. One half of the deck crew were burned to death; they never had a chance to escape. The other half were fighting the fire in No. 1 hold. The firemen were kept in the stokehold keeping up steam and fighting the fire in the bunkers. The heat was terrific and all the firemen took turns about of 15 minutes each at their post. The steward's department was left to handle the lifeboats and the passengers, with the result that you have heard about. Only one boat got away, the one the second mate was in charge of and manned by two A. B.'s, one fireman, and the steward.

The steward's department consisted of men with hardly any experience at all and unable to speak and understand the English language. Two or three men of the stokehold crew knew how to handle boats. The boat drill on the previous Saturday, the only one they had, merely amounted to showing the men their stations; no boats were swung out, none were lowered. At the time of the accident the wind was blowing 40 to 45 miles an hour.

Yours, fraternally,

GUS BROWN.

I also present to be printed in three parallel columns, so as to show at a glance the difference between the three bills, a summary of the provisions of the bill introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and reported by the committee, a summary of the bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], and of the substitute which I introduced. It is as follows:

LA FOLLETTE SUBSTITUTE.

Section 1 provides at least two watches for the sailors at sea.

Three watches for the firemen, oilers, and water-tenders at sea. That seamen serving in one department be not required to do duty in another department.

Nine-hour workday in port.

No unnecessary work on Sundays or legal holidays, but this not to prevent the dispatch of a vessel.

Section 2. Seamen in coastwise trade entitled to wages within two days after termination of agreement or at the time of discharge. Seamen in foreign voyages or from a port of the Atlantic to a port on the Pacific, or vice versa, to be paid within 24 hours after discharge of cargo or 4 days after discharge of seaman, but in either case he is entitled to one-third of his wages upon discharge.

Failure to comply provides payment of two days' wages for every day seaman is kept waiting.

Section 3. Seamen shall be entitled upon demand to one-half of their wages at every port where the vessel stops to discharge or load cargo.

A court upon cause shown may set aside any release signed by a seaman.

Provided, That this section shall apply to foreign vessels while in harbors of the United States and opens the courts of the United States for its enforcement.

Section 4 gives to seamen the right to call for a survey in a foreign port without any officer participating in the demand.

Section 5 provides 100 cubic feet fore-castle space, 16 feet on the floor for each seaman or apprentice therein.

Applies to vessels of 100 tons register.

Vessels having more than 10 men on deck must be provided with a clean and sanitary washing place, one basin for each two men,

NELSON BILL.

Section 1 and section 2 provides at least two watches for the sailors at sea.
Three watches for the firemen at sea.

Nine-hour day with a proviso that no member of the crew shall be required to work more than 12 hours of every 24 except in cases of emergency.

No unnecessary work on Sunday or legal holidays, but this not to prevent the doing of work necessary to the dispatch of a vessel.

Exempts vessels of 300 tons or less and vessels whose regular schedule between terminals does not exceed 24 hours from compliance with the section.

Section 3. Seamen in coastwise trade entitled to wages within two days after termination of agreement or at the time of discharge. Seaman in foreign voyages to be paid within 24 hours after discharge of cargo or 4 days after discharge of seaman, but in either case he is entitled to one-third of his wages upon discharge.

Failure to comply provides payment of two days' wages for every day seaman is kept waiting.

Sections 4 and 5. Seamen shall be entitled upon demand to one-half of their wages at every port where the vessel stops to discharge or load cargo.

Provided, That the wages earned during the first five days shall not be subject to demand prior to the completion of the voyage or expiration of the contract.

A court upon cause shown may set aside any release signed by a seaman.

Provided, That this section shall apply to seamen on foreign vessels owned in major part by American citizens, corporations, or holding companies while in harbors of the United States and open the courts of the United States to seamen for its enforcement.

Section 6 gives to seamen the right to call for a survey in a foreign port without any officer participating in the demand.

Section 7 provides 122 cubic feet fore-castle space, 18 square feet on the floor, with 20 per cent deducted for mess room, for every seaman or apprentice carried therein.

Applies to vessels of 200 tons register.

Makes provision for hospital space on boats carrying more than 12 seamen.

Vessels having more than 20 men on deck must be provided with a clean and sanitary washing place, one basin for each two men,

BURTON BILL.

Section 1 and section 2 provides at least two watches for the sailors at sea.
Three watches for the firemen at sea.

Nine-hour day with a proviso that no member of the crew shall be required to work more than 12 hours of every 24 except in cases of emergency.

No unnecessary work on Sunday or legal holidays, but this not to prevent the doing of work necessary to the dispatch of a vessel.

Exempts vessels of 300 tons or less and vessels whose regular schedule between terminals does not exceed 24 hours from compliance with the section.

Section 3. Seamen in coastwise trade entitled to wages within two days after termination of agreement or at the time of discharge. Seaman in foreign voyages to be paid within 24 hours after discharge of cargo or 4 days after discharge of seaman, but in either case he is entitled to one-third of his wages upon discharge.

Failure to comply provides payment of two days' wages for every day seaman is kept waiting.

Sections 4 and 5. Seamen shall be entitled upon demand to one-half of their wages at every port where the vessel stops to discharge or load cargo.

Provided, That the wages earned during the first five days shall not be subject to demand prior to the completion of the voyage or expiration of the contract.

A court upon cause shown may set aside any release signed by a seaman.

Section 6 gives to seamen the right to call for a survey in a foreign port without any officer participating in the demand.

Section 7 provides 122 cubic feet fore-castle space, 18 square feet on the floor, with 20 per cent deducted for mess room for every seaman or apprentice carried therein.

Applies to vessels of 200 tons register.

Makes provision for hospital space on boats carrying more than 12 seamen.

Vessels having more than 20 men on deck must be provided with a clean and sanitary washing place, one basin for each two men, separate wash place for the fireroom and engineroom men, if they exceed 10 in number, and large enough to accommodate one-sixth of them at the same time, providing for basin, sinks, and shower baths.

Penalty, fine of $500.

Provides for fumigation of forecastles.

Provides that forecastles shall have at least two exits, one to be used in emergency.

Section 6 provides penalties for desertion and disobedience, willfully damaging the vessel, or smuggling; and subsection 6 provides penalty for assaulting a master or mate.

Provided, That in any suit to recover damages for any injury sustained on board vessel or in its service seamen having command shall not be held to be fellow servants with those under their authority.

Section 7 provides for duties of the consular officers in cases of insubordination on board of vessel, how they may proceed, and what action they may take.

Section 8 prohibits flogging or any other corporal punishment and penalties therefor, and that the master shall surrender any officer guilty of the same to the proper authorities as soon as practicable.

Failure of the master to comply herewith shall subject the master and the vessel to damages.

Section 9 provides for the increase in the scale of provisions by increasing the daily allowance of water and butter.

Section 10 makes it unlawful to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned same, either to the seaman himself or to some other person.

Or to pay any person for the shipment of seamen if payment is deducted or is to be deducted from a seaman's wages.

Penalty, $25 to $100, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court.

The payment of such advance wages shall not absolve the vessel, but seamen may recover their full wages after the same shall have been earned.

It prohibits the demanding or receiving from any seaman seeking employment as a seaman or any person on his behalf any remuneration whatever for providing him this employment, and provides a penalty not to exceed six months or a fine not exceeding $500.

Section 10, continued, provides that any seaman may stipulate in a shipping agreement for an allotment of any wages he may earn to grandparents, parents, wife, sister, or children, and no such allotment shall be valid unless signed and approved by the shipping commissioner, who shall make rules to govern such allotments, and that any person falsely claiming to be such relative shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months.

That this section shall apply to foreign vessels while in the waters of the United States as well as to vessels of the United States, and that no clearance from a port of the United States shall be granted to a foreign vessel unless this section is complied with.

Section 11 provides that the law exempting wages of seamen from attachment and arrestment shall be applicable to fishermen employed on fishing vessels, except in the case where the court orders part of wages paid to the wife or minor children.

Section 12. That no vessel of 100 tons gross and upward, except those navigating rivers exclusively and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, nor unless 40 per cent in the first year, 45 per cent in the second year, 50 per cent in the third year, 55 per cent in the fourth year after the passage of this act, and thereafter 65 per cent of her separate wash place for the fireroom and engineroom men if they exceed 10 in number, and large enough to accommodate one-sixth of them at the same time, providing for basin, sinks, and shower baths.

Penalty, fine not less than $50 nor more than $500.

Section 8 provides penalties for desertion and disobedience, willfully damaging the vessel, or smuggling; and subsection 6 provides penalty for assaulting a master or other licensed officer.

Section 9 provides for duties of the consular officers in cases of insubordination on board of vessel, how they may proceed, and what action they may take.

Section 10 prohibits flogging or any other corporal punishment and penalties therefor, and that the master shall surrender any officer guilty of the same to the proper authorities as soon as practicable.

Provided, He has actual knowledge of the misdemeanor, or complaint is made within three days after vessel reaching port; and if he has failed to use due diligence to comply herewith the master and vessel shall be liable to damages.

Section 11 provides for the increase in the scale of provisions by increasing the daily allowance of water and butter.

Section 12 makes it unlawful to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned same, either to the seaman himself or to some other person.

Or to pay any person for the shipment of seamen if payment is deducted or is to be deducted from a seaman's wages.

Penalty, $25 to $100, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court.

The payment of such advance wages shall not absolve the vessel, but seamen may recover their full wages after the same shall have been earned.

It prohibits the demanding or receiving from any seaman seeking employment as a seaman or any person on his behalf any remuneration whatever for providing him employment, and provides a penalty not to exceed six months or a fine not exceeding $500.

Section 12, continued, provides that any seaman may stipulate in a shipping agreement for an allotment of any wages he may earn to grandparents, parents, wife, sister, or children, and no such allotment shall be valid unless signed and approved by the shipping commissioner, who shall make rules to govern such allotments, and that any person falsely claiming to be such relative shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months.

That this section shall apply to foreign vessels while in the waters of the United States as well as to vessels of the United States, and that no clearance from a port of the United States shall be granted to a foreign vessel unless this paragraph is complied with, provided treaties do not conflict.

Or shall by any threat or force dissuade or prevent, or endeavor to dissuade or prevent, any person from taking employment on board any vessel, or shall by any threat or force dissuade or prevent, or endeavor to dissuade or prevent, any person from remaining in the service of any vessel on which he has shipped, or by any threat or force induce or compel any person to disregard or disobey any lawful order or orders of the master or other licensed officer of the vessel on which he is shipped, he shall for every offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500.

Section 13 provides that the law exempting wages of seamen from attachment and arrestment shall be applicable to fishermen employed on fishing vessels, except in the case where the court orders part of wages paid to the wife or minor children.

Section 14 applies to vessels except those navigating rivers exclusively. Vessels shall not depart any port of the United States unless 75 per cent of the crew in each department are able to understand the language of the officer, unless the crew shall include a sufficient number of seamen who understand the languages of both officers and crew through whom the orders of the officers may be communicated in a manner to be readily understood by the seamen. * * * The number of seamen through whom the orders may be transmitted to be not less than the Penalty, fine not less than $50 nor more than $500.

Section 8 provides penalties for desertion and disobedience, willfully damaging the vessel, or smuggling; and subsection 6 provides penalty for assaulting a master or other licensed officer. Subsection 9 provides six months' imprisonment for refusal or willful neglect to engage in boat practice or drill as provided in section 12. (This seems to apply in port as well as at sea.)

Section 9 provides for duties of the consular officers in cases of insubordination on board of vessel, how they may proceed, and what action they may take.

Section 10 prohibits flogging or any other corporal punishment and penalties therefor, and that the master shall surrender any officer guilty of the same to the proper authorities as soon as practicable.

Provided, He has actual knowledge of the misdemeanor, or complaint is made within three days after vessel reaching port; and if he has failed to use due diligence to comply herewith the master and vessel shall be liable to damages.

Section 12 makes it unlawful to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned same, either to the seaman himself or to some other person.

Or to pay any person for the shipment of seamen if payment is deducted or is to be deducted from a seaman's wages.

Penalty, $25 to $100, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court.

The payment of such advance wages shall not absolve the vessel, but seamen may recover their full wages after the same shall have been earned.

It prohibits the demanding or receiving from any seaman seeking employment as a seaman or any person on his behalf any remuneration whatever for providing him this employment, and provides a penalty not to exceed six months or a fine not exceeding $500.

Section 12, continued, provides that any seaman may stipulate in a shipping agreement for an allotment of any wages he may earn to grandparents, parents, wife, sister, or children, and no such allotment shall be valid unless signed and approved by the shipping commissioner, who shall make rules to govern such allotments, and that any person falsely claiming to be such relative shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months.

That this section shall apply to foreign vessels while in the waters of the United States as well as to vessels of the United States, and the collector of customs may, upon reasonable evidence, that this section has not been complied with, refuse to grant clearance to such vessels, provided treaties do not conflict.

Or shall by any threat or force dissuade or prevent, or endeavor to dissuade or prevent, any person from taking employment on board any vessel, or shall by any threat or force dissuade or prevent, or endeavor to dissuade or prevent, any person from remaining in the service of any vessel on which he has shipped, or by any threat or force induce or compel any person to disregard or disobey any lawful order or orders of the master or other licensed officer of the vessel on which he is shipped, he shall for every offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than six months or fined not more than $500.

Section 13 provides that the law exempting wages of seamen from attachment and arrestment shall be applicable to fishermen employed on fishing vessels, except in the case where the court orders part of wages paid to the wife or minor children.

Section 14. That no vessel, except those navigating rivers exclusively and except as provided in section 1 of this act, shall depart from any port of the United States unless she has on board a crew not less than 75 per cent of which, in each department thereof, are able to understand any order given by the officers of such vessel, unless the crew shall include a sufficient number of seamen who understand the languages of both officers and crew, through whom the orders of the officers may be communicated in a manner to be readily understood by the seamen, in any deck crew, exclusive of licensed officers, are of a rating not less than able seaman:

Provided, That no vessel carrying passengers, except those navigating rivers and harbors exclusively, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she is provided and equipped with a sufficient number of seaworthy lifeboats to carry and transport at one time every passenger and every member of the crew licensed to be carried on board such vessel, and unless she shall have a sufficient crew to man each lifeboat with not less than two men of the rating of able seaman or higher, who shall be drilled in the handling and lowering of lifeboats under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

No person shall be rated as an able seaman unless he is 19 years of age or upward and has had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes. Any person may make application to any board of local inspectors for a certificate of service as able seaman, and upon proof being made to said board by affidavit, under rule approved by the Secretary of Commerce, showing the nationality of the applicant and the vessel or vessels on which he has had service and that he has had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes, the board of local inspectors shall issue to said applicant a certificate of service, which shall be retained by him and be accepted as prima facie evidence of his rating as an able seaman.

Each board of local inspectors shall keep a complete record of all certificates of service issued by them and to whom issued, and shall keep on file the affidavits upon which said certificates are issued.

The collector of customs may, upon his own motion, and shall upon the sworn information of any citizen of the United States setting forth that this section is not being complied with, cause a muster of the crew of any vessel to be made to determine the fact; and no clearance shall be given to any vessel failing to comply with the provisions of this section: Provided, That the collector of customs shall not be required to cause such muster of the crew to be made unless said sworn information has been filed with him for at least six hours before the vessel departs or is scheduled to depart: Provided further, That any person that shall knowingly make a false affidavit for such purpose shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, within the discretion of the court. Any violation of any provision of this section shall subject the owner of such vessel to a penalty of not less than $100 and not more than $500.

number of lifeboats the vessel is required to carry and one seaman shall be assigned to each lifeboat.

No vessel, except those navigating rivers and harbors exclusively, shall depart from any port of the United States unless she shall have a sufficient number of efficient lifeboat hands, which in no case shall be less than two for each lifeboat that such ship is required to carry, to launch and handle the prescribed lifeboats and life rafts.

A seaman shall be entitled to the rating of efficient lifeboat hand who has shown by practical tests to the satisfaction of the board of local inspectors that he is qualified to perform any duty required in the launching and handling of lifeboats and life rafts and their equipment, including the stowing of passengers, swinging out, lowering, detaching, and hoisting, and use of oars. Such tests shall be subject to regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, who shall, through collectors of customs, local inspectors, and other officers of the Government, enforce the laws and regulations for the handling of lifeboats and life rafts and the efficiency of lifeboat hands.

This section shall take effect on and after the following dates, respectively, in the case of vessels navigating the ocean or sounds and bays connected therewith or the Great Lakes and connecting waters, and authorized by certificate of inspection to carry the following number of passengers: On July 1, 1913, 500 passengers or over; on August 1, 1913, 200 passengers and less than 500; on October 1, 1913, less than 200.

Section 15. A seaman shall not be entitled to the rating of A. B.—that is to say, of an able-bodied seaman—unless he is at least 18 years of age, possesses a sufficient knowledge of the English language to understand the necessary orders that may be given to him in the course of the performance of his duties, and has served on deck at sea for at least three years. The service herein prescribed may be proved by certificates of discharge by a master before a shipping commissioner or by other proof satisfactory to officers designated by the Secretary of Commerce, who shall issue certificates to able-bodied seamen in a form to be prescribed by him, and in the case of seamen shipped abroad on vessels of the United States such service may be proved by certificates of discharge by a master before consuls of the United States.

No vessel, except those navigating rivers exclusively, shall depart from any port of the United States unless she shall have as part of her crew a sufficient number of wheelmen or quartermasters and lookout men of not less rating than that of able seaman: Provided, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce, as to eyesight, hearing, and physical strength, and knowledge of the duties, men found competent may be so employed, although they may have served only one year at sea, and no other men than those so qualified shall be employed at the wheel or as lookout. And while at sea the wheelmen or quartermasters department, to whom such orders are given. The number of seamen through whom the orders of the officers may be transmitted shall not be less than the number of lifeboats such vessel is required to carry, and at least one of such seamen shall be assigned to each lifeboat.

No vessel carrying passengers, except those navigating rivers and harbors exclusively, shall be permitted to depart from any port of the United States unless she shall have a sufficient number of efficient boat hands, which in no case shall be less than two for each lifeboat that such ship is required to carry, to launch and handle the prescribed lifeboats and life rafts.

A seaman shall be entitled to the rating of efficient boat hand who has shown by practical tests to the satisfaction of the master that he is qualified to perform any duty required in the launching and handling of lifeboats and life rafts and their equipment, including the stowing of passengers, swinging out, lowering, detaching, and hoisting, and use of oars. This section shall take effect on and after the following dates, respectively, in the case of vessels navigating the ocean or sounds and bays connecting therewith, or the Great Lakes and connecting waters, and authorized by certificate of inspection to carry the following number of passengers: On July 1, 1913, 500 passengers or over; on August 1, 1913, 200 passengers and less than 500; on October 1, 1913, 12 passengers and less than 200.

Any violation of the provisions of this section shall subject the owner of such vessel to a fine of not more than $500.

Section 15. That a seaman shall not be entitled to the rating of A. B.—that is to say, of an able-bodied seaman—unless he is at least 18 years of age, possesses a sufficient knowledge of the English language to understand the necessary orders that may be given to him in the course of the performance of his duties, and has served on deck at sea for at least three years. and lookout men shall be divided into at least three watches, which shall be kept on duty successively; but this requirement shall not apply to yachts, vessels of less than 300 gross tons, or vessels whose regular schedule between terminal ports does not exceed 12 hours: Provided, That no member of the crew shall be required to be on duty more than 12 hours out of any 24 hours, except in case of emergency. But this exemption shall in no way interfere with the authority of the proper officers of the Government to make such lawful regulations or orders as they may deem necessary to secure safety at sea and prevent excessive hours of labor.

Any failure to comply with this provision shall subject the master or owner of such vessel to a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $500.

Section 13 provides "that the owner, agent, or master of every barge which, while in tow through the open sea, has sustained or caused any accident," shall report such accident to the proper authorities, and that the Secretary of Commerce shall make reports to Congress each year.

Sections 14, 15, and 16 provide for the abrogation of treaties and the repeal of statutes under which seamen are arrested, detained, and surrendered back to the vessel.

Section 17 provides a more convenient method of sending a sick seaman to a marine or other hospital.

Section 16 provides "that the owner, agent, or master of every barge which, while in tow for 50 miles or more through the open sea, has sustained or caused any accident," shall report such accident to the proper authorities, and that the Secretary of Commerce shall make reports to Congress each year.

Sections 17, 18, and 19 provide for the abrogation of treaties and the repeal of statutes under which seamen are arrested, detained, and surrendered back to the vessel.

Section 20 provides a more convenient method of sending a sick seaman to a marine or other hospital.

Section 16. That no vessel carrying passengers for hire, except those navigating rivers exclusively, shall depart from any port of the United States unless she shall have as part of her crew a sufficient number of wheelmen or quartermasters and lookout men of not less rating than that of able seamen: Provided, That upon examination, under rules prescribed by the Department of Commerce, as to eyesight, hearing, and physical strength and knowledge of the duties, men found competent may be so employed, although they may have served only one year at sea, and no other men than those so qualified shall be employed at the wheel or as lookout. But this exemption shall in no way interfere with the authority of the proper officers of the Government to make such lawful regulations or orders as they may deem necessary to secure safety at sea and prevent excessive hours of labor.

Any violation of the provisions of this section shall subject the owner to a fine of not more than $500.

Section 17 provides "that the owner, agent, or master of every barge which, while in tow for 50 miles or more through the open sea, has sustained or caused any accident," shall report such accident to the proper authorities, and that the Secretary of Commerce shall make reports to Congress each year.

Sections 18, 19, and 20 provide for the abrogation of treaties and the repeal of statutes under which seamen are arrested, detained, and surrendered back to the vessel.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 13, in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] offers the following amendment:

Strike out the word "either" and insert in lieu "the obligation of all the crew to take part in boat drills and fire drills or," so that, if amended, it will read:

"But these provisions shall not limit the obligation of all the crew to take part in boat drills and fire drills or the authority of the master or other officer or the obedience of the seamen, etc."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The amendment to the amendment seems to be lost.

Mr. BURTON. I ask for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He has asked for a division.

Mr. BURTON. I ask for a division.

There were on a division—ayes 5, noes 26.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No quorum has voted. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Goff	Martine, N. J.	Sterling
Bacon	Hitchcock	Myers	Stone
Borah	Hollis	Norris	Sutherland
Brady	Hughes	O'Gorman	Swanson
Brandeggee	Jackson	Overman	Thomas
Bristow	James	Page	Thornton
Bryan	Kenyon	Polindexter	Tillman
Burton	Kern	Pomerene	Vardaman
Chamberlain	La Follette	Reed	Walsh
Chilton	Lane	Shafroth	Weeks
Clapp	Lewis	Sheppard	Williams
Cummins	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Dillingham	McLean	Smith, S. C.
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask what amendment is now pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that the Senator from Ohio simply asked for a division. He did not ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; he asked for a division; and a division disclosed the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. The Chair has now announced that a quorum is present?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then would not the next amendment be in order, the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is undisposed of as yet.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It was disposed of by the vote on a division, unless the Senator from Ohio asks for a vote in some other form.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; unless he now requests a yeas-and-nays vote.

Mr. BACON. I understood that on the division no quorum voted, and therefore the Chair ordered a roll call, and the matter has not yet been disposed of. Before the amendment to the amendment is disposed of, I desire that it be again read to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The amendment has been disposed of, unless the Senator from Ohio asks for another vote.

Mr. BACON. Not at all. He called for a division, and there has been no division. There was an attempt at a division, but it was not a success.

Mr. JAMES. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps technically it is not a parliamentary inquiry, but I wanted to call the attention of the Chair to what happened the other day, when a similar proceeding occurred. Upon a vote the want of a quorum was disclosed, and as I remember it the Chair decided that the motion was carried, and it was held that the motion had been finally disposed of.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if I may be allowed to make a parliamentary inquiry, is not this the situation? On the call for a division by the Senator from Ohio there were 5 ayes and 26 noes, 31 in all, and the Chair announced that the vote disclosed that there was no quorum. If there was no quorum on the vote, of course it was not a vote. Where the record discloses that there was not a quorum present when a vote was taken it can not be a vote, and the question must be again put.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the submission of the question on the amendment to another viva voce vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BACON. Which I ask may be read.

Mr. BURTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment. I think we will be more likely to develop a quorum in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Ohio proposes the following amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin:

On page 2, as printed, line 13, strike out the word "either" and in lieu insert "the obligation of all the crew to take part in boat drills and fire drills or," so that if amended the clause will read:

"But these provisions shall not limit the obligation of all the crew to take part in boat drills and fire drills or the authority of the master or other officer or the obedience of the seamen when, in the judgment of the master or other officer, all the sailors or all the firemen or the whole crew is needed for the maneuvering of the vessel," etc.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order now to ask for the reading of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin upon this same subject of the fire drill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that it is in order for any Senator to obtain any information he desires before voting.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If it is in order, I should like to have that provision read.

Mr. BACON. I suggest that nothing is in order but to read the amendment and the paragraph as it would stand as amended, and that has been done.

Mr. JAMES and others. Let us vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BURTON. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "nay."

Mr. GOFF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. Not being advised as to how he would vote on this amendment, I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. In his absence I shall withhold my vote unless it is necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. As he is not present I will withhold my vote unless it is necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. I therefore withhold my vote unless I find it is necessary to vote in order to make a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when his name was called). I am likewise paired, being paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I will not vote unless my vote is necessary to make a quorum. If it becomes necessary I shall vote; otherwise I will withhold my vote.

Mr. BACON (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is necessarily absent, and that he is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will withhold my vote. I am not advised as to how the Senator from Nevada would vote on this amendment if he were present.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer it to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and would observe that pair were not my vote necessary for a quorum. Realizing that my vote is necessary to secure a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay." I will withhold my vote to await the determination of the presence of a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I telegraphed him this morning, but have not been able to reach him. I am informed by Capt. Stewart, in his office, that he thinks the Senator would be perfectly willing to relieve me from the pair on this particular vote. I therefore desire to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] has been called away from the Senate on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for all votes during the day.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN].

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—12.

Bacon	Burton	Jackson	O'Gorman
Brandeggee	Dillingham	McLean	Thornton
Bryan	Fletcher	Nelson	Weeks

NAYS—36.

Gallinger	Overman	Simmons

So Mr. BURTON's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I now offer the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk and of which I gave notice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of Mr. LA FOLLETTE by adding at the end thereof a new section, to be known as section 19, and to read:

SEC. 19. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed or operate to have the effect to abrogate, annul, or in any manner affect any part or provision of any treaty now in force between the United States and the Government of any other nation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. BACON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. I ask to have a rereading of the amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment if present, but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] and withhold my vote, unless it becomes necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). I again state that I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. Not knowing how he would vote if present I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I again transfer my pair, as heretofore announced, and vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from the State of California [Mr. WORKS] and therefore withhold my vote. I have an agreement with him, however, that in the event that it is necessary to make a quorum I may vote. In that event I shall do so.

Mr. KERN (when Mr. SHIVELY's name was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and under the privilege to vote in order to make a quorum I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and transfer it to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made by me at the last roll call, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KERN. In order to make a quorum, I will exercise my privilege of voting and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bacon	Bryan	Jackson	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Burton	McLean	Smoot
Brandegee	Dillingham	Nelson	Weeks

NAYS—33.

So the amendment of Mr. BACON to the amendment of Mr. LA FOLLETTE was rejected.

Mr. BURTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an amendment to the proposed substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, on page 16, line 2, after the word "rivers," it is proposed to insert the words "lakes, bays," so as to read:

Except those navigating rivers, lakes, bays, and harbors exclusively.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest an amendment to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, and that is to strike out section 18. The matter covered by that section is already taken care of in section 15, and it is unnecessary and would be confusing, I think. So I move to strike out section 18. By referring to section 15 it will be seen that section 5280 of the Revised Statutes is repealed in that section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin it is proposed to strike out the last section, which reads as follows:

SEC. 18. That section 5280, Revised Statutes, except as hereinbefore provided, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I merely make an inquiry of the Senator from Florida, who did speak to me about that amendment? I have been looking at it since, and it will be observed that section 18 of the proposed substitute is not exactly the same in phraseology as the provision in section 15 to which the Senator from Florida has referred, although they relate to the same section of the Revised Statutes. The lines in section 15 provide:

And thereupon so much of sections 4081 and 5280 of the Revised Statutes as relates to the arrest or imprisonment of officers and seamen deserting or charged with desertion from merchant vessels of foreign nations in the United States and Territories and possessions thereof, and for the cooperation, aid, and protection of competent legal authorities in effecting such arrest or imprisonment, shall be, and is hereby, repealed.

While the two lines at the end of the section repeal all of section 5280, I have not the section before me, and I am not sure whether it is necessary to have the entire section repealed in order to make it accomplish everything that is sought to be accomplished by this bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I would have been very glad if I had been allowed an opportunity to say as much in regard to the amendment which I offered as Senators are now saying in explanation of what is going on. Strictly—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has been waiting for some Senator to object.

Mr. FLETCHER. Perhaps it will do no harm to let the section remain in, and I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it will do no harm.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I rise to a point of order. The unanimous-consent agreement was that we would begin to vote at 4 o'clock without debate, and I think any remarks of explanation or of rejoinder are out of order. I make that point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained by the Chair. The Chair has been waiting for some Senator to make the point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I made the point, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, as soon as I found it was necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PAGE. I offer the amendment which I sent to the desk some time ago, and ask to have it read and acted upon before the vote is taken on the proposed substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 15, of the proposed substitute, after the word "exclusively," it is proposed to insert "and the smaller inland lakes where the line of travel pursued is at no point more than 3½ miles from land," and also on page 16, line 2, after the word "harbors," to insert "and the smaller inland lakes as hereinbefore specified."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, October 27, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate October 23, 1913.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

John W. Hughes, of Kentucky, to be collector of internal revenue for the eighth district of Kentucky in place of Winston W. Wiseman, superseded.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Edgar B. Meritt, of Arkansas, to be Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, vice Fred H. Abbott, resigned.

PROMOTION IN THE NAVY.

Commander Ridley McLean to be Judge Advocate General of the Navy, with the rank of captain, for a period of four years from the 5th day of November, 1913.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, October 23, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, be very near to us that we may be guided by Thy councils in all the affairs of life, especially as we thus assemble for the duties of the hour, that we may quit ourselves like men, receive Thy benediction, and be prepared for whatever may follow in our wake, assured that Thy good will and pleasure wait on the faithful. And all praise shall be Thine for ever and ever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. There are a couple of messages to be presented.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then I will withhold my motion.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 142. Joint resolution to provide for furnishing the additional rooms to the House Office Building.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a Senate joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 74. Joint resolution appropriating money for the payment of certain claims on account of labor, supplies, materials, and cash furnished in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On October 16, 1913:

H. J. Res. 132. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an exhibit at the Sixth National Corn Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., during the month of February, 1914.

On October 22, 1913:

H. R. 7898. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 125. Joint resolution authorizing the President to appoint delegates to attend the Seventh International Congress of the World's Purity Federation, to be held in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, November 7 to 12, 1913; and

H. J. Res. 134. Joint resolution for the appointment of a joint committee from the House and Senate to attend Congress Hall celebration in Philadelphia in October, 1913.

On October 23, 1913:

S. 767. An act granting permission to the city of Marshfield, Oreg., to close Mill Slough, in said city.

VETO MESSAGE—ADOLPH UNGER (H. DOC. NO. 260).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval House joint resolution No. 111, entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the reinstatement of Adolph Unger as a cadet in the United States Military Academy." I regret to do this, but I deem it my duty. I have the greatest sympathy and admiration for young men like Mr. Unger who seek, in spite of difficulties, to show their mettle; but I am convinced, upon careful inquiry, that he can not, with his present preparation, advantageously continue his course at the West Point Military Academy, and that his reinstatement would, in the circumstances, be subversive of the proper discipline of the academy.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 22, 1913.

The joint resolution referred to is as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to authorize the reinstatement of Adolph Unger as a cadet in the United States Military Academy.

Resolved, etc. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reinstate Adolph Unger as a cadet in the United States Military Academy: Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall operate to increase the number of cadets now allowed by law at the United States Military Academy.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 142. Joint resolution to provide for furnishing the additional rooms in the House Office Building.

CONGRESS HALL CELEBRATION, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a list of the members of the committee selected to go to Philadelphia on Saturday to attend the Congress Hall celebration. The Chair wishes to state in that connection that he has had a good deal of trouble in making up that list. He tried to get one Member from each State, and tried to even up as far as possible the proportion of Democrats and Republicans, but in a good many States there were no Republicans, and several who were understood to desire to go were suggested, but declined, and others were selected, and so on. The Chair did the best he could. If there is any Republican here from Massachusetts I would like to appoint him. I appointed Mr. GILLET, and he could not go. He was the ranking Member. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] know of any Republican from Massachusetts who is in town?

Mr. MANN. Mr. ROGERS was here yesterday.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts is in town, I believe.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will add the name of Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. FRENCH was appointed, and could not go. He is out of town. The Clerk will also add the name of Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Of course we did not want to appoint them all from one State, and in some instances whole State delegations are out of town. The Clerk will announce the list.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alabama: Oscar W. Underwood.
Arizona: Carl Hayden.
Arkansas: W. A. Oldfield.
California: John E. Raker.
Colorado: Edward Keating.
Connecticut: Thomas L. Reilly.
Delaware: Franklin Brockson.
Florida: S. M. Sparkman.
Georgia: Thomas W. Hardwick.
Idaho: Addison T. Smith.
Illinois: Frank Buchanan and James R. Mann.
Indiana: F. H. Gray.
Iowa: S. Kirkpatrick and Frank P. Woods.
Kansas: Joseph Taggart.
Kentucky: Ben Johnson.
Louisiana: J. B. Aswell.
Maryland: J. C. Linthicum.
Massachusetts: William F. Murray and Ernest W. Roberts.
Michigan: Frank E. Doremus and Samuel W. Smith.
Maine: Asher C. Hinds.
Minnesota: W. S. Hammond, Charles A. Lindbergh, and Halvor Steenerson.
Mississippi: Ezekiel S. Candler, jr.
Missouri: Champ Clark and L. C. Dyer.
Montana: Tom Stout.
Nebraska: C. O. Lobeck.
Nevada: E. E. Roberts.

New Hampshire: E. E. Reed.
New Jersey: J. Thompson Baker.
New York: William M. Calder, John J. Fitzgerald, and Sereno E. Payne.
North Carolina: Robert L. Doughton and Edward W. Pou.
North Dakota: H. T. Helgesen.
Ohio: Simeon D. Fess and Clement Brumbaugh.
Oregon: William C. Hawley and A. Walter Lafferty.
Pennsylvania: William S. Vare, George S. Graham, J. Hampton Moore, George W. Edmonds, Michael Donohoe, J. W. Logue, Robert E. Lee, and John H. Rothermel.
Rhode Island: George F. O'Shaunnessy.
South Carolina: Wyatt Aiken.
South Dakota: Charles H. Burke.
Tennessee: Cordell Hull.
Texas: Alexander W. Gregg.
Utah: Joseph Howell.
Vermont: Frank L. Greene.
Virginia: C. Bascom Slem.
Washington: Albert Johnson.
West Virginia: William G. Brown, jr.
Wisconsin: H. A. Cooper and John M. Nelson.

ADJOURNMENT FROM FRIDAY UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration and adoption of the motion that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet next Monday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks for the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Evidently a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 75, nays 31, answered "present" 12, not voting 310, as follows.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Merchants' Association of Honolulu, relative to the franchise of the Honolulu Rapid Transit & Land Co., etc.; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, October 24, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In the faith and confidence of the world's great Exemplar we would approach Thee, O God, the Father of all men, that we may be wise in our generation, following in the wake of those who have gained for themselves imperishable glory by deeds of heroism and sacrifice in everything that pertains to the welfare and larger life of mankind; for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 136. An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea.

CONTINENTAL HALL CELEBRATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will add the name of Mr. PETERS of Maine to the committee to attend Continental Hall celebration; also the name of Mr. SMALL in place of that of Mr. Pou, who announces his inability to attend.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DYER, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Joseph Moore (H. R. 2576, 63d Cong., 1st sess.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADOLPH UNGER.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Was any action taken yesterday in reference to the veto message?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair kept that on the Speaker's table, as he did not know who was particularly interested in it. The Chair thinks the Constitution really contemplates immediate action on a veto message as soon as it comes in, but that has not been the practice.

Mr. MANN. The practice usually has been to refer the message, with accompanying documents, to the committee.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and the Chair will refer the message and bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold that motion, I want to ask the Chair a question for information. I want to find out why it is that some of us are kept here and told that warrants are sent out to bring others back, and yet the papers at home say that my colleague, Mr. SELDOMIDGE, says that he will not return to Washington for some time. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado does not present any question of privilege.

Mr. KINDEL. But I want to know why I am kept here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. KINDEL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I want to be excused for 30 days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent for leave of absence for 30 days. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think too much of the gentleman from Colorado to allow him to go.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. KINDEL. I say it is a farce the way the Republican leader [Mr. MANN] pairs off with the Democratic leader [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and gives others permission to go home and keeps me here. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the liberty of suggesting to the gentleman from Colorado that things sometimes get into the newspapers that are not exactly so.

Mr. KINDEL. I can substantiate what I say, because the Sergeant at Arms confirmed having sent out telegrams to that effect.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman's quarrel is with the Sergeant at Arms. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. And on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 67, nays 39, answered "present" 15, not voting 317, as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, October 27, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

UNION AGENCY AND COMMISSIONER TO THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES (S. DOC. NO. 218).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 1st instant, a list showing all the officers and employees on the pay roll of the Union Agency and the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, and their compensations, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ROCK CREEK BRIDGE (S. DOC. NO. 229).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of July 31, 1913, certain information relative to the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at Q Street NW., in the city of Washington, for which an appropriation was made in the act approved March 2, 1911, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

FRENCH SPOILIATION CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusion of law, filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the annexed findings by the court, relating to the following causes:

Vessel brig Jane, Robert Cook, master (H. Doc. No. 269);
 Vessel schooner Betsy, John Charnock, master (H. Doc. No. 263);

Vessel brig Betsy, John Harris, master (H. Doc. No. 267);
 Vessel brig Minerva, William Moody, master (H. Doc. No. 268);

Vessel brig Little Maria, James Butler, master (H. Doc. No. 266);

Vessel sloop Nancy, Samuel Cox, master (H. Doc. No. 262); Vessel brig Sally, Moses Adams, master (H. Doc. No. 265); and Vessel ship Sally, Thomas Clarke, master (H. Doc. No. 264).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes:

William Bell v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 219);
William G. Meachem v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 221);
Stephen J. Young v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 223); John T. Eaton v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 220); and Alfred C. Wallin v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 222).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

* POLLOCK RIP CHANNEL, MASS.

Mr. WEEKS presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Harbor and Land Commissioners of Boston, Mass., favoring an appropriation for the improvement of Pollock Rip Channel, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3343) granting to the State of Oregon certain lands claimed by the State of Oregon under an act of Congress approved September 28, 1850, and an act of Congress approved March 12, 1860; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 3344) granting an increase of pension to Allen McDannell (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 3345) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906, the said act being chapter 3591 of the United States Statutes at Large, Fifty-ninth Congress, volume 34; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 3346) appropriating $1,000,000 for the use of the Agricultural Department in investigating and encouraging the adoption of improved methods of farm management, for farm administration, and for the eradication of the disease known as hog cholera; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. CRAWFORD:

A bill (S. 3347) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer C. Rush (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 3348) granting an increase of pension to John W. Husted (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 3349) for the relief of the heirs of Waldo M. Potter, deceased (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3350) granting an increase of pension to Lucy B. Hickox (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3351) granting an increase of pension to Timothy W. Reardon (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3355) granting a pension to Kizziah Morris; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOFF:

A bill (S. 3356) granting an increase of pension to John W. Buchanan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 3357) for the relief of the estate of Julia A. Reece, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 3358) granting a pension to Blanche Wood; to the Committee on Pensions.

COLON FIRE CLAIMS.

Mr. WEEKS (for Mr. LODGE) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 199), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate with copies of all the correspondence between the Department of State and the Government of Panama in regard to the settlement of the "Colon fire claims" by arbitration or otherwise, and also with copies of all correspondence between the Department of State and the claimants, or their attorneys, since the publication of Senate Document No. 264, parts 1 and 2, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, and Senate Document No. 199, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, on the same subject.

STREET RAILWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LANE. I offer a resolution and ask to have it read.

The resolution (S. Res. 200) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to submit to the Senate a full and complete report setting forth the reasons why the provisions of section 5 of the act of Congress approved August 2, 1894, entitled "An act to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Co. to change its motive power," etc., have not been enforced. And that the commissioners report further as to why the Capital Traction Co. and Washington Railway & Electric Co., after continuous refusal to issue free transfers at all junction points within the District of Columbia, have not been prosecuted for violation of the aforesaid act.

Mr. LANE. If the resolution is to be referred, I wish to have it referred to the proper committee. I desire to get as speedy action upon it as possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LANE. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

WIDOWS OF DECEASED SENATORS.

Mr. KENYON. On behalf of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and myself, acting jointly, I present a resolution and ask that it may lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will have the resolution read?

Mr. KENYON. I do not know whether it need be read or not. I desire to have it lie on the table until the return of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that it be read to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas for many years the Senate of the United States has voted to the widows of deceased Senators one year's salary; and
Whereas said practice has been continued for so many years that it has become an established custom; and
Whereas there is no authority of law therefor and the same constitutes an unwarranted donation of public funds for private purposes:
Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense and judgment of the Senate that hereafter no such donation shall be made and that said custom shall cease.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. By whom has the resolution been introduced?

Mr. KENYON. I introduced the resolution as the joint action of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and myself, and I ask that it may lie on the table until his return.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I may be obtuse about it, Mr. President, but can two Senators jointly introduce a resolution? If it were a committee report, or a subcommittee report—

Mr. KENYON. No; it is not. It is a resolution of both Senators.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not understand that a resolution can be jointly fathered by two or three or a group of Senators.

Mr. KENYON. I am very frank to say that I do not know. If it is contrary to the rule, of course I will withdraw it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not wish to make any objection; I merely call attention to the fact that resolutions and bills are introduced by individual Senators, and not by groups of Senators.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the difficulty can be very easily met by each Senator introducing the identical resolution, or one practically the same. It would be better to have that done than to make an innovation of what has been the long-established custom for each Senator to introduce individually what he desires.

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest that inasmuch as it is signed by two it becomes a joint resolution. [Laughter.]

Mr. KENYON. I will simply say that the Senator from Idaho had proposed to introduce such a resolution, and I had proposed to introduce a similar resolution. In our conversation on the subject we supposed that we could unite in offering one resolution. If it is against the rule, I am perfectly willing to withdraw it. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that the Senator from Iowa strike out the name of the Senator from Idaho and leave his name signed to the resolution.

Mr. KENYON. If there is objection and the Presiding Officer believes that it is contrary to the rule I withdraw the resolution for the present, and we will each offer a resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that a resolution should be introduced by one Senator.

Mr. KENYON. Then I ask permission to withdraw this resolution, and we will introduce resolutions separately.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Permission is granted.

COLORADO INDIAN RESERVATION IN ARIZONA.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read and lie on the table until I may submit some remarks that I wish to make upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 201) was read, as follows:

Whereas in several important instances, particularly in the case of the Executive order creating the Colorado Indian Reservation in Arizona, and other Executive orders endangering the same from time to time, certain known mineral lands valuable only for the precious metals contained therein were included in said Indian reservation; and Whereas the claimants of said mineral lands are in dispute with the Interior Department over the question of whether these claimants or the Indians are entitled to the said lands; and Whereas a question has arisen as to the power of the Executive to include known mineral lands in such order; and Whereas in order that proper legislation may be had to confirm the title in such lands to the parties justly entitled under the law to the same: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate is requested to examine into the law in such case or cases and report at its earliest convenience to the Senate its opinion as to such power in the Executive, and to further report such legislation as may seem to it meet and proper in the premises.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ABATEMENT OF NUISANCES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. KENYON. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 234. I wish to state that a similar bill passed the Senate at the last session and was reported out of committee in the House, but failed of passage on account of want of time. The bill has been unanimously reported again by the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate. It is what is known as the red-light injunction bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to consider a bill which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 234) to enjoin and abate houses of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution; to declare the same to be nuisances; to enjoin the person or persons who conduct or maintain the same and the owner or agent of any building used for such purpose; and to assess a tax against the person maintaining said nuisance and against the building and owner thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator from Iowa if there are amendments or changes in the bill?

Mr. KENYON. There is one amendment reported by the committee, which was proposed by the Senator from Ohio who now has the floor, and I may perhaps refer to it. It consists of just a few words in section 4, giving the right to either party to have an oral hearing at any time. On page 4, line 9, section 4 of the bill, the Senator will find the words "at any stage of the proceedings," which was an amendment offered by that Senator. That is the only change in the bill as introduced.

Mr. POMERENE. I thought I recalled having suggested some change, but I was not entirely sure whether it had been incorporated in the bill. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think before unanimous consent is given the bill ought to be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have no objection, as a matter of course, to the general purposes of the bill; but it occurs to me that there are some provisions, as I caught them from the reading, that are rather remarkable. For example, it seems there is a provision that would employ the taxing power as a means of punishing crime. It does not occur to me that it would be a proper use of the taxing power to use it to punish an offense against the criminal law. I have no objection to the taking up of the bill and hearing an explanation of it by the honorable Senator having it in charge, but I am at this moment rather disposed to think that a bill containing provisions such as I think this bill contains ought not to be passed without due consideration by the Senate when it is fairly represented by the membership of the body.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in section 4, page 4, line 9, after the word "may," to insert "at any stage of the proceedings."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I should like to hear how the clause would read as proposed to be amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the section as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Sec. 4. That in case of the violation of any injunction granted under the provisions of this act, the court, or, in vacation, a judge thereof, may summarily try and punish the offender. The proceedings shall be commenced by filing with the clerk of the court an information, under oath, setting out the alleged facts constituting such violation, upon which the court or judge shall cause a warrant to issue, under which the defendant shall be arrested. The trial may be had upon affidavits, or either party may at any stage of the proceedings demand the production and oral examination of the witnesses. A party found guilty of contempt, under the provisions of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000 or by imprisonment in the District jail not less than three nor more than six months, or by both fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I would suggest to the honorable Senator from Iowa that this is a bill of which we have had no general opportunity for examination; but as we go along in its consideration he had better indicate to the Senate the nature of amendments and the reasons for them, so that the Senate may be informed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment which has been agreed to is the only amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to follow the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]; but, as the Chair has said, the amendment just stated is the only amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. BACON. I did not know that. I had supposed there was a series of them.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to hear the Senator from Iowa explain the clause of the bill in reference to the exercise of the taxing power. I did not exactly understand from the reading whether or not it is proposed to punish crime by the use of the taxing power.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss the bill at any length, and I shall not do so; but I am very glad to take up any question which may be suggested with reference to it.

This bill, with this identical provision, has heretofore passed the Senate. I think, however, there was at that time no discussion on the merits of the bill or on this particular feature of it. This is not a criminal statute. At present in the District of Columbia there is no way to reach the property where these disorderly houses are conducted. The inmates can be reached, dragged before the police court and fined, but the owner of the property goes on unmolested. The testimony before the Committee on the District of Columbia by Maj. Sylvester, the chief of police, was to the effect that many of these disreputable houses are owned by prominent people of Washington, and such ownership is true as to prominent people in many other cities. Such places, which ordinarily would rent for a very small sum, are rented at very high figures for these purposes.

I realize, Mr. President, that dealing with this question is a very difficult and a very serious matter; but the man who owns such property ought not to be the one who can go scot-free and be permitted to coin the flesh of these women and girls into money for his own purposes.

We have tried a law similar to this in Iowa, and it has been a success in doing away with the segregated district. The segregated district is known no more in that State. There are 11 other States which have adopted practically this identical law, and the provision to which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has called attention has been sustained by the supreme court of my State.

The purpose of that provision is simply this: Where the man who owns such places and wants to coin money out of them is not touched in his pocketbook you can not stop him; he will go right on just the same and rent the property again; but when he is subject to a tax he will be more careful. It is not a tax to enforce a criminal law; such a place is made a nuisance, but it is not made a criminal nuisance, and the bill merely makes provision for a proceeding in equity against the nuisance. The distinction between chancery proceedings and criminal proceedings is so well established that there is no use discussing it.

If the man who has one of these places to rent sits down with his agent and discusses the proposition that if a disorderly house is carried on there his pocketbook is going to be affected, it is a very salutary restraint. Therefore the provision for a tax is put in the bill. An action is brought for an injunction; there is a complete hearing of the very matters that would go to the tax. I have felt that there would be serious question as to assessing a tax without notice and without a hearing, but the courts have held that where that very question is involved in the proceedings, as must be the case here, there is no need of any additional notice of the assessment of the tax.

The tax provision is the salient feature of this bill. Without that provision it will not amount to very much, but with it it will accomplish what it has accomplished in our State and what 11 other States are trying to accomplish to-day. The matter will also come before the legislatures of other States. I will say to the Senator from Missouri—and I can furnish him the authority if he desires—that the courts have squarely passed on the proposition of the tax under such laws.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not care to deal with the sentimental side of the question to which the Senator has addressed himself in the remarks he has made, but to the legal phase of it. I should like to ask the Senator why the same end he seeks to reach can not be accomplished by a statute making it a criminal offense, with such penalties as may be prescribed—make them as drastic as need be—for any person to lease property for immoral purposes of this character, or for any person owning a property to carry on in it immoral business of this character, or for any person owning a property to permit it to be used as a house of prostitution? We have statutes of that general import, I know, in some States—in my own State among them—and people are indicted, tried, convicted, and punished pretty heavily for their violation. You propose here to use the taxing power and to put it in the hands of the chief of police to levy the tax after a judgment or decree.

Mr. KENYON. Not until after a hearing and an injunction has been granted by the court.

Mr. STONE. After an injunction has been granted by the court the chief of police levies the tax?

Mr. KENYON. The assessor does so.

Mr. STONE. That tax is $300. Suppose the other course is taken. In that event there will be no question as to the lawfulness of it and the fine may be a larger sum if the person is found guilty instead of resorting to this process, which seems to me to be most unusual and which may set a precedent, a legislative example, that may return in other ways, where a moral question of this kind is not involved, to perplex us. I ask the Senator why that method would not be preferable to this one?

Mr. KENYON. I will say, Mr. President, prefacing my reply to the Senator's inquiry, that this is not new; many States have statutes imposing a tax with reference to the sale of cigarettes and making the tax a lien on the property; and the same is true with reference to the sale of liquor. The short and direct answer to the Senator's question is simply this: With a jury trial in a criminal case you can not reach the object as speedily or as effectively as you can by the method proposed by the bill. A jury trial is much more difficult, and, as the Senator knows, it has been a most difficult matter to enforce criminal statutes against this class of nuisances. This is a speedier and better way to get at it. That is the only answer I can make to the Senator's question.

If a criminal law with heavy penalties could be enforced as speedily as this proposed law, it would be equally good, but no better. The experience of the States which have experimented with this measure and the consensus of opinion of the people of those States and of the police officers in the different cities is that this form of statute has been successful in eradicating these houses where the criminal indictment has not been.

I do not see how there can be in this bill anything that may return to plague anybody. If so, the same thing would be true of the cigarette statutes and the liquor statutes where this principle has been established and has been carried out. This makes for efficiency and the other does not; that is all.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I have read the bill rather hastily. There is a little matter of inconsistency in my mind which doubtless is due to a misapprehension on my part, and I should like to have the Senator clear it up.

Mr. KENYON. I shall be glad to do so if I can.

Mr. BACON. If I understand correctly from the hasty reading I have been able to give the bill—I confess I had never seen it until this morning—there are two provisions, both looking to the same end. One is that upon the ascertainment that there is one of these prohibited establishments the party shall be required, under pain of contempt, to abate it as a nuisance. Am I correct in that?

Mr. KENYON. The place is locked up.

Mr. BACON. The other point in that connection is this: I understand the bill further goes on and says that when there is such a place ascertained to exist, it shall be subject to a certain tax.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is right.

Mr. BACON. The inconsistency in my mind is its removal and at the same time its continuance as a place subject to tax. Those are the two things which seem to me a little inconsistent.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator had examined the bill closely, he would have found that there is a provision whereby the owner may give bond that the building shall not be conducted in this disorderly way, and open it again.

Mr. BACON. With all the conversation that is going on in the Chamber it is impossible to hear or to understand what is said. I hope the Senator will repeat his remark. I could not hear it.

Mr. KENYON. I say there is a provision in the bill that after an injunction has been issued the owner of the property may give bond that it shall not be used for that purpose again, and then the building may be opened, so that that penalty is removed.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator mean that after the owner has given bond the building shall not be so used, he can still be taxed?

Mr. KENYON. The building has been taxed. I mean exactly that.

Mr. BACON. It is not a bond to await trial to establish the fact?

Mr. KENYON. No.

Mr. BACON. But it is a bond that the building will not be so used in the future?

Mr. KENYON. The nuisance has been established by the granting of the permanent injunction.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Then, under the provisions of the bill, the building is to be locked up for a year and the tax is assessed then.

Mr. BACON. Although it is locked up, the tax has to be paid?

Mr. KENYON. The tax has to be paid.

Mr. BACON. That is the point I did not fully understand.

Mr. KENYON. The building can be opened by the filing of the bond, however.

Mr. BACON. But the tax remains?

Mr. KENYON. The tax remains.

Mr. BACON. In the hasty reading I gave the bill I did not catch that.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. BACON. I desire to give notice of my purpose to offer an amendment to the rules as expressed in the written paper which I send to the desk, which I ask may be read. (S. Res. 202.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The following notice is submitted in writing by Mr. BACON:

Notice is hereby given that during the session of the next legislative day of the Senate, or during the session of a later day, he will offer an amendment to the twelfth standing rule of the Senate by adding to the same the following paragraph, to be numbered and known as paragraph 3 of the said rule, to wit:

"No request by a Senator for unanimous consent for the taking of a final vote on a specified date upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution shall be submitted to the Senate for agreement thereto until, upon a roll call ordered for the purpose by the presiding officer, it shall be disclosed that a quorum of the Senate is present; and when a unanimous consent is thus given, the same shall operate as the order of the Senate."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, October 30, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate October 27, 1913.

MEMBERSHIP OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, October 27, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee with joy and gladness, O God our Father, for the manifold blessings and tender mercies vouchsafed unto us now and for the hopes and promises of the future. Help us to praise and magnify Thy holy name by living to the highest ideals, following ever in the wake of Him who exemplified in His life and character the highest manhood and revealed the loving heart of the Father unto all men, that we may be Christians not only in name, but in fact, and our praise shall be Thine forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, October 24, 1913, was read and approved.

INCOME-TAX REGULATIONS (H. DOC. NO. 270).

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the Treasury Department is issuing to-day Treasury income-tax regulations. I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed as a House document, and that, in addition to the usual number, there shall be printed 100,000, 80,000 for the folding room and 20,000 for the document room. The cost will be less than $500.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how many will that give each individual Member here in the House?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know. I have not computed the 80,000 among 435 Members.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has an estimate of what that will cost?

Mr. MANN. Five hundred dollars will print 101,000 copies.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman, I presume, has not been able to see the chairman of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MANN. No; I have not. I just got the data this morning. Everybody wants them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the regulations to be printed to-day by the Treasury Department in relation to the collection of the income tax shall be printed as a House document to the number of 100,000, 80,000 copies for the folding room and 20,000 copies for the document room. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WITHDRAWAL OF BILL.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I would like to ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 3899, to amend the pure-food law, and purporting to have been introduced by me, be withdrawn. I did not introduce the bill and I do not know how my name became attached to it.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. CARY. H. R. 3899.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY] asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 3899, which has his name attached to it, be withdrawn from the files of the House because he did not introduce it. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

INDEXING THE RECORD.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter in regard to indexing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which I think might be of information to us all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The letter is as follows:

WISCONSIN FREE LIBRARY COMMISSION,
Madison, October 10, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM J. CARY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CARY: Would it not be possible for Congress to have printed on the first page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a table of contents somewhat similar to the table of contents that appears on the first page of the Daily Consular Report? For instance, they could give the first page on which the proceedings of the House and Senate begin, and, most important, the page on which one could find the title of the longer speeches of the various Members, or the subjects that are under special consideration. For example, if one wanted to follow discussions of the recent tariff bill, it was difficult to get at that; and we have spent hours of good time in trying to locate things in the RECORD which have been referred to incidentally in the newspapers. A good table of contents would enable one to tell at a glance where to find a particular speech or get at the discussion on a particular subject.

I do not know how this would affect the use of the RECORD for Members of Congress, but it certainly would improve its use to the general public very much, and we would be glad to have you take what steps are necessary to bring this about.

The American Library Association has a committee on public documents, of which I happen to be a member, and it is the opinion of the members of the committee that something of this kind is most desirable. If you think it worth while, I am sure that the American Library Association, an organization that represents the library interests of the country, would indorse this action requesting Congress to have such a table of contents if for no other reason than for the convenience of the users of the RECORD in the libraries. The RECORD contains an immense amount of very valuable information on different things which one can not get elsewhere, and the table of contents would certainly help to make it more useful to the country at large, and, I believe, to the Members of Congress also.

I understand that this matter is being taken up with other Congressmen by persons interested in other States, and you will no doubt find that if you start something of this sort you will get some active co-operation. We ourselves are writing to our Representatives and Senators on this matter.

Yours, very truly,

M. S. DUDGEON, Secretary.

PUBLICATION AS A HOUSE DOCUMENT OF TWO ADDRESSES OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL (H. DOC. NO. 261).

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and also as a public document two short addresses delivered recently by the distinguished First Assistant Postmaster General, Hon. D. C. Roper—one at Denver and one at Baltimore.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] asks unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and also as a public document two short speeches made by Hon. Daniel C. Roper, the First Assistant Postmaster General—

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I made myself clear. I asked to have these addresses also printed as a public document.

The SPEAKER. And shall be printed as a public document. Is there objection?

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman on what lines were these speeches made?

Mr. AIKEN. The one at Denver was on the subject of postal policies and problems and the one at Baltimore was on the subject of rural postmasters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? How many copies does the gentleman desire to have printed?

Mr. AIKEN. The usual number under the $500 limit would print about 54,000.

Mr. MANN. The usual number is 1,400.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to object, but I want to present a request for unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The addresses above referred to are as follows:

POSTAL POLICIES AND PROBLEMS.

An address before the Sixteenth Annual Convention of the National Association of Postmasters of the First Class, at Denver, Colo., July 31, 1913, by Daniel C. Roper, First Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. President and members of the National Association of Postmasters at First-Class Offices, I regard it as both a pleasure and a privilege to look into the faces of this large number of men, so important to the welfare of our country. It is a pleasure because of that interest in a common cause which naturally prompts sympathy and makes wondrous kind those struggling with like problems and responsibilities. It is a privilege for me to be here, because the occasion enables me to make your acquaintance and to exchange views as to the best way to meet the responsibilities with which we are mutually and cooperatively charged.

You are peculiarly fortunate in the selection of the "Queen City of the Plains" for this convention. Denver's growth has measured time with that of the postal service. This city began its career by the erection of a log cabin in October, 1857, on what is now the corner of Eleventh and Wewatta Streets, and then it was that the postal service, without the aid of steam power, was struggling to cross this continent and bring the tidings of treasures newly discovered in the bosom of yonder majestic mountains. To recount the steps in the history of the devel-oment of this western country is to present a record as interesting as a fairy tale. Denver, with a population of less than 5,000 in 1870, had about 213,000 at the census of 1910, and to-day within the confines of this beautiful city there are not less than a quarter of a million souls. How powerless we are to give advance interpretation of the latent forces of nature and the dynamics of men in action!

It is interesting to recall that in 1835, during the discussion of a measure in the United States Senate to establish a post route from Independence, Mo., to the mouth of the Colorado River, the learned Daniel Webster closed his speech in opposition with the following language:

"What do we want with this vast worthless area: this region of savages and wild beasts, of deserts, shifting sands, and whirlwinds of dust; of cactus and prairie dogs? To what use can we hope to put these great deserts or those endless mountain ranges, imposing and covered to their very base with eternal snow? What use have we for such country? Mr. President, I will never vote one cent from the Public Treasury to place the Pacific coast one inch nearer to Boston than it now is."

I can safely venture that were Mr. Webster to return to earth and accompany me on this western trip he would confess in chagrin that in no expression made during his long career as a public speaker was he wider of the mark.

A comparison of the present conditions in this locality with those yet in the memory of persons in this audience tax the credulity of those who have not kept informed as to these remarkable developments. It was on May 7, 1859, that the first mail reached Denver through the postal service, brought by the overland coach of the Leavenworth & Pike's Peak Express Co., bringing the mail as express matter, on which the charge was 25 cents for each letter. The distance then from Leavenworth, Kans., to Denver was 687 miles, and required at that time 10 days. What a wonderful revolution a half century has brought. Considerably more than 100 trains now enter and depart from Denver daily, carrying approximately 60 tons of mail matter for as cultured, refined, and hospitable people as can be found on God's green earth.

NEW POSTAL ADMINISTRATION.

Marked political changes have come in the management of our executive departments since you last met in annual convention, and it is a great compliment to our form of government that such important transitions in management have not disturbed the operations of the machinery or weakened in the slightest degree the effectiveness of daily results. The new administration has already been tested and the wisdom of the people as expressed at the polls last November fully confirmed. Since the day of his nomination at Baltimore there has been an ever-increasing confidence in the fitness, courage, good judgment, and steadfastness for the right of Woodrow Wilson.

The wonderful proportions to which our postal service has grown and its increasing importance made the selection of the directing head of this great organization an act of vital importance to the American people. On the vast army of postal employees depends the maintenance and development of our commerce and the protection and advancement of American citizenship. It is a mainstay to the business and social life of our people. Some of the Federal departments are in touch with a part of the people some of the time, and other departments are in touch with all of the people part of the time, but the Post Office Department serves all of the people all of the time.

An ideal man to direct and control this great department was found in the person of Hon. Albert S. Burleson as Postmaster General. His experience in public life, his indefatigable energy, good judgment, and courage in execution especially equip him for this most important position. From him I bring to you deep interest in this convention of postmasters now endeavoring to find the mecca of truth in the solution of postal problems, and the assurance that he looks forward with confidence to your giving to the people during the ensuing year a postal service of the maximum efficiency at the minimum of cost. It is the purpose to give to the country 100 cents of value for every dollar spent by the department.

EFFICIENCY KEYNOTE OF ADMINISTRATION.

The keynote to the present administration of the Post Office Department is embodied in the one word "efficiency." That efficiency and economy should be substituted for wastefulness and extravagance needs no argument, but the postal service affects so vitally the interests of the entire population of the country that economy which results in a curtailment of postal facilities operates as a check on the social and industrial progress of the country. The people are entitled to the very best postal facilities administered in the most efficient and economical manner.

PERSONAL ATTENTION BY POSTMASTERS.

In keeping with this policy, the best methods and practices will be insisted upon throughout the service. To this end the department will keep in close touch with the operations of the postmasters and with their cooperation bring the service to the highest degree of usefulness. This is manifested by the attitude of the Postmaster General with regard to postmasters giving their personal attention to their official duties. The clerks and carriers attached to post offices are required by law to render service for eight hours daily, and the Postmaster General insists that the postmaster, who is the directing head, and whose compensation greatly exceeds that of any of the employees under him, shall give at least an equal amount of time and effort. An announcement to this effect was made by the Postmaster General before making any appointments of postmasters, and hence put on notice all incoming postmasters as well as those already in the service. The postmaster is selected because of his presumed superior ability, his qualifications for rendering satisfactory public service, and his personal standing, and it is not fair to the Government that he should employ his time in other directions. A postmaster and a postage stamp are alike in that the value of each depends on the way in which each sticks to the place where you put him. If all postmasters honestly devote to the service the amount of time reasonably expected of them and give to the work of their offices the supervision and direction which good business rules demand, instead of leaving their proper duties to subordinates, the service would not only gain in effectiveness but a considerable economy would result from a better distribution of duties and a consequent reduction in cost. Certainly all postmasters who have at heart the betterment of the service will heartily concur in this attitude.

The Postmaster General has announced that it will be his policy to retain in the service until the end of their terms all postmasters who conform to the foregoing requirement and who are otherwise qualified for the positions which they hold. On the other hand, successors will be promptly appointed for those who do not measure up to the standard.

ASSISTANT POSTMASTERS.

In this connection I wish to say that the department's attention is frequently called to the fact that assistant postmasters in some instances do not perform duties commensurate with the importance of their positions and the salary they receive. The assistant postmaster is the next highest paid man in the office, and although in the absence of the postmaster he is the directing head of the office, his regular duties should be more than nominal and he should take an active part in the management of the office and be ever on the alert for opportunities to improve methods and draw up slack.

ADMINISTRATIVE SUPERVISION.

A number of complaints were received at the department recently with respect to the service in one of the large cities, and upon investigation it was found that none of the supervisory officers in the post office was on duty during the hours of heaviest mail receipts. This condition has since been remedied, and complaints of poor service at that office have ceased.

To render efficient service to the public it is necessary that the mails be distributed promptly. As all of you know, the quantity of mail varies during the day, the incoming mail depending to a large extent on the arrival of trains.

To perform the distribution promptly it is necessary that the force shall have proper supervision at all times. The superintendents and assistant superintendents of mails should be experts in the distribution, delivery, and dispatch of both registered and ordinary mails. It has been found that the tours of duty of this class of employees in many instances are from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m., and during the evening, when the largest volume of mail is being handled and supervision most needed, the work is supervised by a foreman or a clerk. Commercial houses give the closest supervision to their business during the rush hours, and there is every good reason why this rule should prevail in post offices. While the hours of the superintendent and his assistant should not be arbitrarily fixed, it is believed that their hours of duty should be so arranged that either the superintendent or one of his assistants will be on duty at all times.

CLERKS AND CARRIERS.

Clerks and carriers enter the service at a salary of $800 per annum, and are promoted annually on their service record through the various grades until they reach the salary of $1,100 at first-class offices and $1,000 at second-class offices, after which their promotions depend to a greater extent upon their exceptional efficiency. It is believed that in many instances postmasters, through sympathy or other motives, recommend the promotion of clerks and carriers who have not measured up to the proper standard. This is very discouraging to those who have rendered satisfactory service, as nothing could be more detrimental to the service than to have the employee who lacks interest and lags behind receive his promotion as promptly as he who renders genuinely faithful and effectual service. The department wishes to encourage clerks to become expert distributors, as this will better fit them for the higher positions, and in making recommendations for promotions, all other things being equal, the expert distributor should be given the preference. In some instances postmasters recommend their private secretaries or those in their immediate executive offices for promotion to the higher positions, forgetting that the distributors and supervisory officers, whose duties are more arduous and who are required to study their schemes of distribution, are deserving of first consideration.

The efficiency of clerks depends to a large extent on their familiarity with their schemes of distribution. In many instances substitutes are appointed and permitted to serve for years before taking a case examination. They therefore become careless in this respect, remain indifferent and do not make efficient clerks. Clerks and carriers should be required to familiarize themselves with the Postal Laws and Regulations. The department is now preparing a manual of instructions covering the subjects with which they come in daily contact, and when it is completed and distributed it should be the first study requirement of a clerk upon his entrance to the service. See to it that all employees are kept informed as to the published requirements and suggestions of the department and encourage thought and suggestions on the part of your force from the lowest to the highest paid employee. The rating of the efficiency of clerks is now the subject of a close study by the officers of the department, and some improvements in the present system will be put into effect as soon as experience demonstrates their feasibility.

It may seem that I have elaborated on that class of employees engaged exclusively in the actual handling of mail to the neglect of those otherwise employed. This is due to the fact that the results accomplished by this part of your office force have the greatest effect on the public. You should not, however, lose sight of the efficient men in other branches of the post-office work—the money-order clerks, registry clerks, and those employed in the purely clerical capacities. These men are usually recruited from among the bright young substitutes and clerks who have had some experience in the actual handling of the mails. Whenever these men show special aptitude for or exceptional efficiency in the work to which they are assigned, care should be taken that they be not overlooked when there is opportunity for promotion to the higher grades, and they, as well as the men employed on the mailing floor, should receive the best of encouragement.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

You gentlemen are, of course, familiar with the provisions of section 5 of the appropriation act for the last fiscal year, generally known as the eight-in-ten-hour law, which became effective March 4 last. This law made necessary the rearrangement of the schedules of approximately 65,000 employees, which was a gigantic task. In working out the schedules the question naturally arose as to whether the law applied to assistant postmasters and supervisory officers, and also whether an employee would be entitled to pay for overtime if his eight hours of work extended over a longer period than 10 consecutive hours. The matter was submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury for an opinion, and he decided that special provision was made in the law for two classes of employees only, namely, city letter carriers and clerks in first and second class post offices, and as Congress had specifically enumerated the different classes of clerks and employees it must be presumed that section 5 referred to clerks and carriers only. He ruled, furthermore, that no extra pay under this statute could be allowed to any clerk or carrier who worked eight or a less number of hours a day regardless of the length of the period during which the service was performed. You will also observe that under this opinion no payment can be made to supervisory officers for overtime. The department, however, in the interest of fairness to all of the employees, has decided to extend the benefits of this measure in so far as the hours of duty are concerned to the supervisory employees wherever possible, and postmasters have been instructed to arrange their schedules accordingly. This is an act of Congress, and the postmasters must therefore make every effort to enforce it properly.

SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

The department has by a circular letter recently directed your attention to the importance of the prompt dispatch and delivery of second-class mail, particularly daily newspapers. Many of these publications contain market quotations and other commercial data which are used frequently as the basis of the subscriber's daily business operations, and the value of this information is lost if it is unduly delayed in transit. Where daily papers are weighed at the offices of publication, clerks assigned to this duty should report at the respective offices of publication at an hour that will allow sufficient time to complete the weighing and insure the dispatch of the papers on the proper train. Daily newspapers which are not sent direct from the office of publication to railroad depots for dispatch, but are mailed at the post office, should receive prompt attention, so as to insure their dispatch by the same train as letter mail for the same address. Where papers are distributed in offices of publication, postmasters should cooperate with the publishers in keeping their mailing galleries corrected to date and properly arranged. The department should be advised of publishers who refuse to cooperate fully in this respect. A record should be kept of daily papers received without address, so that this information may be available in case of complaint.

PARCEL POST.

Perhaps the greatest postal problem to-day is the parcel post. No single reform ever undertaken in connection with the postal service of the United States presents to our people such economic possibilities as does the parcel post. This infant of six months, yet in its swaddling clothes, has already shown such remarkable vigor that if its development continues at the present rate it will soon tax the business capacity of the postal officials to hold it within proper business bounds.

The advantage over private carriers of carrying parcels by the postal establishment is apparent. The postal service is universal, while the express companies and other private carriers are limited in their capacity, particularly to the extent of their routes of transportation. The United States mail goes everywhere throughout the length and breadth of the land. It penetrates the rural sections, the mountains, the thickly settled communities, and the sparsely populated regions alike, going where there are no express offices and where none will ever be established.

In considering the establishment and maintenance of a postal facility in the United States we must not lose sight of the vastness of our country. Continental United States, including Alaska, has an area of 3,617,000 square miles, whereas Great Britain has an area less than that of our new State of New Mexico, either Germany or France an area but little in excess of the combined area of Colorado and Wyoming, and Belgium is a little larger than the State of Vermont. The combined area of England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, Belgium, France, and Germany is less than that of the four States of Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, and Wyoming. Hence transportation conditions, which are the main factors in a parcel-post system, as between the United States and the countries of Europe are altogether incomparable.

On account of these varying conditions affecting the transportation factor there must be as near as possible an equitable distribution of the cost of the service and rates of postage must be fixed accordingly; otherwise a rate would have to be prescribed that would be prohibitive for short distances and disastrous to the Government for the long distances. Upon the application of this principle was evolved the present scheme of zones and rates.

The law providing for the parcel-post service vests in the Postmaster General, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the authority to reform conditions of mallability, including the zones, rates of postage, and weight limits, whenever he shall find through experience that changes are desirable. In accordance with this provision, the present administration of the Post Office Department, through a committee of experts, has given intense study to the developments of the parcel-post business since March 4 last, and the following important changes have been recommended to the Postmaster General and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission:

The distinctive parcel-post stamps, which have caused the public so much inconvenience and annoyance, were discontinued as of July 1; on the same date the fee on insured parcels was reduced from 10 cents to 5 cents on an indemnity of $25.

Rates of postage reduced and weight limit increased, effective August 15, 1913, as follows: Local rate of postage reduced from 5 cents for first pound and 1 cent for each additional pound or fraction thereof to 5 cents for first pound and 1 cent for each additional 2 pounds or fraction thereof. The first and second zones consolidated and the rates reduced from 5 cents for the first pound and 3 cents for each additional pound (the first-zone rate) and 6 cents for the first pound and 4 cents for each additional pound (second-zone rate) to 5 cents for the first pound and 1 cent for each additional pound. The weight limit in the foregoing zones was raised from 11 pounds to 20 pounds. No change was made in the restrictions as to size and shape of package. While these changes are not radical, they are along the right lines and will prove attractive and advantageous. The effect is to furnish an exceedingly cheap delivery or interchange of parcels at a cheaper rate than has ever been furnished by any private carrier for a distance of 150 miles.

The collect-on-delivery feature, which also became effective July 1, should prove of great benefit to a large number who find it more convenient to make purchases in this manner.

The small city merchant whose trade does not justify his employing delivery wagons or the sending of packages to suburban points should be greatly benefited; the village tradesman should be able to increase his sales to his patrons living on rural routes; the farmer should find in these changes the opportunity he has been seeking, to develop a more profitable market for his garden products, by shipping direct to the consumer; and the consumer by this direct dealing can at the same time reduce the cost of living and save some of the profits of distributing agents.

The country merchant, instead of opposing the establishment of a parcel-post service, through fear that he would be undersold by his city competitors engaged in a mail-order business, should welcome this service, for it furnishes a means for materially increasing his business if he has but the energy and thrift to avail himself of the opportunity. The farmer needs supplies from the neighboring towns and villages. Many of them live at a considerable distance from the country store, and at certain seasons of the year their time is valuable. With the mail carrier passing his gate daily delivering parcels of 20 pounds, the farm and household needs can be supplied at a fraction of the cost of a personal trip to town.

As a basis for a study of the conditions existing in the service with regard to the delivery of parcel-post packages, the department had a careful record made at 50 of the most important post offices of the country for a period of six days, from the 14th to the 19th of April, last. The reports from these offices showed a wide range in the methods employed, and consequently in the degree of economy exercised. It was brought out that the cost per package for delivery by motor vehicles varied from 1½ cents to nearly 15 cents in one or two extreme cases. Delivery by horse-drawn vehicles showed a variation of from 1 cent to about 5 cents per package. Evidently the value of the proverbial Democratic mule is yet appreciated in this service. Acting upon the cue afforded by the conditions revealed at these 50 offices, experts have been put into the field with the duty of visiting first those offices where the most economical results are shown, and then passing on to offices where results appear to be extravagant and unsatisfactory. The results, when finally digested, will be brought to the attention of other postmasters by a series of circulars.

PROPER WRAPPING OF PARCELS.

In order to perfect the service, active and intelligent cooperation all along the line is essential. We must, where possible, make for economy, but avoid the possibility of complaint from imperfect service. To this end postmasters should instruct their employees to watch carefully all packages as they are presented for mailing, so as to insure their delivery in good condition. The public must be taught that the proper wrapping of parcels is a prime requisite to their safe delivery; that flimsy hatboxes are not suitable for shipping eggs if due regard is to be had for the contents of other packages in the same sack; and that in shipping a fine casting uncrated there is a chance that the addressee will receive it in installments. It would be unfair to censure the clerk in the New York office for sending a package of eggs through the pneumatic tube with somewhat disastrous results when there was nothing on the wrapper to indicate its contents.

Breakage or mishandling by postal employees is quite another matter. This is of vital importance, since it is not so easy to shift the responsibility. Considering the number of pieces now going through the mails, the manner in which many of them are wrapped, and the character of the equipment in use in the service, it is somewhat surprising that the percentage of lost and damaged parcels is so small. We should not hide behind this showing, however, and try to persuade the public that they are already getting considerable for their money, but we should aim at and strive to gain perfection in this important and interesting service.

It is already realized that greater care will have to be exercised in handling fragile parcels and such as are known to contain fragile merchandise. Postmasters should see to it that the packages received by them are durably and properly wrapped.

With a view to reducing the number of handlings of parcel-post mail and thus to minimize the danger of breakage, the department is now conducting an investigation to determine the advisability of selecting terminal points where facilities will be provided for working the mail into "direct sacks" and to the R. P. O.'s effecting delivery to post offices. Such a plan as this appears to be necessary in order to take care of the increased fall business.

It was estimated that during the first year of this new service 300,000,000 pieces would be handled. The data thus far obtained indicate that this number will be doubled. This immense volume of mail is being dispatched and delivered promptly without any congestion or delay to the other mail, which reflects great credit on our service. Postmasters and employees throughout the service have shown a spirit of cooperation with the department in making this service a success which is highly commendable.

The manufacturer and the merchant use the parcel post because of its commercial benefit, but to the householder and to the occasional user its attractive features are those of convenience and economy. The ideal service is one that will permit the personal laundry and the wonderful creations in women's wearing apparel being sent from a distance and received in fit condition to be worn by the most fastidious; that will permit the country dame to get into closer touch with the bargain counter at the city store, and will permit the city resident to receive from his farm a daily consignment of the products of the soil and barnyard. The service in Europe is of this character and I am confident I express our hope when I say that we will soon equal if not exceed the service of Great Britain.

PRECANCELED POSTAGE STAMPS.

It is believed that in many instances precanceled postage stamps can be used to such manifest advantage of both the Government and the mailer that a more extensive use of them by large concerns should be encouraged.

Of course the postal revenues must be protected and with this in view the regulations have required that the cancellation of postage stamps should be done by postal employees or in some manner under their supervision. Consideration must be given, however, to the tremendous and rapid growth of the service, and care should be taken that the cost of the single item of protection, as in this case, is not entirely out of proportion to its intrinsic value. The small losses which might result from an almost unrestricted sale of these stamps would equal but a slight percentage of the net gain that would accrue from the saving in clerical assistance alone. Furthermore, by the use of precanceled stamps mail is greatly expedited and is subject to less wear and tear, because if separated for States and R. P. O.'s at the office of the mailer it can be deposited at the proper railroad terminals without having to be handled in the post office.

The parcel-post service furnishes an especially good opportunity for the use of precanceled stamps. On account of the bulk of this mail and its liability to greater wear and tear unnecessary handling should be eliminated whenever possible. Accordingly the Postmaster General has directed that the use of precanceled stamps be permitted on parcel-post mail without restriction whenever the post-office officials are acquainted with the conditions surrounding the sale and cancellation of these stamps.

Postmasters should bring this matter to the attention of the large shippers in their respective cities with a view to encouraging a more general use of precanceled stamps.

MODEL POST OFFICES.

With a view to effectively promoting the policy of efficiency which this administration of the department has firmly determined upon, it has been decided to organize, equip, and operate model post offices and use these as dynamos from which to charge the entire chain and system of offices throughout the country. At these dynamic points the effort will be made to discover the best practical way of securing and administering the postal facilities for that and other communities; also to test labor-saving devices and other methods which may be found of value. The results obtained, conclusions drawn, and suggestions prompted by the experience at these model offices will be promptly brought to the attention of postmasters by means of circular letters until the entire service has been brought to that degree of standardization that will prove the American postal service as the worthy model of the world, and I now ask, and my faith in you prompts me to believe, that we shall receive your hearty cooperation in bringing about the coveted condition at an early date.

RESPONSIBILITY UP TO POSTMASTERS.

It is no small compliment to the progressive spirit and loyalty of you postmasters to tell you that the Postmaster General expects to accomplish these and more needed reforms in the postal service within the near future. We confidently believe that every heart in this presence throbs in unison with these high ideals. The postal service is not unlike a great ball game in its operation. The administrative officers in Washington are at the bat, the public is the pitcher delivering to these officials at the bat the responsibility of the service administration. The duty of these central officials is to hit the ball squarely and to put it out to you postmasters in the field. Your lesson is this: Play your position well, watch for the ball, catch it without fail and deliver in every instance quickly and effectively. If you prove true to this trust, accomplish the reforms needed, and make our postal service the model of the world, your monuments will be more enduring than marble and brass.

¹ Free (city) delivery service authorized by act of Mar. 3, 1863. Established July 1, 1863.² The first experimental rural delivery service was established on Oct. 1, 1896, simultaneously on three routes, from Charlestown, Uvilla, and Halltown, W. Va.³ For 9 months only.

RURAL POSTMASTERS.

Address of Hon. D. C. Roper, First Assistant Postmaster General, at Maryland State League Convention, Thursday, Sept. 4, 1913, Baltimore, Md.

Mr. President and members of the Maryland State League of Postmasters, it is a great pleasure to me to be with you to-day, because I have a high regard for the value of conventions of postmasters when devoted to the consideration of postal problems, the interchange of new ideas, and the fostering of the spirit of cooperation.

It is my privilege to convey to you the cordial greetings of Postmaster General Burleson and to assure you of his appreciation of your every effort to assist him in improving the postal service. In what I have to say to-day I shall tell you of some of the policies for which his administration stands, and I bespeak for him your hearty cooperation.

Postmasters of the fourth class constitute more than 80 per cent of all the postmasters of the country and are especially interesting to me because they come in closest touch with our rural communities. The prosperity and happiness of the whole country depend upon the farm, from which must come the necessities of life; the fourth-class postmaster has a great deal to do with keeping the people within reaching distance of the soil. When our cities burn down they are built up again, but let our farms—the base of supplies—be destroyed or deserted and the entire fabric of our advanced civilization must fall apart.

The fourth-class postmaster is invaluable to both the city and the farm, for he brings to the one the necessities of life and to the other the means of culture and education. It is true that you do not actually handle all commodities, but you handle many of them and you provide a means of communicating between the buyer and the seller, without which the remaining exchanges could not be effected. In the social and economic organization of our country your official duties are second to none in importance.

RURAL POSTMASTERS AND CONSERVATION.

In these days we hear a great deal of "conservation." It is said that our natural resources have been wasted in the headlong development of American industries; that we are a spendthrift Nation; and that if we do not soon mend our ways our children shall yet feel the pinch of want that results from the squandering of opportunities. A German economist informs us that the "price of inefficiency" is represented by $10,000,000,000 a year, and supports this vast estimate by quite a formidable array of figures and authorities. Whether these figures be correct we can not tell, but it is evident that great waste has been incident to the building of our Nation. The Nation, however, is now built, its industrial future assured, and the 48 stars of its new flag stand for the accomplishment. We confess to having been prodigal of our bountiful birthright, but ours is still the richest land in natural resources under the sun, and the sons of the men who have made America what it is will surely husband their patrimony.

Our National Government is already alive to the conditions; it has set itself earnestly to work through most effective means to prevent waste and encourage growth of natural resources. A propaganda of frugality and efficiency is being everywhere accepted and adopted by State and municipal governments, by industrial and commercial corporations, and by the rank and file of all the people in their everyday life and work. This agitation is timely and highly important, and our postal facilities can and should be used in the work of national conservation.

Conservation is the opposite of waste. It is true efficiency. It means more than protecting mines and soil; it means more than restocking forests and streams; more than all of the great public works that are naturally associated with the word. In its broader and truer sense conservation means making and keeping our people happy, patriotic, and contented; seeing that they make the most out of what they have. It means that we should get out of life all that there is in it for ourselves and for our neighbors, and that we strive to promote the welfare of our country. This, in the beginning, was the spirit of America, and this is the spirit that now inspires our efforts in the interest of our rural communities, that maintains an ever-watchful care in our fellows, that makes us a world power in the comity of all nations, and it is this same spirit that prompted the American people to guarantee freedom to Cuba and that now puts our people solidly behind President Wilson in his Mexican policy. I confidently believe that we are now entering upon a new era in which this greater conservation is to have a fuller application to the end that all our ways of life and work may conserve our resources of wealth, strength, and happiness.

EXECUTIVE ORDER OF MAY 7, 1913.

It was in keeping with the spirit of conserving the best interests of the people and of maintaining a proper civil service and of adding to the efficiency, and hence to the success, of our postal facilities that the President issued his order of May 7, 1913, which subjects fourth-class postmasters to an efficiency test before permitting them to be covered into the postal service for life. This order provides that:

"No person occupying the position of postmaster of the fourth class shall be given a competitive classified status under the provisions of said orders unless he has been appointed as a result of open competitive examination, or under the regulations of November 25, 1912, or of January 20, 1909, or until he is so appointed."

"At any post office of the fourth class where the present postmaster was appointed otherwise than as above set forth, appointment shall be made in accordance with the regulations approved November 25, 1912, as amended this date; and for this purpose the Civil Service Commission shall hold an open competitive examination for each such office having an annual compensation of as much as $180, such examination for all such post offices to be held by States, as requested by the Postmaster General: Provided, That in the event for any such examination less than three persons apply, the Civil Service Commission may, in its discretion, authorize selection in accordance with the provisions of the regulations as amended this date governing selections for appointment to offices having annual compensation of less than $180; and in like manner the regulations of November 25, 1912, as amended this date, shall be applied to each office where the annual compensation is less than $180, and where the present incumbent was appointed otherwise than as above set forth."

It will probably be interesting to you to know that there are about as many post offices with compensation of less than $180 a year as there are with compensation between $180 and $1,000 a year. In the former class there are about 24,000, while in the latter there are approximately 25,000. The examinations in the first-mentioned class, which are to be conducted by post-office inspectors, have already been launched, and the work is being carried on simultaneously throughout all of the States by the inspectors located therein. The examinations in the group with compensation of as much as $180 will be conducted exclusively by the Civil Service Commission. The examinations will be held by States as designated by the Postmaster General, and information regarding these examinations should be sought from the Civil Service Commission.

EFFICIENCY.

The Postmaster General holds that the people are entitled to the very best postal facilities administered in the most efficient manner and that economy shall be only a step behind and go hand in hand with efficiency.

This is the true policy of conservation and in keeping with it the best methods and practices will be insisted upon throughout the service. To this end the department will keep in close touch with the operations of the postmasters and with their cooperation bring the service to the highest degree of usefulness. This is manifested by the attitude of the Postmaster General with regard to postmasters giving their personal attention to their official duties. The postmaster is selected because of his presumed superior ability, his qualifications for rendering satisfactory public service, and his personal standing, and it is not fair to the Government that he should employ his time in other directions to the detriment of his postal duties. A postmaster and a postage stamp are alike in that the value of each depends on the way in which each sticks to the place where you put him. If all postmasters honestly devote to the service the amount of time reasonably expected of them and give to the work of their offices the supervision and direction which good business rules demand, the service would not only gain in effectiveness but considerable economy would result from a better distribution of duties and a consequent reduction in cost.

Postmasters may promote postal conservation by giving careful study to the postal regulations and instructions issued from time to time, and by taking a sincere interest in the correct and orderly conduct of their offices. In this way they will make pleasanter and easier their own duties and materially lighten the work of the department. This administration will give special attention to the elimination of ponderous and unnecessary regulations and will endeavor to promulgate orders and impart information in the briefest and simplest way. Remember that the department is seeking to come close to you and you are expected to do your part by drawing near with inquiring and receptive minds.

POSTAL SAVINGS AND PARCEL POST.

Perhaps the greatest opportunity for fourth-class postmasters to serve their communities is in connection with the new extensions of the service, postal savings and parcel post. By being enthusiastic about these himself, he will instill enthusiasm in others. He should educate his patrons to a full appreciation of the facilities offered. If he encourages some to open postal savings accounts who otherwise would not have acquired the habit of saving, he has done good out of all proportion to the amount of the money actually deposited and made available for commercial use. There are two points to remember—the safety and the convenience of postal savings.

Parcel post has recently been so enlarged and extended by the increase to 20 pounds of the weight limit for the first and second zones and by the reduction of rates that it opens a vast market for butter and eggs, vegetables, and fruit. Every farmer may now do a "mail-order" business. He stands on the same basis with the largest shipper of small packages. There are no rebates in a Government monopoly. He can do away with the long, tiresome trips to the town market by securing regular customers and supplying them by parcel post. He can save the small or large quantities of fruit that otherwise would be lost in the stress of more important farm operations by putting it all in baskets and mailing to the city. He can do this because the rural carrier will receive his packages for delivery at his own door, and there is no time lost. The convenience of this service will eventually encourage farmers to raise more garden truck and to go more extensively into the poultry business. The parcel post enables the business farmer to save the middlemen's commission by delivering his produce at the door of the city or town customers.

The rural routes of the postal service reach 20,000,000 people who have never before had an express service. This is the class to be most greatly benefited by parcel post, but it will not be surprising if the farmer is inclined to be slow in grasping the benefits and opportunities. You who preside over this vast rural express business of the Government should see to it that the parcel-post facilities are brought forcibly to the attention of your patrons. By so doing you will greatly aid them, increase the importance of your office, and by actually creating commerce promote materially the prosperity of our country.

Encourage your rural patrons to use the mails and the newspapers for finding the most advantageous market. Point out that every market within 150 miles is now within reach. Stimulate their ingenuity and imagination by devising original expedients for their use. Quickened them by illustrations and examples. The mails will now carry half-bushel baskets of spinach and lettuce and 20-pound hampers containing from 1 to 3 pecks of cucumbers, onions, and cabbage. One hamper may be packed with an assortment of products to supply a family for several days. Such a market basket might contain, for instance, 2 pounds of butter, 2 dozens of eggs, 2 spring chickens, 2 quarts of strawberries, 2 quarts of green peas, a half peck of spinach, and a supply of onions, radishes, lettuce, and rhubarb. Such a package will now be received from the farmer at his own door, carried anywhere within 150 miles, and laid at the door of his customer for 24 cents. More than this, the package may be insured against loss and the price collected and returned to him for a small charge.

WRAPPING AND LABELING PARCEL-POST PACKAGES.

Much of the responsibility of popularizing the parcel-post service and of guaranteeing its effectiveness to the public rests with the postmasters of the fourth class. The only source of complaint at the present time is the condition in which some packages are delivered, and postmasters should instruct their employees to watch carefully all packages as they are presented for mailing, so as to insure their delivery in good condition. The public must be taught that the proper wrapping of parcels is a prime requisite to their safe delivery. The large shipping houses as well as the smaller merchants in the larger cities have help properly trained in wrapping and give but little trouble in this direction. The poorly wrapped parcels as a rule come from the individual shippers not acquainted with the importance of wrapping, and these as a rule are the patrons of your offices. You must see that the packages when received are durably and properly wrapped and that in all instances they are labeled so as to indicate their contents.

Let us think of the postal service as a great cooperative company owned by all the people and operated by us in trust for all the people. Our function is fully performed only when the greatest possible service is rendered in the most efficient manner at the least possible cost. On your shoulders and on mine is placed this great task. We can not perform our full duty if we are content to do only those things that we must do. We must put our hearts into the work and give not full measure, but overflowing measure, of ourselves. If we do this, the people for whom we are trustees will be pleased and we shall be happy in being useful.

ADDRESSES, CONGRESS HALL CELEBRATION (H. DOC. NO. 272).

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the address of the President of the United States and that of the Speaker of this House, delivered in Philadelphia on Saturday last, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I was just about to make that request, and I hope the gentleman will add to it the request that those addresses be printed also as a House document.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well. I do not object to having them printed in that form.

Mr. MANN. In both forms?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] asks unanimous consent that the addresses delivered by the President of the United States and the Speaker of the House in Philadelphia on Saturday last be printed in the RECORD and also as a public document. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman how many copies that would be of the public document?

Mr. HARDWICK. That would be as many copies as could be printed under the $500 limit; probably 25,000.

Mr. MANN. That would be only the usual number.

Mr. DYER. That, I think, would be only a few hundred.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman could have all he wants printed at his own expense.

Mr. COX. Let us have 50,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request to that extent; that 50,000 copies of these addresses be printed as a House document.

Mr. MANN. I think that request ought to come after the document is printed. The usual request is to simply print it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. The usual plan is to print it as a document merely. I withdraw the modification of my request.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the gentleman think it would be proper and appropriate to have a copy of the full proceedings as they occurred in connection with this celebration? The history of the whole affair is there.

Mr. DYER. Oh, that would be printed by the authorities in Philadelphia.

Mr. RAKER. Very well.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I will not modify my request until after it has been submitted just as I made it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] asks unanimous consent to print the addresses of the President and the Speaker delivered in Philadelphia on Saturday last in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and as a House document. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I would like the gentleman to state whether his request is to be considered as asking to have all of the Speaker's address printed or just that portion that he gave to the newspapers? I think the last part of his speech was better than the first. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDWICK. All of it.

Mr. MANN. It was all good.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and make that publication 25,000 copies, if he thinks the 50,000 too large. It is a valuable document.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will pardon me, we ought to have an estimate of what it will cost.

Mr. MANN. The ordinary way is to have the usual number printed first.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want to make a request for the printing of a document that will run into the thousands of copies without some knowledge of its cost.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman take the trouble to investigate the cost and later on renew his request?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. I will do that later on; but simply to print it first as a public document will not cost very much.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], as I understood him to say a little while ago, mean to have the whole of the remarks spoken by the President printed, and of the Speaker as well? Is that right?

Mr. HARDWICK. That is what I meant; the complete addresses delivered by them.

Mr. DONOVAN. I understand the Speaker, at a certain stage of his remarks, said, "This is from the written part of my utterance, and the balance will be impromptu." [Laughter.] Are we to get the second part, which was the best part of the speech? [Laughter.] The latter part was the better part. We want it all. Is that the idea?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the gentleman that we will get it all if we can. If we can not get it all we will get as much as we can.

Mr. DONOVAN. The stereotyped part was the first part.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Speaker will furnish it we shall have it all.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman ought to be allowed, before this consent is given, to extend the portion uttered by the Speaker later on, as no doubt he can get it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; we are going to do that.

The SPEAKER. Well, I will put an end to that part of the discussion by saying that I will write out that part of the address which was delivered extemporaneously on that occasion. [Laughter.] Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The addresses are as follows:

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT WILSON.

[Delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., on the occasion of the rededication of Congress Hall, October 25, 1913.]

Your Honor, Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen: No American could stand in this place to-day and think of the circumstances which we are come together to celebrate without being most profoundly stirred. There has come over me since I sat down here a sense of deep solemnity, because it has seemed to me that I saw ghosts crowding—a great assemblage of spirits, no longer visible, but whose influence we still feel as we feel the molding power of history itself. The men who sat in this hall, to whom we now look back with a touch of deep sentiment, were men of flesh and blood, face to face with extremely difficult problems. The population of the United States then was hardly three times the present population of the city of Philadelphia, and yet that was a Nation as this is a Nation, and the men who spoke for it were setting their hands to a work which was to last, not only that their people might be happy, but that an example might be lifted up for the instruction of the rest of the world.

I like to read the quaint old accounts such as Mr. Day has read to us this afternoon. Strangers came then to America to see what the young people that had sprung up here were like, and they found men in counsel who knew how to construct governments. They found men deliberating here who had none of the appearance of novices, none of the hesitation of men who did not know whether the work they were doing was going to last or not; men who addressed themselves to a problem of construction as familiarly as we attempt to carry out the traditions of a Government established these 137 years.

I feel to-day the compulsion of these men, the compulsion of examples which were set up in this place. And of what do their examples remind us? They remind us not merely of public service but of public service shot through with principle and honor. They were not histrionic men. They did not say—

Look upon us as upon those who shall hereafter be illustrious.

They said:

Look upon us who are doing the first free work of constitutional liberty in the world, and who must do it in soberness and truth, or it will not last.

Politics, ladies and gentlemen, is made up in just about equal parts of comprehension and sympathy. No man ought to go into politics who does not comprehend the task that he is going to attack. He may comprehend it so completely that it daunts him, that he doubts whether his own spirit is stout enough and his own mind able enough to attempt its great undertakings, but unless he comprehend it he ought not to enter it. After he has comprehended it, there should come into his mind those profound impulses of sympathy which connect him with the rest of mankind, for politics is a business of interpretation, and no men are fit for it who do not see and seek more than their own advantage and interest.

We have stumbled upon many unhappy circumstances in the hundred years that have gone by since the event that we are celebrating. Almost all of them have come from self-centered men, men who saw in their own interest the interest of the country, and who did not have vision enough to read it in wider terms, in the universal terms of equity and justice and the rights of mankind. I hear a great many people at Fourth of July celebrations laud the Declaration of Independence who in between Julys shiver at the plain language of our bills of rights. The Declaration of Independence was, indeed, the first audible breath of liberty, but the substance of liberty is written in such documents as the declaration of rights attached, for example, to the first constitution of Virginia, which was a model for the similar documents read elsewhere into our great fundamental charters. That document speaks in very plain terms. The men of that generation did not hesitate to say that every people has a right to choose its own forms of government, not once but as often as it pleases, and to accommodate those forms of government to its existing interests and circumstances. Not only to establish but to alter is the fundamental principle of self-government.

We are just as much under compulsion to study the particular circumstances of our own day as the gentlemen were who sat in this hall and set us precedents, not of what to do but of how to do it. Liberty inheres in the circumstances of the day. Human happiness consists in the life which human beings are leading at the time that they live. I can feed my memory as happily upon the circumstances of the revolutionary and constitutional period as you can, but I can not feed all my purposes with them in Washington now. Every day problems arise which wear some new phase and aspect, and I must fall back, if I would serve my conscience, upon those things which are fundamental rather than upon those things which are superficial, and ask myself this question, How are you going to assist in some small part to give the American people and, by example, the peoples of the world more liberty, more happiness, more substantial prosperity; and how are you going to make that prosperity a common heritage instead of a selfish possession? I came here to-day partly in order to feed my own spirit. I did not come in compliment. When I was asked to come I knew immediately upon the utterance of the invitation that I had to come, that to be absent would be as if I refused to drink once more at the original fountains of inspiration for our own Government.

The men of the day which we now celebrate had a very great advantage over us, ladies and gentlemen, in this one particular: Life was simple in America then. All men shared the same circumstances in almost equal degree. We think of Washington, for example, as an aristocrat, as a man separated by training, separated by family and neighborhood tradition, from the ordinary people of the rank and file of the country. Have you forgotten the personal history of George Washington? Do you not know that he struggled as poor boys now struggle for a meager and imperfect education; that he worked at his surveyor's tasks in the lonely forests; that he knew all the roughness, all the hardships, all the adventure, all the variety of the common life of that day; and that if he stood a little stiffly in this place, if he looked a little aloof, it was because life had dealt hardly with him? All his sinews had been stiffened by the rough work of making America. He was a man of the people, whose touch had been with them since the day he saw the light first in the old Dominion of Virginia. And the men who came after him, men, some of whom had drunk deep at the sources of philosophy and of study, were, nevertheless, also men who on this side of the water knew no complicated life but the simple life of primitive neighborhoods. Our task is very much more difficult. That sympathy which alone interprets public duty is more difficult for a public man to acquire now than it was then, because we live in the midst of circumstances and conditions infinitely complex.

No man can boast that he understands America. No man can boast that he has lived the life of America, as almost every man who sat in this hall in those days could boast. No man can pretend that except by common counsel he can gather into his consciousness what the varied life of this people is. The duty that we have to keep open eyes and open hearts and accessible understandings is a very much more difficult duty to perform than it was in their day. Yet how much more important that it should be performed, for fear we make infinite and irreparable blunders. The city of Washington is in some respects self-contained, and it is easy there to forget what the rest of the United States is thinking about. I count it a fortunate circumstance that almost all the windows of the White House and its offices open upon unoccupied spaces that stretch to the banks of the Potomac and then out into Virginia and on to the heavens themselves, and that as I sit there I can constantly forget Washington and remember the United States. Not that I would intimate that all of the United States lies south of Washington, but there is a serious thing back of my thought. If you think too much about being reelected, it is very difficult to be worth reelecting. You are so apt to forget that the comparatively small number of persons, numerous as they seem to be when they swarm, who come to Washington to ask for things, do not constitute an important proportion of the population of the country, that it is constantly necessary to come away from Washington and renew one's contacts with the people who do not swarm there, who do not ask for anything, but who do trust you without their personal counsel to do your duty. Unless a man gets these contacts he grows weaker and weaker. He needs them as Hercules needed the touch of mother earth. If you lifted him up too high or he lifts himself too high, he loses the contact and therefore loses the inspiration.

I love to think of those plain men, however far from plain their dress sometimes was, who assembled in this hall. One is startled to think of the variety of costume and color which would now occur if we were let loose upon the fashions of that age. Men's lack of taste is largely concealed now by the limitations of fashion. Yet these men who sometimes dressed like the peacock were, nevertheless, of the ordinary flight of their time. They were birds of a feather; they were birds come from a very simple breeding; they were much in the open heaven. They were beginning, when there was so little to distract their attention, to show that they could live upon fundamental principles of government. We talk those principles, but we have not time to absorb them. We have not time to let them into our blood, and thence have them translated into the plain mandates of action.

The very smallness of this room, the very simplicity of it all, all the suggestions which come from its restoration, are reassuring things, things which it becomes a man to realize. Therefore, my theme here to-day, my only thought, is a very simple one. Do not let us go back to the annals of those sessions of Congress to find out what to do, because we live in another age and the circumstances are absolutely different; but let us be men of that kind; let us feel at every turn the compulsions of principle and of honor which they felt; let us free our vision from temporary circumstances and look abroad at the horizon and take into our lungs the great air of freedom which has blown through this country and stolen across the seas and blessed people everywhere; and, looking east and west and north and south, let us remind ourselves that we are the custodians, in some degree, of the principles which have made men free and governments just.

ADDRESS OF HON. CHAMP CLARK.

[Delivered at Philadelphia, Pa., Saturday, October 25, 1913.]

In the history of America there are certain great epochal events which we can all most heartily and enthusiastically celebrate. Among these are the discovery of the new world, the first white settlement at Jamestown, the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock, Patrick Henry's great lyric speech in the Virginia House of Burgesses which precipitated the Revolution and which still stirs the heart like strains of martial music, the skirmish at Lexington, where the embattled farmers fired the shot heard around the world, the Declaration of Independence, the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, the adoption of the Constitution, and the purchase of the Louisiana Territory, which made us a world power.

Philadelphia was the scene of two of these vastly important and far-reaching transactions—the promulgation of the Declaration and the making of the Constitution. The former published our theory of government; the latter set forth the plan to put that theory into effect. The Declaration is the most splendid state paper in all the hoary registers of time; the Constitution has been pronounced the greatest single emanation of the human mind. The majestic sweep of the Declaration helped us secure our liberty. A man of sensibility can not read it, even at this late day, without his blood flowing faster. For 137 years it has been a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night to people everywhere struggling for the freedom to which all men are entitled.

If there were saints in the political calendar as there are in the religious and if particular days were assigned to particular saints the Fourth of July would be universally called Saint Jefferson's Day. The twin basic ideas: "All men are created equal" and "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," which the fathers enunciated that day in this goodly city have worked like the leaven described in the Bible until the civilized world has accepted our political philosophy in whole or in part. Like Tennyson's brook, they will go on forever until men everywhere are free. Our Declaration of Independence is the Magna Charta of human liberty and has revolutionized the world.

If it be true that imitation is the sincerest flattery we have ample cause for self-congratulation, for our Constitution has become both the fashion and the pattern among nations. The highest compliment ever paid the fathers of the Republic was when Bismarck built the new German Empire upon the model of our dual government.

Be it ours to preserve, strengthen, and perpetuate our free institutions, thereby transmitting to our descendants the richest heritage ever possessed by the children of men.

Ladies and gentlemen, the words I have just spoken constitute the written speech which I gave out in advance to the newspapers because they wanted it. Now I am going to say a few things pertinent to the occasion for my own satisfaction.

From the smallest beginning we have risen to a commanding position.

Truly does Emerson say:

We live in a new and exceptional age. America is another word for opportunity. Our entire history appears like a last effort of Divine Providence in behalf of the human race.

Those words of the great Concord philosopher were fitly spoken and are like apples of gold in pictures of silver.

Our growth in every respect has been, indeed, phenomenal.

In 1800 we had 5,308,483 people. In 1910 our population was 91,972,266 in continental America alone, exclusive of Alaska, Hawaii, Guam, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and the Canal Zone. If our population increases at that rate for the next 110 years in 2010 it will number 2,000,000,000 souls—500,000,000 more than are supposed to be on earth to-day. It makes one think of Andrew Carnegie's gorgeous vision of "The United States of the World." Not long since Mr. Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson declared in a public address that if the Mississippi Valley were cultivated for all it is worth on the average one acre would support one human being, which would give us 1,250,000,000 citizens betwixt the top of the Alleghenies and the crest of the Rockies.

When Mr. Speaker Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg called the House of the First Congress to order, he presided over a House composed of 56 Members. Now I preside over a House composed of 435 Members, to say nothing of two Territorial Delegates and three Resident Commissioners from Porto Rico and the Philippines. In the beginning the ratio for a Representative in Congress was 33,000; now it is 212,500. With the first ratio and our present population the House of Representatives would consist of 2,787 Representatives.

In 113 years our total wealth multiplied 125 fold and is now rated by statisticians at the enormous sum of one hundred and forty billions of dollars, which, if equally distributed, would give $1,312 to every man, woman, and child between the two oceans. But there's the rub, for while a few are rich beyond the dream of avarice, many have not the wherewithal to feed and clothe themselves. I am fain to believe that the crowning glory of the philosophy, statecraft, humanitarianism, and religion of the twentieth century will be to devise a scheme whereby every man, and every woman, too, shall enjoy the usufruct of his own labor and to prevent one greedy soul from monopolizing the toil and sweat and lives of thousands. The signs of the times indicate that that dream is not too fantastic for entertainment. That glad era began when N. O. Nelson, of St. Louis, originated the plan of sharing profits with his employees. I humbly and reverently thank God this day that he is a Missourian. Some of the great manufacturing concerns, railroads, and insurance companies are establishing pension systems for their employees disabled by sickness, accident, or old age, which put to blush the liberal pension system of the Federal Government for the soldiers of our various wars. I say blessed be the name of the man forever, without regard to politics or religion, who establishes abiding peace between labor and capital, which should be friends and not enemies.

Should our wealth increase for the next 113 years at the rate of the last 113, in the year 2026 it will amount to seventeen trillions five hundred billions of dollars, a sum so stupendous as to be incomprehensible by the mathematical powers of the human mind.

In 1800 our territory was circumscribed by the Atlantic on the east, the Mississippi on the west, the Great Lakes on the north, and the Floridas on the south. It did not even touch the Gulf of Mexico. Now it extends from the sunrise side of Porto Rico in the east to the Lord only knows where in the west.

In 1800 we were a fourth-rate power, a feeble folk of little value in the world's calculations and plans. Now we are in the front rank, and there is not an emperor, czar, king, prince, potentate, or premier who does not lie awake of nights trying to discover what we will do next. The President of the United States has more real power than any ruler on earth, the reason being that so soon as any man is elected President he is the President of all Americans of whatever persuasion, religious or political.

In 1800 churches were like angels' visits, few and far between. The advent of the preacher into a community was the event of the season, sometimes of the year. Now the average citizen lives within less than 4 miles of a place of worship and preachers and priests are as plentiful as candidates in a Republican primary in Philadelphia. These facts are not to be despised even by statesmen, for the wisest man that ever lived said: "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."

The majority of the men who fought in the Revolutionary War could not read and write. According to the last census less than 8 per cent of our white people were classed as illiterate.

When George Washington was first sworn in as President there were about a dozen colleges in the United States, every one of them in imminent danger of dying of what the doctors call anemia—that is, poverty of the blood. Now a million ambitious boys and girls are preparing themselves for the important and onerous duties of American citizenship at 500 universities and colleges, not to mention high-class academies. I myself have lectured to one audience composed entirely of the teachers and students of one university which numbered more persons than did the army with which Sam Houston established the liberty of Texas on the red field of San Jacinto.

It is said to have been the wish dearest to the heart of Henry IV, the greatest of the Bourbon Kings, that France might become so prosperous that every Frenchman might have a fowl in the pot for his Sunday dinner, which does not seem much of a boon to us meat eaters in this rich and favored land. If I had one prayer for the American Republic which I knew would be answered, it would be that every American citizen should be sufficiently educated to read his ballot intelligently on election day and sufficiently courageous to cast it as becomes an American freeman.

The small but goodly company of heroes and statesmen who once sat in this Hall and legislated for the nascent Republic wrought wisely and patriotically in the cause of human freedom. We also of this day who are intrusted with power—the President and his administration and both Houses of Congress—work energetically, patriotically, and wisely, I hope, for the public weal.

The greatest achievement to our credit is that we have taught all the peoples of the earth that men can govern themselves—a glorious fact of which we may well be proud.

I have no patience with the pessimists and muckrakers who are forever predicting the downfall of the Republic and the return of chaos. It surely must be that if 3,000,000 backwoods-men in the dawn of civilization on this continent possessed the wisdom, skill, courage, fortitude, patriotism, and self-abnegation to achieve liberty, we, ninety-odd millions of their descendants, the very flower of the human race, with a continent for our home and the resources of a continent to command, possess the wisdom, skill, courage, fortitude, patriotism, and self-abnegation to preserve our free institutions for ourselves and our posterity.

When I look into the faces of my children my heart swells with ineffable pride to think that they are citizens of this mighty Republic, one and indivisible, built not for a day but for all time, and destined under God to be the dominating influence through all the centuries yet to be.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS—JOSEPH MOORE.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. DYER, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Joseph Moore (H. R. 21843, 62d Cong., 2d sess.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, October 28, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee, O God our heavenly Father, source of all good, for wisdom, strength, and guidance, that with clear conceptions, high ideals, pure motives, and earnest endeavors we may go forward to larger conquests in the things that make for righteousness in the political, economical, social, and religious life of our Republic, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INCOME-TAX REGULATIONS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning the House ordered printed as a House document 100,000 copies of the regulations issued by the Treasury Department concerning the income tax. I was informed before making the suggestion to the House that the regulations were complete, but they are only regulations in regard to the collection of income at the source, and I doubt whether 100,000 copies will be required for the use of the House. I suppose every Member will want to send a copy to the banks, trust companies, and the lawyers in his district. Whether it will take 100,000 copies to do that is very doubtful.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I notice these regulations relate only to the collection of the income tax at the source, whereas now the Treasury Department is in the process of preparing and issuing a series of general instructions relating to all factors of the collection of the income tax from individuals and all others. Would it not be a good idea to wait until they finish those regulations and then put them all into one document?

Mr. MANN. I think that would be a good idea to put them all into one document when the regulations are issued, but they are not to be issued for some little time, and the collection at the source commences the 1st of November. I think many Members will desire to send one to these banks and trust companies. Suppose we order 25,000—20,000 for the folding room and 5,000 for the document room—and then print the rest later.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think that would be better.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COX. If 100,000 copies are printed and 80,000 go to the folding room, that will only give about 175 or 180 to each Member.

Mr. MANN. I have not figured it out, but I think Members will want to send banks, trust companies, and so forth, copies.

Mr. COX. I think the newspapers ought to have it.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is a matter that the newspapers would carry in their columns.

Mr. COX. The newspapers of my district are printing the tariff bill in toto.

Mr. MANN. As a serial story?

Mr. COX. There were 80,000 tariff bills printed, and that only gave 179 copies to each Member, after allowing a certain number to go to the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. There is no reason why a sufficient number should not be printed, as the total cost of printing 100,000 copies is less than $500. When I called the attention of the House to the matter yesterday and made the request, I stated to the House that it was the complete regulations of which there undoubtedly would be required 100,000 copies.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman had better make it 50,000 copies.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to more than 25,000 copies.

Mr. MANN. But we have already ordered 100,000 copies.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, if we are in that situation I will accept any reduction. If the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me, when the complete regulations are issued we ought to have as many as we need, but it strikes me that these instructions as to the collecting of the income at the source will not be needed in such a number.

Mr. MANN. Everybody who has an interest coupon runs against this proposition. At some place or other there has to be collected the income tax and a certificate attached to the coupon. People who own coupons will want to know that, and the banks that collect them will want a copy of these regulations.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I have made a rough calculation, and as I figure it 80,000 copies placed in the folding room will give each Member 180 copies. I do not know how other Members are situated, but if you are going to send one to every lawyer and every trust company and every bank 100,000 will not be too many.

Mr. HARDWICK. It will not be enough.

Mr. PEPPER. I believe, in view of the fact that it is within the $500 limit, we better let it stand as it is. It seems to me if we cut it down to 50,000, which will make only 90 to a Member, it will not be enough, and I should imagine the gentleman from Illinois would need a great many more than 90 to supply the people of his district.

Mr. MANN. I presume I would need less than the average Member.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois ask that the number set yesterday be cut down?

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the request, Mr. Speaker.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I understand the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea, popularly known as the seaman's bill, which passed the Senate, is on the Speaker's table and has not been printed. I presume it will not be printed unless it is referred, unless unanimous consent is granted for printing it. I have not yet seen the bill as it passed the Senate. A great many Members have requested copies. I have not yet determined just what course to pursue with reference to the bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed, so that the Members may see what it is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be referred under the rules, and then it will be printed as a matter of procedure.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I shall not object to that course.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the bill is referred, it will be printed under the rules.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; but I want it printed without reference.

The SPEAKER. What request does the gentleman make?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the bill printed for information, without reference.

Mr. MANN. And I ask to have the bill referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request of the gentleman from Missouri. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 136 be printed without reference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I ask to have the bill referred.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Missouri made his request first.

Mr. MANN. But mine has a prior right.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I shall solve the difficulty by objecting to the request of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MANN. I think the Speaker is obliged to refer a bill when a request is made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects to the request of the gentleman from Missouri, and the Chair refers the bill under the rule to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and, of course, that takes with it the printing of the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 234. An act to enjoin and abate houses of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution; to declare the same to be nuisances; to enjoin the person or persons who conduct or maintain the same and the owner or agent of any building used for such purpose; and to assess a tax against the person maintaining said nuisance and against the building and owner thereof.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 234. An act to enjoin and abate houses of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution; to declare the same to be nuisances; to enjoin the person or persons who conduct or maintain the same and the owner or agent of any building used for such purpose; and to assess a tax against the person maintaining said nuisance and against the building and owner thereof; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 136. An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

THE LATE ADOLPHUS BUSCH.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by ex-Secretary of Commerce and Labor Hon. Charles Nagel, of St. Louis.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 62, nays 28, answered "present" 10, not voting 328, as follows:

 Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, October 29, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on examination of Wekiva River, Fla. (H. Doc. No. 271), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GILLET: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 144) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOBSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 145) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 9060) to correct the military record of Benjamin Munkers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 9061) granting a pension to Solomon Morris; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. AUSTIN: A bill (H. R. 9062) correcting the military record of Frederick S. Loftis; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9063) for the relief of Alice Evelyn Mabry Hazen, Lawrence C. Mabry, Herbert S. Mabry, Churchwell Mabry, and William Deaderick; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9064) granting a pension to Andrew J. Wallace; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9065) granting a pension to Matthew Wright; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 9066) granting a pension to Noel M. Pursley; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9067) for the relief of the estate of Jonathan Tippit; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GLASS: A bill (H. R. 9068) for the relief of Passed Asst. Surg. Micajah Boland, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 9069) to place the name of Ex-Lieut. Col. Milton W. Weidler upon the unlimited retired list of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MCGILLICUDDY: A bill (H. R. 9070) granting a pension to Lottie A. Robinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of the Central Grocery and 12 other merchants of Coshocton, Ohio, favoring a change in the interstate-commerce laws compelling concerns selling goods direct to the consumer by mail to contribute their portion of the funds for the development of the local community, county, and State; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Papers accompanying bill granting a pension to Noel M. Purdy; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, papers accompanying bill for the relief of the estate of Jonathan Tippit, of Stewart County, Tenn.; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MANN: Petition of F. G. Mesler and 5,000 employees of the South Works of the Illinois Steel Co., of South Chicago, Ill., protesting against the dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND (by request): Petition of 400 employees of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Mill, at Chester, W. Va., protesting against the dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WHITACRE: Petition of subscribers, stockholders, and employees of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., Wells-ville Works, of Wellsville, Ohio, protesting against a dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, October 29, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art on the right hand and on the left hand, above, beneath, and in the hearts of men, life of our life, spirit of our spirit, strengthen every moral fiber of our nature and encourage every earnest desire for godliness, that we may distinguish clearly between liberty and license, order and chaos, government and anarchy, patriotism and bluster, religion and fanaticism; that wrongs may be righted and justice have its sway; that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done in the hearts of all men. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WEIGHING OF THE MAILS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a statement expressing my views on a bill (H. R. 9071) that I have just introduced with reference to the weighing of the mails.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman want done with it?
Mr. LLOYD. I ask unanimous consent that I may submit a statement. I will submit it in writing, without delivering it.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is a speech?

Mr. LLOYD. It is a statement explaining the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. A bill which the gentleman has introduced?

Mr. LLOYD. Oh, yes; providing for the annual weighing of the mails.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] asks unanimous consent to submit a statement in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe the gentleman is on a commission that has been investigating this subject?

Mr. LLOYD. Not on the subject of weighing the mails.

Mr. MURDOCK. On a commission to investigate the proposition of the railway-mail pay?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. This has nothing to do with that commission.

Mr. MURDOCK. This is not an outgrowth of that commission?

Mr. LLOYD. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CRIMINAL ALIENS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on criminal aliens in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of criminal aliens. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RACE SEGREGATION.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of segregation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of segregation. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Of what sort?

The SPEAKER (after a pause). The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of printing a newspaper article from a Baltimore paper on the question of Panama Canal tolls.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an article on the subject of Panama Canal tolls. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my friend from Tennessee whether he intends, if he gets this permission, to fill the RECORD up with a lot of newspaper clippings?

Mr. SIMS. No. It is simply a single clipping, which I have in my hand.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to adjourn. There is no business before the House.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. There is business on the calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. We ought to dispose of the business on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks for the yeas and nays. Those who are in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Evidently a sufficient number have arisen, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 55, nays 31, answered "present" 13, not voting 229, as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ALEXANDER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of attendance on the International Conference on Safety of Life at Sea, which meets in London November 12, as one of the commissioners appointed by the President of the United States.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demanded the regular order the Chair was under the impression that there was nothing on the calendar. On investigating the matter he finds that there are five or six bills and two or three resolutions on the calendar. So that to-morrow, unless some gentleman moves to adjourn suddenly, the Chair will have the committees called.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, October 30, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

EXPENDITURES FOR COMMON-SCHOOL PURPOSES (S. DOC. NO. 224).

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from former Senator Henry W. Blair, of New Hampshire. It has to do with the expenditures of the various States for common-school purposes. If there be no objection, the Chair will order it printed in the Record and also as a public document. It is a very brief paper, but the Chair is impressed with the idea that it contains valuable matter with reference to the expenditures for public schools and that the order to print is justified.

There being no objection, the paper was ordered to be printed as a document and also to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[Senate Document No. 224, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

Letter from Henry W. Blair, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Education stating the condition of common-school education throughout the country.

COLORADO BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., October 30, 1913.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose an original letter addressed to myself in reply to certain specific inquiries made by me of the honorable Commissioner of Education for information from the official records, showing the condition of common-school education throughout the country as indicated by the actual yearly expenditure in the several States.

It will be observed that this expenditure is confined to common-school education and does not include the high schools nor any form of more advanced education. It is for reading, writing, and arithmetic and that primary mental training which is indispensable to a fair start in the race of life in any direction. It is as necessary to any real progress by the child as are the senses, the original inlets to knowledge.

The educators of the country agree that $28 per capita is the least annual expenditure which will give the American child a good—not the best—common-school education.

Besides this is the immense sum which must be provided for the schoolhouses, training of teachers, books, etc., which correspond to the plant in all business, and common-school education is the most important business carried on in this country and will be in this world.

It will be observed that of the $446,000,000 expended for common schools in this country over $102,000,000 is paid out in States which expend more than $28 per capita, leaving nearly $344,000,000 paid out in States which expend less than $28 per capita, the lowest admissible standard. The total of the deficiencies is $263,000,000. To bring the deficient States up to the standard will require $607,000,000. The total expenditure of the whole country would then be $709,000,000 for common schools. Besides all this is the plant.

Where the need is greatest the ability to bear further taxation is the least. Bankruptcy would follow such overwhelming increase of State taxation. The evil seems to be increasing, especially in the North.

The Nation and the State live or die with the common school. Whenever necessary the Nation must help, or governments, republican in form, will perish from the earth. The primary duty to educate is upon the Nation, for in no other way can the republican form of government be preserved to itself or guaranteed to the State. In the presence of this tremendous problem, of what consequence are tariffs or wars?

The common school must be spread throughout the world as the supreme gospel of free institutions. Universal common-school education is the only institution which can make all nations fit for self-government, thus overthrowing tyranny of both soul and body in every form and impregnably establishing the liberties of mankind.

I would highly appreciate the courtesy of the presentation of this and the commissioner's letter to the Senate, and that the same be printed in the Record and referred to the appropriate committee.

I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, HENRY W. BLAIR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, July 1, 1913.

Hon. HENRY W. BLAIR,
Colorado Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request, I am sending you a number of statistical tables relating to the State common schools.

It is difficult to select the "ten best" school systems, but to obtain a fair average per capita of expenditure, based upon school population, I have taken the 10 States in which the child 5 to 18 years of age receives the greatest number of days' schooling in the school year. The following States in 1911 showed an average attendance of from 101 to 107 days for every child 5 to 18 years of age: Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Utah, Washington, and California.

These 10 States had a school population of 3,509,117 and expended in the aggregate $96,005,239 for the common schools, or very nearly $28 per capita of this population 5 to 18 years of age.

The inclosed table shows the common-school expenditure for each State in 1911, and in a parallel column the amount which each would have expended at the rate of $28 per capita of school population, where a higher rate does not now exist. The third column shows the increase necessary in each State to bring it up to the $28 per capita. Twelve States now exceed this rate.

With one exception, the other statistical items mentioned in your letter will be found in the marked tables from the commissioner's annual reports sent to-day.

Federal appropriations made by the Sixty-first Congress for education, directly or indirectly, were summarized in the commissioner's report for 1910, pages 181 to 187. I regret that the chapter reprints are no longer in stock, but undoubtedly the volume is in your library.

Very respectfully,

ALEX SUMMERS, Statistician.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3192) waiving the age limit for appointment as cadet engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States in the case of John S. McKinney, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 123) thereon.

GOOD ROADS IN PUBLIC-LAND STATES.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, on the 27th instant I introduced Senate bill 3354, a bill granting to various States public lands for the construction, repair, and maintenance of public roads. The bill was inadvertently, I apprehend, and without my knowledge, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The bill relating entirely to public lands and a large number of similar bills have been introduced in the House and Senate and referred to the Committee on Public Lands of their respective bodies, and, in fact, quite a number of similar bills being now before the Senate Committee on Public Lands, I think it best that all bills relating to the same subject should be before the same committee. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, Senate bill 3354, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that action will be taken.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3359) granting to the State of Oregon certain lands claimed by the State of Oregon under the act of Congress approved September 28, 1850, and an act of Congress approved March 12, 1860; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 3360) granting an increase of pension to Daniel J. Haynes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PAGE (for Mr. BURLEIGH):

A bill (S. 3361) granting an increase of pension to Melvin C. Wadsworth; to the Committee on Pensions.

LETTERS PATENT (S. DOC. NO. 225).

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have here a paper read before the American Bar Association at Montreal September 2, 1913, entitled "Letters patent in relation to modern industrial conditions," by Frederick P. Fish. I ask that the paper may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WIDOWS OF DECEASED SENATORS.

Mr. KENYON. At the last session of the Senate I submitted a resolution jointly on behalf of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and myself. The point was raised that that action violated some of the ancient rules of the Senate, and the point was sustained.

I now offer a resolution on behalf of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who is engaged in patriotic work, and ask that it lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 204) was read, as follows:

Whereas for many years the Senate of the United States has voted to the widows of deceased Senators one year's salary; and Whereas said practice has been continued for so many years that it has become an established custom; and Whereas there is no authority of law therefor, and the same constitutes an unwarranted donation of public funds for private purposes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense and judgment of the Senate that hereafter no such donation shall be made, and that said custom shall cease.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. KENYON. I submit a resolution and ask that it lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 203) was read, as follows:

Whereas for many years the Senate of the United States has voted to the widows or relatives of deceased Senators one year's salary; and Whereas said practice has been continued for so many years that it has become an established custom; and Whereas there is no authority of law therefor and the same constitutes an unwarranted donation of public funds for private purposes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense and judgment of the Senate that hereafter no such donation shall be made, and that said custom shall cease.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

ASSISTANT IN DOCUMENT ROOM.

Mr. KENYON (for Mr. CLAPP) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 205), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to employ one additional assistant in the Senate document room at a compensation of $1,440 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On October 24, 1913:

S. 3296. An act to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to employ additional clerks on heirship work in the Indian Office.

On October 30, 1913:

S. 1673. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant further extensions of time within which to comply with the law and make proof on desert-land entries in the counties of Grant and Franklin, State of Washington.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in pursuance of the notice given by me on the last legislative day, I offer the following resolution, and before its reference I desire to say a word.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 202), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following paragraph to the twelfth standing rule of the Senate, to be numbered and known as paragraph 3 of said Rule XII, to wit:

"No request by a Senator for unanimous consent for the taking of a final vote on a specified date upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution shall be submitted to the Senate for agreement thereto until, upon a roll call ordered for the purpose by the presiding officer, it shall be disclosed that a quorum of the Senate is present; and when a unanimous consent is thus given the same shall operate as the order of the Senate."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to say a word before the resolution is referred to the Committee on Rules.

The use of the unanimous-consent agreement is one of the most important methods by which the Senate does business. It is extremely important that that method should be preserved, and it is equally important that it should not be abused. Its preservation is in a large measure dependent upon its not being abused.

Mr. President, there are one or two things which are done under this method which we have been in the habit of doing which this rule is designed to correct. Manifestly anything so important as a unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate should not be entered into unless a quorum of the Senate shall have the opportunity to consent or to object. It is a necessary incident of our service here that at some time in the day there are very few Senators present. We meet at noon, or at an earlier hour sometimes, and, of course, during the day it is absolutely necessary for Senators to go to their lunch. Very frequently important committees are necessarily in session and Senators while within easy reach of the Senate are not actually present in the Chamber. So it frequently happens—it daily happens—that there are times when the business of the Senate is proceeded with when there is not only no quorum present but when there are only a handful of Senators present. It is manifestly wrong that at such a time a Senator should have the opportunity to rise in his place and ask for a unanimous consent for important action, such as the voting upon the final passage of a bill, or a joint resolution which has the same effect in law as a bill, and with a handful of Senators present to secure that consent, and thereafter the full Senate be bound to acquiesce in what has been done or else to bring into discredit and disrepute the unanimous-consent agreement which it is so essential that we should preserve.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. Speaking of the resolution which he has submitted, will it require a call of the Senate when each request for unanimous consent is asked?

Mr. BACON. It is only to apply when unanimous consent is asked for the passage of a bill or a joint resolution.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Suppose unanimous consent is given this morning and five minutes or two minutes or immediately thereafter another unanimous consent is asked, would there have to be two roll calls?

Mr. BACON. That is something which in my long service in the Senate I have never seen, and we need not anticipate that that contingency is going to arise, certainly not frequently.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Would it—

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me to make a statement, I will then be very glad to yield for any question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I merely wanted the information.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it is much better that there should be a dozen roll calls a day than that we should have unanimous consent granted by a handful of Senators when if the Senate were present that unanimous consent could not be obtained. It is not such a hardship to call the roll of the Senate. So I will answer the Senator yes, if that will end the uncertainty in his mind, as to the purpose of this rule. The purpose is that before any unanimous-consent agreement shall be submitted to the Senate that a vote shall be taken upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution which is to have the effect of a law, there shall be ascertained by a roll call that a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. When the Senator refers to a unanimous-consent agreement to fix a day certain, does he refer to a unanimous-consent agreement to do anything?

Mr. BACON. I have just stated—

Mr. SIMMONS. I was not present.

Mr. BACON. I have just stated that it would apply only to a unanimous-consent agreement for the passage of a bill or a joint resolution. It does not refer to any other unanimous-consent agreements.

Mr. SIMMONS. It would not include every unanimous-consent agreement to act upon any matter pending before the Senate?

Mr. BACON. It would not apply unless it was for the passage of a bill or a joint resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. On every bill or joint resolution where a request was made for unanimous consent there would have to be a roll call and an ascertainment if there was present in the Chamber a majority of the Senate?

Mr. BACON. It is not necessary to state it in any other than the precise language that it relates only to a unanimous-consent agreement for a final vote on the passage of a bill or a joint resolution—not to any other matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, I would like to say that I would have no sort of objection to the Senator's proposition if it was confined to a unanimous-consent agreement to fix a day certain for voting upon a bill.

Mr. BACON. If I have not stated that, it is because I have not the ability to express myself clearly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Suppose a bill is called up this morning in the morning hour and a request is made for unanimous consent to place the bill upon its passage, would it be necessary in that case to ascertain whether there was a quorum present?

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Secretary that he again read the resolution, and I ask the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to its language.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

No request by a Senator for unanimous consent for the taking of a final vote on a specified date upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution shall be submitted to the Senate for agreement thereto until, upon a roll call ordered for the purpose by the presiding officer, it shall be disclosed that a quorum of the Senate is present; and when a unanimous consent is thus given the same shall operate as the order of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Now, if the Senator from North Carolina will mark that language, he will see that it relates only to the taking of a final vote at a fixed time and relates only to the final vote as to the passage of a bill or a joint resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. In that form I myself have no objection to it at all.

Mr. BACON. I thought the Senator possibly had not caught the exact meaning of it and that he would not object to it when he understood it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will yield to me, I should like to ask another question. First, I will state that I am in hearty sympathy with the view that a unanimous-consent agreement ought not to be entered into without a quorum being present. I heartily agree with the proposition which the Senator seeks to have established. This is the point in my mind. We have here every morning a half dozen or a dozen requests for unanimous consent to pass bills of minor importance that amount to very little. The question is whether the rule could not be so framed that the Vice President could determine the presence of a quorum after a roll call had been made and one unanimous consent given, or whether the roll of the Senate would have to be called before each one of the little bills was taken up. It may be that that is not a good suggestion. I have not considered the subject.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I see the object of the first inquiry made by him. The Senator had in mind the case where a Senator rises and asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill. This proposed rule has no reference to anything of that kind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think that ought to be included, because I believe that much legislation is gotten through here without consideration by a quorum of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. That may be; but I think we had better attend to the greater evil.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If this only applies to the suggestion the Senator made as to setting a date for the final vote, I see no objection on earth to it.

Mr. BACON. It only applies, Mr. President, to the fixing of a date for the final vote on the passage of a bill or a joint resolution and has no reference to the frequent occasions on which Senators rise and ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of some subject matter to which there is practically no objection. It is where there are matters of controversy, where it is wished to fix some time when the debate shall close, and the Senate agrees to have the vote on a certain day, that the vote shall be taken on the passage of a bill. It is with reference to cases of that kind, and those only, and also as to the fixing of the hour.

Mr. President, it has frequently happened that important matters have been passed upon upon a request for unanimous consent when there was only a handful of Senators present. We had within the very recent past a most remarkable illustration of that fact. Everybody knows that for weeks past the Senate has been expecting not to do any business in a general way, certainly not to attend to controverted matters, other than the particular matters that we had especially in view—the tariff bill and the currency bill—yet it has occurred here that upon a most important bill, commonly designated as “the seamen’s bill,” a bill in one particular much more far-reaching than any bill I have ever known in the Senate, one which assumed to deal with our treaties with every nation in the world, all in one bill, a unanimous consent was asked for, and at a time when, I repeat, there was only a handful of Senators present, when there was very grave doubt whether there was a quorum of the Senate in the city, and where the Record disclosed at the time that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] called attention to the fact that there were only 19 Senators present by actual count, a unanimous consent was given for the consideration of that bill, and not only unanimous consent that a vote be taken at a certain date, but that it be taken at a certain hour. The Senate, rather than bring into disrepute that method of proceeding with business, subsequently acquiesced in it, and it was carried out.

Now, I am at liberty to say that it was very freely stated by members of the committee that reported that bill to the Senate—it was stated by them without reservation and without qualification—that it was reported with a full understanding of the committee that it was not going to be called up for action at this time. So nobody was anticipating that a unanimous-consent agreement would be asked for.

One very unfortunate feature about that unanimous-consent agreement—I think unfortunate not only in that case, but it would be in any other—was the fixing of an hour at which a vote should be taken. It was illustrated in the case of that very bill. There was a case when not only the day was fixed, but the hour for taking a vote was fixed; and upon a most important and far-reaching amendment, which abrogated every treaty that we had with every nation on the great subject, not only was it true that a large majority of Senators who voted upon the bill had just been called back here and had not heard any of the debate—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia allow me to interrupt him?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Georgia does not mean to suggest for a moment that the Senate did not have full opportunity to consider the bill?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does seem to me that Senators had ample opportunity to be heard. If they did not come here and attend to business, the Senator ought not to complain if unanimous consent was given in their absence. It seems to me that the only way to dispatch the business of the Senate is to have such unanimous-consent agreements made for the consideration of important measures.

Mr. BACON. I am in favor of unanimous-consent agreements, Mr. President, but I desire them made at a time when the Senate can have its mind directed to the fact that there has been a unanimous consent requested and that a quorum shall be present for that purpose. We know the fact that it is frequently the case that a quorum is not present, and it is necessarily so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BACON. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I unfortunately was called out of the Chamber, and was not able to hear the remarks of the Senator from Georgia, except in part; but I understood him to say that the purpose of his proposed amendment related only to a unanimous-consent agreement for the passage of bills and joint resolutions. I desire to make the observation that if the amendment is limited so narrowly as I understood the Senator from Georgia to state, it seems to me it fails to protect us against the unanimous-consent agreement which does fix a time for taking a vote; and I suggest that it is one of the cases where a unanimous-consent agreement may be abused. For instance, if there should be only a mere handful of Senators in the Chamber and a unanimous-consent agreement is secured from that mere handful to fix a day certain for voting upon a bill, it may place the Senate in a position where it is obliged to consider and vote upon a bill without having sufficient time to give it the attention it deserves. So the amendment ought to include, if it does not, the unanimous-consent agreement which fixes a day and an hour for voting upon a bill. I got the impression from what the Senator said that his proposed amendment would not cover that.

Mr. BACON. I confess I do not catch the Senator’s proposition. There is a good deal of talk around me, and the Senator does not speak loudly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then I will try to speak a little louder, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me to make a suggestion to him.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], if he hears the proposed amendment, will alter his opinion.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I say I was absent from the Chamber during a part of the time when the Senator from Georgia was speaking, and I may have a wrong impression as to what the rule proposes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The amendment, as I understand it, provides for exactly what the Senator from South Dakota thinks it does not provide for.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well. Then my remarks are entirely useless. I should like, however, to hear the proposed amendment again read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let the proposed amendment be again stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. The Secretary read as follows:

No request by a Senator for unanimous consent for the taking of a final vote on a specified date upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution shall be submitted to the Senate for agreement thereto until, upon a roll call ordered for the purpose by the presiding officer, it shall be disclosed that a quorum of the Senate is present; and when a unanimous consent is thus given the same shall operate as the order of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it may be true that the proposed amendment to the rules may require some amplification, that there may be some other things which should be included. I think, however, that it would be well to let this proposed amendment to the rules be confined to this particular object, and then let us provide for other things as they arise, because the great and important thing to accomplish is that a unanimous-consent agreement shall not be had, that the presiding officer shall not even submit to the Senate a proposition for a unanimous-consent agreement for the passage of a bill or a joint resolution, until there has been a roll call and it is ascertained that the Senate has a quorum present.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to ask the Senator what his opinion would be upon this state of facts: Supposing the rule were amended to comply with the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, and upon a Senator rising and asking unanimous consent for fixing a day upon which a final vote upon a bill or joint resolution should be taken he should also ask unanimous consent that the provision of the rule which the Senator is now proposing should be dispensed with, what would be the effect of that request?

Mr. BACON. The effect would be to absolutely nullify it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My point is whether a rule can be suspended by unanimous consent, and if this is nothing but a rule whether unanimous consent would set it aside.

Mr. BACON. I should say that that would be a refinement which no logician would recognize.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator admit that a rule can be suspended at all in any way?

Mr. BACON. There is a provision in some of the rules for their suspension by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. Then why could not this rule be suspended by unanimous consent?

Mr. BACON. Simply because the proposed rule seeks to provide against that very thing; and it would be arguing in a circle to maintain such a proposition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If a rule can be made by a majority, why can it not be suspended by a unanimous vote?

Mr. BACON. We can not change a rule by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I admit that, because the rules provide how they shall be changed or amended, but can we not suspend it for the time?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, where we are providing by a rule that there shall be no unanimous consent, except under certain conditions, it is simply arguing in a circle to talk about suspending that rule by unanimous consent. I do not think the Senator's suggestion is a very material one.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am heartily in favor of the resolution if it can be buttoned up so that it can never be violated.

Mr. BACON. I do not think that any presiding officer would ever hold that the rule could be suspended.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He might not do so; but I am quite sure that some Senator, if he very much desired to get unanimous consent, might try it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator from Connecticut think any Senator would feel bound by it under such circumstances? I think we would utterly repudiate it.

Mr. BACON. Of course not. That would be something that could not possibly be recognized.

Mr. President, in reference to the inquiry of my friend from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], I will say that I am not introducing this proposed amendment of the rules for the purpose of reflecting on anything that has been done. I am simply mentioning the last occasion when there was illustration of the need of such a rule. There was, as suggested by the Senator from Oregon, ample opportunity for debate on the bill to which I refer, but the trouble was that it was debate at a time when there were no Senators here, and when it was, for reasons which we all recognize, doubtful even whether there was a quorum of Senators in the city.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the very question I wish to suggest. I do not think the members of the Senate who stay at their post of duty all the time ought to be penalized by absenteeism.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And there was opportunity for them to be here when the unanimous-consent agreement was made, at the time the bill was discussed, and at the time the bill was finally passed.

Mr. BACON. Yes. The Senator and myself are generally here, so we agree on those subjects. Inasmuch as the Senator speaks of the opportunity for debate, I will call his attention to the fact that while there was opportunity for debate generally—the bill rested here for a week—there was one time when there was no opportunity for debate; and that illustrates, to my mind, the impolicy, to use the mildest word, of agreeing to a fixed hour for a vote. It is all right to agree to vote on a fixed day, a calendar day or a legislative day, as you please. That gives opportunity for every Senator to be heard on any question; but when you fix a certain hour it is within the power of a Senator to get the floor, to hold the floor up to the last minute, and give nobody else a chance to speak. That occurred here the other day.

There was a most important amendment offered to that bill, an amendment which, in effect, abrogated 20 or 25 treaties which the United States had made with other Governments, and yet the floor was taken by a Senator and held by him for an hour or so up to the hour fixed for taking the vote, without the opportunity for any other Senator to say a word on that most important amendment. I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I never intend to again consent to a fixed hour for that purpose. I will agree to a day for voting, but not to the hour for voting.

Mr. President, I did not intend to go into this, but as the Senator from Oregon has asked me whether we all had an opportunity for debate, I will say that if I had had the opportunity to debate on that occasion as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations and had sat in my place and said nothing when it was proposed to abrogate all those treaties, I would have been criminally negligent; but I did not have the opportunity to say anything, and even when I appealed to the Senator who had the floor for an opportunity to speak I was denied the privilege of a minute.

What was it we did? I do not want to reopen that debate, but it is due to the occasion to say this: There was an amendment providing that certain articles in certain treaties should be abrogated—not that the treaties should be abrogated, but that certain articles in certain treaties should be abrogated—and that notice should be given of the abrogation of those articles, as provided in the treaties. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States passing a bill of that kind put us in a very remarkable position before the world. There is no treaty in which there is any provision for notice for the abrogation of some part of that treaty; and yet we have solemnly said in the bill which we have passed through the Senate that there is such a provision in all these many treaties, when in fact there is none. The only provisions in treaties about abrogation are provisions for the abrogation of the treaties themselves upon notice, not the abrogation of particular parts of treaties. You can not give notice of the abrogation of a part of a treaty. Whenever you abrogate a part of a treaty you abrogate the entire treaty. You can not make a contract with a man and then say to him, "I am going to cut out part of that contract and let the balance of it stand"; and you can not make a treaty with a nation and say, "I am going to cut out article 8 and let the balance of it stand." Such a thing is an impossibility, and yet I want to ask, Are we not put in the attitude before the world of having taken the position that we can abrogate a part of a treaty and leave the balance of it standing?

If there had been an opportunity to make that statement to the Senate, I have no idea that the Senate would have taken the action it did take; the Senate would not intentionally have voted to abrogate at one fell swoop and without notice treaties with all the leading nations of the world; but there was no opportunity. I have no idea that half the Senators in the Chamber had read the bill at all. They were impressed by the fact, as we all were, that the main object of the bill was a most laudable and commendatory one, which was to make travel by sea safer and to ameliorate, if it could be done, the condition of sailors—things with which we all sympathize and on account of which Senators would vote for the bill; but how many Senators, if the provision in that bill had been in plain words that "we hereby abrogate all the treaties," naming them—some 20 or 25 which we have with different nations—how many Senators would have voted for it? And yet that would be the effect of it if such a bill as that could ever become a law. Of course it can not become a law in that condition, because, while the House of Representatives generally has less opportunity for the consideration of particular measures, by reason of their rules which limit debate, than we have here, they will have greater opportunity in regard to this feature of that bill than we had under the circumstances. We have been put in that position before the world.

Mr. President, there could be nothing more important than these treaties—treaties that we have with nations of all the world—not only with European nations but with South American nations. I have looked through these treaties. We have treaties which this bill affects with almost every nation in the world—every nation of any importance at least—and they are treaties in which we as well as the nations with whom we treat get benefits.

These treaties affect the rights of our merchants in foreign countries; these treaties affect the rights of our shipowners; they affect the rights of our citizens, and affect our trade in all particulars. Who would imagine that the Senate would say at one dash that we would abolish and repudiate and abrogate all these treaties without a word to any of the nations involved? And yet if this bill should become a law in its present form such would be its effect. You might as well say that you can change a promissory note and still make it an obligation binding upon the maker of it as to say that you can cut out one article of a treaty. With all due respect and absolute deference to those who may think otherwise or who may have voted for the bill without proper information in regard to this matter or having their attention called to it, such a proposition is absolutely absurd.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator from Georgia again?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I may say in that connection that the Senator presumes a little bit on the ignorance of the Senate with reference to the clause in the seamen's bill having reference to treaties. It was discussed, and it was concluded that even if a treaty could not be repealed in part, the clause would at least have the effect of causing the powers to enter into other treaties.

The fact is that some members of the committee thought, and I think some Members of the Senate think, that through carelessness somewhere along the line in the negotiation of these treaties this Government has so tied itself up that it is unable to legislate upon anything that affects the people of this country. In the enactment of a tariff bill we were confronted with treaties that had been entered into by the United States, and it was held that we could not legislate upon this or upon that subject. It has even gone to the extent of saying that we can not legislate with reference to our internal waterways, because, forsooth, we have some treaty with some power. Now, when we undertake to protect life at sea, the contention is made that we have no right to legislate as we have done because we are violating some treaty.

I desire to say that I do not believe in the abrogation of treaties generally without notice to the other party and without a hearing had on the subject; but I do think we ought to let the powers of the earth know that on this important subject we propose to legislate. If they do not want a treaty repealed pro tanto, let them enter into negotiations with us to renew some treaty that will enable us to protect our seamen and the lives of our people who travel on the high seas.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not differ with the honorable Senator in the purpose he has in view, nor in the suggestion that the matter should be properly arranged for the accomplishment of the great purpose it has in view. I am speaking of the method that we adopted to do it; that is all.

I am as much in favor as the Senator is of making all proper provisions for insuring safety of life at sea. I am as much in favor as the Senator is of doing all that is necessary to ameliorate the condition of sailors, to better their condition, and to protect them against wrong. I have no doubt there is great wrong perpetrated upon sailors.

What I am saying is that when we have entered into solemn treaties with other nations, the way for us to deal with them is to call their attention to the things to which we object and ask them if they will agree with us upon the changes we desire. Then, if they refuse, we are at perfect liberty, without any impropriety, without any lack of proper deference and courtesy, to pass such laws as we please abrogating the treaties. What I am speaking about is, without a word to them, without any invitation for a conference, without any request that they confer with us about the matter and agree with us, that we should say that we will abrogate practically every treaty we have on the subject, and direct the President of the United States to notify the nations concerned, not simply that we want to abrogate those treaties, but that we have done it. As a matter of fact, we have not done it yet, because the bill has not passed the House and it has not received the signature of the President.

I did not rise, however, for the purpose of discussing that bill at all. That has been done, and the bill has gone from this Chamber. My only reason for referring to it is to excuse myself for not having brought to the attention of the Senate the effect of our action. I did endeavor to do so in a general way, even before the bill was placed upon its passage, but that was before the amendment was offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. After the amendment was offered by him which struck out every article relating to this matter, and thereby practically struck out every treaty which contained it, the floor was gotten and held by one Senator until the hour fixed for voting on the bill and nobody else was allowed to speak in regard to the matter.

I say that hereafter, on important matters, where we fix dates by unanimous consent, we ought not to fix the hour, or if we do there ought to be some limitation as to how much of the last hour shall be occupied by one person. It ought not to be left so that important matters can be passed upon by the Senate without opportunity on the part of anyone to point out and give the reasons for or against any proposed legislation.

This is not the time to discuss that matter, however, and I did not expect to be on the floor five minutes. I simply desired to call the attention of the Senate to the important objects sought to be accomplished by the proposed amendment, and to make a short statement before moving its reference to the Committee on Rules, where it is to be considered. If I have thus trespassed upon the Senate, it has been due to the fact that Senators have been interested in the matter, and have made suggestions which required that there should be some comment.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me a moment, I wish to say further that I have no pride of opinion whatever in this matter. I shall be more than glad to acquiesce in any changes which may be suggested in the proposed amendment which will accomplish the end we all have in view.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Georgia that I am in full accord with the proposed amendment to the rules submitted by him as far as it goes, but I believe it ought to go one step further. I should like to suggest to the Senator an amendment, as follows:

After the word "thereto" insert "until a notice of one day has been given, and until," so that, if amended, it would read in this way:

No request by a Senator for unanimous consent for the taking of a final vote on a specified date upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution shall be submitted to the Senate for agreement thereto until a notice of one day has been given, and until, upon a roll call ordered for the purpose by the presiding officer—

And so forth.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the suggestion made by the honorable Senator from Utah did occur to me, and it was my original purpose to phrase the amendment as he has stated it, but I thought possibly that would be binding the Senate too severely. It frequently happens that after debate the developments are such that the Senate is in a condition to agree upon a date. If there is a quorum present, there is no danger in having the matter submitted for unanimous consent. If the Senate is not then ready to vote or to determine the question, it can very easily postpone its consideration until the next day.

I think it would be rather too rigid to say that unanimous consent should not be granted until after a day's notice. I have frequently seen the time when a unanimous-consent agreement has relieved embarrassment in the Senate and has untangled considerable complications.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course if we had the provision for a day's notice in the amendment, it would then be a unanimous-consent agreement in very deed.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Senators may be absent upon the particular day when an agreement is proposed, and this would give notice to them that on the morrow the question would be presented to the Senate and a unanimous-consent agreement asked for.

Mr. BACON. The matter will go to the Committee on Rules; and the suggestion of the Senator, being now in the record, will doubtless be brought to their attention. I have no doubt that even after the report of the Committee on Rules the Senate will very carefully consider the question of the adoption of this new rule.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. BACON. For myself, after having considered the matter, I thought it better to leave out those words, because I thought many occasions would arise when, if a quorum were present, it would be desirable to come to some agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday, November 3, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, November 3, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, October 30, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Touch our hearts, O God our Father, with Thy spirit, and bring us into closer relationship with Thee, that with clear vision, a sensitive conscience, and a firm desire we may do patiently, faithfully, and efficiently the tasks Thou hast laid upon us. It is writ: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings, as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." So may we reap the fruits of righteousness, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WEDDING GIFT TO PRESIDENT'S DAUGHTER.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to absolve myself from any participation in the movement that has been inaugurated in the House on the part of Members for the purchase and presentation of a costly gift to the President's daughter, as I do not believe this is a fitting or proper manner for Members of this House to show either their respect for the President or for the high office which he holds, or to express their good wishes to Miss Wilson and the President's family.

Mr. Speaker, I regard this practice of people making gifts to high officials and to members of their families as a lingering shadow coming from ancient days, from the days of feudalism, when fealty, homage, and special acts of deference were a necessary qualification, not only of citizenship, but of the right to enjoy property, lands, and tenements, and I regard this practice as engaged in by many people to-day as private citizens and not in official life as a complacent servility prompted more by a morbid desire for recognition by those in power than to show respect for public officials or our civil institutions. In any event, it is a false conception of office, a confusion of personal considerations with public service. And, further, this movement is in bad taste, an indiscretion, an unwarranted assumption, an intrusion for the Members of this House to tender any gift which they may see fit to purchase and present. Excepting a few Members who are here, who may be the close friends of the family, or who may stand in some relationship to them, the great body of the membership here are mere strangers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, the great body of the membership here individually and personally are strangers from whom it is always an act of bad taste to intrude a present without solicitation or some warrant. We know the occupants of the White House only officially, and they know the most of us only in our representative capacity. We are here in Washington in only a representative capacity. If this act is proper at all, it is proper only as an official act and in a representative capacity.

While I refuse to participate in this movement to present a gift I believe there is a way whereby this House can properly, fittingly, and appropriately recognize this occasion, and I shall send to the Clerk's desk to have read a resolution for that purpose. But before doing so I wish to explain that I have inclosed my check for $5 to this committee, with instructions that the $5 is not to go toward the purchase of a gift, which I feel assured will be against President Wilson's wishes, but is to go to the children whom we see every Christmas standing in the cold, looking in at the show windows, longing for the simplest present, but which their parents have not the money to provide for them; and in place of such gift as these gentlemen would present at the White House I wish at the proper time to offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have read at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to have read a resolution which he sends to the desk. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for what purpose is it to be read?

Mr. GRAY. I would read it in my own time, but I am not a good reader. I have a defect in my speech.

Mr. MANN. Is it simply read for information?

Mr. GRAY. Sure.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. GRAY. I do not know of any other way of informing the gentleman than to have it read. It is only four or five lines.

Mr. POU. I object.

Mr. GRAY. Then I ask that it be read in my own time, if that is proper.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to have the resolution read in his own time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the marriage of the President's daughter, Miss Jessie Wilson, has been announced to be celebrated in the people's mansion, the White House, at an early date: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Members of the House of Representatives extend to Miss Wilson on approaching this great step in life's highway their heartiest congratulations and well wishes as a symbol of the solicitude of this great Nation for the happiness and welfare of all our people.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like one minute more; if not, I will ask to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a more proper and appropriate way for us to show our respect to the President of the United States and for the great office which he holds. He is charged as President and Chief Executive with the administration of the laws of this Nation, and our cooperation in the administration of those laws, equally and impartially, without fear or favor, against all would be a more fitting and proper showing of our respect and well-wishes. More than that, as the leader of a great party he is charged, along with this House and with the Senate, with the inauguration of great legislative reforms, and our cooperation with him in carrying out those reforms in good faith with our platform pledges would be more proper, I hold, and show more deference and respect to the White House than we could ever hope to do by the presentation of a gift to his family, coming from us in the mere attitude of strangers, if we are not to act officially.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object. I have no objection to the gentleman talking, but I would like to hear what is said.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, did I understand Mr. MANN to object?

The SPEAKER. He did. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to address the House for a minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, Mr. MANN has objected to my revising my remarks. I have no criticism for Mr. MANN in any manner whatever. I believe he does these things in full accordance with the principles for which he stands. I want to give Mr. MANN the full credit and recognition for whatever there is in this movement to purchase a gift and present it to the White House. He is the leader of this movement. Others here are his followers, and as leader and spokesman I would like to hear something from him in justification and in defense of this policy, not from a Republican standpoint but from the standpoint of Jacksonian economy and Jeffersonian simplicity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes—

Mr. MANN. For one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, after hearing my distinguished friend from Indiana, I think it will be hopeless to put into his soul the expression which finds itself in the heart of every other Member of this House. [Applause.] The other Members do not need to be told why. [Applause.]

TRANSFER OF SOUTHEASTERN ALASKA TO CANADA.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent to consider the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution requesting the President to negotiate with the British and Canadian Governments regarding the transfer of southeastern Alaska to Canada by sale or exchange or both.

Whereas the narrow coast strip of southeastern Alaska keeps one-third of western Canada from the free use of the most direct route to the Pacific; and

Whereas this unnatural boundary, created in response to conditions which have long ceased to exist, hampers the development of the adjoining lands and gives rise to an irritation which must become more and more acute as population and commerce increase; and

Whereas the celebration of the one hundred years' peace between Great Britain and America should not be confined to mere ceremonies but should include a deed proving the sincerity and earnestness of the participants; and

Whereas nothing could accomplish that object more happily than the removal of a standing source of irritation between the United States and Canada; and

Whereas that act would be the most eloquent example of the policy of mutual concessions necessary to establish universal peace: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to negotiate with the British and Canadian Governments regarding the transfer of southeastern Alaska to Canada by sale or exchange or both.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] objects.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is Senate joint resolution 5, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. J. Res. 5. Joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission to consider the need and report a plan for national aid to vocational education.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the matter coming up, but is not that the unfinished business on the Wednesday Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask if that is on the Wednesday Calendar?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it was brought up on Wednesday, went over to the next Wednesday, and was then taken up again.

The SPEAKER. The fact which the Chair desired to ascertain is whether the joint resolution was considered on Calendar Wednesday. If so, it goes over until the next Wednesday.

Mr. POWERS. I think it was, Mr. Speaker. My recollection is that it was on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The Record will show. That is unimpeachable.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty-four gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative—a sufficient number—and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 55, nays 28, answered "present" 10, not voting 335, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MANN, and he answered "Present."

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," but I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. PHELAN. I wish to recall my vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. SMITH of Minnesota, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, October 31, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII,

Mr. SHARP introduced a resolution (H. Res. 296) directing the Secretary of War to inform the House of Representatives as to recommendations providing for reforms in the method of examinations for admission to the West Point Military Academy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRODBECK: A bill (H. R. 9093) granting a pension to Annie E. Slaughenaupt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9094) granting a pension to Susan Zeck; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9095) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Wagner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DERSHEM: A bill (H. R. 9096) granting a pension to Ellie Jacobs; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9097) granting a pension to Jennie A. Work; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: A bill (H. R. 9098) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin S. Barnard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN: A bill (H. R. 9099) granting an increase of pension to David Spearin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: A bill (H. R. 9100) granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9101) to reimburse Isaiah Stephens, postmaster at McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., for money and postage stamps stolen; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. SWITZER: A bill (H. R. 9102) granting an increase of pension to Richard Douglas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9103) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel T. Hoover; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. AIKEN: Petition of sundry citizens of Easley, S. C., favoring passage of House bill 5308, relative to mail-order houses; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Evidence to accompany House bill 7628, for the special relief of Christian Frank; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARY: Petition of American National Retail Jewelers' Association of Neenah, Wis., relative to discrimination in mail rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. DYER: Petition of American National Retail Jewelers' Association of Neenah, Wis., relative to discrimination in mail rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Memorial of the State Harbor and Land Commissioners of Massachusetts, favoring further improvements of Pollock Rip Shoals in Nantucket Sound, Mass.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania: Evidence in support of House bill 5420, for the relief of John S. Miller; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania: Petition of the American National Retail Jewelers' Association of Neenah, Wis., relative to discrimination in mail rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, memorial of the Easton Board of Trade, relative to improvements of the Delaware River Valley from Trenton to Easton-Philipsburg; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LOBECK: Petition of the American National Retail Jewelers' Association of Neenah, Wis., relative to discrimination in mail rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, memorial of the board of directors of the Omaha Grain Exchange, relative to flood protection for the lands of the lower Mississippi, etc.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SHARP: Petition of Cincinnati (Ohio) Bar Association, favoring the passage of legislation to provide for an additional space in the present Government building in Cincinnati for the maintenance of two separate district court rooms, etc.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, October 31, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Take us, O God our Father, into Thy nearer presence and teach us of Thy ways that we may walk therein intelligently, conscientiously, fearlessly, for if we are with Thee, who shall make us afraid and who shall deprive us of that peace and joy which comes through faith and confidence in Thy ruling and overruling providence vouchsafed unto us through the precepts and sublime example of the Christ? Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

GOVERNMENT CLERKS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, as the country knows, the national administration has changed, and as a result there are thousands upon thousands of applications for appointment to Federal office. A few days ago, as is well known, there was an amendment to an appropriation bill—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman desire to occupy any time?

Mr. SIMS. Only two or three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. As I was saying, a few days ago there was an amendment to an appropriation bill which seems to take certain appointments in the revenue service from the operation of the civil-service law. Since that time applications for these appointments have been flooding us. I suppose every Member of the House and Senate has received—

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not on this side.

Mr. SIMS. Do they not write to the gentleman from Illinois for recommendations?

Mr. MANN. No; they know too much.

Mr. SIMS. I was informed from a reliable source that one Southern State had sent in applications for more than 3,000 of these places. I understand that there will not be exceeding 350 such places in the whole United States.

Mr. R. M. Gates, a newspaper correspondent of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, of Memphis, Tenn., and other papers, who is a citizen of Jackson, Tenn., in my district, has written an article with reference to the condition of Government clerks in Washington, which is so ably and well written that I ask unanimous consent to make it a part of my remarks and to extend them in the Record for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman, if I may, whether the President or the appointing powers are following the lead of Congress in endeavoring to destroy the merit system in the collector's office, and how many of these applications have been granted for political appointments under the spoils system as provided by the House?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I can not answer that question, yes or no, without admitting the direct assumption that the House intended to return to the spoils system, which I do not admit.

Mr. MANN. I did not know that anybody controverted that.

Mr. SIMS. I understand that it was held under Republican Attorneys General that these positions were not under the civil-service law.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I do not want to say that the gentleman is mistaken in his understanding—

Mr. SIMS. That is what I understand.

Mr. MANN. The regulations provided for an appointment under the civil-service law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman this: Did not the President, in a note appended to the bill when he signed it, give to the country the assurance that his well-known wishes regarding the civil service would be respected by the appointing powers, and that there need not be any fear that the civil-service law would be violated in principle?

Mr. SIMS. I understand that to be the effect of the President's note.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article written by Mr. R. M. Gates, a newspaper correspondent of the Memphis Commercial Appeal, is as follows:

SEEKING A GOVERNMENT JOB IN WASHINGTON.

[By R. M. Gates.]

Much of the official correspondence of Senators and Congressmen relates to the applications of men and women for Government jobs in Washington.

This is particularly the case at this time because of the recent change of administration. Fifty succeed where 500 get nothing more for their seeking than letters politely informing them of the futility of their quest. Nine Congressmen out of ten will tell you that the 500 men and women that fail "to land" Government positions in Washington are more to be congratulated than their 50 successful unidentified competitors.

To have and to hold a Federal position in Washington is, in most instances, to mortgage one's better prospects and potentialities in the boundless world of independent endeavor for the temporary possession of a place easy to fill and the rewards of which allure because they are never disappointing in their regularity.

The too popular impression, especially among younger men and women, that the great desideratum is to attach one's self to the Government pay roll in Washington may be described as a national allurements to certain disappointment and possible disaster. That the 29 departments of the Government in Washington are as huge vaults wherein repose the blighted hopes and defeated ambitions of thousands of men and women who once saw in imagination opportunity for high achievement in the beautiful capital of the Nation is not overshadowing the picture.

Working for Uncle Sam, which at first is a vocation, oftentimes becomes a disease, and an incurable one. The saddest plaint one ever hears in Washington—sadder than the wail of the rejected office seeker—is that of the helpless and hopeless Government clerk lamenting his unhappy lot. He realizes that he is "in bad," and yearns for one more chance to right himself. He is in the net and can not escape. He would like to extricate himself, but that is impossible. Perhaps his head has whitened and his hands have palsied in the service, and his years of steady employment are unrepresented by a dollar saved. His fate is sealed. Gloomily he trods his weary way. Perhaps he is a man yet capable of throwing off his Government harness and hitching himself to something better outside the cramping, grinding world of clerical slavery under official tyranny, but he has a family and can not afford to take a chance. He has certain fixed expenses, and his income must be uninterrupted. He has not saved a penny, because his salary, which looked quite sufficient when he was a single man, now is woefully inadequate under the added strain of the obligations of a family. He could fill satisfactorily most any position requiring clerical ability and experience, but he can not let go his Government job to find something even equally as remunerative. He is afraid to take the chance. Years ago he might have quit the service to his advantage, but he held on, hoping that some day he would be advanced to the head of a division or to a chief clerkship, but he has dreamed dreams that never came true. There never was a chance for him to advance higher than $1,200 a year. There were hundreds of others struggling along with him and against him, so he has done well to keep his head above the water. Besides, he is not in sympathy with the party in power, and if he was he has been trudging an obscure path so long that he is lost to helping congressional influence. He has been away from his State, his district, his home so long that he has lost his identity, and his Congressman feels only a reminiscent interest in him. So into the sear and yellow leaf of routine service he is doomed to pass, a grouchy, disappointed, and oftentimes a remorseful old man, who might have plowed a wider and deeper furrow if he had stayed off the Government reservation.

Perhaps he is a poor young man and unmarried. He became a Government clerk primarily because he was ambitious to acquire a profession and could devote his time out of office to attending lectures at one of the colleges or universities. Perhaps he has fitted himself in the law and presumably is ready to give up his position with the Government. It pays $1,200 a year; his money comes with delightful regularity and the work is light. He likes the job, and he has not given up his Government position because he now is a graduate in law. He keeps on and on, sinking deeper the while into the quagmire of clerical routine, losing at the same time confidence in himself, faith in the honors and rewards of his newly acquired profession, until he becomes, like Prometheus, chained to the rock.

The departments at Washington teem with professional men who are afraid to cut loose from a sure thing with the Government, be it ever so humble, to try earning a livelihood at the thing for which they are better adapted or for which they have qualified after years of preparation; but they have shrunk into moral and intellectual cowardice. Conscious of strength for higher altitudes, they strain and fret in the denser atmosphere of the monotonous plains of Government life in Washington. It is pathetic to behold them—a struggling, heartless, hopeless mass.

Of those Government clerks in Washington who have not "gone to seed" in the service and whose spirit of ambition has not been wooed into somnolence through habitual indolence, 40 per cent feel that they might have done better, that their years of "easy money" getting might have been employed in the production of fruits much more palatable and wholesome. The average clerk of this class—not the chair dragger—is a dissatisfied, disappointed individual. He either feels that his work is not appreciated by his immediate superiors in the division or that his Senator or Congressman has been remiss in his political obligations. He feels that he is overworked and underpaid, the victim of a conspiracy of circumstances, and if he had a chance to "jump the game" he would do it to-morrow.

Then there is the reconciled class of Government clerks, made up of those who are content to drift with the current of clerical routine. They are pursuing the lines of least resistance. The Government gait is easy-going—no hurrying, no rushing, very humane hours, 30 days' vacation, 30 days' sick leave, two pay days in each month. "Oh, what's the use of kicking? Pretty soft, this, after all. Guess I will stick it out." So, in course of time, the reconciled clerk is lost in the great aggregate.

Certainly there are hundreds in the Government service in Washington that make good, just as there are hundreds who could not earn as much compensation for their labor in any other field. But there is a lamentable disproportion between those who raise themselves above the level of mediocrity and those who never detach themselves from the undistinguished mass. Where one clerk climbs to the loftiest peaks in the mountainous range of successful endeavor, 50 never see over the heads of those that make up the army on the plains below.

So it is that for these and other reasons so many Senators and Congressmen are disposed to discourage young men and women who appeal to them for official influence to connect them with the Government service in Washington. Many a Senator and Congressman has been criticized for not exerting his influence to get a comfortable berth in Washington for some solicitous constituent, when, as a matter of fact, the failure of the Senator or Congressman to do so was as a blessing in the proverbial disguise. Hundreds of gifted and capable young men have whittled away their time in the pursuit of profitless Government jobs in Washington who might have impressed themselves upon world affairs in a field of high endeavor, where the environment is conducive to the development of initiative, independence, and individuality.

The percentage of young men who have used a position in the departments at Washington as a stepping stone to higher things is pitifully small. Of course, some have "graduated" from the departments to places out in the world, where their departmental experience was converted into a positive help, but the number who have so succeeded forms a sad and disheartening contrast with the overwhelmingly larger number that have entered the departments in Washington only to remain in obscurity.

WASHINGTON, October 18, 1913.

INTERNATIONAL DISARMAMENT.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared a resolution which I desire to read in my time, and I would like very much if every Member present would give close attention to the reading of it:

House resolution 298.

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House of Representatives the declaration of the Lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain, the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, that the Government of the United Kingdom is willing and ready to cooperate with other Governments to secure for one year a suspension of naval construction programs offers the means of immediately lessening the enormous burdens of the people and avoiding the waste of investment in war material.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be furnished the President, with the request that, so far as he can do so, having due regard for the interests of the United States, he use his influence to consummate the agreement suggested by the Right Hon. Winston Churchill.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up any time of the House in presenting my views or arguing the purpose of this resolution. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which he has incorporated in his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am in sympathy with the resolution, but the expression of the opinion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] and myself, and a few others, would not have great weight with the Members of the House when it comes to making up the naval appropriation bill. The only way to really obtain the sentiment of the House on a matter of this sort is to take it when there is a sufficient number of Members present as would have weight with the House, and while I shall not object to the present consideration of the resolution, I shall insist upon a roll call when it is considered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am in accord with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in this, that we should have a larger attendance here, so that when a vote on the resolution is had it will carry greater weight.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds further will he yield to an interruption?

Mr. HENSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, as I catch the reading of the resolution, it only purports to express the sympathy of this House with a suggestion that came from the chief naval officer in the civil branch of the Government of the United Kingdom. It is a suggestion with which I have reason to believe the President and the Secretary of State are both in thorough accord. It is perfectly in harmony with the views of most of the thoughtful, peace-loving people throughout the world, and I believe that if such a resolution is to be adopted, and I think it should be, the sooner it is done the better, because it happens that at this particular time an effort is being made to have such an agreement entered into between the great military powers of Europe. It would be timely to pass the resolution now, even if we had not a quorum, for the moral influence that its passage would have.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Texas that it is apparent to everyone that we have not a quorum here this morning. If the point of no quorum is raised, it would be entirely useless to endeavor to pass the resolution; and, in addition to that, I am desirous of having as many Members of Congress vote on the resolution as possible. I want it to carry as much weight as it can.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman believe that, no matter what a man's political affiliations may be, every Member present, at least, would be in hearty sympathy with an international program which would save vast sums of money and not disturb the relative strength of nations?

Mr. HENSLEY. As I see it, there should be no question on that point.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And is not that an indication of what the House would do if all of the Members were present?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman think of withdrawing this resolution?

Mr. HENSLEY. I shall withdraw my request for its immediate consideration if there is to be a point of no quorum raised.

Mr. SIMS. Well, but the House has now given consent to consider it; and suppose there is a vote and no quorum, does it not remain the unfinished business until you get a quorum?

Mr. HENSLEY. That is very true.

Mr. SIMS. And if the gentleman withdraws it the gentleman might not get unanimous consent to present it the next time, so I think the gentleman ought not to consent to withdraw it. If he asks consent, I will have to object.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield me five minutes?

Mr. HENSLEY. If I have any time to yield, I will do so with pleasure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has an hour and yields five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HENSLEY. I yield five minutes with pleasure to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have long been of the opinion that the countries of the world labor under too great a burden for military purposes, and especially for naval armament, and I welcome the suggestion made by the British statesmen that there should cease to be a rivalry in the increase of the navies in the different nations of the world. Of course the President has the power, through the State Department, to carry on negotiations, at least informally, without action by the House; and yet, this being the body which has the authority to originate appropriation bills, it is fitting that the House of Representatives should express its opinion in regard to the great increase in the navy in the different nations of the world, and especially in regard to the great increases in the Navy of this country. We are told that the administration proposes to ask for three or four battleships next winter. A gentleman on that side of the House introduced a resolution the other day directing the Committee on Naval Affairs to immediately report a bill providing for four battleships, though I think he has never voted against an adjournment when the proposition was presented as to whether the House should proceed or continue with business or whether it should quit and adjourn; but the expression of opinion by one Member of the House is not of great value. The expression of opinion of 25 per cent of the membership of the House is not of great value. If we wish to rise to the dignity of the occasion, the House of Representatives, with its great membership, ought to express by a practically unanimous vote, if such can be secured, its position; and I do not wish to engage in a travesty on statesmanship by proposing to have a small number of the Members of the House attempt to express the opinion of the House. We can not do greater service to the country and the world than to gather here the Members not here for the purpose of voting upon this resolution in the hope that we may save this country $100,000,000 a year and the world vast billions of dollars a year [applause] and use the money for good or better purposes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HENSLEY. Is it not the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois that 95 per cent of the membership of this House would vote in favor of the passage of this resolution?

Mr. MANN. Well, I have nothing to base such an opinion upon. On the contrary, I have seen bitter fights in the House over increasing the Navy, and never yet, I think, since I have been in the House has the House refused to make a substantial increase in the number of naval vessels.

Mr. HENSLEY. But the contention made by those insisting upon increases as a rule has been because other nations of the world were increasing their naval establishment, increasing the armament, and so on.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not know; I have heard it consistently denied on the floor of this House by gentlemen who championed new battleships that we were engaged in rivalry with either Great Britain or Germany or Japan. They have always denied that, and they insisted we needed the Navy regardless of the number of ships the other countries owned. I do not know, but if we wish to give a real expression of opinion and do real good, let us send out to the gentlemen who are now home mending their fences, looking after their political outlook instead of being here and attending to the business of the country, and then see if we can not help the movement and stop the gross and extravagant expenditure of money for means of killing each other in the world.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri rose.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] permit a question? Oh, I did not see the gentleman from Missouri. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman want to ask a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; but I will defer to the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall want about 10 minutes, or 5.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I merely want to ask my friend from Illinois, whose heart, I know, is right in this matter, if he does not believe, certainly with himself present and vigilant and active as always, and with even so small a numerical attendance as we have here, that any response made by this House would be typical of what would reasonably be expected if all the Members were here?

Mr. MANN. Now, let us see. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] has always been opposed to these naval increases. I have been opposed to these naval increases. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] has been opposed to these naval increases, and as I look about me I think perhaps a majority of this House here have been opposed to them, and yet we never have had our way.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Oh, yes; we have.

Mr. MANN. No, sir. They have always received their increases, or a compromise, which meant an increase. I do not think the Members present here can speak for the House of Representatives, except by the method of bringing the others here. That power we have, and we ought to exercise it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I did not mean to suggest that they could speak, except for those present, but I asked the gentleman—and he did not answer the question—whether he did not think an expression of opinion of those present would be typical of the response which would be made if all were present.

Mr. MANN. I have no method of ascertaining that, except by getting the expression. I hear every day what one man says about what another man thinks, and especially about politics and the result of elections. They do not agree. I do not know. Let us find out.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I take a great deal of interest in this proposition. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] about one thing. If a vote were taken on this resolution without a roll call, and it went out to the country that the House had unanimously or by an overwhelming majority agreed to it, it would have all the force that a vote would have when 435 Members are here, provided the newspapers did not exploit the fact that there are only a few dozen Members here.

I take a great deal of interest in this. Now, the Lord of the Admiralty in England may have more influence about such affairs than the Speaker of the House of Representatives. I do not know about that. Of course that is his particular division of statecraft. But on the 5th day of October, Sunday, I was invited to make a speech at Louisville, Ky., on the hundredth anniversary of the American victory under Gen. Harrison at the River Thames—a battle which was fought and won principally by the Kentuckians—and, of course, speaking to Kentuckians, I exploited their valor, which needs no exploitation. But I began by making this remark, that it was a curious thing to have a peace meeting—that was what it was; every kind of a preacher imaginable was there, either participating by speaking or praying—it was a strange performance to have a peace meeting on Sunday celebrating a great victory; but that the War of 1812 was justifiable, and so forth.

Well, two weeks before Mr. Churchill made this declaration of his I declared in favor of a scheme of international disarmament in my Louisville speech, and said that that was the only way to get at it; that no one nation was going to undertake it for fear the others would give them a thrashing before they got through with it; but that this scheme of great armaments was the most idiotic performance known among men. [Applause.] And we, of all men, were the greatest idiots to be engaged in it, because on account of our peculiar and favorable geographical situation and our immense wealth and tremendous population no nation on the face of the earth was going to jump on us; or, if it did, it would jump off very suddenly. [Applause.]

I am glad that Mr. Churchill made this proposition. I also stated in that speech that if any three great powers would join in a proposition for international disarmament by percentages the rest of them would have to come in. They could not stay out. Then I suggested certain combinations. Of course you can make a good many combinations in groups of three. I took the United States, Great Britain, and Germany. There is not a man on earth who has little enough sense to believe that if three great nations say "We are going to stop this business," that it would not come about.

I suggested other combinations: The United States, Great Britain, and France; or the United States, Great Britain, and Russia; or the United States, Germany, and Italy; or France, Germany, and Russia; or Great Britain, France, and Russia. I have forgotten how many combinations of that kind you can make, but there are a lot of them. Then I added that the United States ought to lead in this matter of disarmament, and I believe it ought for the reason that I stated—of favorable geographical position, our great population, our great wealth, and our indomitable spirit.

Then I said: Suppose we get into a war with one of the great powers and it should capture Florida, or it should capture New York, or it should capture Maine, or it should capture California, that everybody knew they could not hold it; that we would fight them until the crack of doom but what we would get it back. [Applause.] They could not hold a foot of it. I suppose the world takes notice of the fact that we won in every war we ever engaged in.

I know there is a distinguished gentleman, a Member of this House, belonging to the Committee on Military Affairs, who seemed to think that I was trenching upon his preserves in some way, issued him a manifesto, and instead of talking about the Americans beating the British at the River Thames and

New Orleans and Tippecanoe, he talked of the other side and exploited how Americans ran away from other fields and how the Capital was burned.

When the full membership of the House gets here I would like to see the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] agreed to, and some time before long I intend to prepare a speech an hour or an hour and a half long and go over the whole situation throughout the world and deliver it in this House. It is the strangest thing that mortal man ever heard that when we had 3,000,000 people and 5,000,000 people and 10,000,000 people and 15,000,000 people, and so on clear up, we were not afraid of anybody on the face of the earth, and that nobody jumped on us. It is a historical fact that we forced every war we ever had; but now, when we have 100,000,000 people and $140,000,000,000 of wealth, a lot of people are going around over the country and trying to scare us by the assertion that somebody is going to jump on us. [Laughter and applause.]

They used Germany as the raw head and bloody bones until it became ridiculous in the eyes of the world. Germany was held up in this House as the great terror to Americans. After they had worn that absolutely threadbare, or "to a frazzle," as a distinguished American traveler would say [laughter], when it was proved that Germany was friendly to us, then they grabbed Japan and held it up in the same way. There is no proof that Japan is hostile to us. There is no sense in it, and this resolution ought to pass when it will give the greatest amount of force by its passage. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT FROM SATURDAY TO WEDNESDAY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on next Wednesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEPPER). The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet next Wednesday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman withhold that until I can make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will withhold the motion for the present.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the RECORD on the subject of economy in the manufacture of small-arms ammunition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL DISARMAMENT.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MANN. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order at present is a vote on this resolution.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have some more time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. HENSLEY. But he did not do it with my consent. [Laughter.] I ask the Chair whether that took me off the floor?

The SPEAKER. Several things have happened which indicated that the gentleman from Missouri had yielded the floor.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I had not yielded the floor. On the contrary, I was insisting on recognition all the while.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman is entitled to the floor for the balance of his hour, which began at 10 minutes after 12 o'clock.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to detain the House, even for five minutes, when it is so manifestly anxious to adjourn, but I shall avail myself of the courtesy of the gentleman from Missouri to say a few words in connection with this resolution, which reflects, in my judgment, the most important movement of the day. Everyone who is familiar with the military projects of the Governments of the world knows that many of the important countries are hastening to bankruptcy because of military extravagancies. They deny themselves the privilege of applying the money paid in by the people in the shape of taxes to the construction of useful public works in order that it may be invested in rifles the patterns of which change on an average once in 10 years and most of which become absolutely waste material, or in the construction of battleships, which do not cost six or seven millions of dollars, as innocent and unsuspecting Members of Congress are made to believe, because that appears in department statements as the price of a battleship, but which do cost much more than sixteen or eighteen millions of dollars, for hull and machinery do not make a battleship. There must be a battery on each battleship, consisting of guns that cost from $75,000 to $125,000 each, which at best can only fire 225 or 250 shots before they must be reconstructed or go to the junk heap, and they must also have armor which costs vast sums. It is to avoid such needless and wicked waste of the people's money as this that I am in favor of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY]. In the consideration of this and other matters I endeavor to wipe out from my mind all knowledge of the existence of an aisle running down through the center of this House. I believe that is true of the great majority of the Members of this House. We are Democrats or Republicans, or whatnot, on ordinary questions, but in the treatment of matters like this as a rule I believe the inclination of Members is to wipe out partisan lines. That is my attitude. I believe this resolution ought to be passed and passed without delay, because of the moral effect it will have, not merely in the United States but throughout the world. I thank the Speaker for the able support which he has given to the idea, which I believe is bound to prevail, and I can not get it out of my head, Mr. Speaker, that if this resolution were passed without a roll call being invoked the result would be accepted as the manifest will of the popular branch of the American Congress, and I believe that it would be an accurate index of what that will is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that at this time the House of Representatives could do a greater service to this country and to the world than for its Members to come back here and vote for this resolution overwhelmingly?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I do not blame the gentleman from Illinois for taking advantage of every technical opportunity that arises to put forward the claims of his party for the right to direct the affairs of the Government.

Mr. MANN. But that is not technical.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But I believe that he would be doing this country and the world a very great service now if he would permit this resolution to be voted on by the Members present, who would so nearly support it by unanimous consent that it would be accepted by the world as indicating the will of the House, and it is pertinent at this time, because the budgets are now being considered.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says that I would be doing a service to permit this resolution to be voted on at this time. I will say to the gentleman that I will do everything within my power to insist that the resolution be voted on at this time, and I shall vote against an adjournment of the House until the resolution does come up, and I dare say the gentleman will vote to adjourn the House before the resolution is voted upon.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the gentleman from Illinois recognizes the merit of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri in that when the opportunity comes he will support it. It will not be the first time that he and I have cooperated in a nonpartisan way for what we believe to be for the best interest of the country, and I am sure it will not be the last time, and I shall be glad to march with him or under his leadership in support of all such measures as this.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. The Speaker, taking the floor a few moments ago, made the statement, which was interesting to both sides of the House, that he intended to discuss this question at length at the first opportunity. There are some phases of this question that do not appear in the resolution at all, notably the limitation of the depth of harbors in this and other countries and the limitation of the draft of war vessels, which would effect a tremendous economy in our governmental expenditures. Another question is that of the neutralization of the Panama Canal. Such an international relation as the Speaker said he had in mind, as between three of the great nations, like Germany, England, and the United States, would probably save us tremendous maintenance cost in the matter of the Army and Navy at the Panama Canal. Now, would it not be well for us to wait a little while until we get the views of the Speaker and other men upon these and other points which have not been raised to-day?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say in reply to my friend from Pennsylvania it would be well to have the views of everybody on these points the gentleman suggests. All of them are good things to do, but I do not see that it has anything to do with a mere expression of opinion by the House of Representatives that it is desirable that there should be a reduction in the cost of the navies throughout the world. This resolution of Mr. HENSLEY's, which he showed to me and with which I am familiar, has nothing whatever to do with anything except a mere expression of opinion that these extraordinary appropriations should be avoided if possible.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have agreed to two speeches of five minutes each, and that will be all the time, I want to say to the membership, that has been allotted. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson].

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Speaker, it is useless for me to state to the House after the experience we had with the last naval appropriation bill that I am heartily in favor of this resolution. I have been subjected to a great deal of very harsh criticism on the part of the public press for the position which I have taken in reference to the naval program. We had one battleship last year, after a very hard and long-drawn-out fight on the floor. It was finally compromised by the House with one battleship, and then finally the Senate agreed to take one battleship. There were a few of us who made the fight, and for that reason that few were subject to some very severe criticism. Now the position taken by the Lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain illustrates the truthfulness of the statement which I made at that time, and that was that the British Empire was being burdened with an enormous naval program and that the people were beginning to complain. It also illustrates the truthfulness of another statement I made, and that is that Japan, which has been held up as a bugaboo and incentive to us for preparing for war on the sea, was taxing everything from the "rickshaw pusher"—the man who makes a living by taking the place of a horse—in order that she might pay her expenses of a military and naval character. So it is that throughout the world great burdens are being thrown upon the taxpayers of all the great nations, and each nation has been exploited against the other nation on the floor of this House, and so that when the United States builds two battleships England then, in order to keep up her naval program, builds four, Germany builds two, France builds two, and Japan two. Why all this rivalry? Just as the Speaker says, as long as each nation vies with the other it may be illustrated by two men who are rivals and likely to have some sort of trouble or some sort of difficulty. When one man puts a great big howitzer in his arsenal pocket, and his adversary knows he has it and carries it, then he has to arm himself with a great big arsenal to put in his pocket. So the nations have been doing this ridiculous thing in this age of civilization, when we are preaching peace on earth and good will toward men, when we ought to be endeavoring to make nations friendly with each other instead of enemies to each other.

In other words, in the olden times nations had no communication with each other; they had no trade relations with each other; they looked upon each other as men that meet on the desert. Every man there must be looked upon as an enemy. But to-day, in this age of commerce, in this age of peace, in this age of advancement, the great Government of the United States should take a positive and an advanced stand by the passage of a resolution of this kind, asserting to the world that we are willing to lead in the movement to relieve the people of this enormous war burden.

Let this money, if it is to be expended, be expended in building schoolhouses, be expended in establishing and maintaining educational institutions, be expended in building public highways, building the good roads over which the farmers can haul their produce, be expended in improving our rivers and harbors. By devoting all those millions in other nations to that purpose we get the benefit in America indirectly of the work in improving the harbors and highways of all the world. But when you shall have expended this vast amount for the Army and Navy and the Nation shall get into war, then it follows as the night follows the day that there must come another immense pension roll which must be cared for. So that from every viewpoint this resolution is timely, and I trust it may pass, and may pass to-day, if possible. And, if not, let us hold this House together until we can get a quorum together and pass the resolution. [Applause.] Because, if we wait until December comes, in December the naval appropriation bill will be submitted by the Navy Department, and they will be pushing that naval bill through; and if the membership of the House were here now, we might take the matter up, and within two or three months, with the present existing telegraphic communication throughout Europe, it is possible, with the Secretary of State entertaining the views that he does entertain, that we might be able to accomplish wonders. For that reason, in the consideration of a resolution of this kind, meaning as much as it does to the people of the United States, the Members of the House ought to be here to transact business and pass this resolution to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I am almost inclined to beg the pardon of the House for taking up the time, as it is said that there is a great anxiety to adjourn. For my own part, I have been here daily for the purpose of discharging every congressional duty that devolved upon me, and I am still willing to remain here until we have finished our work.

Mr. Speaker, the sentiment expressed in this resolution raises one of the most important questions of the age—important because it is world-wide and strikes a deadly blow at the bloody deeds of nations. I know of nothing that would be a greater step in the direction of universal peace than the disarmament of the high seas. I believe it was at the suggestion of the United States that the Great Lakes were completely disarmed. The peace which now prevails between America and Canada is more secure and lasting than it would be if every one of those five Great Lakes were armed by a multitude of threatening destroyers and mighty battleships. It is the confidence that the people of one nation have in the integrity of the people of other nations to do the right thing that brings about security. Menacing fleets arouse fear, hatred, and revenge, and the madness which is displayed by the great nations of the world in their wild and reckless race to outstrip each other in the construction of big navies threatens and disturbs that confidence which ought to exist in the bosom of every citizen of every clime. Disarmament of the high seas would be an evidence that the nations of the world have reached that advanced step in civilization wherein they are willing to do the right thing in settling international questions involving the rights of the citizens of different nations.

Mr. Speaker, I have always been an advocate of the disarmament of the high seas. In the first speech which I made upon this question on the floor of this House I expressed the conviction that no nation could bring a greater glory to itself and a greater benefit to the people of the world than by disarming the high seas of its fighting engines of blood and death and then extend an invitation to the nations of the world to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, battleships and destroyers are made for one purpose only, and that is to kill and destroy human lives and property. More money is spent for that useless purpose than perhaps is spent in any other one interest in any of the great nations of the world. To think that we are continually preaching peace, universal peace, and then devoting our energies to building machines and engines for the destruction of human life is to belie our proposition of universal peace.

For my own part, Mr. Speaker, I would that every nation in the world would join in the sentiment of this wise resolution, that the United States should take the lead, and that before Nature swells into beauty and activity next spring there would not be a battleship or an engine of death to be found on any of the high seas of the world.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest leader among men came into this life when the nations of the world were defending themselves with weapons of steel and engines of war. He went about unarmed and he wrought a work which has found its way into the hearts of the people of every country in the world. Mr. Speaker, the love that permeates the heart of nations for peace and good will among men in other nations is sufficient security to protect them against all outside enemies if properly schooled in the questions and ethics of international peace. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put I desire to conclude what is to be said on this proposition.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri having the floor for an hour, is the gentleman from Kentucky entitled to take him off the floor by a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri notified the House that he was going to yield for two speeches and then yield the floor.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, my statement, as I recall, was that I had only allotted that amount of time. I do not want more than a minute of time myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can have the rest of the time, which is 18 minutes.

Mr. MANN. We would like a little time on this side.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri want to continue?

Mr. HENSLEY. I want to make a short statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. Will there be an opportunity for gentlemen on this side to speak after the hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Missouri does not move the previous question, the debate can run on all day.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Missouri having had the floor for an hour as proponent of the resolution, if he did not move the previous question there would be no question that the point of no quorum could be raised?

The SPEAKER. After the gentleman from Missouri gets through any gentleman who is recognized by the Chair would be entitled to an hour, unless the Speaker should recognize the gentleman to move to adjourn.

Mr. MOORE. I think the resolution ought not to be passed to-day, so as the debate goes on I would like to have an opportunity to discuss it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am imbued with the idea that there is a great deal in this resolution. It has been, indeed, gratifying to me to see how the Members of this House, so few in number, have seized upon this as an opportunity to express their views upon this subject. I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that if the whole membership of the House were present here this morning this resolution would pass almost unanimously. [Applause.] But, Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to believe that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in his opening statement presented the true situation, and that very clearly. I am fully in accord with his views that this resolution when passed should carry as much weight as possible. I want it to be expressive not only of the views of a few Members of the House, but I want it to be expressive of the views of the whole Congress of the United States. I want it to carry with it the greatest weight possible. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am ready and willing, as we have only a few here to-day, to defer further action upon this resolution at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will withhold that motion and that the gentleman from Missouri will yield me two or three minutes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Well, I agreed not to yield again, but I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois three minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to withholding the motion for the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, with the understanding that I may renew the motion immediately at the close of his remarks.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there are others here who would like a few minutes on this resolution.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the resolution will come up again, and this will not end the discussion.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Very well.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is the season of the year when we indulge in peaceful prophecies, as far as naval armament is concerned. This is the season of the year when we can pass a resolution to dispense with a great navy, but along in March or April or May, or perhaps this time it will not be until June, when the naval appropriation bill is about ready to be presented to the House, we will have in sight war with some power in the world, and we will have a great many newspaper articles and editorials telling how necessary it is to protect the country from assaults without and how essential it is to have a navy as an insurance policy. You probably could not pass this resolution unanimously at that time. Now is the proper time to pass a resolution of peace, when you have taken by surprise those gentlemen who are busily engaged in the winter season in propagating ideas in favor of a large navy. This is a strategic move on the part of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY].

The naval people will wake up after a while. They may consent to this, with the understanding that until it is agreed upon you shall proceed, but a large share of the strong force and argument in favor of a great navy comes because men make a profit by building a navy [applause], or a profit by serving in the Navy. That being the case, as I said before, I am extremely anxious to have the resolution passed at the time when peaceful prophecy prevails, and that will be during this month or the month of November. Get your Members back here and let us pass this great measure of peace, because if you do not the country will hold you, or at least those Members who are absent, responsible for failing to be in their seats in order to bring the white wings of peace over the world. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I renew the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, just one moment. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 45, nays 29, answered "present" 11, not voting 343, as follows:

 Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. LLOYD, vote?
 The SPEAKER. He did not.
 Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Well, he was called from the Chamber, and I agreed to pair with him in case he did not get back, so I withdraw my vote.
 The name of Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa was called, and he answered "Present."
 Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and I desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."
 The name of Mr. MANN was called, and he answered "Present."
 Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. PHELAN, and I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."
 The name of Mr. SMITH of Minnesota was called, and he answered "Present."
 The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
 Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, November 1, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MANN: Resolution (H. Res. 297) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish certain information concerning subsection 7 of the Underwood tariff law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland (by request of the Universal Peace Union, Philadelphia): Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 146) requesting the President to negotiate with the British and Canadian Governments regarding the transfer of southeastern Alaska to Canada by sale or exchange or both; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 9104) granting a pension to Frederick A. Churchill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOSS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 9105) granting a pension to Violetta Fisher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9106) to correct the military record of J. H. McGrew; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: A bill (H. R. 9107) granting a pension to Joseph Tibbetts; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9108) granting an increase of pension to James H. Clutts; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas: Petition of Fee-Crayton Hardwood Lumber Co., of Detroit, Ark., protesting against the passage of House bill 8187; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Easton Board of Trade, of Easton, Pa., favoring the construction of a deeper waterway from Philadelphia to Easton-Philipsburg; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, November 1, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God our heavenly Father, for every thought, every suggestion, every movement looking to a world-wide disarmament, since it is a reflection on the intelligence and religious life of any people to teach the arts of war on land or sea, for we realize in our better moments how infinitely wiser it is to conserve the brain and brawn of armies and navies for the peaceful pursuits of life. And we most earnestly pray that our Republic, with its intelligence, high ideals, and incomparable genius, may set its face heavenward and be the vanguard in every movement for the "peace and good will toward men" which all right-thinking men the world around pray for, hope for, long for. And unto Thee, O God, the Father of all mankind, be glory and honor and praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The Member elect from the first district of West Virginia, Mr. MATTHEW NEELEY, is present, and his credentials, signed by the governor and secretary of state, are correct, as the Chair finds, and unless somebody wants them read the gentleman will be sworn in.

Mr. NEELEY appeared before the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to make a personal statement, a very brief one. Outside of about three or four days' absence I have been present every day since the inauguration. I was compelled to be absent on account of the Ohio flood, which affected my city at Columbus, Ohio, very greatly. I now ask unanimous consent for leave of absence for three weeks, not on account of complication of business matters, although I have plenty of those, but on account of long-continued illness in my family, which has become more serious. I ask for leave of absence for three weeks on that account.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] asks unanimous consent for leave of absence for three weeks on his statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a request by the gentleman from New York, Mr. METZ, for leave of absence for 30 days, on account of important business. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that. I should like to see him occasionally here. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

MEMBER OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS, COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the Hon. WILLIAM E. HUMPHREY, of the State of Washington, a member of the board of directors of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, in place of the Hon. E. L. Taylor, Jr., of Ohio.

RECOGNITION OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the consent of the House to publish in the RECORD a brief historical review of the exercise of the right of recognizing Governments that have been established by methods that are not always approved by the people of this country. It is by Mr. George Turner, formerly a Senator in Congress. I am under the impression that at present he is a member of the commission defining the boundaries between the United States and Canada. It is a valuable contribution to the subject.

Mr. MANN. Not defining the boundaries, but a commission.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A commission; yes. Very well. This is a brief publication, Mr. Speaker, and gives a considerable amount of information on a question which is a live one and very pertinent, and I believe it will be of interest to all the Members of the House. I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement by the Hon. George Turner, of the State of Washington, on governmental recognition. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that this statement of ex-Senator Turner's, in a way at least, is a reply to the statement made by ex-Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, who was formerly ambassador to Mexico. I may be in error about it, but my recollection is that the statement made by Mr. Wilson has not been published in the RECORD, and inasmuch as this whole matter relates directly to our relations with Mexico, I am not willing that one side of the proposition shall be published in the RECORD unless the whole subject is going to be taken up and discussed in Congress, which probably is not desirable.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, may I say a word to the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have not had the privilege of seeing the statement made by Mr. Henry Lane Wilson. I would be very glad to have both statements published at the same time. This document does not appeal to me as a valuable document because of its being an immediate reply to Mr. Wilson. I think my friend Mr. Turner has been led into the making of statements which he alleges to be facts concerning which it is impossible for any man to be certain. I do not give my indorsement to these statements, because I do not know what is true and what is not true. I have been familiar with Mexico and with Mexicans for so many years—I have known the country so intimately—that I realize how difficult it is to get the exact truth about the conditions down there published in this country; but the historical review of the exercise of the right of recognition is that part of this document which I considered valuable and which I thought ought to be published. I have no objection to the publication of Mr. Wilson's statement also.

Mr. MANN. I would not be willing to stop with the publication of those statements. This statement of Mr. Turner is a defense of the administration for not having recognized Huerta as President of Mexico. I am not undertaking to say anything on that subject at present; but if gentlemen desire to have inserted in the RECORD statements defending the administration's policy or lack of policy in connection with Mexico, then some other gentleman in the House will wish to be heard upon the subject. If that side of the House wants to open up the matter, I am willing that the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and discuss the Mexican situation; but I am not willing that the administration shall have inserted one item or statement defending what the President—

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman insist on a quorum here for that debate?

Mr. MANN. I will not insist on a quorum here for that debate. I did not insist on a quorum for the debate on the peace proposition yesterday. That side of the House moved to adjourn yesterday without the point of no quorum having been raised at all. I hope you will not do that to-day, but that we will discuss the subject of peace. I object to the request.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN]. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I may address the House for a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, since the early part of November, 1912, I have been here in attendance upon the House constantly. I have not been absent at any time. I was away from the Hall of the House while I was before a committee of the Senate one day and missed one roll call. This was on the hearing of the Hetch Hetchy bill before the Senate Committee on Public Lands. I feel as though I ought to be home for at least a week, and it is a long way. I do not like to go without the permission of the House. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that I may be excused until the 25th of November, 1913.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks leave to be excused from attendance upon the sessions of the House until November 25, on the statement that he has missed only one roll call during this session. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I hope these requests will not become catching. The two requests that have been preferred this morning seem to be fairly reasonable requests. Both of them are very good reasons why the House should either pass a resolution for adjournment or else attend to business; and as the gentleman from California can not put sufficient backbone into his confreres on this side of the House to do either, I am unwilling, under the circumstances, to keep him on the gridiron any longer.

Mr. RAKER. I thank the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in my judgment, because a Member by remaining here simply does the duty that he obligates himself to do, that does not warrant any special privileges in regard to being given unanimous consent to be excused. I went home for about one week, and my constituents knew I was there, too; at least, I hope they did. I did not get to see as many of them as I would have desired. I supposed at that time that there would be nothing doing here, and when I got a telegram saying that there was something doing, I did not waste any time, but came back at once. I wish to say that in doing my duty here in the House of Representatives I do not care to take up time in boasting in regard to it. Doing one's duty is simply what every Member of Congress and every good citizen of the United States ought to do. Everyone ought to do their duty as they see it, everywhere and all the time. For my part, I am willing to give the very best service I have in me to serve the people as a Member of the House of Representatives. I am willing to be here whenever I can be of any service. Otherwise I do not think a Member need to worry much whether he is excused or not, when he believes he is not going to be called back. He ought to look at it in a common-sense way. Because the roll is called here every day for the purpose of putting somebody on record to vote for or against adjournment, certainly that will not be looked at by any intelligent person as a very important matter. I do not see what the Members need to fear in leaving when they believe there is nothing to do. I do not think any Member need concern himself about that, although I am here on the job because I thought probably I might be able to do something to serve the people of the country. I agree that we ought to be doing something. We have many important measures to be considered. I also agree that we ought to have given further consideration to the question of peace yesterday, because that is one of the most important questions confronting the people of the world to-day.

It is not only a question of the expenditure of money but a question of the saving of lives. It is a question that is so broad and deep that certainly at this time we should not object to giving it some time in the way of discussion. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is somewhat surprising to me that the distinguished leader from Illinois, the great upholder of the Constitution and the law, should be a party to violating a law of this country. He rose from his seat, addressed the Chair, took his seat again, knowing that there is no excuse, that the House can not grant leave of absence to any Member except on the ground of sickness or sickness in his family. The gentleman is going to acquiesce in a Member going away, with other excuses, and this great leader of the minority is going to be a party to a violation of the law of the United States. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, since I have been a Member of this House, which covers a number of years and several terms of service, I have never left here to look after my private interests, business at home, or my own personal affairs. I came here at the beginning of the December session and remained during that session, have been here all through this extraordinary session of Congress, and have not been outside of the city of Washington, with the exception of the other day when I went to Philadelphia to the rededication of Congress Hall, and on that day the House was not in session. During a long time my father has been seriously ill. I have stayed here oftentimes when I have felt I ought to go to him on that account. At last I have received a letter from my dear old mother telling me to come, and I want to leave to-night. I ask unanimous consent of the House to be excused indefinitely.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN], who on various occasions furnishes amusement to the House but seldom information, stated that I was a party to a violation of the law. That is about as near as my friend from Connecticut ever gets to the facts. It is no violation of law for the House to grant leave of absence, notwithstanding the statement to the contrary by the gentleman from Connecticut. He probably knows about as much on that subject as the knowledge he usually displays about many others. The House has full power to grant leave of absence, and just as much power to grant it for one reason as it has for another. I do not believe it was a violation of the law for me to acquiesce in the request of the gentleman from California; but the gentleman from Connecticut states that it was a violation of the law and immediately acquiesces in it. He conscientiously believes that he is violating the law. That is his side of the situation.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in support of my request, I again state that I have been here all through these two sessions—the December session and this extraordinary session—and I will return as soon as circumstances permit. Just exactly how long it will be necessary for me to be gone, I do not know; and therefore I ask leave of absence indefinitely. I would not leave now if I did not know my father's illness was dangerous to such an extent that my mother wants me to come to him and to her.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, our distinguished associate and leader of the minority unfortunately is in error. It is the law; it is one of the joint acts, and as strong and as effective as any law on the statute books of the United States. Unfortunately for him, he is talking through his hat, as they say in the underworld. It is an unfortunate situation to have the great leader, supposed to follow the dictates of his oath, to acquiesce in violations of that oath. He should remember, too, that he who excuses accuses. Those are the words of an old patriot, and it is a sad condition that the great Member from Illinois attacks a new Member, just fresh from the hustings, and takes his act as an excuse for his action. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. DONOVAN. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Illinois has already acted in this case.

The SPEAKER. But this is an informal procedure.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Connecticut pleads the baby act, I will not insist.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Connecticut does what a new Member of the House frequently does—takes a crack at me—and when I smile back says the gentleman from Illinois has assaulted a new Member. I have never in my course in this House attacked a new Member until he attacked me.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN], referring to me, using his language, says it is unfortunate "for he" so and so. The gentleman's facts are just as correct as his grammar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is no gentleman whose attention I delight more in calling to what the statute is than the gentleman from Illinois, and I am going to read the law in regard to absenteeism. [After a pause.] I guess I will not read it now, as I have not got it in my hand. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address recently delivered by Hon. ROBERT L. HENRY, of Texas, before the South Carolina Bar Association.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address recently delivered by Hon. ROBERT L. HENRY, of Texas, before the South Carolina Bar Association. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I desire to refer to the work of this present session and to compare the work of the session in a way generally with the work of the extra session of 1900.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NONATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, these remarks this morning from various gentlemen on both sides of the House as to the status of business in the House and the nonattendance of Members it seems to me do not fairly represent the attitude of the majority and are not fair to Members who are absent. Under the leadership of the minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], we have been told each day that the House ought to proceed to business, that Members ought to be here attending to their duties, that committees should be deliberating upon bills referred to them, and that the House should be considering other legislation, and Members upon this side of the House are falling into the political trap which has been set for them by the minority leader and are making excuses and assuming virtues for themselves to which they are not entitled, stating how few days they have been absent and how few roll calls they have missed. It seems to me that this is an opportune time to state, modestly on my part, what I conceive are the facts regarding the situation.

Some weeks ago, after we had passed all legislation that was before the House, all the legislation for which this extra session had been called, notably the tariff and currency bills—in fact, all legislation that had been determined by the majority should be considered at this extra session—the House was told, at least the majority side, by the majority leader, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], that there would be no further legislation and that there was no necessity for Members attending the sessions of the House, at least those Members who had been called to their homes or the demand upon whom in any other respect required them to be absent. On yesterday, upon the roll call on the question of adjournment, it was disclosed that there were 343 Members absent. The proportion of Members absent on the minority side, I may say, was as great as upon the majority side. I hesitate to believe, and I do not believe, that those 343 Members who are absent upon either side are falling in any duty which they owe to their constituents, to the country, or to this House. No one knows better than the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that there will be no legislation in this House until the Senate shall have passed the currency bill, if it does so at this session, and it comes to the House; and yet day after day we are reminded that the House ought to be doing business, in the face of the fact that the majority have determined upon a program and that program is being carried out. I think it is inappropriate—at least it is unwise—for Members upon this side of the House in lauding their own virtues, because, forsooth, they happened to be here to-day or yesterday or the next legislative day, to thereby inferentially criticize the 343 Members which the roll call on yesterday disclosed were absent. If we are going to attempt legislation, let the majority in the House, as it has done upon various occasions during this session, get together in conference and change the program which has been adopted and which was announced by the majority leader; and in the meantime, if the minority leader shall continue to play politics—and he always plays politics shrewdly, if not wisely—let him play it alone, and when he sets a trap and endeavors to rivet the attention of the country upon the House as not attending to business, let it be understood that the majority of the House, who are responsible for legislation, have determined upon a program which we are following and that we are responsible for that program; that we have enacted all the legislation which the majority intended to enact at this session, and that we are simply playing a waiting game, waiting upon the Senate to pass the currency bill, the remaining piece of legislation to which the majority have determined to give consideration at this session. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, in view of what we hear from day to day, in view of the remarks here this morning, that it would be well to recur to the actual conditions as they exist, and that we shall not continually be deferring to the political attitude of the minority leader of this House and inferentially continue to make it appear that Members who are absent are absent willfully and deliberately and intend not to discharge their duties as Members of this House. I think, to repeat, that if the game is to continue to be played by the minority leader that he shall play it alone and we Democrats shall not give him assistance in doing so.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. I rise to ask unanimous consent of the House to address it in reply to the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for two minutes in which to address the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], of course, is entitled to his own opinions and is entitled to state them in his own language. He thinks the remarks of certain Members upon the floor of this House, of whom I was one, in stating that they had been here almost the entire time were inappropriate. On the other hand, he may think his remarks in criticizing those gentlemen were very appropriate. Of course he is entitled to his own opinion concerning that. We will not discuss that phase of the question. Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that a man's record in attendance and attention to his duty is the one thing of which he must very naturally be proud, and ought to be the basis upon which he should plant his request for any absence from this House.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that, while the House has been kind enough to give me this leave of absence, if at any time any important measure shall come before this House, I shall take great pleasure in coming back to vote upon it if I am compelled to return to Ohio by the next train—any such measure like the peace matter which we had before the House yesterday or any other important matter. Mr. Speaker, if the statement is true which I hear whispered around, there will possibly be a movement to deduct from the salaries of Members for absence. That is entirely agreeable to me, but I do not want any gentleman who has been absent practically all summer to be seized with a sudden spasm of reform and come back and say, "Now I am here, and from this on I want everybody to be here or deductions will be made from their salaries." Let them begin on the 4th of March and apply it to everybody, and it will be perfectly satisfactory to me. I think every man who is absent at any time should have a just and reasonable excuse for his absence. Our highest duty is to be here, and to be here all the time that it is possible for us to be here, and I have no apology to offer to the gentleman from North Carolina or to anybody else for the appropriateness of my remarks in asking for a leave of absence as compared with the appropriateness of his remarks in criticizing those who pointed to the fact that they have been here all the time attending to their duties in the House and on important committee work, such as I have had the honor of performing during the entire summer. Besides, I have protected every obligation owed to my party as such by arranging for a pair covering the entire time of my absence as granted by the unanimous consent of this House.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. TOWNER. To ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I think the questions involved in the matter that has been before the House for consideration this morning are of far greater importance than any mere political color that can be given to them. In the first place, there is no man on the floor of this House who can defend absenteeism, as it has become all too much a habit and practice of the membership of this House. Every time when it can be called to the attention of Members here or at their homes that their duty is to be here when Congress is in session, we are performing a public duty and not a mere party service. The leader on this side when he calls attention to it is not playing a political trick or seeking to obtain a political advantage, but is in reality but voicing the opinion of the people of the United States, who when they send their Representatives to Congress expect them to do their duty and stay here when Congress is in session.

And there is another view of it. It is legitimate to criticize the party stand, the political ground, that the Democratic side has taken with regard to present conditions. You on that side have said that you will keep Congress in session and yet not allow it to do any work whatever. That is absolutely indefensible from any possible standpoint whatsoever.

In the first place, if we have work to do and Congress is in session, then certainly we should do that work, and there is no man who does not know that there are now pending in this Congress many bills of great importance; that there will not be time in which to consider them at the next regular session; and that now in committee and in the House they should be considered and be given the attention that they deserve.

And, more than that, the excuse—because it is not a justification—that is offered that we should stay here in order to be present and pass the currency bill has passed far beyond any possible idea of fulfillment. There is no one now that would venture to say that we would have sent back to us from the Senate the currency bill during this session; and yet here we are, with no prospect of any benefit to be derived from our staying, with a declaration on your part that you will not allow any work to be done if we do stay. And this is true, notwithstanding the positive embarrassment of your own Members, who find it difficult to excuse their absence if they go, and yet are told they will not be allowed to do anything if they remain. They feel, as do Members on this side, that we ought either to adjourn or go to work.

With regard to the assertion by the Democratic leader that no legislation will be attempted, although Congress is to remain in session, the people of the country will want to know why, if we are to be kept here, we are not doing the duties that are imposed upon us and considering the bills that ought to be considered and performing the duties and obligations that we are sworn to perform as Members of this body. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to criticize any man as to his views of attendance or nonattendance. I have my peculiar ideas with regard to that. I believe that a man in public service should be in attendance, should be in his place of duty. He has a right to expect that the people who elected him or by whom he was appointed will look to him to see that he gives his service to the country. There is not any excuse for those upon that side of the House or upon this side of the House to criticize one or the other. In the Sixty-first Congress we found roll calls without a quorum when no man had an excuse for not staying here. We found the same thing in this House in the Sixty-second Congress, when no excuse can be had for the lack of a quorum, when Members should be in attendance, when our time should be used in the House, when we ought to have done business when it was necessary.

Now, there is no use in that side of the House playing politics in the matter, and the statement of the last gentleman who spoke on the matter, if carried out logically, will not bear proof, because if our Republican friends had stayed here—and I am not going to criticize them more than others—there would have been a sufficient number here to have compelled the others to have returned, and every minute of our time could have been used in committee work upon bills that could have been investigated by all the committees and made ready to report when the second session of the Sixty-third Congress opened. So there is no use in criticizing along that line.

It was the intent when this Congress convened to pass the tariff bill. It has been passed. It was the purpose and intent also to pass a currency bill. This House has passed that currency bill and it is now in the Senate, and with all justness and right to the constituency of the Members on this side of the House they have a right to direct and call the country's attention to the fact that the House of Representatives by an overwhelming vote, practically unanimous by the Democrats and a large number on that side of the House, voted for that bill and determined not to enact any other legislation, not to bring any other matters before the House to distract the country's attention, but to rivet and fix it upon the currency legislation that the people are demanding and insisting on. Not only the people, but the House of Representatives, will say that the Senate ought to be willing and ought to be ready to take up that matter and consider it, and bring it out upon the Senate floor and consider it there, the same as the Members of the House have done in this body, so that this administration could carry out its promise to the people that they would be given legislation, tariff revision, and, in addition to that, currency revision and legislation, and this the Senate is now doing and beyond question will soon have the currency bill through that branch of Congress; and the extra session having been called practically for those purposes the great mass of the American people are going to look with admiration and pride upon the attitude of our President for his magnificent stand upon these two questions, and I believe they will be enacted before this Congress adjourns.

Now, as to the question of leaving Washington, I care not how other Members view this question, and I do not want to criticize them for it, but I believe that if a man wishes to absent himself for other cause than sickness he ought to call the attention of the House to the fact, so that they may know why he is absent, where he is, and that the House itself has given him that leave, instead of his taking the law into his own hands. If the law were strictly enforced there would be very little salary paid to Members. There is no need of criticism because a man presents his case to the House personally, instead of taking the law into his own hands. I leave that up to him. I take my own method. I am not criticizing any other man's method, but I believe mine is the proper course. I am not going home for an idle purpose or playing politics. I am going to leave it to my constituents to judge whether or not my conduct and work before committees and in the House is proper and is worthy of their commendation and approval.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] accuses me of playing politics. I suppose that is his point of view. I never have played politics. I do not know much about it. I have been for many years an earnest, hard laborer in the House of Representatives. [Applause on the Republican side.] I have been attending, as best I could, to the work which a Member of Congress has laid upon him, believing that as I was elected a Representative by the people from my district and paid by the Government of the United States a salary upon which I live, that my duty was to give the proper return to the Government for the salary and to my people for their confidence and their election. Other men may have different views. It may be that some Members think when they are elected to Congress their duties cease when they present their certificates of election. Apparently that is the view held by the majority of the Democratic side of the House at present. I take it that my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] made his speech because he probably lacked the nerve to ask for leave of absence and made it in anticipation of leaving town.

The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] complains bitterly because the less than one-third minority of the House do not come here in numbers to compel the Democrats to come here, do not arrest them, and bring them here. He complains because the patriotic third of the Members of the House do not cause the arrest of the remaining Members of the House and compel them to do business. That is a peculiar situation. We may lead the horse to water; we can not make him drink.

If we had the power to compel you to come here, we could not compel you to do business. And after all there is one thing that the country is to be congratulated upon to the extent that it goes. If this Democratic Congress would now adjourn until the 4th of March of the year after next, leaving the country in peace, it would confer upon the land the greatest patriotic favor within its power. Next to that, to declare that it will not do any business is probably the nearest to patriotism. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

And yet we have pending before us the immigration bill, the antiinjunction bill, the trial by jury for contempt bill, the seamen's involuntary servitude bill, the great trust problem, a hundred and more questions of immense importance which your side of the House have announced to the world you propose to dispose of next winter. And your leaders—there is not a member of the Committee on Ways and Means from the Democratic side present in the Hall of the House. Somebody says there is one. I see him, my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. SIMS. And one other.

Mr. MANN. If there are any others, I am willing to name them all.

Mr. SIMS. Judge HULL, of Tennessee, is present.

Mr. MANN. Your leaders, not desiring to have this legislation enacted, knowing that next winter will be devoted mainly to the consideration of items in appropriation bills, are preventing you now from gathering together in committees and reporting out bills or being present in the House and disposing of them. And next winter do not tell me you have not the time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from North Carolina addressing the House for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is any high degree of agitation among the people of the Nation because we are not passing during this extra session the legislation which usually is considered and passed during the long regular session which commences about December 1. I do not believe the people are very deeply interested in the daily performance of the Republican minority. I even believe that the people understand that this is an extra session and that we would all be at home now but for the fact that we were called here by the President to pass two great measures—a tariff and a currency bill. The truth is that under ordinary circumstances every Member of the Sixty-third Congress could have remained at home from the 4th of last March until December 1. We would have had that period of nine months, during which we could have attended to our private affairs, drawing our salaries just as we do now and have done all the summer. Certainly we are not getting anything extra for the work done during the extra session.

I have not heard of any mass meeting of the people which adopted resolutions criticizing this House of Representatives because we are not passing during this extra session the usual appropriation bills and other legislation which regular sessions of Congress consider. Nobody is being humbugged, Mr. Speaker. The people of the Nation understand perfectly well the purposes for which the extra session was called.

Now, here is the Republican leader declaring in one breath that the highest service a Democratic Congress can render to the people of the Nation is to adjourn indefinitely, and in the next breath he enumerates a list of bills, and finds fault with the Democratic majority because we are not considering those measures during the extra session. To say the least, this is inconsistent, and for my part I do not believe anybody is going to be deceived. I doubt if the minority leader himself will support all in the list of measures he enumerated when they come before the House.

I may be mistaken, Mr. Speaker, but I believe the people understand perfectly well that we were called here in extra session to pass two great measures—a tariff bill and a currency bill. During the time we are waiting upon the Senate to act on the currency bill I doubt very much whether the people will feel inclined to blame Members who now and then go to their homes or to praise those who remain.

If we can only pass these two great reform measures, we will, I submit, have done well. Certainly we will have done far better than our Republican friends have ever done during an extra session within my recollection. So much better that the people, even forgetting this daily vaudeville, will say to the party now in power; "Well done, good and faithful servant."

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is the unfinished business before the House the naval armament program resolution (H. Res. 298) offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] on yesterday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that resolution is in a situation to be considered as unfinished business. It is not in the privileged class.

Mr. MANN. Unanimous consent was given for its immediate consideration. It was under consideration and was not disposed of.

The SPEAKER. That is true. These speeches this morning have been by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I understand that they are by unanimous consent, but I made the parliamentary inquiry as to whether that resolution would come up under the regular order. It seemed to me that it would if the regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that if the regular order was demanded that resolution would come up.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 57, nays 25, answered "present" 10, not voting 337, as follows:

 The name of Mr. MANN was called, and he answered "Present."
 The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
 Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until Wednesday, November 5, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HAMMOND: A bill (H. R. 9109) granting pensions to volunteer Army nurses of the Civil War and extending the disabilities to women as well as to men; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITACRE: A bill (H. R. 9110) for the improvement of highways with Federal assistance; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRITTEN: Resolution (H. Res. 299) calling upon the President to furnish the House of Representatives with a complete list of the officials of the various departments of the Government who have been absent from their posts of duty during the past four weeks that they might engage in promoting the interests of candidates for political office; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 9111) granting an increase of pension to Lewis H. Laffin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 9112) granting a pension to Theodore T. Simon; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the officers and members of the Intra-City Civic League, protesting against the actions of the Russian Government relative to a ritual murder in the city of Kiev, Russia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DYER: Petition of the United Confederate Veterans of Liberty, Mo., favoring erection of a monument on the Gettysburg battle field in memory of the peace reunion held there in July, 1913; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas: Memorial from the State convention, Arkansas Division, United Confederate Veterans, for an appropriation by Congress to erect peace memorial on Gettysburg battle field; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: Petition of sundry citizens of Waterbury, Conn., relative to a Hebrew on trial in the city of Kiev, Russia, for ritual murder; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: Memorial of the Minnesota Historical Society, of St. Paul, Minn., favoring an appropriation for the erection of a monument to the memory of Lieut. William S. Cox, United States Navy; to the Committee on the Library.

SENATE.

MONDAY, November 3, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE, UNITED STATES SENATE,
 Washington, November 3, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,
 President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer, and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

STREET RAILWAYS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 227).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in response to a resolution of the 27th ultimo, setting forth reasons why the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 2, 1894, entitled "An act to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Co. to change its motor power," etc., have not been enforced, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

ROCK CREEK BRIDGE (S. DOC. NO. 229).

Mr. FLETCHER. On October 27 a communication was received from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia transmitting certain data which was ordered printed. There is an illustration accompanying the communication which it is desirous to have printed along with it.

I move that the order for the printing of the communication from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia concerning the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at Q Street NW. be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the communication and accompanying papers and illustration be printed and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have a letter from the president of the State College of Agriculture and Government Experiment Station of North Dakota discussing Senate bill 3091, which provides for extension demonstration work in the colleges of agriculture. I ask to have it embodied in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NORTH DAKOTA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE AND GOVERNMENT EXPERIMENT STATION, OFFICE OF PRESIDENT, Agricultural College, N. Dak., October 30, 1913.

Senator HOKE SMITH, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: I have examined Senate bill 3091 and have no criticisms to offer. I am of the opinion that the change from the former bill to one of direct cooperation between the Department of Agriculture and the agricultural colleges will add to the efficiency of the extension work in the several States. In other words, I am satisfied with the provisions of the bill.

As to the importance of the extension propaganda provided for in your bill there can be no question. The rural districts are entitled to the information in possession of the agricultural colleges, but without combined Federal and State aid but little enthusiasm for better farming and better living on the farms can be awakened. Moreover, agriculture is positively in need of awakening. In order to enlarge the scope of their influence, no one acquainted with rural affairs will question the importance—in fact, the necessity—of adding extension to the work of education and experimentation now and heretofore carried on by the agricultural colleges. If for no other reason, the extension division provided for is more than worth while in order to prepare the parental mind to accept the new ideas their children bring home from the college. At present home prejudice frequently chills the student's enthusiasm for improving the management of the farm, if it does not actually prohibit the introduction of modern ideas.

From a financial viewpoint the matter can be presented even in stronger form. Improved agricultural methods that will add 1 per cent to the productiveness of the farms of the country will add approximately $100,000,000 annually to the national income. When we consider that Germany, Belgium, England, etc., produce from 30 to 50 per cent better crop yields than the average in the United States, the increase of our own yields by means of college extension education to considerably above 1 per cent will be as probable as it will soon be necessary. Under any circumstances the farmers of this country are entitled to even more aid than your bill proposes to give them.

It will be a sad day when agriculture declines in this country. Not a single chance, therefore, should be taken.

With approximately $330,000,000 appropriated annually for the Army and Navy and only $17,233,000 for agriculture, it does not seem fair to the country's most important industry. Millions of farmers are beginning to think so.

Agriculture contributes approximately $10,000,000,000 annually to the national wealth, and can easily be made to contribute each year several billions more. Moreover, agriculture must be made a preferred vocation; that is, more profitable, more desirable. On the other hand, the benefits conferred by the Army and Navy are more or less problematical. The country needs protection in matters of food and clothing quite as much as possible protection against foreign aggression.

The husbandmen of this Nation are its surest safeguard against anarchy or discontent. They produce the wealth that makes our country prosperous without sharing to any great extent its luxuries or political honors. Congress, therefore, can well afford to appropriate $3,000,000 annually to help build up a more profitable as well as more desirable agriculture. It can not afford to ignore the importance of agricultural college extension work.

Respectfully,

J. H. WORST.

FLORIDA INTRACOASTAL WATERWAY.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a resolution in the nature of a petition, adopted by the trustees of the internal improvement fund of the State of Florida, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TRUSTEES OF THE INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT FUND OF THE STATE OF FLORIDA,
Tallahassee, October 30, 1913.

Hon. D. U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the direction of the trustees of the internal improvement fund I hand you herewith copy of resolution adopted by them on the 29th of September, 1913, with request that you give same your careful attention and do all you can to bring about the conditions therein set forth and desired.

Yours, truly,

J. STUART LEWIS, Secretary.

On September 29, 1913, the following resolution was adopted by the trustees of the internal improvement fund of the State of Florida, and the same was ordered spread upon the minutes. It was further ordered that a copy of said resolution be transmitted to each Senator and Representative of the State of Florida in the Congress of the United States, and that copies also be sent to the several newspapers, boards of trade, and other organizations in the State, requesting that they lend their aid and influence in assisting in obtaining the proper and adequate beaconing of the entire intracoastal waterway by the United States Government, as set forth in the resolution:

"Whereas through the appropriation of a large amount of land by the State of Florida a canal has been constructed, known as the Florida Coast Line Canal, connecting and supplementing the natural channels along the Atlantic seaboard and forming a continuous intracoastal waterway from Jacksonville to Miami; and

"Whereas large sums of money are now being expended, under the direction of the State, for improving the navigability of said waterway; and

"Whereas the convenience and safety of navigating the said waterway depends greatly upon the proper marking of the channel thereof by beacons; and

"Whereas beacons are needed for marking the channel of said waterway both over that portion under control and jurisdiction of the United States Government through its War Department and also over the portion controlled by the State: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Florida in Congress be requested to petition the War Department of the United States to place in and along the said intracoastal waterway such beacons as will properly and adequately mark the channel thereof, both through the natural channels under control of the United States Government and also through the canal constructed under the direction and control of the State of Florida."

PARK TRAMMELL,
Governor, Chairman of the Board.

Attest:

J. STUART LEWIS, Secretary.

REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 156, limiting expenditures for telegrams sent or received by Senators, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 124) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 197, authorizing the Secretary of the Senate to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Thomas B. Stallings the sum of $2,220 per annum and to Richard M. Nelson the sum of $1,200 per annum as clerk and messenger, respectively, to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, reported it with amendments.

CASSIUS E. GILLETTE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, on April 12 I introduced a bill (S. 739) to restore Capt. Cassius E. Gillette to the Army and to authorize the President to appoint him to the position of lieutenant colonel in the Corps of Engineers, which would have been his position had he not resigned. The bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I desire to ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, so that I may have the opportunity of following the request by asking the further privilege to withdraw the bill. I will make the requests at this time. I move that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I now ask that I may be permitted to withdraw the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 3383) granting an increase of pension to Joseph E. Flynn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A bill (S. 3384) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct experiments in the cultivation of apple trees and apples and to improve the same in north Georgia, east Tennessee, and western North Carolina; and

A bill (S. 3385) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct experiments in the cultivation of sea-island cotton for the purpose of improving the seed, the staple, and the production of the same in Georgia, Florida, and South Carolina; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. LANE:

A bill (S. 3386) granting to various States public lands for the construction, repair, and maintenance of public roads; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 3387) granting a pension to Bernhart Levyson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3388) granting a pension to Anna F. Quinn; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3389) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Klamath Falls, Oreg.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 3390) to place the name of Col. Milton Weidler upon the unlimited retired list of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 3391) waiving the age limit for the appointment as assistant paymaster in the United States Navy in the case of former Paymaster's Clerk Harry H. Reynolds, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 3393) granting a pension to Seymour McDonough; and

A bill (S. 3394) granting a pension to Melville A. Hays; to the Committee on Pensions.

TRADE IN BICHLORIDE OF MERCURY.

Mr. ASHURST. I introduce a bill and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 3392) regulating the importation, exportation, or carriage in interstate commerce of bichloride of mercury was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to import or export, or cause to be imported into or exported from the United States for the purpose of selling or disposing of the same, or to deposit or cause to be deposited in the United States mails for transmission thereby, or to deliver or cause to be delivered to any common carrier for transportation from one State, Territory, or possession of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or possession of the United States or to said District in interstate commerce, or to transport or cause to be transported from one State, Territory, or possession of the United States or from the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or possession of the United States or to said District in interstate commerce, any substance or poisonous compound known as bichloride of mercury unless said substance or compound be in the form of cubes and colored green, so as to be readily distinguishable from nonpoisonous tablets of similar appearance in common use.

SEC. 2. That each and every person, firm, corporation, or association who or which shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of this act, and every officer, manager, director, or managing agent of any such corporation or association having knowledge of such violation and directly participating in such violation or consenting thereto, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States having jurisdiction of crimes within the district in which such violation was committed or through which has been conducted the transportation of the article in respect to which such violation has been committed shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court. Whenever the offense is begun in one jurisdiction and completed in another it may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in either jurisdiction in the same manner as if the offense had been actually and wholly committed therein.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of January, 1914.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—ANTHONY FISHER.

On motion of Mr. STONE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Senate bill 3500, Sixty-first Congress, to correct the military record of Anthony Fisher, there having been no adverse report thereon.

CENTRAL HIGH-SCHOOL BUILDING.

Mr. LANE. I submit a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its consideration at this time.

The resolution (S. Res. 207) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia be requested to report to the Senate whether, in its judgment, it is advisable to expend an available appropriation of $1,200,000 in the erection of a central high school at the corner of Eleventh and Clifton Streets NW., as authorized by the Sixty-second Congress, on recommendation of the former board of commissioners, or whether this appropriation should be divided and applied to the erection of two or more high schools, one of which shall be located in the eastern section or in the southwest section of the city.

Further, that the board be requested to furnish the Senate information in reply to the following questions:

Is the site at the corner of Eleventh and Clifton Streets centrally located as regards the population?

What is the high-school population of the various sections of the city of Washington?

What is the location of existing high schools and normal schools in the city of Washington?

What is the status of the present central high-school project?

Did the original central high school estimates call for an appropriation of only $700,000 for a building to accommodate 1,600 pupils; and if so, why was the estimate increased?

In the opinion of the present board of commissioners, are the present high-school facilities inadequate, and in what respects?

Is a large centralized high school preferable to smaller and widely distributed high schools?

If the information is readily available, give a complete inventory of school property in the four sections of the city, showing the number of public, manual-training, high, and normal schools, their valuation, and the combined area of ground occupied for school purposes in each section of the city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary again read the first part of the resolution. I did not catch it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia be requested to report to the Senate whether, in its judgment, it is advisable to expend an available appropriation of $1,200,000 in the erection of a central high school at the corner of Eleventh and Clifton Streets NW., as authorized by the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon if there is an available appropriation of $1,200,000?

Mr. LANE. I am informed that there is.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I remembered an appropriation of that amount, but does not the law specifically state where it shall be spent and for what purpose?

Mr. LANE. It does.

Mr. SMOOT. Then what is the object of the resolution which the Senator offers?

Mr. LANE. The object is to find out why that amount should be appropriated to be spent for that purpose in that particular place, it not being the geographical center of the city, nor yet the center of population of the city, and being a location which many students can not reach without paying double fare on some car lines. That is one thing. Then some of the students will be obliged to come in around the Soldiers' Home property. That is another consideration. The location is off to one side, far from the center of population of the city, while at the same time there are hundreds and hundreds of other children who live in the southeast section of the city who will not have access to that school except at great expense to them. The appropriation which was asked for by the commissioners, in the first place, was but $700,000, whereas Congress gave them $1,200,000. Were the money divided up it would fill the requirements of two different and separate communities, which are geographically separate.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, then, has in mind taking some action after the report is made, if it is favorable to his contention, to have the law changed or repealed in some way so that the appropriation may be divided?

Mr. LANE. My object is to find out what facts the Commissioners of the District have, they being more familiar with the matter than we are, showing why it would be better to spend the money in this way than it would be for us to divide it up and spend it for the benefit of the people all over the city. If it would not be better to divide it, we could leave it as it is; but I desire to ascertain the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. I remember very well when the appropriation was made for this school, and I remember the school authorities appearing before the committee and giving their reasons in support of it. I do not know whether or not the hearings were published, but, as the resolution only calls for information, at any rate, I am not going to object to its consideration.

Mr. LANE. I thank the Senator.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT WILSON (S. DOC. NO. 226).

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to have printed in the RECORD and as a public document the address of the President delivered on the occasion of the fifth annual convention of the Southern Commercial Congress at Mobile, Ala., on the 27th of October, which I regard as a world message.

I therefore offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 206) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the address of President Wilson before the Southern Commercial Congress at Mobile, Ala., on October 27, 1913, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and as a Senate document, and that 25,000 additional copies of the document be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if he has an estimate as to the cost of printing 25,000 additional copies?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have an estimate. The estimate is noted at the end of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. It comes within the limit?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; the cost will be about $68, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT WOODROW WILSON AT MOBILE, ALA.

"Your Excellency, Mr. Chairman, it is with unaffected pleasure that I find myself here to-day. I once before had the pleasure, in another southern city, of addressing the Southern Commercial Congress. I then spoke of what the future seemed to hold in store for this region, which so many of us love and toward the future of which we all look forward with so much confidence and hope. But another theme directed me here this time. I do not need to speak of the South. She has, perhaps, acquired the gift of speaking for herself. I come because I want to speak of our present and prospective relations with our neighbors to the south. I deemed it a public duty, as well as a personal pleasure, to be here to express for myself and for the Government I represent the welcome we all feel to those who represent the Latin American States.

"The future, ladies and gentlemen, is going to be very different for this hemisphere from the past. These States lying to the south of us, which have always been our neighbors, will now be drawn closer to us by innumerable ties, and, I hope, chief of all, by the tie of a common understanding of each other. Interest does not tie nations together; it sometimes separates them. But sympathy and understanding does unite them, and I believe that by the new route that is just about to be opened, while we physically cut two continents asunder, we spiritually unite them. It is a spiritual union which we seek.

"I wonder if you realize, I wonder if your imaginations have been filled with the significance of the tides of commerce. Your governor alluded in very fit and striking terms to the voyage of Columbus, but Columbus took his voyage under compulsion of circumstances. Constantinople had been captured by the Turks and all the routes of trade with the East had been suddenly closed. If there was not a way across the Atlantic to open those routes again, they were closed forever, and Columbus set out not to discover America, for he did not know that it existed, but to discover the eastern shores of Asia. He set sail for Cathay and stumbled upon America. With that change in the outlook of the world, what happened? England, that had been at the back of Europe with an unknown sea behind her, found that all things had turned as if upon a pivot and she was at the front of Europe; and since then all the tides of energy and enterprise that have issued out of Europe have seemed to be turned westward across the Atlantic. But you will notice that they have turned westward chiefly north of the Equator and that it is the northern half of the globe that has seemed to be filled with the media of intercourse and of sympathy and of common understanding.

"Do you not see now what is about to happen? These great tides which have been running along parallels of latitude will now swing southward athwart parallels of latitude, and that opening gate at the Isthmus of Panama will open the world to a commerce that she has not known before, a commerce of intelligence, of thought and sympathy between North and South. The Latin American States, which, to their disadvantage, have been off the main lines, will now be on the main lines. I feel that these gentlemen honoring us with their presence to-day will presently find that some part, at any rate, of the center of gravity of the world has shifted. Do you realize that New York, for example, will be nearer the western coast of South America than she is now to the eastern coast of South America? Do you realize that a line drawn northward parallel with the greater part of the western coast of South America will run only about 150 miles west of New York? The great bulk of South America, if you will look at your globes (not at your Mercator's projection), lies eastward of the continent of North America. You will realize that when you realize that the canal will run southeast, not southwest, and that when you get into the Pacific you will be farther east than you were when you left the Gulf of Mexico. These things are significant, therefore, of this, that we are closing one chapter in the history of the world and are opening another of great, unimaginable significance.

"There is one peculiarity about the history of the Latin American States which I am sure they are keenly aware of. You hear of 'concessions' to foreign capitalists in Latin America. You do not hear of concessions to foreign capitalists in the United States. They are not granted concessions. They are invited to make investments. The work is ours, though they are welcome to invest in it. We do not ask them to supply the capital and do the work. It is an invitation, not a privilege; and States that are obliged, because their territory does not lie within the main field of modern enterprise and action, to grant concessions are in this condition, that foreign interests are apt to dominate their domestic affairs, a condition of affairs always dangerous and apt to become intolerable. What these States are going to see, therefore, is an emancipation from the subordination, which has been inevitable, to foreign enterprise and an assertion of the splendid character which, in spite of these difficulties, they have again and again been able to demonstrate. The dignity, the courage, the self-possession, the self-respect of the Latin American States, their achievements in the face of all these adverse circumstances, deserve nothing but the admiration and applause of the world. They have had harder bargains driven with them in the matter of loans than any other peoples in the world. Interest has been exacted of them that was not exacted of anybody else, because the risk was said to be greater; and then securities were taken that destroyed the risk—an admirable arrangement for those who were forcing the terms! I rejoice in nothing so much as in the prospect that they will now be emancipated from these conditions, and we ought to be the first to take part in assisting in that emancipation. I think some of these gentlemen have already had occasion to bear witness that the Department of State in recent months has tried to serve them in that wise. In the future they will draw closer and closer to us because of circumstances of which I wish to speak with moderation and, I hope, without indiscretion.

"We must prove ourselves their friends and champions upon terms of equality and honor. You can not be friends upon any other terms than upon the terms of equality. You can not be friends at all except upon the terms of honor. We must show ourselves friends by comprehending their interest whether it squares with our own interest or not. It is a very perilous thing to determine the foreign policy of a nation in the terms of material interest. It not only is unfair to those with whom you are dealing, but it is degrading as regards your own actions.

"Comprehension must be the soil in which shall grow all the fruits of friendship, and there is a reason and a compulsion lying behind all this which is dearer than anything else to the thoughtful men of America. I mean the development of constitutional liberty in the world. Human rights, national integrity, and opportunity as against material interests—that, ladies and gentlemen, is the issue which we now have to face. I want to take this occasion to say that the United States will never again seek one additional foot of territory by conquest. She will devote herself to showing that she knows how to make honorable and fruitful use of the territory she has, and she must regard it as one of the duties of friendship to see that from no quarter are material interests made superior to human liberty and national opportunity. I say this, not with a single thought that anyone will gainsay it, but merely to fix in our consciousness what our real relationship with the rest of America is. It is the relationship of a family of mankind devoted to the development of true constitutional liberty. We know that that is the soil out of which the best enterprise springs. We know that this is a cause which we are making in common with our neighbors, because we have had to make it for ourselves.

"Reference has been made here to-day to some of the national problems which confront us as a Nation. What is at the heart of all our national problems? It is that we have seen the hand of material interest sometimes about to close upon our dearest rights and possessions. We have seen material interests threaten constitutional freedom in the United States. Therefore we will now know how to sympathize with those in the rest of America who have to contend with such powers, not only within their borders but from outside their borders also.

"I know what the response of the thought and heart of America will be to the program I have outlined, because America was created to realize a program like that. This is not America because it is rich. This is not America because it has set up for a great population great opportunities of material prosperity. America is a name which sounds in the ears of men everywhere as a synonym with individual opportunity because a synonym of individual liberty. I would rather belong to a poor nation that was free than to a rich nation that had ceased to be in love with liberty. But we shall not be poor if we love liberty, because the nation that loves liberty truly sets every man free to do his best and be his best, and that means the release of all the splendid energies of a great people who think for themselves. A nation of employees can not be free any more than a nation of employers can be.

"In emphasizing the points which must unite us in sympathy and in spiritual interest with the Latin American peoples we are only emphasizing the points of our own life, and we should prove ourselves untrue to our own traditions if we proved ourselves untrue friends to them. Do not think, therefore, gentlemen, that the questions of the day are mere questions of policy and diplomacy. They are shot through with the principles of life. We dare not turn from the principle that morality and not expediency is the thing that must guide us and that we will never condone iniquity because it is most convenient to do so. It seems to me that this is a day of infinite hope, of confidence in a future greater than the past has been, for I am fain to believe that in spite of all the things that we wish to correct the nineteenth century that now lies behind us has brought us a long stage toward the time when, slowly ascending the tedious climb that leads to the final uplands, we shall get our ultimate view of the duties of mankind. We have breasted a considerable part of that climb and shall presently—it may be in a generation or two—come out upon those great heights where there shines unobstructed the light of the justice of God."

CONSERVATION OF RAINFALL (S. DOC. NO. 228).

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, some time ago the Department of Agriculture made an examination of the work on the farm of Col. Freeman Thorp, where he has developed a certain system, especially of conservation of rainfall. The department has prepared an abstract of its report. I presume it can be presented in the nature of a memorial. At least I ask at this time that it be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not quite understand what the paper is.

Mr. CLAPP. It is a revised report of the officer who made the examination of this farm. Col. Thorp has established a farm where he is developing along certain lines of agriculture, and especially the conservation of rainfall. It is not a part of the official report that is to be printed by the department, but it is a matter of important information, and it is very brief, and it has the quasi indorsement of the department. So I ask that it may be printed.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Florida that it is not a departmental document.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. It is simply a report made by one of the officers of the department.

Mr. CLAPP. If it was a departmental document, of course I should expect the department to publish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Minnesota will be complied with.

ADDRESS BY HON. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE (S. DOC. NO. 231).

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document an address on the life, character, and public services of William McKinley by Senator BRANDEGEE, of this body.

Mr. SMOOT. It is an address delivered outside of the Senate?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. If it had been delivered here I would have to object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title will be stated.

The SECRETARY. An address delivered before the McKinley Association of Connecticut, at New Haven, January 29, 1904.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hold in my hand, and ask to have inserted in the RECORD, copy of a letter signed by Mr. Gifford Pinchot, late Forester, and for some time Forester in the Agricultural Department, written to Dr. Frederic Perry Noble, of the Spokesman Review, of Spokane, Wash., upon the Hetch Hetchy question. Mr. Gifford Pinchot is the chief and head of the conservationists of the country, and in this letter he expresses himself so clearly and strongly in favor of giving San Francisco the privilege of getting water from the Hetch Hetchy, that I thought, for the information of Senators, it would be well to have it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

Dr. FREDERIC PERRY NOBLE,
The Spokesman Review, Spokane, Wash.

SEPTEMBER 18, 1913.

MY DEAR SIR: As to my attitude regarding the proposed use of Hetch Hetchy by the city of San Francisco, first, I am fully persuaded that there is no other comparable source of supply available at anything like a reasonable cost to the cities around San Francisco Bay.

Second. That the supply of surface water furnished by the Spring Valley Water Co. is adequate neither in quality nor in quantity.

Third. That the injury to Hetch Hetchy by substituting a lake for the present swampy floor of the valley, all due allowances being made for whatever reduction in the height of the walls there may be, is altogether unimportant compared with the benefits to be derived from its use as a reservoir.

Fourth. That the sanitary regulations included in the bill absolutely dispose of the plea, untenable at all times, that what San Francisco is asking for is control of half of the Yosemite Park instead of merely the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir.

Fifth. That much of the opposition has its root in the unwillingness of water power and transportation interests in and around San Francisco to see the city get possession of the large power it will develop if the grant goes through.

Sixth. That the public welfare will be immensely better served by the joint use of Hetch Hetchy for beauty and for utility than by depriving the future millions around San Francisco Bay of the use of the valley—a use which will not destroy its beauty—rather than by keeping it untouched for the benefit of the very small number of comparatively well to do, to whom it will be accessible.

When the facts are understood as they are, the thing seems to me to be clear beyond the possibility of argument. To put it baldly, the intermittent esthetic enjoyment of less than 1 per cent is being balanced against the daily comfort and welfare of 99 per cent. For that reason, from the beginning I have been in favor of the Tuolumne water supply for the city of San Francisco.

Sincerely, yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

MARTIAL LAW IN WEST VIRGINIA (S. DOC. NO. 230).

Mr. CHILTON. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document an address by Hon. W. G. Mathews, president of the State Bar Association of West Virginia, upon the recent strike situation and the trials by a military commission in the State of West Virginia. I make this request because the matter is now before a committee of the Senate, and the conclusions to which Mr. Mathews came are interesting, and the investigation which he made of the subject is quite elaborate.

The address will make a document of about 24 or 30 pages. I have had an estimate made of the cost, which I find will not exceed $50. I have conferred with other members of the committee and had the estimate made this morning.

I ask unanimous consent to have the address printed as a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to have printed as a public document the matter to which he refers. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I received a letter yesterday from an acquaintance of mine—a friend, I will say—who has been a resident of Mexico for a long time. I have known this gentleman for 30 years and more, and he is a man of fine intelligence and of the highest character. This letter contains some very valuable suggestions, it seems to me, and I desire to read an extract from it to the Senate:

I am just from the interior of Mexico and am very much alarmed at this talk of intervention on the part of our Government in the affairs of that country. The main question seems to be to dispose of Huerta. Why do we not allow the people of Mexico to dispose of him? They would have done it a long time ago if we had kept our hands off, and they have very nearly done so anyway, in spite of the handicap of our so-called neutrality which has kept thousands of soldiers on their border, preventing those who are fighting for the liberty of their country from importing arms and ammunition.

No American soldier should be sent across the border unless it is for the purpose of the United States Government to add Mexico to our national domain. This might be a great idea, but it would be conquest. Then, what of the moral side of the question? Are not the people of Mexico entitled to even a trial at self-government?

The constitutionalists have practically whipped the Huerta government and are in actual control of the greater part of Mexico and are gaining strength every day, while the Huerta government is falling. They should be allowed at least a fair chance to carry out the principles for which they have fought.

It may be claimed that intervention on our part simply meant establishing stable government and then withdrawing, but, in my opinion, that would be impossible. I want to impress upon you that armed intervention means conquest, and that in this instance it will ultimately mean the conquest of all Mexico. When our soldiers cross the Mexican border all the refugees from Mexico who are now in this country will return to their homes, and hundreds of thousands of soldiers of fortune, adventurers, investors, home seekers, and all classes will rush in, as they would have a legal right to do, and in the future they will demand protection from our Government, and no manifesto from our Secretary of State will get them out again. There will be the graves of thousands of our soldiers there, and also the expenditure of hundreds of millions of our money in establishing our dominion, and with such sacrifice our people will believe that they have rights in that country that are equal to those of the Mexicans themselves. Under such circumstances you know that it will be impossible for us to withdraw. It is an entirely different situation from that of Cuba or the Philippines.

What was the result of our war with Mexico in 1846? Conquest and additional territory. I want to predict to you that if we intervene in Mexico, which simply means going to war without reason or provocation with our poor struggling neighbor, it will simply be a war of conquest that will cost us thousands of lives and hundreds of millions of money, and will destroy a nation that has done us no wrong. Why should the crimes of one man or set of men lead us to ruin a nation of innocent people? Let the contending elements in Mexico have a fair chance to fight out their own controversies without interference from the United States or any other country.

When I read this letter last night it seemed to me so clear, so concise, so strong, and so pertinent that I thought it would be of value to the American Congress and to the administration to have it made public.

I stated in a few remarks that I made to the Senate some weeks since that if we would let the Mexican people, both sides of this controversy, have an equal chance to equip themselves to settle this dispute, which can only be settled by the arbitrament of arms, they would settle it as they have a right to settle it, without interference from us or from any other country.

I want to say now, while this subject is being more or less discussed, that we have not been charged with the responsibility of the government of the Mexican nation, and we have no right to interfere in the controversy that is going on there now, except to treat both elements with due and proper consideration; and in my humble opinion that ought to be done without inviting any European nation to come in and interfere or aid us in any way to impose our will upon the will of that independent people.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not want to discuss this matter now, but I wish simply to say this in regard to the letter read by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow]: Of course, it relates to a subject which is uppermost now in the minds of the American people, as well as one which is engaging the attention of people in Europe, and the expression of views given by the writer of the letter is only one of hundreds of other similar expressions. Naturally, persons who go to Mexico and who make observations there are impressed with the conditions and are inclined to give and are pressed to give expression to them; and we have such expressions daily. We have had every day some of our citizens who have been to Mexico come to Washington, who give us the benefit of their observations and of their views. I suppose that very few days pass that some letters similar to the one just read by the Senator from Kansas are not received, some of them expressing one view, others expressing conflicting views. If I were to read to the Senate all of the letters which come to me on that subject, some favoring one method of procedure, others favoring diverse methods, we would very much enlarge the volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The views presented by the writer of this letter are certainly entitled to the very gravest consideration, and with some of them I myself personally sympathize. I think, however, that nothing is further—possibly I should now say this much—from the thought of the people of the United States or of the officials of the United States, speaking generally, than the conquest of Mexico or the acquisition of any part of Mexico.

The problem is a very grave one; this is not the time, possibly, for its discussion; but I apprehend the time is not far distant when we may have to discuss it, as rapidly moving developments will doubtless necessitate this. I say now only what I do in order that it may not appear by silence that what is assumed by the writer of this letter as the purpose of the Government is acquiesced in. If any action is taken by this Government, I am sure it will have no other motive than the highest one, to conserve and promote the interests of the people of Mexico, and also to protect the interest that the American people and the interest that the people of all nations have in the maintenance of order and peace and good government in Mexico.

I do not think, Mr. President, that I transgress what is proper to say upon this occasion in giving the assurance that the matter is having the most careful and conscientious consideration and that I feel very confident that what will be done will in the end meet with the approval of Congress and of the American people. I think it perfectly natural, of course, that there should be restiveness at the present time; but I want to add that those who entertain that restiveness, while it is natural, must reflect that the subject in hand is an extremely grave one; it is fraught with consequences of the most far-reaching and vital character, and we should not be precipitate in our judgment or too urgent as to action. I trust, Mr. President, that that assurance and that caution at this time may be deemed sufficient.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Georgia that I take it he did not hear the remarks I made before I read the letter. Of course, I receive letters probably every day—I know I receive a great many—in regard to Mexico; but having known this gentleman for 30 years, and knowing him to be a man of the highest character, an educated gentleman, a man worthy in every respect, a man in whose judgment I have the highest confidence, a man capable of occupying a seat in this body or a seat in the House of Representatives, I felt that his observations were worthy of a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Kansas that I have had letters from men personally known to me of just the type he mentions, who have long resided in Mexico, and there is a vast diversity of opinion among those men, men of character equal to the one whose letter the Senator has read. Their views are as widely different as to the course that should be pursued in Mexico as are the views one can find here at home.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to ask the Senator from Kansas whether he made any request in connection with the presentation of the letter?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I simply read the letter into the RECORD; that was all.

NATURAL-GAS PIPE LINES.

Mr. CUMMINS. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report favorably with an amendment Senate bill 3345. I have not had the time to write out the substitute that is proposed, although it is indicated on the bill. I present the report because I know that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] desires to have the bill brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

I will say to the Senate that at the present time pipe lines for carrying oil are made common carriers and are placed under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This bill simply adds the pipe lines carrying gas, and does not otherwise change or affect the law. It makes pipe lines carrying gas from one State to another common carriers and places them under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The reason I ask the Senate to give this matter immediate consideration is that there is a real emergency. The cities of my part of the country are confronted with a condition of great hardship, which can be relieved by this bill. The city of Kansas City—and I speak of both Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo.—with a population of approximately 400,000; the city of St. Joseph, with a population of 125,000; the city of Topeka, with a population of approximately 35,000 or 40,000; the cities of Joplin, Webb City, and Carthage, with an aggregate population of approximately 40,000, are all supplied with natural gas, which is piped from the gas fields of Oklahoma and Kansas. The pipe lines are owned by the Kansas Natural Gas Co. There is an abundant supply of gas furnished during those months of the year when the temperature is not low; but experience has shown that in the months of the year when we have cold weather the company which owns this line, and which also owns a large supply of gas, does not furnish sufficient gas, so that in the homes of all of these cities there is a shortage, with great suffering and great inconvenience as a result.

An investigation has demonstrated that there is an abundance of natural gas in the fields of Kansas and Oklahoma not owned by this pipe-line company, and that it can not be marketed, because the pipe-line company will not receive it and transport it. At the same time it is impossible for the owners of this gas to build independent pipe lines, because the pipe-line company which now transports the gas owns or controls either by contract or otherwise, the distributing plants of the various cities to which I have referred.

The sole purpose of this bill is to compel the pipe-line company in the winter months, when it declares it does not have enough gas, to transport gas which may be purchased by these cities and put into its pipes, a proper compensation, of course, to be paid, under the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The law already applies to oil, and there is no reason why it should not apply to gas.

Therefore, with this short explanation, and without going further into the argument, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3345) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,'" approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906, the said act being chapter 3591 of the United States Statutes at Large, Fifty-ninth Congress, volume 34.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That section 7 of an act entitled "An act to create a Commerce Court and to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: After the words "transportation of oil," in the third line of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act, insert the words "natural gas"; and in the fourth and fifth lines of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act strike out the words "and except natural or artificial gas."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the amendment? If not, it will be agreed to. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator—

Mr. OWEN. I do not wish the amendment to pass as accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. It will take only a minute.

Mr. OWEN. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the comment of the Chair that without objection the amendment would be agreed to. The Senator from Oklahoma objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All in favor of the amendment will signify it by saying "aye." [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes have it.

Mr. OWEN. I call for a division, and I wish to discuss the matter.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have not the slightest objection to the Senator fully discussing the bill. I did not think he would oppose it, and certainly I do not want to cut off the fullest discussion. I had no idea the Senator had any interest that called his especial attention to the matter. Of course it is possible that he has.

Mr. OWEN. I have a very great interest. I should like to have read again the amendment which is proposed in lieu of this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I should be pleased to have the Senator from Missouri explain the exact significance of the proposed amendment.

Mr. REED. The bill as prepared sought to amend the original act. After the bill came to the committee it was discovered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] that the original act had been amended, and therefore this amendment was made to apply to the amended act. That is the reason it comes here in the form of an amendment.

The act, which is found in volume 36, Sixty-first Congress, Public Laws, reads as follows:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity except water and except natural or artificial gas by means of pipe lines, or partly by pipe lines and partly by railroad, or partly by pipe lines and partly by water, and to telegraph, telephone, and cable companies—

And so forth.

All this bill does is to strike out from the law as it now stands in one place the words "except natural or artificial gas," and to insert in another place the words "natural gas," so that the section would read, if amended:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil, natural gas, or other commodity.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Oklahoma will withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. Why strike out "artificial," referring to gas?

Mr. REED. Artificial gas?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. The way it stands now is that it shall apply to the transportation of oil, natural gas, or other commodity.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The proposed amendment reads: "and except natural or artificial gas." Why should it not apply to artificial as well as to natural gas?

Mr. REED. I know of no reason why it might not be made so to apply; but the interest I have is in getting natural gas to this great section of the country. I suppose the argument might be made that a company engaged in the manufacture of artificial gas might well be expected to furnish its own distributing plant, because the distributing plant and the manufactory are almost always in the same place, whereas natural gas must be piped great distances and across State lines. I hope the Senator will let it go through in this form.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection whatever. I simply wanted to inquire why artificial gas was excluded.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the proposed amendment is intended to have precisely the same effect as the original bill. The only reason there was any amendment made was that in 1910 we rewrote section 1 of the original interstate-commerce law and added a great deal to it, and the person who drafted the pending bill apparently overlooked the amendment of 1910.

I wish, however, to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to one point which came to me as the amendment was read by the Secretary. I fear the reference in the bill to the lines of the act may not be sufficiently definite. That is, it is proposed to insert certain words in line 3 of section 1 of the act. That probably ought to be made more certain by designating the lines as they appear in the Statutes at Large of 1910 and 1911.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator move the amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. It has just occurred to me, and it may be that it is not necessary. The Senator from Missouri can make the suggestion just as well as I can. He has the statute before him.

Mr. REED. I think it is all in proper shape, Mr. President. I ask that the vote be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has already been agreed to, the Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri, and then, on the request of the Senator from Oklahoma for a division, the Chair would have put the question again, but the Senator from Oklahoma withdrew his objection.

Mr. REED. The bill is then passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the bill is not passed yet. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am a little apprehensive that the record as made up will not show the amendment was agreed to. The Senator from Oklahoma made an objection and said he desired to discuss it.

Mr. OWEN. I withdrew the objection later.

Mr. STONE. But the question was not put afterwards. I do not think the record will show that the question was put on the amendment after the objection was withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri that the record does show that the question was put on the amendment and it was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. All right.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I understand it to be the purpose of the Senator from Missouri to except artificial gas from the operation of this law. I think that should be done. I know of no reason why the transportation of artificial gas should be made subject to the operations of this law, because the manufacture is local. I do not know of any case where artificial gas is transported from one State to another. I suggest to the Senator that there may be some doubt as to whether he has accomplished that. The language is:

After the words "transportation of oil," in the third line of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act, insert the words "natural gas."

That is all right as far as it goes.

And in the fourth and fifth lines of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act strike out the words "and except natural or artificial gas."

Should you not strike out the words "natural or," so that the clause will then read "and except artificial gas," because you want to except artificial gas?

Mr. REED. The Senator is correct about that. I move to amend by striking out of the amendment the words "natural or."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So as to read "and except artificial gas."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Let the bill be read as it now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the whole bill as it now stands.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of an act entitled "An act to create a Commerce Court and to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910, be, and the same is hereby amended as follows: After the words "transportation of oil," in the third line of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act, insert the words "natural gas"; and, in the fourth and fifth lines of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act, strike out the words "and except artificial gas."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; strike out the words "natural or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary advises the Chair that that is the way he has read it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The law should be amended by striking out of the fourth and fifth lines the words "natural or."

Mr. OWEN. It is an exception in that case.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The law as then amended would read "except water and except artificial gas."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary advises the Chair that he has read it that way.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Secretary did not read it that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the language.

The Secretary read as follows:

After the words "transportation of oil," in the third line of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act, insert the words "natural gas," and in the fourth and fifth lines of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act strike out the words "and except artificial gas."

Mr. REED. The Secretary, for once in this long mix-up, has gotten the wrong idea. The motion was to strike out the words, from the third and fourth lines, "natural or," leaving the clause read "and except artificial gas."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary advises the Chair that he so read it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. The trouble arises from the fact that the Secretary treats the amendment as though it was a proposition to strike out those words of the amended bill. The proposition is to strike out those words from the law as it exists. What you want to strike out of the bill are the words "and except artificial gas." They should be stricken out of the bill, and then it will leave the two words in the bill "natural or."

Mr. OWEN. But the amended act read "and except natural or," which was an exception, and is intended now to be included. The exception is with relation to natural gas, and when you strike out "natural or" you leave natural gas in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. REED. I see the conflict.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I may be permitted a moment, the amended bill should read this way:

After the words "transportation of oil," in the third line of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act, insert the words "natural gas," and in the third line—

Instead of the fourth; the words "natural or" occur in the third line—and in the third line of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act strike out the words "natural or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator from Utah concluded?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; I have concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will now read the bill as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of an act entitled "An act to create a Commerce Court and to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910, be, and the same is hereby amended as follows:

After the words "transportation of oil," in the third line of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act, insert the words "natural gas," and in the third line of the first paragraph of section 1 of said act strike out the words "natural or."

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the bill will be so amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to create a Commerce Court and to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes,' approved June 18, 1910."

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. OWEN. I offer the following resolution:

That the Committee on Banking and Currency is hereby authorized to have printed the indexed hearings on the pending banking and currency bill (S. 2639 and H. R. 7837), bound in paper, as a Senate document, and to employ expert assistance in perfecting the measure for submission to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to have the resolution read. It seems to me that it is a matter which has to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 208), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency is hereby authorized to have printed the indexed hearings on the pending banking and currency bill (S. 2639 and H. R. 7837) bound in paper as a Senate document, and to employ expert assistance in perfecting the measure for submission to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question. Does the expense of the work come out of the contingent fund?

Mr. OWEN. The resolution provides only for authority, and it will be for the Senate to determine from what fund it shall be paid.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the only fund it can come from. Therefore it will have to go to the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I think. It must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and be reported by the committee before it can be considered by the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I think that is the proper course for the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

POLICY OF THE ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I feel that I need not say before the Senate that the little Commonwealth of New Jersey has an intelligent community, and that we are as well a patriotic and liberty-loving community. We have lived in a tranquil way there, and our people have been following the ordinary pursuits of life, believing that we were under a constitutional government, and we so believed until the morning of the 31st of October. On that morning our people awoke to the discovery that we were no longer under a constitutional government; that we were living under a veritable dynasty; that a tyrant, brutal and horrible, was really ruling over this Nation.

Now, how came this marvelous knowledge? It took the oracle from Iowa, the distinguished Senator from that State, Senator CUMMINS, to make it known. He came to our town, and while we are intelligent we are not egotistical. We were quite willing that missionary service might come there to enlighten us. But lo! It took the oracle from Iowa to come there and tell us that we are living under the worst of governments. I hold in my hand a stenographic report of his speech:

IOWA'S SENATOR ASSAILS PRESIDENT.

Now, then:

"I regard President Wilson as an enemy to the Constitution," says Senator CUMMINS.

"I regard President Wilson as an enemy to the Constitution of the United States," declared Senator ALBERT B. CUMMINS, of Iowa, addressing a Republican mass meeting in Saengerbund Hall, North Plainfield, last night. "This is because of the big-stick methods which the President employed in compelling the passage of the Underwood-Simmons tariff law. The tariff bill was written in the White House, was agreed upon in a party caucus, and the 200,000 jobs which the President has to give out were used as the compelling force to keep the members of his party in line to vote for the passage of the tariff bill."

Now, 200,000 officers appointed! There are no more officers to be appointed in the administration of President Wilson than there were under the administration of President Taft, when the Republican Party was in power. But that is not the worst of it. Think of it!

We sometimes refer to the Czar of Russia in illustrating a powerful individual, but the power of the Czar of Russia as compared with the power of the President of the United States is like comparing a gentle zephyr to a cyclone.

The present campaign in New Jersey is of nation-wide significance from the fact that the outcome of the election on Tuesday will indicate to the country whether the people of this, President Wilson's State, accept or reject a program which he has put into effect.

Further, this distinguished gentleman found it proper and wise to say, "still harping on my daughter!"

Although President Wilson came into the Presidency in an absolutely legitimate manner—

Thanks. "An absolutely legitimate manner"—

he only received a little over 6,000,000 votes, while Taft and Roosevelt received 7,500,000 votes. There were approximately 25,000,000 citizens entitled to vote at this election, but unfortunately about 10,000,000 failed to take part in the election at all.

As I said, "still harping on my daughter." How many times have we heard this from the Republican Party ever since Woodrow Wilson was elected? I beg to remind you that President Lincoln was likewise elected in a similar way. However, that counts for but little. Woodrow Wilson is President of the United States. He is broad-minded, patriotic, and liberal, and I believe the masses of the people of the United States will hold up both hands in loud acclamation of his acts as President of the United States.

But as bad as are all these things which the distinguished Senator found it in his heart and mind to rehearse, they are not half as bad as that which is to come.

There is no moral difference—

Said the Senator from Iowa—

between the act of Huerta, President of the Mexican Republic—and this despot in the White House. Now, to think that the distinguished Senator would have so far forgotten himself as to assert that in a moral way there was no difference between the tyrant and despot of Mexico, who arrests the whole assembly of the Government of Mexico and locks them up, and the mild and placid gentleman who sits in the White House at the other end of the Avenue. I assert that the comparison is absurd and ridiculous and ungenerous.

He said further that there is no welcome written on the doormat for those who opposed President Wilson's tariff measure. This is the report of a Republican paper that is sent to me. I say to the Senator the facts will not bear that out. Welcome is written on the doormat and offered at the hands of every Member of this body, whether he be a Republican or a Democrat, whether he be for the tariff bill as passed or whether he be against it. It does not necessarily follow that in order to welcome a man he must accept all the doctrine of that element of the Republican Party or all the Republican doctrine, nor that he must swallow all the quack nostrums that may be offered by political doctors.

I insist that in this address delivered by the distinguished gentleman, while he was generous and kind enough to say many pleasant things regarding me, for which I thank him, the Senator went far beyond the bounds of good taste, far beyond the bounds of propriety—I will say nothing more in that direction—when he made this horrid comparison between Huerta, of Mexico, and President Wilson.

I believe, and I believe the country believes, that President Wilson in this unfortunate Mexican controversy is prompted by but one aim, one holy purpose, and that is humanity, justice, and liberty to those struggling people there.

The tariff bill need not now be referred to. The tariff bill is already written into law and is working out its way. Instead of stagnation and gloom there are busy shops. Hot spindles and busy wheels are the recompense that is coming to the people from the enactment of our tariff law. That law, in conjunction with the banking and currency bill, which I believe in the near future will be reported, will be the beginning of a new era for this land, the opening of a brighter dawn and a happier day for all mankind.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, one could not be otherwise than temperate in expression who has sat here day after day under the influence of my distinguished friend from New Jersey. I suppose I ought to resent being called to account in this body for what I have said elsewhere, but really I can not summon very much indignation. I do not know why. There is no great solemnity about the air of my friend from New Jersey. His vast fund of good fellowship encircles us and envelopes us all, and it is impossible for me to grow even indignant under the rebuke which he has just administered.

I advise him, however, to do something to ascertain immediately whether the stenographers, if this be a stenographic report from New Jersey, are as accurate as the Senator from New Jersey usually is.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg the Senator's pardon—

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, the Senator from New Jersey knows that I said nothing of the sort.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should hope not.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did, sir, severely criticize the tendency of the Executive of the United States to override and overpower the legislative will; I criticized the Democratic President of the United States no more severely than I criticized his predecessors. I believe if there is one danger before the American people that can not be successfully met it is the danger of Executive interference in the legislative department of the Government; and I care not who may be guilty of it, whether it be a Republican President or a Democratic President, I intend to raise my voice against it whenever the opportunity is presented. I discussed the office, not the man. I did not—

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I ask wherein the Senator from Iowa can justify the horrible comparison between Huerta, of Mexico, and the placid gentleman in the White House at the other end of the Avenue?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I did refer to the President of Mexico. Further, I stated—and, I repeat now, I did not say it in comparison, of course, with any man, but I said, and I say it now, face to face with the Senator from New Jersey, and I am glad that he has given me this opportunity to give some prominence to a sentiment that might have fallen obscure in the heat of a political campaign—that I would just as soon have my will as a Member of Congress overcome by a soldier as by any other influence from the executive department. There is no difference between the two things in moral effect. I intend to continue that criticism whenever the occasion gives me the opportunity to do so.

I believe that Congress ought to assert its independence; I believe that this constant brutling about throughout the country that we can not do what we want to do because the President insists that we shall not do it insults the dignity of the legislative branch of the Government of the United States, and it ought to receive from every patriot and from every lover of his country a rebuke.

I am not now trying the case as to whether this interference has taken place. Every man must judge for himself with regard to that. I thought it took place during the administration of President Roosevelt; I thought it took place during the administration of President Taft; and I did not hesitate to criticize both for things that were done in connection with legislation proposed. I think it has been done in the present administration. If the proof that satisfies me is insufficient to satisfy the Senator from New Jersey, then he will reach a different conclusion; but I believe it, and I intend to condemn it here and everywhere. At the same time I never lose the opportunity to pay the man who occupies the high office of President of the United States the tribute which his talents, which his great knowledge, and which his unsurpassed courage must extort from everyone who loves those virtues. My assault in New Jersey was upon the tendency of the Executive to trench upon and to invade the domain reserved by the Constitution to Congress. That tendency unfortunately grows from year to year.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Iowa has mentioned three Presidents whose influence he thinks was exerted in securing legislation or exerted upon the legislative body. I would like to inquire of the Senator if he can name any President whose influence has not been so exerted.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to be drawn into that. I suppose that this tendency is of ancient origin and that it has insensibly grown from year to year, like all misuse of power; it grows, and I am not here to say when it began; it may have originated long, long ago—indeed, I think it did—but I am here only to insist upon the integrity of the legislative will and conscience and the separation, as our forefathers intended that they should be separated, of the executive and the legislative powers of the Republic.

Of course I did not say—I could not have said—that there were 200,000 offices offered up to our friends on the other side. I said just what I said the other day when I was discussing the tariff bill, and I shall repeat, whenever I have a chance to do so, that the President of the United States holds more power than does any other man in the world; that he can exercise more influence over his fellow men than can any other man in the world; and I instanced a few days ago, as I instance now, the fact that there are 200,000 offices within his gift, as illustrating the immensity of the power that he actually has. I think it is well worth while that we should pause even in the midst of a political campaign in order to consider this fundamental truth in the affairs of our Government, namely, that we ought to preserve the complete independence of these three great branches of the power of the people. I did not intend, of course, to enter into anything of this sort.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg to remind the Senator—he speaks about the stenographer who took the notes of the speech to which I have referred—that I have seen the same statement in several other newspapers, wherein the comparison, unfortunately, was made between Huerta, the President of Mexico, and President Woodrow Wilson. I insist that, while the Senator asserts generally and very broadly that the President has used the "big stick" on Senators, I have seen no wounds. I have not agreed with the presidential idea in many things; I would have been a little more radical than he, perhaps, in some things; but I can say for myself that I have never felt the "big stick," nor do I believe that the Senator can find an instance where there has been undue, ungenerous, and unpatriotic pressure brought by the President of the United States on any Senator. Naturally, as a President elected upon a platform to serve the people, he voiced the sentiments of the people who elected him when he advocated a measure that meant tariff revision downward and not tariff revision upward; but, aside from that, I feel that there are no instances which the Senator can cite and individualize wherein the "big stick" has been used at all, and the very intimation and thought is belittling and degrading that 200,000 offices were held up to the gaze of Senators. I feel that that conception is based upon dreams of the imagination rather than upon fact.

Mr. CUMMINS. That may be, Mr. President, but I do not want it to be understood that I repudiate a single sentiment that I have heretofore announced. I believe that the presidential power has been used to coerce Members of Congress into a particular course, not now alone, but in former administrations.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, well, we are not discussing former administrations.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not said, and do not say now, that President Wilson has ever used an office in order to corrupt a Member of Congress. I have never indicated anything of the kind. I only say that there is the power; and what I declared in the Senator's State, and what I declare now, is that, so far as the permanence of free institutions goes and so far as the integrity of the Republic goes, I would rather have power exerted in the way that the President of the Mexican Republic has exerted it than in the way in which it might be exerted by the President of the United States.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am not going into dreams of the imagination, but I am referring to the manner in which the President of the United States has exerted his power during this Congress. The Senator has taken his choice. I would rather stand in living, liberty-loving America with Woodrow Wilson as President than in Mexico under Huerta under any possibility.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, Mr. President, so would I. In that respect we entirely agree.

Mr. OWEN, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. LANE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have already held the floor much longer than I intended to do. To me the notion of exciting a debate on account of a political campaign elsewhere is rather abhorrent. I am willing to meet my friends upon any side anywhere in debate, but I hardly think it comports with orderly procedure in the Senate to attempt, if you please, to restate your arguments made elsewhere. I stated them as I believed them, and I intend to state them again whenever I have an opportunity to do so; and if they do not please Senators on the other side, I must suffer their displeasure.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator from Iowa is an older Senator here than am I, and I was not aware that I was transgressing the bounds of propriety or the dignity of a Senator in reciting that which the distinguished Senator from Iowa had asserted in my own home town and, I doubt not, in many other towns. These assertions having been generally copied by the press throughout the country, it seemed to me it was at least fair and courteous that I might present the matter to him.

I have no quarrel with the Senator. I know to an extent he is joined to his idols, so that it is very hard for him to get away from them, even though his own conscience has rebelled at some things and he has gotten halfway out of the trammels of the old Republican Party, though not altogether out. I find no fault with him, but I felt that the comparison was ungenerous and unwise. I say in a most kindly way I have no bitterness in my heart, God knows. The Senator is young enough to forgive and to forget; the Senator is young enough to get over on this side; he has just stepped halfway. Come into the realms of eternal happiness; live and be happy for the rest of your days with us.

Mr. CUMMINS. I thank the Senator very much for the invitation.

Mr. OWEN and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] will be recognized by the Chair, as he first asked for recognition.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this discussion between the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] brings to mind the constant and repeated reiteration in the public press of statements suggesting the alleged undue influence of the President of the United States upon the Senate and upon the House of Representatives, and the constant suggestion that he is thus unmindful of the requirements of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, this country has but one acknowledged sovereign power, and that power is the great body of the American people, speaking their will, their conscience, and their intelligence through the constitutional methods provided by our fundamental law. The Senate is itself but one of the instruments through which that great sovereign power speaks; the House of Representatives is another agency for expressing the will of the people of the United States, and the President of the United States is another means by which the people exercise their power. Under the construction of our Government it was believed in the old days that the welfare of the people could be better served by having the governing powers divided between these three forces—the three coordinate branches of government—each of which would exercise a restraining influence on the other and prevent any one of those three coordinate branches of government as "rulers" oppressing the people and using the governing powers of the people to the actual injury of the people themselves. In the philosophy of government there should be contemplated but two actual branches of government, the executive and the legislative, because, after all, the judicial branch of the Government is but an instrumentality, historically springing from the loins of the Executive, through which the law is ascertained and determined in order to enable the Executive to administer the law according to the real meaning of the law. These divisions of government were proposed as a theoretical means to prevent those charged with the governing power, conceived as rulers, from oppressing the people, and that balancing of powers was provided also between the House and the Senate, so that the jealousy of the House and the jealousy of the Senate might prevent any act being passed which would be injurious to the people. But, Mr. President, a wiser and a better conception of the administration of our law, in my opinion, is that the Senate should recognize itself and the House should recognize itself as an instrumentality through which the people of the United States exercise the right of governing for the general welfare.

In that point of view the President of the United States should also be recognized as an important instrumentality of the governing powers of the people. Since there is a common purpose, under such a conception of government, to serve the welfare of all of the people, there is no reason why there should be any jealousy between the White House and the Senate, or between the Senate and the House of Representatives, or on the part of Congress against the Supreme Court, or the judicial branch of the Government.

These jealousies ought to be laid aside. I view them with no sympathy and with no approval. I rejoiced when Woodrow Wilson came before both branches of Congress as the Executive representative of the people of the United States and made his appeal to the legislative branch for cooperative action in favor of the general welfare. I did not regard his attitude as a "message from the throne."

I do not hesitate, as one Senator, to go and give him the very best advice of which I am capable. In the matter of his appointments, in the matter of his policy, I do not hesitate to go and talk to him with perfect freedom, because I feel that I am a servant of the people, and that I have a right to talk to him as a fellow servant of the people, and that he should listen to my counsel as I listen gladly to his.

If we view the Government in that light there will be a spirit of cooperation, of cordial good will, out of which by common counsel we will best serve the people of the United States, who elected Woodrow Wilson on the one hand and who elect Senators on the other.

Now that the people have at last, after a long, long, tedious struggle, gained control of the Senate the Senate for the first time in its history will respond to the will and the conscience and the intelligence of the people of the United States, and when it does it will feel a closer sense of cooperation with the executive branch of the Government.

The spirit to which I call your attention is penetrating this country from one end to the other. Over 200 cities of this country have merged the powers of government—the executive power, the legislative power, and the judicial power—into one hand for the more convenient and wise administration of their governing power by adopting the commission form of government for such cities. In such cases the people have put all the powers of city government—legislative, executive, and judicial—in the hands of a small commission, with the right of recalling the commissioners. If they fail to discharge their function of properly representing the governing power of the people under this improved method of governing, the commissioners may be summarily removed.

I pray the Senate not to promote a spirit of antagonism between the Senate and the Executive. I have never seen a man occupy that high office with more modesty, with more delicate and gentle diplomacy, with greater learning, with more devotion to the public welfare, or with more unflinching courage and pertinacity of purpose to actually serve the general welfare than the present occupant of that high office. I desire to see established a spirit of cordiality, of sympathetic cooperation between the Senate and the Executive, without jealousy, without fear, without hostility, and I pray my colleagues on both sides of the Chamber to help bring about this era of good feeling and mutual helpfulness in promoting the general welfare of our people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think it would be a sad day for the American Republic if ever the executive, legislative, and judicial powers were merged in one; but I deny that under this administration there has been any merging of them, any attempt to merge them, any desire to merge them, or any "tendency" to merge them.

Any Senator has a right, whether upon the stump or upon the floor of this Chamber, to criticize the President of the United States, and to criticize him within precisely the same limits as he has a right to criticize other people—the limits of truth and fairness and justice. The right to criticize no man, whether President or hod carrier, goes further than that, nor does it go further anywhere where man can state his opinion.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] said he had arraigned the tendency of the Executive to invade the legislative department of the Government while speaking in New Jersey, but if the language here given be correct—and of that, of course, I know nothing, because I was not present—that is not a correct description of what the Senator from Iowa did say on that occasion. The language reported to have been used by the Senator from Iowa is this:

There is no moral difference—

Mark the use of the word "moral"—

There is no moral difference between the act of Huerta, President of the Mexican Republic, who caused the imprisonment of Members of Congress, who failed to repeal a resolution which he wanted repealed, and the acts of President Wilson respecting the passage of the present tariff law.

The Senator this morning says, in justification of it, to use his own language:

I would just as soon have my will overcome by a soldier as in any other way.

Is this within the bounds of justice and fairness and truth? Where is the man who has "had his will overcome" by the President of the United States? How has the President of the United States induced any man to do anything except by appealing to his reason or to his party loyalty?

I do not blame the Senator from Iowa for being a little bitter toward the President of the United States upon the stump in a campaign. I can see how perhaps the only thing he could have done was to go clear outside the record, and compare him to Huerta or to somebody else with whom he was not in the slightest degree comparable.

It would not become me to undertake to say what Huerta has done, because he is the de facto head of another Government at this time; but you all know what that language means—"there is no moral difference" between these things.

Now let me come to the next charge, that the President violates the Constitution of the United States.

The Constitution of the United States makes it the duty of the President of the United States from time to time to counsel with Congress and to advise Congress—not to advise with it—in public messages.

Very frequently men seem to come to the conclusion that because the Constitution authorizes the President to advise Congress in public messages therefore he has no right to advise them in any other way. Men who say that do not know the history of their country. No man advised Congress more than did George Washington. He sent for Members of Congress and talked to them. No man advised them more than did old Thomas Jefferson. He used to ride his horse up here and hitch it under the construction shed at the other end of where this Capitol now stands, walk into the cloakrooms of the House of Representatives and the Senate, and talk chattily and pleasantly to the Members about measures that were then pending. It was generally found afterwards that thus "reasoning together in brotherly love" Congress had somehow come to entertain his opinion or he its.

The man we have now in the White House is the best informed, the best equipped, the most highly educated, and the most cultured President we have had in the White House since

Thomas Jefferson went out of it, and he resembles him somewhat. When influencing Members of Congress and the Senate he does not do it with a "big stick," as did a recent President of the United States. He does it tactfully, diplomatically, suavely. He appeals to their reason; he appeals to their affection for the party organization of which they are members—a laudable feeling laudably appealed to. He has exercised no influence upon any man save by an appeal to his reason or to his party loyalty, to that sentiment which makes a man true to the school of political thought to which he belongs.

I throw down the gauntlet here and now, for I am getting tired of it. I say the President of the United States has not used patronage to influence legislation. I say no Senator has a right to make that statement from this minute on without furnishing some proof of it somewhere, or some "evidence tending to prove it." I deny it. I say it is a slander and calumny.

I have differed with him. I still differ with him about some matters. He has not used, with me, the coercive power of reason. I suppose perhaps it was because he thought I was a pretty hard-headed individual, and it would be useless to try it; but whatever the reason may be, that is the fact.

One other word, Mr. President. The United States has never suffered by political leadership. It has had too little of it rather than too much of it. Although upon the statute books we have three separate, coordinate, and independent branches of government, yet no government in the world could be carried on like a wagon with three mules pulling three different ways. The Constitution and the law books may say forever that you are "independent and coordinate," but you have got to work interdependently, not independently—got to work harmoniously. If you do not, you will arrive at no result.

How else can three branches of a government work interdependently and harmoniously except by having each appeal to the reason of the other? So Senators and Congressmen go to the White House and advise the President. It is no new thing. A part of the duty of this august body is to advise him as well as to consent to his acts. Its members go there individually, and they advise him: "Mr. President, I think it would be ill-advised to sign this bill." "Mr. President, I think it would be ill-advised to continue in this course." "Mr. President, I think it would be well-advised to take up and push this measure."

So, upon the other hand, the President, when he meets them, with equal frankness talks to them—about what? About that which is their business and his business, and, back of both of them, the business of the people of the United States, whose agents and instrumentalities both of them are.

I have stood upon this floor and defended President Taft against this identical charge when a Senator sitting on this side made the charge that the President of the United States had no right to talk to Senators or Congressmen or to express opinions about public affairs except through a written message or through a publicly spoken message. I contended then that the President of the United States did not cease to be a citizen of the United States because he had become a President; that, upon the contrary, it was doubly, tenfold, his duty to express his opinion upon public matters after he became a President, and to use every right influence to make the right policy, as he saw it, prevail in our counsels.

We have not suffered, I say, from leadership. We have suffered from "bossism." But what is "bossism"? It is irresponsible, unofficial, unelected, unselected leadership. It is subterranean leadership. It is private leadership. It is the invisible empire. It is leadership through instrumentalities not known to the Constitution or the laws.

You will never suffer from too much official, elected, responsible, public leadership, unless the man who tries to lead has not the qualities of leadership, and then he will not have any followers. No man can lead the Senate except by appealing to its reason or its sentiments. No man can lead the House in any other way. There has not been the slightest attempt by this President to lead them in any other way.

I remember when the present occupant of the chair [Mr. THORNTON in the chair] and I had some views which the President of the United States did not share and which, later on, the Senate and the House did not share. An appeal was made to me, not by the President, but by my own idea of what was right in a free Government, to surrender my own views to the views of the majority of the school of political thought to which I belonged. That appeal, made by myself, I obeyed. Would it have been any worse if the President had made that appeal to me instead of my making it to myself? Not a particle. Was I "overcome" when I cast a vote that I did not want to cast?

Why, you might just as well say, when a man took a notion to go down the street and buy a cigar, and then began to argue with himself about it, and said "I have smoked half a dozen this morning; another one will make me nervous; I had better let it alone," and did let it alone, that he had been "overcome." You might just as well say, if he did not make the argument to himself, but the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] made it to him, that the Senator from South Carolina had "coerced" and "overcome" him, had brought some brutal outside force to bear upon him, some vis major.

I throw the gauntlet down right here and will pick up any other man's gauntlet any day. I say—and I say it that the entire American people may hear it, in so far as they care to hear my voice at all—it is not true that the President of the United States has used or attempted to use the patronage power of this Government to further any political end. I go further and I say if there is any quarrel to be picked with him upon that subject, it is that he has appointed too many men who are not Democrats to office; that he has been too little controlled by party considerations. I believe in teamwork, and I believe that the President ought to believe in it, too. I believe in interdependent working, and I think he ought to believe in it, too. If there is any criticism to be made of him at all, it is that he has not worked interdependently quite as much as he ought to have done. I do not know of any President except George Washington and James Monroe who ever sat in the White House who has paid as little attention to the practical political side of patronage as the present President of these United States has up to this good hour.

I do not know whether the Senator from Iowa used the following language or not; but if he did use it, I submit that it was uncalled-for, unjustified in any possible intendment of the language used by him:

There is no moral difference between the act of Huerta, President of the Mexican Republic, who caused the imprisonment of Members of Congress who failed to repeal a resolution which he wanted repealed and the acts of President Wilson respecting the passage of the present tariff law.

I am no respecter of persons; I am no respecter of official dignity or position. I care nothing for king, emperor, president, pope, prelate, prince, or potentate except in so far as they are worth caring for in themselves and because of doing the thing that is well to be done. I would criticize the President just as quickly upon the stump or here; I would criticize a Judge of the Supreme Court just as quickly upon the stump or here, and precisely to the same extent that I would criticize any other man and no further. The boundaries within which my criticism should fall would be the boundaries that at least my own judgment told me were the boundaries of justice and right and truth.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, November 5, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God our heavenly Father, for that "omnipotence of truth and right and love" with which Thou art daily impressing the minds and hearts of Thy children, and thus

"Through the harsh noises of our day,
A low sweet prelude finds its way;
Through clouds of doubt, and creeds of fear,
A light is breaking calm and clear."

Hasten the day, we beseech Thee, when all men shall know Thee as Father and through an unselfish devotion to their fellow men worship Thee in deed and in truth. In the Christ Spirit. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed Senate bill 3345, to amend an act entitled "An act to create a commerce court and to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed Senate bills of the following titles:

On October 24, 1913:

S. 3296. An act to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to employ additional clerks on heirship work in the Indian Office.

On October 30, 1913:

S. 1673. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant further extensions of time within which to comply with the law and make proof on desert-land entries in the counties of Grant and Franklin, State of Washington.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3345. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to create a commerce court and to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. J. Res. 74. Joint resolution appropriating money for the payment of certain claims on account of labor, supplies, materials, and cash furnished in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel; to the Committee on Claims.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech delivered on September 26, 1913, at San Diego, Cal., on the occasion of the dedication of a site for a monument to Balboa, by one of our distinguished colleagues, Hon. ROBERT L. HENRY, of Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks unanimous consent that a speech of the Hon. ROBERT L. HENRY, of Texas, at the opening of the San Diego Exposition, be published in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think it was on Friday or Saturday we ordered published in the RECORD a speech delivered by the same distinguished colleague in South Carolina recently. Now, I do not think I shall object, but it seems to me that I would much rather hear the speech, and, as we have plenty of time and the gentleman from Texas has been away delivering a speech in California and another in South Carolina, would not he be willing, as a favor to his colleagues, to deliver this speech to the House here now?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is asked a question.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman it is not that kind of a speech. It would sound better if it was read.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the better the speech the better the reception it will receive here. I shall not object, but I would like to hear the gentleman from Texas make a speech in the House.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Texas will respond to that request at some later date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a discussion of the currency bill by Hon. George Campbell, of Coffeyville, Kans. Mr. Campbell was some years ago a member of the senate of Kansas. He has written a very interesting article—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas couple his request with that of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; I shall not do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut to address the House for five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Now, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] asks unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a speech on the subject of currency by the Hon. George Campbell, of Coffeyville, Kans. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ABSENTEEISM.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut is now recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I will read from the RECORD of Saturday. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority leader, has stated that my grammar was like my facts in regard to the law of the United States. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Connecticut's grammar and the rules governing the same are very few. It is also true that his vocabulary is somewhat limited, but, just the same, sufficient to express the thoughts in his mind.

I read now from section 40 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition, 1878:

The Secretary of the Senate and Sergeant at Arms of the House, respectively, shall deduct from the monthly payments of each Member or Delegate the amount of his salary for each day that he has been absent from the Senate or House, respectively, unless such Member or Delegate assigns as the reason for such absence the sickness of himself or of some member of his family.

The only reason that is to be assigned for their absence is sickness of themselves or members of their families. And Mr. Speaker, that is the supreme law of the land, notwithstanding the great mind from Illinois to the contrary. [Laughter.] It is joint action, and until repealed it must remain the law of the land; and I challenge the gentleman from Illinois to dare to repeal the act.

Now, even throwing that statute in the wastebasket, it is still a violation of the law for Members to absent themselves. No Member here can take away the right of a congressional district to be represented in this body except for treason, and any motion or any act that one blinds with another in the way of a pair is an illegal act, except for sickness, and it does not allow the well Member to go away. That is the law—the moral law, the higher law.

I have but two rules, Mr. Speaker. The first is to tell the truth. The other one is to hew to the line and let the chips fall where they will—an old saying of many years. I had always supposed, being present here for many weeks and months, that the Member from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was sincere in his maneuvers until the other day, when, either through barter or trade, he fixed upon those whom he allows to go without his objection, which, to say the least, is not honorable.

The gentleman stated on that same day that he was not a politician. He practically stated that he is the ablest Member of this body. [Laughter.] He has stated, when a reference was made to another leader of the minority, that that leader was not as alert as this one, which means that he is the most alert. [Laughter.]

He is not a politician. I hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a copy of the Chicago Tribune, a paper of much circulation, published in the district of the gentleman from Illinois. It is a reply to his political activity in a way. I read:

Mr. MANN is a gentleman of precise attainments. He would know exactly how many pins were in a paper of pins, but he might be in doubt whether to use them as railroad spikes or bayonets. He is a marvel of minutia. Like a Gulliver, with a head full of small, precise information, he wanders through a Brobdingnag of big ideas and sees only the buttons on the shoes. He could tell the number of seeds distributed by the Government in any 1 year or any 10 years; he would know whether 2 cents more or 2 cents less had been appropriated for Peace River in 1909 than in 1911; he would know the cubic air space of the Hall of the House of Representatives, the amount of grass seed sown on the White House lawn, the ruling of the Speaker in any case at any time, the number of pages in any book in the Congressional Library.

In Lilliput Mr. MANN is a giant.

So says the Chicago Tribune of July 4, 1913. [Laughter.] He is not a politician, he says. He does not know much about it, but he is a hard-working cuss. I read further:

He is the same gentleman who comes biennially to the Tribune office with the somewhat plaintive plea that the chances of his election and, therefore, of his continued usefulness to the country lie in the discretion of the Tribune. The flattery never is deceptive, and the Tribune never has regarded itself as the second congressional district of Illinois or as the paramount influence in that district. But the fact and aspersive MANN can cringe a bit when an election is a month off, and when he cringes his words are honey. Therefore we do not respect Mr. MANN in his error. He is honest in it. We hope, however, that next year Mr. MANN will have the courage of his convictions and not apply to this "unscrupulous" newspaper for support. We would, at least, respect him if he would stay away from this office.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue until he concludes his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] be permitted to proceed until he concludes his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DONOVAN. I thank the Member from Illinois. He is as liberal with his compliments as he is with his criticisms. [Laughter.]

If he were merely Mr. MANN, a paragraph might describe him as a dunderhead and answer his felicitous comment on the Mulhall exposure; but Mr. MANN is the leader of the Republican Party in the House of Representatives, and he expresses the sanctimonious horror of men who shudder at the revelation and not at the thing revealed.

Now, in regard to hewing to the line and letting the chips fall where they will, I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois to tell the truth when he rises to his feet, and it will be the truth if he will say that the most aggravated case of absenteeism is on his side of the House, and the case I have in mind is that of a Member from New York. The gentleman from Illinois has studiously and carefully avoided noticing the absence of those on his side. There is another flagrant case of absenteeism on his side that received its just rebuke yesterday. The case I have reference to is of a gentleman of the minority who sometimes takes the place as leader of the minority in the absence of the gentleman from Illinois, and who became his party's candidate for governor, and, for the first time in the history of his State, the Republican ticket ran third. I refer to Mr. GARDNER, a gentleman whose grammar is always correct. I believe it is Bostonese without doubt, don't you know, and one of the most cultured ones in the House; and if you look up his record you will find him a stickler in opposing the criticism of a Member in his absence. It is impossible to criticize that distinguished character at any other time except in his absence. I had thought, Mr. Speaker, that this great leader, to show his impartiality and to show his sincerity, in speaking of these people avoiding their duty, would not spare a Member because he was tagged with the Republican ticket.

I received a note this morning from one who used to occupy these galleries and had become impressed with the leader of the minority.

Mr. MANN has an acid tongue. I like to read what he says, but I was quite disgusted to happen on an expression used earlier in the session, "this peanut pimple," referring to some one, I don't remember just who. Even Homer sometimes nods, though.

It was grammatical on the part of Mr. MANN to designate the character of some one as a peanut pimple. I turn and leave the gentleman, the leader of the minority, to the pains and penalties of condoning wrong, assisting in violation of the law, as he did the other day when he rose from his seat and made some jocular remarks, returned to his seat again and allowed the Members to depart, and immediately hid behind the grammar of the Member from Connecticut, and claimed extenuation because of that. What a picture for a great leader, an able man, many years here, to look for an excuse for the want of doing right himself.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks leave to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I shall not attempt to advertise the gentleman from Connecticut, as he undoubtedly hopes I will, or to reply to what might by some be called remarks concerning myself. I do not need any defense in this House; or, if I do, I shall not make it myself.

The other day the gentleman from Connecticut stated that it was against the law for the House to grant leaves of absence except for illness of the Member or in the Member's family. I stated that that was not the law. The gentleman from Connecticut stated that he would read the law to the House. I have not in recent years looked up the law upon the subject, but I did at one time, and I am positive that the gentleman from Connecticut will not read that law. He has not read the law to the House; but I dare say he will find in the statutes a provision directing the Sergeant at Arms to deduct the pay of Members who are absent, except when they are absent for illness of themselves or of members of their families. That is a provision directed to the Sergeant at Arms, which has nothing to do with leave granted by the House. My recollection is—and I may be mistaken about it—that there is a provision that the mileage of Members shall be deducted proportionately for absence unless they are absent by leave of the House, there being no provision in either of the sections that the House shall not grant leave of absence except for illness.

Now, the gentleman from Connecticut repeats that not only myself, but the House, consented to a violation of the law the other day. That is a serious charge. I ask the gentleman from Connecticut to read the statute, if he has it before him, which forbids the House to grant leave of absence except for illness of a Member or illness in his family; and if the gentleman from Connecticut is unable to read that provision of the statute, he stamps himself as a slanderer of the House, and ought to resign his office.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. HULL. I will withhold it for a moment, at the request of the gentleman.

Mr. DONOVAN. In reply—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must get leave of the House to reply.

Mr. DONOVAN. I ask for two minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks leave to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOVAN. The law I refer to was cited by the Speaker on that day in administering the oath to Maj. NEELEY, "without evasion." This provides for absence only in case of sickness. There is no provision to let a Member go unless it is treason.

I will quote the words of a noble Roman, the noblest one amongst us:

It is not right, as I see it, for a man to take the Government money for the discharge of the duties of an office and then neglect the duties of that office.

That is from the gentleman from Missouri who occupies the Speaker's chair. He goes further:

I do not propose to neglect the duties of that office to go on the lecture platform and lecture for money.

I suggest those simple words in blunt, plain language to some of our associates.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record a speech delivered by the Hon. WILLIAM H. MURRAY, of Oklahoma, at the Mohonk conference, in October, 1913, in relation to restrictions of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to have inserted in the Record the speech made by the Hon. WILLIAM H. MURRAY at the Mohonk conference touching the Five Civilized Tribes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Mohonk conference was held while the House was in session. This is a matter of greater importance to the House than it is to the Mohonk conference. Why does not the gentleman from Oklahoma give the House the information instead of leaving the House while it is in session, preventing the House from transacting business, and going off and delivering the speech?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I believe I should be accurate if I said that the gentleman from Oklahoma remained here attending the sessions of the House and sent his address to the conference, where it was read.

Mr. MANN. I wish he had delivered it here. I shall not object, however.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I am providing now for the delivery of it here.

Mr. MANN. I am afraid the gentleman is embalming it for him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

UNIVERSAL DISARMAMENT.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record some remarks on the resolution introduced by me several days ago on the subject of universal peace.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend in the Record a speech made by himself on universal peace. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE STEEL BUSINESS.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to insert in the Record a speech made by Mr. E. H. Gary, of Chicago, to the Iron and Steel Institute of America.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to insert in the Record a speech made by Mr. E. H. Gary. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman on what subject this speech treats.

Mr. AUSTIN. The business conditions and growth of the steel business in the United States—at home and abroad.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 48, nays 23, answered "present" 12, not voting 346, as follows:

 The name of Mr. SMITH of Minnesota was called, and he answered "Present."
 Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," and I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and be recorded "present."
 The name of Mr. MANN was called, and he answered "Present."
 Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I find that I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. DICKINSON, which fact I had forgotten. I therefore wish to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."
 The name of Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska was called, and he answered "Present."
 The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
 Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, November 6, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3259) granting a pension to Robert F. Tietz; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5100) granting a pension to Julia M. Ashby; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. L'ENGLE: A bill (H. R. 9113) to prescribe the form of poisonous and nonpoisonous tablets, lozenges, and troches, and to reduce the danger of accidental poisoning; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. AUSTIN: A bill (H. R. 9114) to prohibit interstate carriers from transporting products of any factory or mine in which convicts are worked; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 9115) to provide for reserving from the public lands in the State of Oregon as a public park for the benefit of the people of the United States, and for the protection and preservation of the game, fish, timber, and all other natural objects therein, a tract of land herein described, etc.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9116) to provide pensions for the officers and soldiers of the Indian wars of the United States which occurred prior to the year 1880; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9117) providing for the manner of making payment for water rights under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9118) providing that certain soldiers and sailors who served in the United States Army and Navy or Marine Corps during the Civil War, the War with Spain, or the Philippine insurrection for 90 days shall have a preference right in making entry on the public lands of the United States hereafter open to settlement; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9119) to regulate the selection of lieu lands by railroads in the State of Oregon; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 9120) making an appropriation of $750,000 for the construction of a dredger to be used in the improvement of the harbor of the Columbia River; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. TAVENNER: A bill (H. R. 9179) granting a pension to Leo C. Zindel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petition of the S. W. Miller Piano Co., of Sheboygan, Wis., protesting against provisions of the original Kahn bill, known as House bill 7595; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DANFORTH: Petition of F. Granger Hall, jr., of Dansville, N. Y., for installation of Hall improved patent life-line gun on seagoing vessels as a part of the life-saving equipment; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Petition of the Twenty-eighth Ward Tax Paying Protective Association, of Brooklyn, N. Y., protesting against any movement to abandon the Brooklyn Navy Yard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia: Petitions of sundry citizens of West Virginia, favoring the bill (H. R. 5308) relative to mail-order houses; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania: Evidence in support of House bill 7833, for the relief of Sarah Jane Burroughs; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of House bill 5419, for the relief of William Woodhouse; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of House bill 6842, for the relief of James A. Roche; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: Petition of the headquarters department of Oregon, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, protesting against any change in the flag of the United States of America; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MANN: Petition of the Illinois Manufacturing Association, favoring changes in the Glass banking and currency bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, November 6, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE, UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, November 6, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,
President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. OVERMAN. I present resolutions adopted at a meeting of the executive committee of the North Carolina Bankers' Association, held at Raleigh, N. C., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NORTH CAROLINA BANKERS' ASSOCIATION,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY AND TREASURER,
Henderson, N. C.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the North Carolina Bankers' Association, held in Raleigh on the 29th of September to discuss the currency bill now pending before Congress, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted at said meeting:

"Resolved, That we believe the present bill now pending before Congress, with some modifications, would meet the requirements of the country and that, in our judgment, the recommendations of the recent conference in Chicago of representative banking interests of the country furnished a reasonable ground for the modification of the pending currency bill.

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to our Members of Congress and to the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Banking and Currency, respectively."

Geo. A. Holderness, Thos. E. Cooper, J. L. Armfield, W. A. Hunt, C. P. McNeely, C. V. Brown, T. A. Uzzell, W. B. Drake, E. O. Anderson, L. S. Covington, E. C. Rae, A. L. Davis.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER FLOODS.

Mr. WALSH. I present resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Missoula and the Commercial Club of Helena, in my State, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, and I ask that one of them may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana will signify the one he wishes to have read.

Mr. WALSH. Either one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolutions.

The Secretary read the resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Missoula, Mont., as follows:

Whereas the Democratic, Republican, and Progressive Parties in their 1912 platforms declared that flood protection of the lower Mississippi River and the reclamation of its alluvial lands was a national obligation; and

Whereas we believe these declarations should be enacted into legislation; and

Whereas we believe the protection of this vast area from floods caused by the drainage from 31 States of the Union and its reclamation will benefit the whole Nation and is a work of such magnitude that it justifies separate treatment: Therefore

Resolved, That this association urges upon Congress the immediate adoption of legislation for flood protection and reclamation of this section of our country and by methods approved by the United States engineers.

MISSOULA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

There being no objection, the resolutions of the Commercial Club of Helena, Mont., were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by Helena Commercial Club October 24, 1913.

Whereas the Democratic, Republican, and Progressive Parties in their 1912 platforms declared that flood protection of the lower Mississippi River and the reclamation of its alluvial lands was a national obligation; and

Whereas we believe these declarations should be enacted into legislation; and

Whereas we believe the protection of this vast area from floods caused by the drainage from 31 States of the Union and its reclamation will benefit the whole Nation and is a work of such magnitude that it justifies separate treatment: Therefore

Resolved, That this association urges upon Congress the immediate adoption of legislation for flood protection and reclamation of this section of our country and by methods approved by the United States engineers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

TRIAL OF MENDEL BEILIS.

Mr. ROOT. I present the petition of Joseph Silbern, delegate-councilor from the city of New York of the Universal Esperanto Association, and 62 other citizens of New York City, requesting consideration of the "Appeal of 135 of the most prominent legislators, officials, and members of the liberal professions in Bohemia" in relation to the so-called "ritual murder case" in the city of Kiev, Russia. An original copy of the appeal and translation accompanies the petition.

I move that the petition and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. VARDAMAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2609) to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.," approved February 26, 1904, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 125) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1346) to authorize the Eastern Maine Railroad to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge without a draw across the Penobscot River between the cities of Bangor and Brewer, in the State of Maine, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 126) thereon.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS IN ALASKA.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, in 1912 an appropriation of $30,000 was made for the relief of sufferers from the eruption of a volcano in Alaska. About $4,000 of that $30,000 remains unexpended, and the House has passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 139) authorizing the expenditure of the remaining $4,000 for the relief of the sufferers at Nome, Alaska, by the recent very severe storm there. The joint resolution which passed the House came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask unanimous consent that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and that it now be considered by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be relieved from the further consideration of House joint resolution 139. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I have made the request because of the difficulty, which we all understand, in obtaining a quorum of the committee. This is a very small sum, and the situation is an exceedingly urgent one. This storm wrought great damage at Nome; it swept away, for instance, the surface of the earth from the burial ground, exposing the bodies of the dead, and has left an appalling condition there, which appeals for immediate relief. In order to get some immediate relief for those sufferers the House has passed this joint resolution, which carries only $4,000, being an unexpended balance of a sum which was originally appropriated for the relief of the volcano sufferers in Alaska, as stated. The joint resolution simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to expend this small sum of $4,000 for the relief of the sufferers at Nome, who are in a very perilous condition at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure there is no member of the Committee on Appropriations nor of the Senate who would object to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution, and I believe the Senator from Virginia would have been perfectly justified in reporting the joint resolution from the committee and asking for its immediate consideration without having the committee discharged therefrom.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am sure the committee would have sustained me in doing so, but I thought it would be freer from objection to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to relieve the committee and to have the joint resolution considered by the Senate at once.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, under ordinary circumstances I would object to a procedure that is irregular, but I am one of the offenders myself, being a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I have been absent, and therefore could not attend the meeting of the committee. It seems to me that under the circumstances there ought not to be any objection to the procedure for which the Senator from Virginia asks.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 139) to relieve destitution among the native people and residents of Alaska.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably with an amendment Senate resolution 208, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 208, submitted by Mr. OWEN November 3, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency is hereby authorized to have printed the indexed hearings on the pending banking and currency bills (S. 2639 and H. R. 7837), bound in paper as a Senate document, and to employ expert assistance in perfecting the measure for submission to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no desire to object to the present consideration of the resolution, but I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if there is an amendment suggested by the committee to the resolution which he reports, or is the resolution reported just as it was originally introduced?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is an amendment reported by the committee limiting the clerical assistance to such as may be ordered by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. By what committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. By the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not yet asked whether unanimous consent is given to the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi if this resolution applies to any committee except the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the resolution the following:

Payment for such expert assistance as the committee may order to be made from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just one other question. Does the Senator from Mississippi think that it is necessary to have printed the indexed hearings on the pending banking and currency bills both of the Senate and the House of Representatives?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand that there will be two indices. There is to be one index for both, as I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. One index will cover both?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Both, as I understand; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what the resolution says:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency is hereby authorized to have printed the indexed hearings on the pending banking and currency bills (S. 2639 and H. R. 7837), bound in paper as a Senate document, and to employ expert assistance in perfecting the measure for submission to the Senate.

I wanted to know whether the Senator's idea was to have the hearings printed in one volume, or whether there was to be a volume for the hearings on the Senate bill and a volume for those on the House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand, the hearings are to be in one volume, or one book, at any rate—they may run into two volumes.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I will say there were no hearings had in the House on the bill, so the resolution can only refer to the Senate hearings.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it seems to me the resolution ought to be amended by striking out the words "and H. R. 7837."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand, while there are two bills, the resolution refers to only one set of hearings, to wit, the hearings had before the Senate committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Then would it not be the proper thing to strike out the words "and H. R. 7837"?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The hearings were upon that bill as well as upon the Senate bill. The hearings were really upon that bill, although both bills are before the Senate committee.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] says that there were no hearings had upon the House bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The House bill was the bill that was referred to the Senate committee, and the hearings began upon the House bill, of course, although they necessarily covered both bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest that the difficulty would be relieved by inserting, after the word "hearings," the words "by the Banking and Currency Committee" or "before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to that amendment. I move to amend the amendment reported by the committee by inserting the words "by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

OYSTER BEDS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Fisheries I report back without amendment the bill (S. 3199) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars, and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto, in waters within the State of Florida, and I submit a report (No. 128) thereon. It is a very brief bill and quite an important one, affecting particularly the State of Florida. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there is a brief report on the bill containing a letter from the Department of Commerce, which I should like to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report as requested.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the report is read may I ask the Senator if there is not a move on foot to have all oyster beds of the country examined and investigated by the Department of Commerce?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not prepared to say as to that. I know that the department is in favor of this bill and has recommended its passage.

Mr. SMOOT. I was wondering, if that policy is to be followed out, whether it would not be best to have legislation of a general character rather than to have examinations made as to particular States.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am inclined to think that that might possibly be developed later on, but it will take some time to do that. There has been considerable correspondence regarding this situation, and it is considered quite important that early action be taken with reference to this matter in Florida.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that I have received a great many letters of late, not as to the oyster beds of Florida but as to an examination of all the oyster beds of the country, and I think there is a move on foot to have that accomplished.

Mr. FLETCHER. That may possibly follow. The estimates are being prepared now for this particular item in connection with the appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, and I should be glad if the Senator will allow this bill to take its regular course.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I was unable to hear the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; I do not ask to have the bill again read, but I am going to ask the Senator from Florida a question. Does the bill apply only to the oyster reefs in the State of Florida?

Mr. FLETCHER. Only to the State of Florida.

Mr. VARDAMAN. We have a little industry of that kind in the State of Mississippi, and I did not know whether or not the bill was general in its application.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe the Senator from Florida asked that the report be read, and I should like to hear it read before granting consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report (No. 128) submitted this day by Mr. FLETCHER, as follows:

SURVEY OF OYSTER GROUNDS ON THE COAST OF FLORIDA.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Fisheries, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 3199:

The Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3199) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto in waters within the State of Florida, having considered the same, submit a favorable report thereon.

The bill has the approval of the Department of Commerce, as will appear by the following:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, October 25, 1913.

Hon. J. R. THORNTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The department acknowledges the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, transmitting, for an expression of opinion, a copy of Senate bill 3199, providing for a survey of oyster grounds on the coast of Florida.

The project embraced by this bill has already been the subject of considerable correspondence, and the department has stated that it is willing to make the desired survey, inasmuch as the benefits to the State of Florida will be large and permanent. The passage of the bill is therefore advocated and the amount referred to, viz, $10,000, for carrying out the purposes of the bill has been included in the estimates of the department for the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries for the next fiscal year.

Very truly, yours,

E. F. SWEET,
Acting Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, section 3 of the bill is a superfluity. It provides "that this act shall take effect from the date of its passage." As a matter of fact, it will take effect upon its approval by the President of the United States. So I ask the Senator from Florida to eliminate that section of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 7, it is proposed to strike out:

Sec. 3. That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN LAWS AND TREATIES.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Printing I report a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 209) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the illustrations accompanying the proclamations of the President and included in the manuscript of Senate Document No. 719, Sixty-second Congress, "Laws, agreements, Executive orders, proclamations, etc., relating to Indian affairs," be printed therewith, and that 500 additional copies of said document be printed for sale by the superintendent of documents of the Government Printing Office.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if this is a resolution which has been before the Committee on Printing?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Joint Committee on Printing; yes. The Joint Committee on Printing had the matter up for consideration this morning. The document ordered printed will be the third volume of Kappler's compilation. This resolution provides for printing the illustrations with it, and 500 additional copies, because volumes 1 and 2 have been previously printed and sold, and the printing of the 500 additional copies will enable the holders of volumes 1 and 2 to complete their sets.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SNAKE RIVER BRIDGE, IDAHO.

Mr. VARDAMAN. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2779) to authorize the conveyance of the steel bridge over the Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., to the States of Idaho and Washington or local subdivisions thereof, and I submit a report (No. 127) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the report.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to take up this bill for consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 3395) granting a pension to Alice M. David; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 3396) to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to establish a bureau of immigration and naturalization and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States"; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 3397) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to mining claims; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 3398) to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce"; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. BURLEIGH):

A bill (S. 3399) granting an increase of pension to Edward P. Carman; and

A bill (S. 3400) granting a pension to John Rollins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3401) granting an increase of pension to Adoniram C. Harper; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3402) granting an increase of pension to Henry T. Bevans (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 3403) to abolish the office of receiver of public moneys at Springfield, Mo., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 3404) to restore First Lieut. James P. Barney, retired, to the active list of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3405) granting a pension to Mary Carpenter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 3406) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Bishop (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

TREATIES AND CONVENTIONS.

Mr. BRISTOW. I submit a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution (S. Res. 210) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 1,000 additional copies of the Senate documents, volumes 47 and 48, Sixty-first Congress, second session, entitled "Treaties, Conventions, International Acts, and Protocols Between the United States and Other Powers, 1776 to 1909," together with the supplement including treaties, conventions, important protocols, and international acts to which the United States may have been a party from January 1, 1910, to March 4, 1913, inclusive, same to be placed at the disposal of Members of the Senate in the Senate folding room.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the resolution. May it be read again?

Mr. BRISTOW. I have asked that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADDRESS BY LORD HALDANE (S. DOC. NO. 233).

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an address delivered before the American Bar Association at Montreal, Canada, in September last, by Lord Haldane, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, entitled "Higher Nationality, a Study in Law and Ethics," be printed as a public document. It is an address of the highest order of ability and of the greatest usefulness, and I know there is a very general desire on the part of the people of the United States to have greater opportunity to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the document referred to by him be printed as a public document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT WILSON (S. DOC. NO. 234).

Mr. CHILTON. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record and as a public document the address by President Wilson delivered at Swarthmore College, Pa., on October 25, 1913. I have complied with the rule by having an estimate made. It will cost between six and seven dollars. If it were estimated in the hundreds instead of in the units, I think it would be well worth the money.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed as a public document, and also to be printed in the Record, as follows:

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT WILSON AT SWARTHMORE COLLEGE, SWARTHMORE, PA., OCTOBER 25, 1913.

Your excellency, Mr. Clothier, Mr. President: That greeting sounds very familiar, and I am reminded of an anecdote told of that good artist, but better wit, Oliver Herford. On one occasion, being seated at his club at lunch, a man whose manners he did not very much relish came up to him and slapped him on the back and said, "Hello, Ollie, old boy, how are you?" He looked up at the man somewhat coldly, and said, "I don't know your name and I don't know your face, but your manners are very familiar." The manners exemplified in that cheer are delightfully familiar.

I find myself unaffectedly embarrassed to-day. I want to say, in sincere compliment, that I do not like to attempt an extemporaneous address following so finished an orator as the one who has just taken his seat. Moreover, I am somewhat confused as to my identity. I am told by psychologists that I would not know who I am to-day if I did not remember who I was yesterday; but when I recollect that yesterday I was a college president, that does not assist me in establishing my identity to-day. On the contrary, this very presence, the character of this audience, this place with its academic memories, all combine to remind me that the greater part of my active life has been spent in companies like this, and it will be difficult for me in what follows of this address to keep out of the old ruts of admonition which I have been accustomed to follow in the rôle of college president.

No one can stand in the presence of a gathering like this, on a day suggesting the memories which this day suggests, without asking himself what a college is for. There have been times when I have suspected that certain undergraduates did not know. I remember that in days of discouragement as a teacher I gratefully recalled the sympathy of a friend of mine in the Yale faculty, who said that after 20 years of teaching he had come to the conclusion that the human mind had infinite resources for resisting the introduction of knowledge. Yet I have my serious doubts as to whether the main object of a college is the introduction of knowledge. It may be the transmission of knowledge through the human system, but not much of it sticks. Its introduction is temporary; it is for the discipline of the hour. Most of what a man learns in college he assiduously forgets afterwards. Not because he purports to forget it, but because the crowding events of the days that follow seem somehow to eliminate it.

What a man ought never to forget with regard to a college is that it is a nursery of principle and of honor. I can not help thinking of William Penn as a sort of spiritual knight who went out upon his adventures to carry the torch that had been put in his hands, so that other men might have the path illuminated for them which led to justice and to liberty. I can not admit that a man establishes his right to call himself a college graduate by showing me his diploma. The only way he can prove it is by showing that his eyes are lifted to some horizon which other men less instructed than he have not been privileged to see. Unless he carries freight of the spirit he has not been bred where spirits are bred.

This man Penn, representing the sweet enterprise of the quiet and powerful sect that called themselves Friends, proved his right to the title by being the friend of mankind. He crossed the ocean, not merely to establish estates in America, but to set up a free commonwealth in America and to show that he was of the lineage of those who had been bred in the best traditions of the human spirit. I would not be interested in celebrating the memory of William Penn if his conquest had been merely a material one. Sometimes we have been laughed at—by foreigners in particular—for boasting of the size of the American Continent, the size of our own domain as a nation; for they have, naturally enough, suggested that we did not make it. But I claim that every race and every man is as big as the thing that he takes possession of, and that the size of America is in some sense a standard of the size and capacity of the American people. And yet the mere extent of the American conquest is not what gives America distinction in the annals of the world, but the professed purpose of the conquest which was to see to it that every foot of this land should be the home of free, self-governed people, who should have no government whatever which did not rest upon the consent of the governed. I would like to believe that all this hemisphere is devoted to the same sacred purpose and that nowhere can any government endure which is stained by blood or supported by anything but the consent of the governed.

The spirit of Penn will not be stayed. You can not set limits to such knightly adventures. After their own day is gone their spirits stalk the world, carrying inspiration everywhere that they go and reminding men of the lineage, the fine lineage, of those who have sought justice and right. It is no small matter, therefore, for a college to have as its patron saint a man who went out upon such a conquest. What I would like to ask you young people to-day is: How many of you have devoted yourselves to the like adventure? How many of you will volunteer to carry these spiritual messages of liberty to the world? How many of you will forego anything except your allegiance to that which is just and that which is right? We die but once, and we die without distinction if we are not willing to die the death of sacrifice. Do you covet honor? You will never get it by serving yourself. Do you covet distinction? You will get it only as the servant of mankind. Do not forget, then, as you walk these classic places, why you are here. You are not here merely to prepare to make a living. You are here in order to enable the world to live more amply, with greater vision, with a finer spirit of hope and achievement. You are here to enrich the world, and you impoverish yourself if you forget the errand.

It seems to me that there is no great difference between the ideals of the college and the ideals of the State. Can you not translate the one into the other? Men have not had to come to college, let me remind you, to quaff the fountains of this inspiration. You are merely more privileged than they. Men out of every walk of life, men without advantages of any kind, have seen the vision, and you, with it written large upon every page of your studies, are the more blind if you do not see it when it is pointed out. You could not be forgiven for overlooking it. They might have been. But they did not await instruction. They simply drew the breath of life into their lungs, felt the aspirations that must come to every human soul, looked out upon their brothers, and felt their pulses beat as their fellows' beat, and then sought by counsel and action to move forward to common ends that would be crowned with honor and achievement. This is the only glory of America. Let every generation of Swarthmore men and women add to the strength of that lineage and the glory of that crown of life!

PAINT CREEK COAL FIELDS, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed 1,000 copies of the evidence taken in the West Virginia coal-strike investigation. I will say in this connection that the evidence has been printed in two separate volumes. Five hundred copies, I think, have been printed. The third volume is printed separately, and has been completed. There is a great demand for this evidence. We can not supply it. I think 1,000 copies will be necessary to supply the demand thus far.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia if he knows how much the 1,000 copies will cost?

Mr. SWANSON. I have not made an estimate. It will be three or four thousand pages, I presume.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I am afraid, under the printing laws, we can not, by the simple action of the Senate, have them printed. If it is three volumes of 3,000 pages, I think a thousand copies will cost more than the $500; and if that is the case, then, of course, the only way it can be done is by a joint resolution.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that the evidence be printed to the extent that is permissible under the rules—to the extent of $500.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to and reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That so many copies as can be furnished for $500 of the hearings held before the committee appointed to make an investigation of conditions in the Paint Creek district, W. Va., be printed for the use of the Committee on Education and Labor.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until next Monday at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN Q. ADAMS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the bill (S. 2576) for the relief of John Q. Adams, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I may make a brief statement in regard to the bill and then I think there will be no objection to it.

It is a bill for the purpose of validating the homestead entry of John Q. Adams, who made a homestead entry within the Bellefourche irrigation project. He was disqualified to make such an entry because he had previously made an entry on lands in Oklahoma. But he was informed by the officer before whom he made his application for the entry that, he having entered only 88 acres in Oklahoma, he was a qualified entryman in the Bellefourche project, and hence he made this entry. He offered his proof. The proof was rejected and the entry held for cancellation. But the Secretary of the Interior recommends that this entry be validated.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President—

Mr. STERLING. I will just read from the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. KERN. I think there is no objection to the passage of the bill without further explanation.

Mr. STERLING. Very well. There is a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Lands in favor of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read.

There being no objection, the bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the homestead entry of John Q. Adams, made June 23, 1909, for farm unit A on the Bellefourche reclamation project, South Dakota, under the act of June 17, 1902, for lots 1 and 2, section 2, township 9 north, range 4 east, Black Hills meridian, shall be validated, subject to future compliance with the law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am very much interested in hearing the explanation of the nature of the bill upon which the Senator from South Dakota entered. Ordinarily I should feel very much indisposed to accede to the passage of any special act permitting any particular individual to appropriate a particular piece of land. There must be some unusual circumstance which would justify action of that character upon the part of Congress. I assume as a matter of course that some special reason exists in this particular instance, and I should like very much to hear the Senator continue.

Mr. STERLING. Very well. I was about to proceed to explain it when it was suggested that there was no necessity for a further statement. As I stated, this claimant was not qualified to make an entry in the Bellefourche irrigation project for the simple reason that under the instructions of the Department of the Interior a unit, being 80 acres within that project, was considered equivalent to 160 acres of land taken elsewhere. He had already taken and proved up on 88.77 acres in Oklahoma. He thought, however, that having taken only that much land he was entitled to take at least 80 acres more, and was so informed by the clerk of the court in that county when he came to make his application for filing on a tract within this project. So, in perfect good faith, he made this entry, and he has lived there since 1909 and put $1,200 worth of improvements upon the land. It is, I think, all the property he has. He is an old soldier, having served four years in the Civil War, and is now 65 or 66 years of age. I will just read the concluding statement in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior. After a recital of the facts by the Secretary of the Interior, he says:

This entry is similar to the entries of Benjamin F. Martz and Gyerluf Hanson, which were validated by the act of March 7, 1912 (37 Stat., pt. 2, p. 3).

In view of the fact that the entryman has fully complied with the homestead laws, I have to recommend that the bill pass, in order that the entry may remain intact and pass to patent upon compliance with the terms and conditions of the reclamation act.

An appeal has been taken from the decision rejecting his proof to the Secretary of the Interior, but there is no question but what, in view of the previous decisions, the entry will be held to be canceled unless it is validated by this act.

In drawing up this bill I followed the bill for the relief of the two parties named, Benjamin F. Martz and Gyerluf Hanson.

Mr. WALSH. I did not quite understand from the Senator upon whose advice it was that the applicant was permitted to make this filing.

Mr. STERLING. It was on the advice of the clerk of the court. I will read further from the letter of the Secretary of the Interior which accompanies the report of the committee, which report was a unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands. He says:

It appears from the appeal that the entryman is 64 years of age and served four years and one month during the Civil War, and has expended about $1,200 in improvements and continuously resided upon the land since the date of entry.

As I stated, that was in 1909.

The entryman further alleges in the appeal that his homestead application was made before a clerk of the court and that he advised that officer that he had formerly made homestead entry in Oklahoma for 88.77 acres, and that officer informed him that he was qualified to enter an 80-acre tract under the Bellefourche project. The entryman's statements are probably true, and it is also probable that the clerk of the court neglected to fill out the homestead application so as to show that he had made a former entry.

Mr. WALSH. I am forced, as a matter of course, from the statement of facts cited, to assume that the condition represented did as a matter of fact exist, but it is, to say the least, a little peculiar, inasmuch as the affidavit required to be filed must have succinctly and correctly stated that the applicant had never had the benefit of the act. Apparently that was not the case.

Furthermore, the knowledge of the fact that but one entry is permitted under the homestead law, no matter how small that entry may be, is so notorious it seems to me rather remarkable that the clerk of the court should not have known that to be the law, and that he would have permitted the applicant to make the affidavit which it was required that he should make in order that his entry might be permitted at all. Can the Senator give us any advice upon that point?

Mr. STERLING. I will state to the Senator that, whatever statement may appear to have been made in the affidavit, I think this applicant went on the supposition that he had the right to enter, all told, 160 acres of land. That impression, of course, was corroborated by the statement made to him by the clerk of the court before whom he made application, to the effect that he had a right to make that filing. He says that he told the clerk of the court that he had filed on the tract in Oklahoma, but was informed by the clerk that he was, notwithstanding this, a qualified entryman of land in the Bellefourche project.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he has any personal knowledge of the facts in the case?

Mr. STERLING. I have no personal knowledge beyond what I have stated.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is satisfied that the facts are as stated?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir; I am satisfied that the facts are as I have stated them in regard to the matter.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time and passed.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have here an article from the Boston Advertiser, under date of October 29, relative to the Hetch Hetchy bill pending before the Senate. I think it should be read and printed in the RECORD, together with some other matters I have in connection with it.

This matter was debated in this body in a very dignified, courteous, and proper manner. While there might have been some difference of opinion with regard to the bill, there was never any insinuation that there were any improper motives moving either those who favored the bill or those who opposed it until I received this article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada requests that the Secretary read the matter referred to by him and that it may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PITTMAN ON THE YOSEMITE.

Senator PITTMAN, of Nevada, chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories, has sent to this office some copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing impassioned appeals in behalf of the project to take over the Hetch Hetchy Valley for the water supply of San Francisco. Senator PITTMAN thinks, apparently, that the people of the East do not understand the issue. The people of the East understand it only too well. They know perfectly well to-day that the conspiracy to take the Hetch Hetchy Valley is a steal, pure and simple. Not one inch of the Yosemite National Park or of the Stanislaus should be surrendered for that purpose. Even Senator WORRIS, of California, announces that he is satisfied that the bill should not pass without further investigation and that thousands of the people of California declare that the measure should be defeated. The whole explanation of the Raker bill is that San Francisco wants additional water and is too stingy to pay a proper price for it. The city can get it elsewhere, but believes it is cheaper to have the most beautiful park of this Nation condemned for a storage reservoir. No more malodorous job than the plot of the San Francisco politicians has been exploited in Congress for a good many years.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think it is well to place such matters before the Senate for the purpose of showing the methods being used to influence opinion throughout the country. I think it is also proper to call the attention of the Senate to the various organizations and people that are being attacked by such an article.

The California Federation of Women's Clubs in session at Santa Rosa on Thursday, October 30, adopted, with only one dissenting voice, a resolution which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That this convention most earnestly goes on record as approving of San Francisco's petition to Congress for the grant of certain rights in the Hetch Hetchy region; that we declare our firm conviction that human needs are paramount to sentimental objections of so-called "nature lovers," who profess to see in San Francisco's project a desecration of nature, although the work of San Francisco in the Sierra will in reality bring this wonder region closer to the real lovers of nature and will in nowise impair the grandeur of the scenery there to be found; that we regret the campaign that has been made in the effort to prevent San Francisco from obtaining that pure and adequate supply of water to which every community should be entitled, and that we petition the Senate of the United States to grant San Francisco the rights for which it has so long appealed and which are embodied in the Raker bill heretofore passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. PITTMAN. I also have here a list of the names of prominent supporters of the bill, men whose reputation can not be questioned, and whose knowledge of the situation can not be questioned. I will place it in the RECORD simply for the purpose of showing who are being attacked by such articles being circulated throughout the country.

I ask the Secretary to read this list of names of persons who are supporting the bill and who are charged with corruption in this newspaper article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State.
Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior.
Hon. David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture.
Hon. Gifford Pinchot, former chief forester and leader of the conservationist movement in the United States.
Jane Addams, foremost in the woman's movement in America.
Henry S. Graves, United States Chief Forester.
Hiram W. Johnson, governor of California.
Edward Robson Taylor, former mayor of San Francisco, who was appointed and subsequently reelected to succeed Ruef-Schmitz régime.
John H. Marble, Interstate Commerce Commission.
James D. Phelan, former mayor of San Francisco.

Rudolph Spreckles, San Francisco, who carried on the graft prosecution.

Francis J. Heney, who prosecuted the grafters.
Hon. George C. Pardee, former governor of California, now chairman of the conservation commission of that State.
Hon. James R. Garfield, former Secretary of the Interior.
The American Federation of Labor.
The California State Federation of Labor.
The Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco.
The Native Sons of California.
The Native Daughters of California.
Col. John Biddle, Col. Spencer Cosby, Col. Harry Taylor, United States Army engineers.
John R. Freeman, noted hydraulic engineer.
The mayors and other officials of Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, Richmond, San Jose, Palo Alto, and other municipalities around San Francisco Bay.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in connection with the subject matter under consideration I desire to give notice that on Wednesday, December 3, 1913, after the close of the routine morning business, I shall address the Senate at length in advocacy of the Hetch Hetchy bill.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD, ETC.

Mr. LEA. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution No. 153. I will state that this is a resolution requesting the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish certain information relative to the ownership of the Louisville & Nashville Railway and its subsidiary companies.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice the calendar states that Senate resolution 153 directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate relations existing between the Louisville & Nashville Railroad and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, and whether such relations restrict competition and maintain fixed rates. Is that the resolution?

Mr. LEA. That is the resolution. The resolution is broader in scope than that and includes other companies in addition to the Louisville & Nashville and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 153) submitted by Mr. LEA August 6, 1913, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and the same is hereby, requested to investigate, taking proof if necessary, and report to the Senate as soon as practicable—

First. What amount of stock, bonds, and other securities of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway is owned or controlled by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad;

Second. What other railroad or railroads in the territory served by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway have been purchased, leased, controlled, or arrangements entered into with, for the purpose of controlling by either the Louisville & Nashville Railroad or the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway;

Third. Whether the Louisville & Nashville Railroad and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway serve the same territory in whole or in part, and whether, under separate ownership, they would be competitive to various points in their territories;

Fourth. Any other fact or facts showing or tending to show the further relations between the Louisville & Nashville Railroad and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, and any fact or facts showing or tending to show whether these relations restrict competition and maintain fixed rates;

Fifth. The terms of the lease of the Nashville & Decatur Railroad by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and what amount, if any, of stock, bonds, and other securities of the Nashville & Decatur Railroad and of the Lewisburg & Northern Railroad is owned by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad or any of its subsidiaries or holding companies;

Sixth. Whether the Nashville & Decatur Railroad, the Lewisburg & Northern Railroad, and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad serve the same territory in whole or in part, and whether, under separate ownership, these railroads would be competitive between various points in their territories;

Seventh. Any other fact or facts showing or tending to show the further relations between the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, the Nashville & Decatur Railroad, and the Lewisburg & Northern Railroad, and any fact or facts showing or tending to show whether these relations restrict competition and maintain fixed rates;

Eighth. What amount, if any, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, the Nashville & Decatur Railroad, and the Lewisburg & Northern Railroad, all or any of them, have subscribed, expended, or contributed for the purpose of preventing other railroads from entering any of the territory served by any of these railroads, for maintaining political or legislative agents, for contributions to political campaigns, and for creating sentiment in favor of any of the plans of any of said railroads; and Ninth. (a) The number of free annual passes; (b) the number of free-trip passes; (c) the number of every kind of free passes issued by each of said railroads each year since January 1, 1911, to members of legislative bodies and other public officials or at the request of members of legislative bodies and other public officials; (d) the total mileage traveled upon free passes issued under each of the above classifications; and (e) the amount in money the free passes issued under each of the above-mentioned classifications would equal at the regular rates for such service of each of the above-named railroads.

Mr. LEA. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Tennessee that unanimous consent has not yet been given. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution is before the Senate, and the Senator can now offer his amendment.

Mr. LEA. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "proof," in line 3, page 1, insert the words "and employing counsel," so as to read:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and the same is hereby, requested to investigate, taking proof and employing counsel if necessary, and report to the Senate as soon as practicable—

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Tennessee if the Interstate Commerce Commission have not at all times a regular force of attorneys or counsel?

Mr. LEA. I understand so. The amendment was offered by me at the suggestion of one member of the commission, so that there will be no doubt of their having authority to assign to one of their counsel local counsel from Tennessee or Kentucky if it is necessary to make an investigation. No appropriation is asked for. The employment of counsel by the Interstate Commerce Commission is paid from their contingent fund.

Mr. SMOOT. If they decide to employ an attorney, there is no provision made here for an appropriation to pay for such employment. I suppose they would have to pay it out of some account over which the commission has control.

Mr. LEA. Either that or ask Congress for an appropriation to pay it.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me that almost all the information contained in the resolution the Interstate Commerce Commission will have on hand and that it can report immediately. There may be a few questions involved in the resolution which it would be necessary to investigate. I hardly think it is necessary to provide for an attorney, because they have a regular corps, and I believe they could obtain the information without any additional expense whatever to the Government.

Mr. LEA. I think that will be done, but there might arise some question of their right to investigate certain books and papers, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, under those conditions and circumstances, might find it necessary and advantageous to employ local counsel. I will say to the Senator that it is not in contemplation that any counsel shall be employed, but if the occasion should arise I would like to have the resolution provide for it.

Mr. SMOOT. With that understanding, I have no objection, but I would object if I thought they were going to go outside and employ counsel for this very purpose.

Mr. LEA. That is not contemplated unless there should be objection made to the investigation, which we do not foresee. Unless that occurs no counsel will be employed except the regular corps.

Mr. BACON. I would suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that if this is information which we ought to have it ought not to be left to the discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission whether they would comply with the requirements for securing it, and the word "requested" ought to be stricken out and the word "directed" substituted in lieu thereof. It is the universal practice of the Senate in directing investigations, having papers furnished, or anything else to use the word "direct" and not the word "request." "Request" implies the right to comply or not at their discretion.

Mr. LEA. I shall be glad to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, and I will modify the resolution by striking out the word "requested" and inserting the word "directed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has sent a further amendment to the desk, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert, after paragraph 7, the following:

Eighth. Any fact or facts showing or tending to show (a) the relations between the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, the Tennessee Midland Railroad, the Tennessee, Paducah & Alabama Railroad, and any other railroads that have been purchased or leased by either or both of said railroad companies, and whether such relations restrict competition and maintain fixed rates, and (b) whether the lease of the Western & Atlantic Railroad by the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway from the State of Georgia and the arrangement made between the Louisville & Nashville and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, by which the former uses the tracks of the said Western & Atlantic Railway, restrict competition, restrain trade, and determines and fixes rates.

Ninth. Any fact or facts showing or tending to show whether the ownership of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway of any railroad terminals or terminal companies, steamboats and steamboat lines upon the Cumberland and Tennessee Rivers, and any dock or dock yards at Pensacola, New Orleans, Mobile, or other seaport establishes a monopoly and restricts competition and determines and fixes rates.

Tenth. Any fact or facts showing or tending to show whether an agreement or arrangement has been entered into between the Louisville & Nashville and other railroad companies for the purpose of preventing competition from entering into any of the territory served by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, in consideration of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad agreeing not to enter into certain other territory or in consideration of any other agreement or arrangements.

Eleventh. What amount of stock, if any, the Atlantic Coast Line Co. or Atlantic Coast Holding Co. owns in the Louisville & Nashville Railroad and in the Atlantic Coast Line, and whether the ownership by such holding company of a majority of stock in both of the aforesaid railroads tends to restrict competition and maintain and fix rates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. OWEN. I ask for the adoption of an order for printing 450 additional copies of the hearings held before the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That 450 additional copies of the hearings held before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate on the bills (S. 2639 and H. R. 7837) to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, for furnishing an elastic currency, afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, and to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. SMOOT. I take it for granted that the number asked for in the order will come within the limit of $500.

Mr. OWEN. It does.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have no objection to it.

The order was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, November 10, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, November 6, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, we thank Thee for the fundamental principles which combine to make our Nation. Especially do we thank Thee for the religious sentiment which obtains in the hearts of our people, the foundation of all true greatness in the individual, the home, or the Nation. May it increase with strength and potency until every heart is filled with the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MENDEL BEILIS.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD copies of resolutions adopted at a mass meeting in the city of Detroit Sunday, protesting against the trial of Mendel Beilis on the charge of ritual murder. Also resolution of similar import passed by the Socialistic Party of Detroit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain resolutions passed in the city of Detroit last Sunday touching the trial of Mendel Beilis, of Russia. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. One moment. Is the Socialistic resolution on the same subject?

Mr. DOREMUS. Both are on the same subject.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose almost every Member of the House has received similar resolutions passed by somebody. Perhaps they all ought to be printed in the RECORD in full, yet I doubt the necessity of that, and if the gentleman will modify his request so as to ask leave to extend his remarks for that purpose I will not object, but I do not think we ought to commence giving leave to print the resolutions in the RECORD as such with no limit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in my family.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] asks unanimous consent for leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his family. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL and Mr. PALMER. Division. Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee did not ask for the yeas and nays, but I will do so.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 54, nays 26, answered "present" 12, not voting 337, as follows:

Also, a bill (H. R. 9230) removing the charge of desertion against Michael McGarry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOSS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 9231) granting an increase of pension to Rachel R. Haddox; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 9232) granting a pension to Margaret T. Shea; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 9233) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin H. Gilbert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9234) granting an increase of pension to William Pryor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9235) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Howard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Kapahulu Improvement Club, of Honolulu, Hawaii, favoring the bill for an extension of the franchise of the Honolulu Rapid Transit & Land Co.; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of 300 employees of the New Philadelphia, Ohio, plant of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Co., protesting against the dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa: Petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Iowa, favoring the passage of House bill 5308, relative to mail-order houses; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, November 7, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, eternal Father, help us, we pray Thee, to use the wonderful faculties of mind and soul with which Thou hast endowed us, by a sacred use of the power of choice which Thou hast reposed in us, that we may grow continually toward the higher and nobler, in the full consciousness of duty well done, under the spiritual leadership of Thy Son Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution to relieve destitution among the native people and residents of Alaska.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2576. An act for the relief of John Q. Adams;

S. 2779. An act to authorize the conveyance of the steel bridge over the Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., to the States of Idaho and Washington or local subdivisions thereof; and

S. 3199. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars, and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto in waters within the State of Florida.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 139. A joint resolution to relieve destitution among the native people and residents of Alaska.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 2576. An act for the relief of John Q. Adams; to the Committee on the Public Lands; and

S. 3199. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars, and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto, in waters within the State of Florida; to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY NEXT.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, about two months ago I requested the House for unanimous consent, which I obtained, to extend my remarks in the Record upon the discussion of the deficiency bill. I neglected it, and I should like to renew that request.

The SPEAKER. As a matter of fact, the gentleman does not have to renew the request. When you get consent without any limitation on it to extend your remarks in the Record you can extend them at any time until the 3d day of March, 1915.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The reason I am asking this is in order to be entirely fair with the House. The remarks that I want to print are more nearly on another subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, my recollection is that the gentleman from Oklahoma was discussing our relations with Mexico. I have no objection to a reasonable extension of the subject which does not enter too fully into a discussion of what we ought to do about Mexico.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that I understand the purposes that the gentleman from Illinois has in mind, and the reason I am asking for this extension is in order to conform to his purposes, and this is all the request I have along this line.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COAL STRIKE IN COLORADO.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Rules from the consideration of House resolution 290, and for its immediate consideration by the House. This is a resolution providing for a committee of inquiry to investigate the coal strike in the State of Colorado.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules be discharged from the further consideration of House resolution 290, and for the immediate consideration thereof. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, we do not know what the resolution is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 290.

Resolved, That the House Committee on Labor is hereby authorized and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation of the conditions existing in the coal fields in the counties of Las Animas, Huerfano, Fremont, Grand, Routt, Boulder, Weld, and other counties in the State of Colorado, for the purpose of ascertaining—

First. The history of the relations of the employer and employee in the said coal fields, in so far as said history has a bearing on the existing labor troubles.

Second. Whether or not the postal services and facilities have been or are being interfered with or obstructed in said coal fields; and if so, by whom.

Third. Whether or not the immigration laws of this country have been or are being violated in said coal fields; and if so, by whom.

Fourth. Whether or not the naturalization laws of this country have been or are being violated in said coal fields; and if so, by whom.

Fifth. Whether the operating companies in said coal fields have coerced their employees in an attempt to control the votes of said employees, and thereby influence the choice of United States Senators and Representatives in Congress, and State, county, and judicial officials.

Sixth. Whether there is a combination of said coal companies in restraint of interstate trade for the purpose of advancing the price at which coal shall be sold to consumers in Colorado and other States.

Seventh. Investigate and report whether or not firearms, ammunition, and explosives have been imported into said State for the use of either party to the existing labor troubles; and the number, names, and general reputation of the men imported into said coal fields to act as guards, deputy sheriffs, and in similar positions.

Eighth. Investigate the efforts of the various labor organizations to unionize said coal fields, including demands made on employers, and the methods used to enforce said demands.

Ninth. Whether or not the said coal companies, through their control of the judicial and other officials in said district, have interfered with the administration of justice.

Said committee or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress, or either House thereof, at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses, and the production of papers, books, and documents; to employ stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to take and make a record of all evidence taken and received by the committee and keep a record of its proceedings; to have such evidence, record, and other matter required by the committee printed; and to employ such other clerical assistance as may be necessary. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpoenas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who having appeared refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the investigation herein authorized shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The expenses thereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this is a very important resolution. I believe there are several resolutions pending which provide for investigations of strikes by committees of the House. Very likely we ought to make the investigation, but a resolution of this sort ought to be very carefully considered by the House, and ought to be reported by the Committee on Rules. Why does not that committee report the resolution? It has been pending for some time, has it not?

Mr. KEATING. I do not think there is a quorum of the Committee on Rules in the city.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he get a quorum here. He has appeared himself, and he might get the members of the Committee on Rules to appear.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, are not all the matters that are contained in this resolution authorized in the act passed sometime ago, appointing an industrial commission to look into the relations between labor and capital, and the condition of the laboring people in the country? Is not their scope of action broad enough to cover all this investigation?

Mr. KEATING. It is possible that the Department of Labor could make an investigation which would reveal a part of these facts, but it would not have the force and effect of a congressional investigation. I am considering not only the facts which will be developed by this inquiry, but I am considering principally the effect of this investigation. What I want primarily is to secure industrial peace in Colorado and adjacent States.

Mr. PAGE. I think that was in the mind of Congress and the people behind it that led to the appointment of this commission. If they have any function to perform, it is along the lines pointed out by the resolution, and it is a duplication of the work to have a committee of the House do the work that the committee was appointed to do.

Mr. KEATING. I might suggest to the gentleman that Secretary Wilson at the beginning of this controversy took cognizance of it and appointed Ethelbert Stewart, one of the most prominent employees in the department, a man of wide experience, and sent him to Colorado as his personal representative. Mr. Stewart was treated with scant courtesy by the gentlemen operating the coal mines in Colorado. He secured some information, and has prepared a report, as I understand it, but it became evident to Secretary Wilson and to Mr. Stewart that the Department of Labor was without full and sufficient power to handle this situation.

Mr. PAGE. I am not familiar with the details of this situation, and the purpose I had in mind was to avoid authorizing a committee of the House—giving them almost unlimited power in the expenditure of funds from the contingent fund of the House—to do the work that ought to be done by a commission that has been appointed under the law in the Department of Labor to do these very things. It was that I had in mind more than this specific case or any other one.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from North Carolina will pardon me, possibly he thinks the commission on industrial relations is under the Department of Labor.

Mr. PAGE. I was under that impression.

Mr. MANN. If he will think for a moment, he will see that it is not.

Mr. PAGE. I see that I was mistaken.

Mr. MANN. There is a committee on industrial relations which could make this investigation, and there is a Bureau of Corporations in the Department of Commerce which has full power to make the investigation, subpoena witnesses, and require their testimony. There is a provision in the act creating the Department of Labor giving authority to the Secretary of the Department of Labor to make the investigation. I do not say that that is any reason why Congress should not make the investigation. Very likely the case is of such importance that Congress ought to make an investigation. But if Congress is to make the investigation, let Congress or the House order it by a sufficient number to give it some weight.

Mr. KEATING. If the gentleman will permit me, I think an investigation and discussion of the situation in Colorado will reveal the gravity of the situation. I think it will reveal the fact that the bodies the gentleman has mentioned are not in a position and have not the power to handle this particular situation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they have the power.

Mr. KEATING. They may have the power to make the investigation, but they lack the power to bring about the result I desire, which is industrial peace in my State.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether my distinguished friend is altogether for industrial peace or for some local partisan advantage. The resolution provides for investigating elections, how far influence has been had on elections of Members of the House and the Senate. The latter, of course, we have nothing to do with.

Mr. KEATING. If the gentleman thinks that in drafting the resolution I have gone too far, or have injected into it anything of a partisan nature, I will gladly eliminate it.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think his resolution covers almost everything under the sun?

Mr. KEATING. The purpose of the resolution was to make it so broad that a committee could go into Colorado and find out the cause of this extraordinary condition which now prevails in that State.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is—and I appeal to the gentleman from Michigan for information—that the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MACDONALD, has a resolution pending as to a strike in Michigan.

Mr. MACDONALD. We have a similar situation in Michigan, but there is no resolution pending.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I believe at the present time there is a strike or industrial war being investigated in West Virginia.

The employers there are probably the same interests that are the employers in Colorado, although I am not well informed in regard to that. My information is that the Standard Oil interests control the Colorado coal fields. The conditions in West Virginia were similar to, though hardly as bad, as those that now exist in Colorado. While they had the company stores in West Virginia the same as they have in Colorado, I never heard of anyone taking an article away from a miner because he bought from some other source and insist that he buy from the company's stores. The Senate committee is investigating this, and the investigation has resulted in great good in the way of bringing about a settlement of the difficulties in West Virginia. The conditions there have improved, and the miners are getting nearer to what they ought to be able to get as American workmen; that is, they are coming nearer to having their constitutional rights protected. They have a right to exist under the law and the Constitution the same as other people, and those rights these companies very often take away from them. What usually causes this sort of trouble as exists in Colorado is the great influences of these employers in denying working people their legal and constitutional rights, practically making of them industrial slaves—worse slaves, in fact, than were the black men before the Civil War, because they were fed and taken care of. If the House should see fit to investigate this condition, it would, in my opinion, bring the matters to the attention of the public, to whom an appeal is usually made as a last resort in order to get justice for the great mass of the working people. I think an investigation would result in much good, and I believe the House ought to do as much to give relief under such circumstances as the Senate has undertaken to do.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Colorado will yield. I recently tried to get the House to increase the appropriation made to the Department of Labor to investigate industrial conditions, and on that proposition the Democratic Members of the House outvoted this side of the House. I tried to get the House to increase the appropriation giving to the Department of Commerce power to make these investigations, and the Democratic side of the House voted down the proposition, which was supported by the minority side of the House. That is no very good reason for not making a congressional investigation. I seldom have opposed obtaining information, and I do not do it now. I seldom have opposed congressional investigations, although I seldom have seen any benefit come from a special investigation made by a committee of the House.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I certainly favor this resolution. I was in Trinidad when that strike started, when the men working in the mines first walked out. I was in Colorado Springs and Denver when the governor of the State of Colorado called out the troops because of the insurrection about the mines near Trinidad.

Of course this question has two sides to it, but if those miners, the men who dig coal out of the mines, told me the truth, then they have some rights which ought to be protected. Those men stated that one of their grievances was that the coal-mine owners, the corporations running the mines, had a weigher whom they believed was not giving them justice. In other words, they thought they had to get out 2,500 pounds of coal to call it a ton, and they wanted to pay out of their own funds a weigher to stand by and see that they received just and honest weight. If those men have rights, Congress ought to help them assert their rights. If the owners of the mines have rights, Congress ought to know it, and see that they get justice. It was commonly talked in Colorado that the corporations owning the mines had raised the price of coal $1 a ton since the strike. Is it right for the people to be held up in this manner?

I can not see any harm on earth that this resolution could do. I know something about labor troubles. I live in a town where there was a strike which lasted for several months, where we had almost a regiment of soldiers for several months during last fall and winter up until spring, and I say that if Congress had taken up that matter I believe it would have been the best thing for the workers and the railroad corporation in that town and for all the citizens of it. I believe in my heart that this committee ought to investigate the conditions there, and that a report should be made to this body, in order that the American people may be made aware of all of the facts and details concerning this coal strike. I know it is hard for the poor workmen to get their rights, and this House ought to help them.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, taking advantage of the announcement made by the gentleman from Alabama, the leader of the majority, some time ago to the effect that he did not intend to attempt to maintain a quorum, I made a short visit into the western country, and while I was not in Colorado I was near enough to hear the echoes from the unfortunate labor troubles existing in the coal fields in that State. There is a situation there very grave, very serious. Grave charges have been made against the management of the properties, also against the miners in some cases, and conditions exist that warrant and necessitate, in my opinion, an investigation by somebody representing the Federal Government. I am rather inclined to the opinion that action under the provisions of the act creating the Department of Labor, authorizing the Secretary of Labor to act as a mediator and to appoint commissioners of conciliation in labor troubles when in his judgment the interest of industrial peace may require it to be done, would be the most prompt, expeditious, and perhaps satisfactory way of arriving at the facts of the situation in Colorado.

I regret that our friends on the other side did not see fit to increase the appropriation for that class of work, an increase which we attempted to secure when the deficiency bill was under consideration; but some gentlemen seem to be of the opinion that, either due to a lack of funds or from the fact the department perhaps has not men in whom it has confidence ready for the work, Congress should investigate the situation. It is very unfortunate, Congress being in session, that a situation exists—

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment—that a situation exists under which it is impossible for Congress to pass upon these matters in an orderly way—in the way provided for by the rules. Here we are in constant and continuous session, nothing particular to do, and yet apparently paralyzed in our activities to such an extent that it is impossible to get the Committee on Rules together to consider and pass upon this resolution. That committee could and should examine into the situation, make inquiries of the Secretary of Labor, learn whether or no it would be possible for him to secure the facts with regard to the situation, and generally consider the advisability of the passage of the resolution in its present form. It is very unfortunate, Congress being in session, that it should be so paralyzed in its activities by the absence of Members that it can not pass upon a simple resolution of this sort in the regular way. There is something wrong when that condition exists, but that condition does exist, and it is not the fault of this side of the House. A very serious condition exists in Colorado. Grave labor troubles exist which have already led to bloodshed and rioting and which may lead to more serious difficulties. The militia has been called out, and yet the situation does not seem to be in hand. We ought to have the facts. If we can not have the resolution considered in an orderly way under the rules of the House by reason of the failure of the Democratic majority to maintain a quorum, then I hope that no one will object to having the matter taken up by unanimous consent. It is important—in fact, in my opinion, imperative—that Congress should have information on this subject.

The Secretary of Labor evidently is not in a position to secure it, possibly because his party has not provided appropriations for that purpose, having declined to do so, or possibly for other reasons. The action by unanimous consent requested by the gentleman from Colorado is the only thing he can do under the circumstances. The committee not having reported the resolution, it is his duty to endeavor to secure its passage. While there may be some objection to some of the provisions of the resolution, I think, in the main, the resolution is properly and reasonably drawn, and I hope no objection will be made to its consideration and, after consideration, to its passage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Colorado will permit me, I want to say that two nights ago I attended a meeting of labor leaders called to discuss this Colorado strike situation, and I heard quite a number of speakers, some of whom have been known throughout the country as agitators. I heard them calmly and coolly discuss this matter and give great praise to the Senate of the United States for its act in investigating the West Virginia matter. I heard them express the hope of relief through Congress. I heard them—and some of the speakers were those who do not believe in our present form of government—say that this House was composed of sincere, earnest, and hard-working men who wanted both sides to this Colorado labor controversy treated with absolute fairness. I heard documents and papers read showing a desperate situation in the State of Colorado.

I am of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that if there are only 100 Members of Congress here, we, the 100 Members, should call ourselves the Congress, pass this resolution, and divide ourselves up into committees of 15 to investigate not only this strike in Colorado, but also, if suitable resolutions are introduced, the strike in Michigan, the strike in Indianapolis, the one at Ipswich, Mass., and strikes at other places. While we are putting in the remaining time between this and the regular session let us do something—it is a pity for us to be in this condition of enforced idleness—let us do something for labor, and I am sure it will be appreciated.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, within the last month I have had a number of urgent letters calling for the investigation of conditions of the coal strike in Colorado. I have a brother living in Denver, who has lived there for 20 years, and I am in possession of information which I think is such as to warrant an investigation.

Truly there are always two sides to a question, and a thorough investigation will bring about information concerning the exact conditions on both sides. That is the object of an investigation. It is contended by some Members that the authority to make this investigation rests with the Department of Labor. I do not think the law creating that department is broad enough to give the Secretary of Labor the authority to make an investigation such as is contemplated by this resolution. A real, substantial investigation is necessary in this case, such as will reveal the exact conditions. It is said that the Pujo committee, which investigated the Money Trust, did not have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and for this reason it was unable to investigate as fully as the committee had contemplated. It is necessary to go to the bottom of this question, and this can only be done by a special committee armed with the authority proposed by this resolution.

The strike going on now in Colorado is as dangerous to life and liberty as the late strike in West Virginia. There, in Paint and Cabin Creek districts, civil law was set aside for more than a year. Martial law was declared, followed by a military despotism in time of peace, by which the citizens of that State were denied the right of trial by jury, tried and convicted by a military commission, and sent to prison for long terms on trivial charges.

The Senate sent a special committee, duly appointed and commissioned, with full power to investigate the whole affair. This committee held its meetings in the camps of the military district and bearded the "lion in his den." A horrible condition was revealed on the part of the coal operators and the administration of the State. Martial law was routed and civil law was restored. Peace and good order now prevail in West Virginia as the result of this wise and timely investigation. The conditions in Colorado are about as bad as they were in West Virginia, and demand an investigation at our hands.

If the operator has right on his side, the investigation can do him no harm. If the laborer has right on his side, investigation will reveal it. If justice is what ought to be dealt out and peace and order restored in that unhealthy district, then, Mr. Speaker, all the investigation that can be had can do no one any harm. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the investigation will have the effect of bringing these parties together and getting them to understand what the law is, and what Congress will expect at their hands in settling these difficulties. The miners are asking for an investigation. Why do not the operators do the same thing and let the sunlight of truth shine in?

Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt in my mind but that every man on the floor of this House is anxious for peace and is anxious that the rights of every citizen in Colorado should be protected there. Who will stand against investigation; who will delay the consideration of this resolution? The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING], the author of the resolution, is a resident of the district where the strike now rages. He has been laboring for months in his State for the purpose of bringing about a reconciliation, and he has had his resolution delayed, hoping that peace might be restored, but without avail, it looks. But when martial law threatens the people of this country in various quarters it is high time that Congress should be up and doing and discharging its duty, for the purpose of seeing that the civil law is enforced in this country. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that no gentleman's voice on the floor of this House will be heard to object to the immediate consideration of this resolution.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] will permit—

Mr. KEATING. Certainly—

Mr. MACDONALD. I wish to say that, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], we have had a similar condition in the copper district of Michigan. The Department of Labor, early after the occurrence, sent a special investigator to examine and report upon the facts connected with the strike. Every State trooper of the State of Michigan was called upon and sent to the field of this strike. Its seriousness in all its aspects can hardly be exaggerated. The Department of Labor made a very thorough investigation and a complete report on this matter and finally sent a second investigator there. The first one was a representative of the department, Mr. Moffatt. The second one was Mr. Palmer. The Secretary of Labor, upon receiving these reports, offered to serve as mediator or to provide a board of mediation, and, secondly, submitted a plan of a different form of mediation. In each case the operators of the mines have refused to accede to any kind or form of mediation. Although the Department of Labor has the best will in the world to do all that it can do under the existing law, apparently it has reached a point where it can go no further, and is prepared to admit that that is practically true; and as there must—

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield for a question?

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Did the Secretary of Labor appoint any commission or board of mediation and conciliation in that case?

Mr. MACDONALD. I think not. The Secretary of Labor simply offered his services as a mediator, and offered, secondly, a plan whereby a board of mediation for the particular purpose should be selected.

Mr. MANN. My recollection of the law—I am not sure about it—is that the Secretary of Labor is authorized to appoint boards or commissioners of mediation and conciliation.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am inclined to think that perhaps he did offer to appoint a board.

Mr. MANN. But did he appoint any?

Mr. MACDONALD. No appointment was made.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The Department of Labor is hampered by the fact that it has not sufficient funds.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that at all. Probably my distinguished colleague voted for the amendment that I offered, and if the other Members on his side had voted for that amendment, to give sufficient funds to the Department of Labor,

I have no doubt that the board would have been appointed and the strike settled before this.

Mr. MACDONALD. The point is that the Department of Labor have exhausted all the means they have at their command, and have accomplished nothing in the way of a settlement of conditions; and we are confronted with the proposition that if we are to avoid these conditions which are occurring in many places throughout the country, conditions of absolute civil war, involving bloodshed and loss of property, we must find some means of settlement.

I hope that the House will take up this matter now when there is abundant time to consider it, and as the gentleman from Washington suggests, find some means to put us on the track of some settlement of these industrial conditions, not only by an investigation of the facts of these conditions in various places, but will authorize the committee to bring in some suggestions as to remedial legislation that will not only settle the present trouble but will tend to prevent its recurrence in the future. I believe what is asked for by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] is a step in the direction of what we all want.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House to discuss this matter, but wish merely to say that I heartily approve this resolution; and I think that, irrespective of the number who may be present here in the House, this investigation ought to be authorized. I am sure that very nearly every man on both sides of this body will favor this investigation.

Mr. AVIS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Colorado will yield—

Mr. KEATING. I do not know my exact status.

The SPEAKER. Your exact status is that you have asked unanimous consent, and these other gentlemen have been talking by reserving the right to object. Of course, it is all by unanimous consent, and whenever anybody gets tired of it, he can stop it.

Mr. KEATING. I have no desire to stop it myself.

Mr. AVIS. I should like to say to the gentleman from Colorado that while I regret exceedingly that the Committee on Rules have not had an opportunity to inspect and examine into this matter, I expect to support it in the main, although it appears to me that there are some things that properly might have been considered seriously by the committee and passed upon before submitting the resolution to the House. I represent the district in West Virginia—in fact, I live in the county in which conditions were investigated by the Senate Committee on Labor—and perhaps I know as much about local conditions there as anyone in this House; and, as there has been an investigation of mining conditions in the State of West Virginia by one branch of Congress, acting under a somewhat similar resolution, I believe, in all fairness, that there should be a proper investigation of similar conditions alleged to exist in other States.

I do know that in that investigation there were several questions raised that caused considerable embarrassment for the committee; and, as I said, I believe that had the Committee on Rules examined this resolution carefully it might have ascertained that there were some things called for which are beyond the constitutional powers of the House. For instance, I should like to hear from the gentleman from Colorado as to the fifth clause of the resolution, which provides for an investigation as to the influencing of the choice of United States Senators and of State, county, and judicial officials. There is considerable doubt in my mind as to how far the House can go in ordering an investigation in regard to those officials.

And then in the ninth clause it provides for an investigation of the question—

Whether or not the said coal companies, through their control of the judicial and other officials in said district, have interfered with the administration of justice.

Before the gentleman answers my question, I will say that I am inclined to resolve the doubt in favor of the resolution, but as other resolutions of this kind are likely to come up, it does seem to me that, if these are doubtful powers of Congress, we ought not to be placed in the position of broadening this investigation to such an extent that we will be put in a false position. I should like to hear from the gentleman particularly on these two clauses of the resolution. I want to say, however, that I hope this resolution will be given immediate consideration, notwithstanding the fact that there is no quorum present.

Mr. KEATING. My purpose, Mr. Speaker, in drafting this resolution was, as I stated before, to give the committee powers so broad that they might go into all the details of this controversy, the origin and the possible solution of the question. Now, one of the very serious charges made by the strikers is that the State laws of Colorado, and practically all the laws of the land, have been suspended in some counties in Colorado, and have been for a considerable period of time. They charge that this suspension has been brought about by the coal companies going into politics. It is even alleged that some coal companies supported the Democratic ticket and other coal companies supported the Republican ticket; at least, that they have done so in times past. So far as these elections are concerned, I have no desire to express my own opinion, but I may say to the gentleman from West Virginia that some of the best citizens of Colorado allege that most of the trouble in the counties of Huerfano and Las Animas has been caused by the coal companies controlling every official from district judge to coroner. As an example of that, they say in these two counties that while hundreds of men have been killed as a result of mine accidents in the last 10 years, in only one accident did the coroner's jury bring in a verdict holding the company responsible.

So far as our right to investigate it is concerned, I will say that I am only a newspaper man and not a lawyer and I am not familiar with our exact powers.

Mr. AVIS. If the gentleman from Colorado will yield, I think the greater part of the resolution is within the powers of Congress. The questions of violations of the naturalization laws, of the immigration laws—I do not think that you propose to investigate any alleged violations of the laws concerning peonage—of the postal laws, and of the laws in restraint of interstate trade are without doubt within the constitutional powers of Congress. My position is, however, in view of the fact that this House will have other similar resolutions before it, that we ought to be consistent and not vote one way on one resolution and another way on a similar resolution. I have, as an individual, no objection to an investigation to the extent that this resolution proposes and as far as the gentleman desires it as evidenced by his resolution, but I want to be consistent and do not want to vote for things that are not within the powers of the House. I do not assert it as a proposition of law that all these things are not within the power of the House, but I do not believe that they are. I now ask the gentleman whether he thinks that all of the things proposed in the resolution are within the constitutional powers of the House—whether he has taken the trouble to ascertain whether we can investigate an attempt to control and influence the choice of a United States Senator or that of a State, county, or State judicial official? If that can be done and it is within the powers of the House, I want to vote for the resolution. Then again, in the ninth section, whether the House can investigate as to “whether or not the said coal companies, through their control of the judicial and other officials in said district have interfered with the administration of justice.” I should think that an investigation could be extended to the United States courts, but can it be extended to the State courts by the House?

Mr. KEATING. I would prefer the opinion of the gentleman from West Virginia to my own on that point. I can tell the gentleman my thought, and then he can tell whether it will square with the Constitution or not. The thought I had and the reason I had for securing this investigation of Colorado's trouble was to try to get at the cause of these disputes. Why is it that great corporations exploiting the natural resources of the country undertake to say that “there is nothing to arbitrate” when they become involved in controversies with their employees? How does it come that a man sitting at 26 Broadway, New York, has the power to paralyze the business enterprises of my State?

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman of course knows that this proposed committee could not arbitrate anything. What does he expect to accomplish by the appointment of the committee, merely to get at the facts? The committee can not arbitrate anything.

Mr. KEATING. You could not arbitrate anything in West Virginia, and yet the Senate investigation which was made on exactly this kind of a resolution—because I have adopted the language of the Senate resolution—has resulted in the fact that there is now industrial peace in West Virginia. I believe that the greatest weapon we have in this country for adjusting industrial pursuits is publicity, and the most effective way to secure that publicity is through a congressional investigation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman know whether there is a quorum of the Committee on Labor in Washington?

Mr. KEATING. I am a member of that committee, and last Friday we did not have a quorum. I intended, if the resolution came before the House, to change it so as to provide for a committee of five or whatever number might be specified.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I notice that there is not any limitation upon the amount which this committee can expend in this investigation. Is it proposed to take this entire committee out to Colorado to make the investigation?

Mr. KEATING. No. The resolution provides that the Committee on Labor or a subcommittee thereof may make the inquiry. I am perfectly willing that the resolution should be perfected in that regard, as I have no desire to squander money. I would say that a subcommittee of three or five, preferably five, should go to Colorado, should hold hearings there, and I hope make a report which will shed some light on not only the Colorado dispute but the causes of some of these other controversies.

Mr. ANDERSON. Has the gentleman any idea as to what the probable cost of that investigation will be?

Mr. KEATING. I have not stopped to consider that. There is the railroad fare and the hotel bills and the stenographer's expenses. It would not be expensive. The gentleman has probably had more experience than I have had along those lines.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution. I might say in response to the remarks of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Avis] that the objections which he raises are not material at this stage of the proceeding. If the resolution is considered by the House, any imperfections in it can be amended, and additions can be made to it, or features not properly in it might be eliminated, so that that would be no objection whatever to its present consideration. It seems to me that whether the department having the matter in charge has sufficient funds to conduct the investigation or not, it could still be done with great advantage by the House, for the reason that what the committee needs mostly is light, and light means publicity. Publicity can be obtained far better through a congressional investigation than through an investigation conducted by the department.

The newspapers will give more attention to it, it will be published far and wide, and when the conditions that exist there are exposed by the testimony taken by this committee and published by the newspapers of the country, the light thus shed on them will in that case, as it did in the case of West Virginia, practically dispose of the entire matter. It seems to me that no other plan could be suggested which would be so conducive to the peaceful settlement of the dispute as a congressional investigation for the reasons that I have stated, and if this resolution is considered by the House—and it can be considered by the House even in the absence of a quorum—then the investigation could begin at a time when there is little else to take up the time of the House. There is not much now to distract the attention of the country from the reports of the testimony as it would come in, and every result that could be desired could be better obtained by a present investigation by a House committee than in any other way. I hope, therefore, that there will be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is a very bad strike in progress in Colorado; there is a very bad strike going on in Michigan; there is a very bad strike going on in Indianapolis; and a worse strike going on in the House of Representatives. I have been here endeavoring to break the strike of the Democratic Members of the House of Representatives. The difference between the other strikes and the strike in the House is that a laboring man in these places when he goes on a strike loses his pay, while a Member of the House of Representatives who has gone on a strike, who has gone home, continues to draw his pay. Probably that is the reason the strike is so hard to break. It is just as important to break the strike here as it is anywhere else, and I am in favor of using every means within my power to break the strike in the House of Representatives, in order that we may give to the country needed investigations and needed legislation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, as the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is tantamount to an objection, and therefore action on this resolution is impossible at this time—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has no right to say that. I have not made any objection at all.

Mr. PALMER. I therefore move, Mr. Speaker, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should do so in order.

The SPEAKER. Well, it is all over now. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Let us stay here and do business and bring in a quorum.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 54, nays 34, answered "present" 13, not voting 329, as follows:

 The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
 Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned to meet on Monday, November 10, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 9236) providing for the grading and improving of Thirteenth Street NE, in Brookland, Washington, D. C., from Monroe Street to the Bunker Hill Road, now known as Michigan Boulevard; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9237) to regulate the practice of medicine, pharmacy, and druggists in the manufacture, sale, or use of poisons, especially bichloride of mercury, in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: Resolution (H. Res. 303) to investigate the origin of an untruthful report touching the relations between the United States and Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DALE: A memorial of the Legislature of Illinois, in the matter of a Federal grant to elementary and secondary education; to the Committee on Education.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRODBECK: A bill (H. R. 9238) granting a pension to John Henry Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9239) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Garver; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9240) to correct the military record of Charles P. Kibler; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DALE: A bill (H. R. 9241) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Burness; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMMOND: A bill (H. R. 9242) granting an increase of pension to Susan Doolittle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 9243) granting a pension to James D. Hammett; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 9244) granting an increase of pension to James C. Summers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petition of Shipmasters' Association of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the passage of the La Follette seamen's bill; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of the Federated Trades Council of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring passage of the La Follette seamen's bill; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. DALE: Petitions of sundry business men of the State of New York, favoring passage of the Bartlett bill, for 1-cent letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, resolution of the third annual State conference of taxation at Binghamton, N. Y., favoring provision for collecting statistics of wealth, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of the American Bankers' Association, favoring amendments to the proposed new currency law recommended by the Chicago conference; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of American National Retail Jewelers' Association of Neenah, Wis., favoring a just revision of the mail rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Evanston, Ill., favoring passage of House joint resolution 117, relative to national constitutional prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the members of the Jacob S. Strahl Lodge, No. 158, Independent Order Ahamas Israel, protesting against the accusations of the Russian Government, and in trying Mendel Beilis for "ritual murder"; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of the Central Labor Union of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring passage of the resolution asking for an investigation of the conditions of the coal fields in Trinidad, Colo.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Twenty-eighth Ward Taxpayers' Association, of Brooklyn, N. Y., protesting against the abandonment of the Brooklyn Navy Yard; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. MANN: Petition of the Chicago Association of Commerce, protesting against the passage of the La Follette seamen's bill, S. 136; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

SENATE.

Monday, November 10, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

NOVEMBER 10, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,
President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE ACT.

Mr. SIMMONS. I present a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of North Carolina, which I ask may be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Joint resolution 4 requesting Congress to investigate the interpretation and administration of the act to regulate interstate commerce.

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

Whereas by the act of Congress commonly known as the interstate-commerce act it is provided, among other things, that all charges made for any service rendered in the transportation of property shall be just and reasonable, and every unjust and unreasonable charge is prohibited and declared to be unlawful; and

Whereas it is also further provided in said act that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any person, corporation, or locality in any request whatsoever; and

Whereas said interstate-commerce act also provides that it shall be unlawful for a carrier to charge more for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction when the shorter is included in the longer distance but contains an unfortunate exception allowing more to be charged for the short than the long haul if the Interstate Commerce Commission allows it; and

Whereas all these provisions have been and are now being ignored and violated by the carriers, especially those operating in and through the State of North Carolina, thus defying the provisions of the said law, the effect of which is to work great injury to the commercial and industrial interests of the State of North Carolina, to the prejudice and injury of the people of this and other States; and

Whereas shippers and others, citizens of North Carolina, have appealed in vain to the Interstate Commerce Commission for protection against the present intolerable situation, as guaranteed by the provisions of the act aforesaid, and the suppression of the violations of said law on the part of the carriers; that as a result of such fruitless efforts to obtain the relief sought there has been and now is much complaint that the interstate-commerce act is not enforced according to its terms or in the spirit in which it was enacted: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, respectfully petitioned by the people of North Carolina to strike out the exception to the application of the long-and-short-haul principle, and, further, to cause an investigation to be made of the administration of the provisions of the said interstate-commerce act to ascertain if the said act has been interpreted and enforced as Congress intended and in accordance with the terms thereof, and if not, the reasons for such nonenforcement; that said investigation make particular inquiry as to violations of the provisions prohibiting unreasonable rates, unjust discriminations, and violations of the long-and-short-haul clause; to ascertain if the coast cities are not the victims of unjust discriminations in freight rates as the result of combinations of railroads and water lines, the effect of which is to suppress competition and deprive coast cities of advantages to which they are entitled and would naturally enjoy by reason of lower water rates were not such combinations permitted to exist; that said investigation also ascertain if the present commerce act is sufficient to meet the conditions and practices complained of, and if not, to recommend such amendments as will make the law adequate to prevent the further continuance of unjust and discriminatory practices, unreasonable charges, and the elimination of competition.

Resolved further, That the Members of Congress from the State of North Carolina be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to exercise such influence and take such action as may be proper and necessary to cause said investigation to be made by Congress that the information herein suggested may be elicited, and that the governor of North Carolina be respectfully requested to use his influence to the same end by cooperating with the executives of other States and in such other manner as in his judgment seems proper.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the governor to each of the Senators and Members of the House in Congress from the State of North Carolina, and also that copies be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress.

In the general assembly read three times and ratified this the 6th day of October, 1913.

E. L. DAUGHTRIDGE,
President of the Senate.
WALTER MURPHY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Examined and found correct.

For the committee.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,

Secretary of State.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on the 6th instant the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] had printed in the Record the names of certain parties in favor of granting to the city of San Francisco the use of Hetch Hetchy Valley for reservoir purposes. I have in my hand Bulletin No. 1 of the National Committee for the Preservation of the Yosemite National Park, and I ask that this bulletin may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the bulletin was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

(Bulletin No. 1.)

NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR THE PRESERVATION OF THE YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

The members of the national committee, which includes representatives of every State and of a large number of important institutions and societies throughout the country, will be published in Bulletin No. 2.

Robert Underwood Johnson, chairman, 327 Lexington Avenue, New York.

Edward Hagaman Hall, secretary and treasurer, room 808, Tribune Building, New York.

"The Board [of Army Engineers] is of the opinion that there are several sources of water supply that could be obtained and used by the city of San Francisco and adjacent communities to supplement the nearby supplies as the necessity develops. From any one of these sources the water is sufficient in quantity and is, or can be made, suitable in quality. While the engineering difficulties are not insurmountable, the determining factor is one of cost." (Official report of the Advisory Board of Army Engineers.)

THE HETCH HETCHY "GRAB"—WHO OPPOSE IT AND WHY—THE PRESS OVERWHELMINGLY AGAINST IT.

Outside of San Francisco these newspapers and other organs of public opinion are on record against the plan to destroy the great Hetch Hetchy Valley by flooding it and to deny the public the free access it now has to the northern half of the wonderful Yosemite National Park, it being confessed that the city can get its supply elsewhere "by paying for it." Additions to this list are continually being made:

ORGANIZATIONS ON RECORD AGAINST IT.

Two-thirds of the Sierra Club of San Francisco; Society for the Preservation of National Parks (eastern and western branches); American Civic Association; American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society; American Alpine Club; Mazamas, of Portland, Ore.; Mountaineers of Seattle; Chicago Geographical Society; Zoological Society of New York; Playground Association of America; General Federation of Women's Clubs; California and other State Federations of Women's Clubs; and others.

CONSERVATIONISTS ON RECORD AGAINST THE SCHEME.

John Muir, pioneer of conservation, discoverer of the great Muir Glacier and expert on Sierra scenery; Mr. Muir, who is leader in this fight, calls the scheme "a colossal grab," and says:

"Dam Hetchy Hetchy! As well dam for water tanks the people's cathedrals and churches, for no holier temple has ever been consecrated by the heart of man."

Dr. B. E. Fernow, who brought to the United States and advocated while in the Interior Department advanced German ideas of conservation, says:

"It would be an amazingly ridiculous action, showing up the incompetence of democratic government, to reverse, in the face of the sane report of the Army Engineers, the conservation policy of preserving this sublime work of nature, when there was no necessity for doing so."

Edward A. Bowers, Yale professor of land law, formerly of the United States Land Office under Cleveland, author of the provision under which the vast system of national forests has been established, and who presented to Secretary Lamar a comprehensive scheme of conservation, says:

"I have always been opposed to the project as being destructive of a fine portion of the Yosemite National Park, which is entirely unnecessary as a water supply for San Francisco."

Hon. George F. Edmunds, who while in the Senate killed a bill to confer private rights in the Yosemite Valley writes from Pasadena of "the despoilment of the Hetch Hetchy Valley in the interest of the commercialism of San Francisco water men, etc., without any at all adequate reason of real public interest and necessity. I do hope that the sober sense of Congress will refuse to authorize the accomplishment of this scheme."

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, ex-president of Harvard and first president of the Conservation Congress:

"If the valley is turned into a lake, used as a water supply for San Francisco, the public will have to be shut out from all the borders of the lake for health and pleasure uses. This deprivation always follows the use of any large body of water, natural or artificial, for a water supply."

Robert Underwood Johnson, who in 1889 made the Century the pioneer of magazines in the conservation movement and who first proposed to President Roosevelt the idea of the White House conference: "This piece of vandalism, so repugnant to the enlightened opinion of the country, can be rushed through only by the deference of the judgment of Congress to the statements of interested parties."

J. Horace McFarland, president of the American Civic Association and champion of Niagara preservation:

"The value of great scenic possessions is being increasingly recognized the world over. This value is now known to have a great influence upon the development of that best citizenship without which the country is poor indeed."

The late Hon. John W. Noble, former Secretary of the Interior and father of official conservation in America:

"The city has abundant water supply other than the reservoir to be constructed here, and it is not necessary to give this up."

The late Hon. E. A. Hitchcock, former Secretary of the Interior, who refused California's request for the valley:

"It is the aggregation of such natural scenic features that makes the Yosemite Park a wonderland which the Congress of the United States sought by law to preserve for all coming time as nearly as practicable in the condition fashioned by the hand of the Creator—a worthy object of national pride and a source of healthful pleasure and rest for the thousands of people who may annually sojourn there during the heated months."

Mrs. Emmons Crocker, chairman of the conservation committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs:

Edmund A. Whitman, esq., the distinguished lawyer of Boston, who has visited the Valley, says:

"There is no place in the whole 500 square miles in that northwest corner of the park where any number of people can stay at one time except on the floor of this valley."

The late James T. Gardiner, formerly of the California and United States Geological Surveys, who ran the lines of the Yosemite Valley Reservation.

Dr. George Kunz, president of the American Scenic and Historical Preservation Society.

The late Prof. Joseph Le Conte, of California, the eminent geologist.

Prof. Henry Fairfield Osborn, president of the American Museum of Natural History and the American Zoological Society.

Hon. Herbert Parsons, former member of the House Committee on Public Lands, who visited the valley, says:

"The impressive part of Hetch Hetchy is that after you have traveled through the park, through what you might call its waste portions and its rock-bound lakes, you come down to this gem of a valley * * * Its beauty is the beauty of the floor of the valley, which would be absolutely destroyed by the reservoir."

Hon. Henry L. Stimson, recently Secretary of War, after a personal visit of inspection, thinks the Hetch Hetchy in some respects more beautiful than the Yosemite. He says:

"I feel that this scheme would involve an irreparable loss to the national park and would greatly impair its ultimate development and usefulness. Both I and the three Army officers who accompanied me felt that alternative water supplies could be secured that were adequate and satisfactory. The city finds it cheaper to obtain the Hetch Hetchy from Uncle Sam for nothing than to acquire by purchase or condemnation other sites where private interests have obtained a foothold."

Herbert W. Gleason, the well-known traveler and lecturer of Boston, says:

"The valley deserves to rank in its sublime impressiveness, stupendous majesty, and rugged beauty with anything that this country affords."

ARGUMENTS FOR THE SCHEME REFUTED.

(1) That there is a water famine in parts of San Francisco, making an emergency.

Answer. Any trouble is casual and is with the pipes, not the water. The Spring Valley Water Co., which furnishes the present supply, says there is two years' supply on hand. Mr. Freeman, the city's expert, says the quality of the water is of the best. It comes from a radius of 50 miles.

(2) That the city needs Hetch Hetchy to meet this emergency.

Answer. Hetch Hetchy is 150 miles distant and could not be utilized for six or eight years.

(3) That Hetch Hetchy is the only supply available.

Answer. The Army Board of Engineers reports that there are several other sources, any one of which could be made available; that the problem is primarily one of cost. Ex-Mayor Phelan, of San Francisco, who is credited with originating the project, confessed before the Senate Committee on Public Lands in 1900 that the city could get an abundant supply of pure water anywhere along the Sierra by paying for it.

(4) That any other source would entail upon the city a cost exceeding that of the Hetch Hetchy by $20,000,000 (the "estimate" of the Army board).

Answer. The Army board reports that neither it nor the city has made a "thorough and complete" investigation of other sources, except the Sacramento River. Who knows that it would cost $20,000,000 more? If the Hetch Hetchy supply is filtered, this estimated difference must be reduced to $3,000,000. This great question should not turn on the mere guesswork of the board when accurate data are not available.

(5) That this assumed difference of cost constitutes a necessity.

Answer. This theory implies that the Nation should give up any part of its great national parks when any city 150 miles distant wishes to save money, though the city might be in the hands of grafters, as San Francisco has sometimes been since the Hetch Hetchy fight began, and as it may be again.

(6) That San Francisco, having suffered a great calamity by the earthquake, may appeal in the name of humanity for this relief.

Answer. This was the purpose of the first bill in Congress—to supply water for drinking and other domestic purposes. The object of this bill is hydroelectric power worth, the Army board says, $45,000,000, a careful calculation. The San Francisco Journal of Commerce (Sept. 29, 1913) calls it "this wonderfully valuable privilege for San Francisco." The Call says: "Hetch Hetchy will bring an electric age." Leave out the power provision and the bill would be withdrawn. The humanitarian cry is pure humbug.

(7) That the city is in the clutches of a water monopoly.

Answer. The city has come to terms with the Spring Valley Co. and is to buy it out by condemnation proceedings. It might have done so years ago. The San Francisco Chronicle says (Oct. 14): "The company is ready to sell and the city is ready to buy." Again, it says

(Oct. 4) the condemnation suit "seems to slumber soundly and strangely." As an argument for the bill the "monopoly" cry is pure humbug.

(8) That this "monopoly" is supporting the opposition to the bill.

Answer. In the same breath it is said that Mr. Bourne, president of the company, favors the bill. Men of integrity, like John Muir, all over the country are fighting it. They have no relation to the company.

(9) That everybody in California favors the bill.

Answer. Senator Works telegraphed to Senator Smoot that 99 per cent of the users of the water of Hetch Hetchy in the San Joaquin Valley are opposed to it. Many Californians outside of San Francisco also oppose it.

(10) That the valley will be improved by damming and flooding it.

Answer. The rare beauty of Hetch Hetchy, as the elder Frederick Law Olmsted said, consists in the contrast between the rugged cliffs and the exquisite floor. Destroy the latter and you destroy the "original beauty" which Congress determined to preserve by the act creating the Yosemite National Park. A city park is beautiful in its place, a natural lake in its place, but what is desirable in the Hetch Hetchy is the delightful charm of its lovely wildness, for which an ugly dam and an artificial reservoir with a dirty rim would be no substitute. If such a lake is more beautiful, shall we make reservoirs of Yosemite Valley and all other wonderful valleys in the national parks? Let the city politicians once get possession of the valley and who shall guard against a riot of vandalism? The mismanagement of the Yosemite Valley by California was a scandal until the valley was retroceded to the United States. The average politician would Coney Islandize the Garden of Eden.

(11) That if the city doesn't take the national park supply now the water will have to go to the irrigation farmers eventually.

Answer. For purposes of irrigation it can be impounded below and outside the park, as Mr. O'Shaughnessy, city engineer of San Francisco, has said. The bill would take the water from a naturally arid valley that is now using it, and will hereafter need it, instead of providing a supply for the city from the Sacramento Valley, which has more water than it can use.

The bald question is: Shall the Nation, in order to save San Francisco an assumed difference of cost between the Hetch Hetchy and any one of several other supplies spoken of by the Army board in its report, make the city a present of a franchise worth $45,000,000 and destroy the unique beauty of the valley, called by Mr. Pinchot "one of the great wonders of the world"? If the Hetch Hetchy is not worth saving, what else in the national-park system can be defended against the demands of commercial greed?

The National Committee for the Preservation of the Yosemite National Park urges every American citizen, man or woman, to make brief protest at once against this project to Senators of the United States and to the President. The proponents of the bill claim that a majority of the Senate are committed to its passage, but this is by no means sure. Most Senators, fatigued by the labors of the extra session, have not had time to weigh the testimony with the candor and thoroughness which should be given to a proposition of such importance and such irretrievable consequences. Committal to vote for a bill afterwards found to be against public policy is not likely to be considered binding.

But it is not to be disguised that only hard and continuous work can insure the defeat of this monstrous piece of folly.

"Winds blow,

And waters roll, strength to the brave."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 3407) granting a pension to Dallas Thurman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 3408) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Marshall (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANE:

A bill (S. 3409) granting an increase of pension to George L. Freeman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 3410) granting an increase of pension to Warren Rich;

A bill (S. 3411) granting an increase of pension to Frederick R. Davis;

A bill (S. 3412) granting an increase of pension to William F. F. Evans;

A bill (S. 3413) granting an increase of pension to George W. Taylor;

A bill (S. 3414) granting an increase of pension to William B. Houck;

A bill (S. 3415) granting an increase of pension to Robert Wilson McClaurhry; and

A bill (S. 3416) granting an increase of pension to Margaret J. Fletcher; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 3417) for the relief of the heirs of Mathew Harrison, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

RELIEF OF STORM SUFFERERS IN ALASKA.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it may be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 77) for the relief of sufferers from the recent storms in Alaska was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of rendering aid to and relieving the condition of the natives and residents of the Territory of Alaska who suffered from the storm in the northern Bering Sea on October 6 and 7, 1913.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to say, in connection with the joint resolution, that there was a small appropriation of about $4,000 made for this purpose the other day, but the governor of the Territory says that it is not enough. Already there have been sent in by the neighboring cities of the Northwest estimates of something like twelve or fifteen thousand dollars, and it will take $25,000 more to relieve the situation. For this reason I introduce the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Several weeks ago I introduced a joint resolution, being Senate joint resolution 71, for the relief of sufferers from the recent storms in Alaska, which I find was not referred to a committee, but was ordered to lie on the table. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (H. R. 7837) to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes. The amendment proposes to create a depositors' insurance bureau in the Treasury Department. I ask that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

IMPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have a series of three resolutions. They relate in a general way to the same subject matter, but I will have to offer them separately, since they are addressed to different departments.

I send to the desk the following resolution, which I ask may be read, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution to the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 213), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to report all exclusions of foreign convict or prison-made merchandise made by his department since the enactment of the (tariff) act of July 24, 1897; to transmit copies of all regulations promulgated by the Treasury Department looking to the enforcement of the law prohibiting the importation of merchandise made by convict or prison labor in whole or part; that he transmit copies or a summary of every complaint, statement, document, presentation, or brief filed at the Treasury Department since 1897 alleging a violation of said law or complaining against the importation of convict-made goods, the reports of investigating officers of his department, and the conclusions reached and action taken by the department respecting each case. That he further transmit all information now in his possession bearing upon the question of the importation into the United States of goods made in whole or part by convict or prison labor.

And he is further directed to inform the Senate whether, in his opinion, the present statute is adequate to effectively exclude foreign convict or prison-made goods, whether the product of the field, the quarry, or of manufacturing establishments, when imported into the United States; and if the present law has been found to be inadequate that he suggest to the Senate such amendments or changes that should, in his opinion, be made in the law to make it adequate and effective.

That the above information be transmitted for the use of the Senate at the earliest practicable date, not later than January 10, 1914.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I notice in the resolution a suggestion is made that the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to the Senate certain amendments. Should it not be that he shall suggest certain amendments rather than submit amendments to the Senate?

Mr. STONE. I have no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the phraseology ought to be changed in that respect.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would suggest such an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

LAWS RELATING TO CONVICT LABOR.

Mr. STONE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 211), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of Labor be, and hereby is, directed to compile all Federal and State laws relating to convict labor, including the data embodied in the Twentieth Annual Report of the Commissioner of Labor, 1905, and all subsequent enactments to date; to set forth especially all legislation regulating the sale and transportation of convict-made products in so far as the same relates to interstate commerce, together with any information he may have tending to show the effect upon free labor of the sale of convict-made goods, wares, and merchandise; also to gather data, as far as practicable, and report as to the class or description of industries in which convict or prison labor is employed in the several States, and the value of the products of such labor. That the data and information called for be prepared and transmitted as soon as may be for the use of the Senate.

PRISON LABOR IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. STONE. I offer the following resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 212) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce be, and hereby is, directed to secure, as far as possible, the latest published prison reports relating to the industrial employment of convicts in foreign jails, penitentiaries, houses of detention, and correctional institutions operated under governmental control or supervision in England, Scotland, Ireland, Belgium, Holland, France, Austria, Germany, Italy, Sweden, Denmark, Russia, and Japan; to translate and assemble and set forth all data showing the kinds of merchandise made and the materials manipulated, or partly manipulated or manufactured, in said foreign prisons or outside of said prisons by convicts for the several Governments or for contractors of prison labor. That said Secretary shall from such prison reports extract and set forth the number of convicts or detained persons, male and female, employed as above indicated, the value of their product, the revenue derived therefrom, the financial benefits accruing to the prisoners from inside and outside employment as prisoners in the several countries named herein. That he shall assemble and transmit copies of all reports made by our consular officers to the Department of State and to the Department of Commerce relating to the production, offer, and sale of convict-made goods, wares, and merchandise intended for shipment for foreign markets, and especially to the United States. That all of the facts herein called for be prepared and transmitted as soon as may be, for the information and use of the Senate, not later than February 1, 1914.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, and it was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before these resolutions are finally disposed of, I desire to say that a considerable amount of data has been brought to my attention tending to show—and which to a limited extent does show—important facts relating to the employment of convicts detained in various jails, penitentiaries, and other prisons or places of detention in several of the principal European countries, and also showing the class or kind of industries in which this character of labor is chiefly employed.

I shall not detain the Senate, for I hardly think it necessary at this time to go at length into the subject; but I wish to call attention to a list of employments in prisons in England, as shown from an official report on prison labor. It appears from this list that the following are industries in which prison labor is employed:

Cotton sorters, knitters, mail-bag makers, mat and rug makers, oakum pickers, shoemakers, stone workers, tailors, hammock makers, hessian stranders, basket makers, glove makers, coil ballers, coil pickers, jute-bagging teasers, rug makers, ship-fender makers, weavers (all branches), fiber dressers, quarry work, bedding makers, bookbinders, brush and mop makers, matting weavers, mat and matting yarn sorters, needleworkers, sack and bag menders and makers, nose-bag makers, bead workers, canvas pickers, halter makers, rope teasers, wool sorters, grommet makers, netmakers, twine makers, pea sorters, stonecutters.

It will be seen from this list that there is a large number of important industries in which this kind of labor is employed, and I have information that a large quantity of the product of this labor is exported from various European countries to foreign markets and that a great deal of it finds its way into the markets of the United States. I think the law we have had on our statute books for 25 years prohibiting the importation of convict-made goods is either inadequate to effectuate the purposes the lawmakers had in mind or else it has not been very stringently enforced.

I think it important that we should have the data called for in these several resolutions. They are accessible, and if the department heads, to which the resolutions are severally addressed, will go diligently at the work, I think a large fund of very valuable information on this important subject can be speedily furnished to the Senate. My purpose in seeking this information is to make it the basis of legislation at the next session of this Congress.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a good deal of data bearing on this subject, official for the most part in its character, and I ask permission of the Senate to incorporate them as a part of my remarks, not only for the use of the Senate, but for the information of the departments to which these resolutions will go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In our own country we find it wise and necessary to employ our convicts, but the several States have declared how their product shall and shall not be marketed. As to production, I will very briefly quote from the twentieth annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, page 20:

"The total value of all goods produced by convict labor in the United States during the year investigated was $34,276,605. This sum represents the market value. * * * Of the total product, goods having a value of $30,280,940 were produced in penal institutions; an average of 51,172 convicts were employed during the year; the average value of product per convict was $670 for the year."

Page 23 of the report says:

"Every State objects to being made the market for convict-made goods produced in other States."

Page 27:

"The competition of prison-made products in some instances forces the weaker manufacturers to deteriorate the quality of their goods in order to meet prison prices. In this way the price-breaking power of the prison output is augmented by the output of those manufacturers who have had to debase the quality of their wares to meet the prison competition."

Page 49:

"* * * In some of the States the manufacturing and labor interests have secured the enactment of laws prohibiting the manufacture within the prisons of the State of goods to be sold in competition with the product of free labor and require that the goods made be for public use only. In such cases it is regarded as a peculiar hardship that convict-made goods from other States may be brought into the State and sold without restriction," etc.

If therefore such conditions exist in our own country respecting the manufactured products of our own prisons and the effects on our own interests what can be said in defense of the unimpeded imports of the prison-made products of Europe "brought into the United States and sold without restriction"?

The question is, Does Europe dump its prison-made products into this country? At this time I will only assert such to be the fact and will wait for the proof.

I give one illustration: I have a copy of Daily and Consular Trade Reports of September 13, 1911, No. 214, referring to prison-made oakum, issued by the Department of Commerce. It shows that this foreign oakum, duty free, is imported annually to the extent of nearly one and a half million pounds. Shall we call our American vessels and boats and make use in other ways of foreign convict-made oakum, and even advise our people how to procure it?

Another illustration: Official reports show that the work upon which convicts were engaged for outside contractors was varied, examples being given respecting employment in the prisons of Louvain and St. Gilles, embracing the following:

"Wire drawing, fishing tackle and poles, satchels, cork making, net making, shoes, slippers, rattan braiding, basket making, mat making, oakum," etc.

In the Belgium prisons in 1910 21,479 convicts were engaged on contractors' industrial work. Other convicts in the Belgian jails work at making linens, yarns, preparing flax, spinning and weaving, toys, trunks, suitcases, ladies' handbags, beadwork, roll-top desks, teased hair, brushes, cotton and flax belting, pottery, tinware, buttons (pearl, shell, and ivory), and stuffed toys.

SUMMARY.

It therefore appears that Belgium prisons (in the calendar year of 1910) employed 2,363 men convicts and 116 women (total 2,479) on contractor's industrial work, covering the manufacture of a wide range of merchandise.

The receipts from such work aggregated $91,409, of which $33,310 was paid to the convicts, the Government making a profit of $22,792, and the wages of convicts ranged from 0.6 cent per day paid to rattan braiders to 28 cents to tinsmiths. The average paid in to employment was 11.4 cents per day. The details of employments covered only the prisons at Louvain and St. Gilles, other official data not being at hand at this writing, but procurable. (T. A. B.)

GERMANY.

The official German prison report for the year ending March 31, 1910, translated, shows that the convicts, numbering many thousands, are engaged in the below-stated industrial work, the major portion of which is for outside contractors, and the product is extensively shipped to the United States. The report sets forth the titles, report number, page, jail number, merchandise, and number of convicts in each jail:

Basket making, bookmaking, cartons, high-class paper and containers, brooms, brushes, cornucopias, reed and cocoa mats, sacks, hair sorting, cocoa matting, embroideries, tapestries, knit goods, hemp bags, cocoa mats, shoes and slippers, buttons, felt goods, saddlery, hair goods, rope twine, wool sorting, stripped feathers, toys, whips, willow furniture, etc. The same conditions may be found in the jails of France, Italy, and other European countries.

SALE OF OAKUM IN FRANCE.

[From Consul James E. Dunning, Havre.]

The quantity of foreign oakum used in France is insignificant compared with that of the native article. All the best qualities of oakum sold in this country are of French manufacture.

The price of machine-made oakum is considerably lower than that of hand-picked, but very little of the former is used. The best hand-picked material comes from the Government prison at Brest, where the picking is done by convicts. This oakum is sold at 60 francs per 100 kilograms ($11.58 per 220 pounds).

The hand-picked oakum is drier and less oily, making it easier and more economical to handle. The consulate is informed that 100 pounds of hand-picked oakum will go as far as 150 pounds of machine-picked. It is stated that calkers would not consent to use machine-picked oakum at any price. The imports of hemp oakum for all of France in 1910 were 3,479 tons, valued at $448,918. [A list of oakum dealers in Havre may be had from the Bureau of Manufactures.]

POLLUTION OF BOUNDARY WATERS (S. DOC. NO. 235).

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I ask to have printed as a public document the report of a committee of the National Association for the Prevention of Pollution of Rivers and Waterways, presented at the annual meeting of the association in Cleveland, Ohio, October 23, 1912. It is a brief but a valuable report on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RACIAL FACTORS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask to have read the communication which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STAATSVERBAND DEUTSCHSPRECHENDER
VEREINE VON OREGON
(CONFEDERATION OF GERMAN-SPEAKING SOCIETIES),
Portland, Oreg., November 1, 1913.

We, the members of the Confederated German Societies and the Robert Emmet Society of this city, having read with surprise the recent un-American utterances of the recently appointed ambassador to Great Britain, Walter H. Page, wherein he stated that this country is "English led and English ruled," and that the obligations of government and civilization rest with the people who speak the language of Shakespeare; and

Whereas we believe that the gentleman aforesaid has an erroneous conception of the many races going to make up these United States, and that these remarks were uncalled for, untruthful, and derogatory to the other great races that constitute this country, such as the Germans, Irish, Italians, etc.;

We therefore respectfully request that this matter be brought to the attention of the ambassador to Great Britain, with a view to the avoidance of such pro-British sentiments in the future; and it is our wish that these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State, to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and to the two Senators from Oregon.

CONFEDERATED GERMAN SOCIETIES,

E. J. MURPHY, Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

INDEMNITY FOR KILLING OF ANGELO ALBANO.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of a bill which is a matter of some public importance. It is the bill (H. R. 7384) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject. I wish, with the indulgence of the Senate, before the question is put on the unanimous consent, merely to make a statement for the purpose of having the matter properly presented.

This is a bill to pay to the Italian Government $6,000, which has been agreed upon between the executive departments of the two Governments, as an indemnity for the murder of an Italian subject by an armed mob in the State of Florida. The bill has passed the other House and has been in the Senate for some time. Its consideration has been delayed on account of the fact that we have not been actively engaged in the consideration of general legislation. It is a subject of some little embarrassment that the matter has not heretofore received the attention of the Senate.

There have been claims on the part of the United States against the Italian Government under consideration at the same time that this claim was being considered before an agreement was finally reached. When the amount of the claims of this Government against the Italian Government were ascertained and liquidated, the Italian Government promptly paid them. In the past few months the Italian Government has paid to this Government upon such claims $25,000. At the time that that payment was made it was suggested to the representatives of the Italian Government that possibly they might withhold payment until we were ready to make this payment; but they waived it aside and said no, they would not require that at all, and made the payments.

I have here, Mr. President, the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations recommending the passage of the bill, which has previously passed the other House. The report which I will send to the desk, unless it is there with the papers, is the Senate report adopting the House report. I do not ask that the report be read before the unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill is passed upon, but if unanimous consent is given I will then ask to have the report read. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may receive present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest that the report be printed in the Record without reading. It will take a long time to read it.

Mr. BACON. It is very short. It substantially contains the facts that I have stated; that is all.

I will simply add that this matter has been made the subject of a special message from the President. At the time the amount was agreed upon the President sent a message to Congress, which was read in the House of Representatives, and I presume it was also read here—I do not recall whether or not it was—anyway a message was sent to Congress recommending that this amount be appropriated.

I repeat, that the amount has been agreed upon by the two Governments, and I hope the bill will receive immediate consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have glanced over the report in this case and it seems to me it is a matter of such simple international justice that there ought not to be, and surely there will not be, any objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BACON. There should not be. I repeat, the amount involved is extremely reasonable. It is only $6,000. I am gratified to know that the Senator from New Hampshire recognizes, and I presume other Senators will recognize, the propriety of immediate action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes to be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, out of humane consideration and without reference to the question of liability therefor, to the Italian Government as full indemnity to the heirs of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, who was killed by an armed mob at Tampa, Fla., on the 20th day of September, 1910, the sum of $6,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in furtherance of the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that the report on the bill be incorporated in the RECORD so that the circumstances under which this extraordinary appropriation is made may be well known, and, so far as it is a precedent, that the reasons therefor may appear in the RECORD, I ask that the report may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report submitted by Mr. SHIVELY on October 2, 1913, is as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7384) authorizing the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, having had the same under consideration, reports it back without amendment and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The committee submits herewith the report made on this bill from the Committee on Foreign Affairs to the House of Representatives and adopts the same as a part of this Senate report.

[House Report No. 45, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7384) authorizing the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, having had the same under consideration, reports it back without amendment and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

This claim grows out of the killing of one Angelo Albano, an Italian subject, by an armed mob while in custody on a charge of crime, in the city of Tampa, Fla., on the 20th day of September, 1910. The facts in the case detailing the crime and establishing the fact that its victim was an Italian subject at the time of his death are succinctly set forth in the copies of sworn statements contained in the message from the President (H. Doc. No. 105) transmitting the report of the Secretary of State in relation thereto. Not only does the President recommend that "as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States Congress make suitable provision for the heirs of the Italian subject thus killed, the proceeds to be distributed by the Italian Government in such manner as it may deem proper," but Secretary of State Bryan in his report also recommends that Congress take such action in view of all the circumstances in the case, both on account of the precedents which he therein cites and "for the preservation of the cordial relations now existing between the United States and Italy."

As to the amount of indemnity involved, the payment of $6,000 is recommended, not only because it seems to this committee to be reasonable but because it has been requested by the Italian embassy as one that would comport with "the sense of equity and justice" as a fair sum which our Government should pay.

In view of these facts, and the further one that recently similar claims for a considerably larger amount have been generously settled in our favor by the Italian Government, it would seem after this long delay to impose upon Congress an obligation to promptly comply with the request of that Government for a speedy settlement of the claim.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I send to the desk three or four lines from a Washington newspaper and ask that they may be read, after which I wish to say a word relating thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

With the committee hard at work, but tied upon the fundamentals of the bill, the movement for a caucus of Democratic Senators gained momentum yesterday. A petition was circulated by Senators ASHURST of Arizona and MARTINE of New Jersey calling for a conference on the currency question generally. No detailed directions were included in the call. It was understood that the real object of the caucus and its scope in relation to the work of the committee would be decided after it met.

Administration Senators, including Senator OWEN, declared they had taken no part in starting the call for a conference.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not rise to make any complaint or to assert that any injustice has been done me by the article, but I feel that history should be kept straight. I was struck by the remarkable fact that the erroneous reference to myself appeared in the Washington Post, a paper so uniformly correct in its news items that I wondered how it could have associated my name with the matter of circulating the petition referred to, when I had nothing whatever to do with the circulating of that or any other petition.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, inasmuch as my humble name was connected with this matter—I do not know whether the statement is worthy of a contradiction, as it carried with it no force particularly because of that association—I desire to say that it is unqualifiedly untrue. I have circulated no petition; I had no thought of circulating any petition of the kind or of any other kind. I am willing to abide the result of the deliberations of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I believe there is wisdom and intellect enough there to bring out a bill that will be ratified by the Senate and will meet the general approbation of the whole land. So far as I am concerned, the statement in the article read originated only in the dream of some fertile brain and not in fact.

THOMAS B. STALLINGS AND RICHARD M. NELSON.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 197, which has been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 197. Is there objection?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with amendments.

The amendments were, in line 3, after the name "Stallings," to strike out "the sum of," and insert "60 days' salary at the rate of"; in line 5, after the name "Nelson," to strike out "the sum of" and insert "60 days' salary at the rate of"; in line 8, after the word "respectively," to insert "for 60 days"; and in line 9, after the word "thirteen," to strike out "to the date of the passage of this resolution," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Thomas B. Stallings 60 days' salary at the rate of $2,220 per annum and to Richard M. Nelson 60 days' salary at the rate of $1,200 per annum, the same being for services as clerk and as messenger to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, respectively, for 60 days from August 16, 1913.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY—BANKING AND CURRENCY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is the order of business.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to next Thursday at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I believe that motion is a proper subject for discussion under the rules. A motion to adjourn, I understand, of course, is not debatable—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule also is, the Chair would say, that a motion to adjourn to a day certain is not debatable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is not that motion. This motion is that when the Senate adjourns it adjourn to a certain date, which is a debatable motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if there were to be a meeting of the Senate to-morrow, I should probably defer until that time what I shall say to-day; but as the next meeting of the Senate is to be fixed for Thursday, and as a call has already been authorized for a Democratic caucus on Wednesday, I feel it timely to say some things which otherwise might be deferred.

Since the Senate adjourned last Thursday a new situation has arisen in the consideration of banking and currency legislation, which I desire to call to the attention of the Senate.

The House bill for Federal reserve banks came to our committee September 18. Hearings upon it had already been started and continued up to October 25. They have been printed and cover 3,259 pages. Each Senator has no doubt examined them and realizes that they are highly valuable. Since the hearings closed the committee has been in session for two weeks, up to Saturday night, at work upon the bill. Up to last Wednesday progress was so encouraging that the general expectation was that a report could be reached by the end of this week, November 15. A number of changes had been made by a majority vote of the committee—a vote running from 7 to 5 up to as high as 9 to 2.

Among the important matters which had up to that time been settled by a majority vote were that the committee should report in favor of 4 regional reserve banks to start with, instead of 12, giving, however, to the board power to increase the number after two years, if found desirable; in favor of giving the Government a majority of the directors of each of those banks, instead of giving the majority vote to the banking interests; in favor of having the stock in the reserve banks first offered to the public in popular subscription, instead of being monopolized by the banks; in favor of enlarging the membership of the great Federal reserve board which is to control this system from 7 to 9; in favor of leaving the Secretary of the Treasury on the reserve board as one of the nine; in favor of taking off the Secretary of Agriculture and Comptroller of the Currency; in favor of making the term of members eight years, one retiring each year; and in favor of making all Federal reserve notes to be issued under this bill payable in gold.

Those important matters had been voted on, and a majority of the committee, voting their convictions, had declared for them.

At this juncture outside influences began to be felt upon the committee. The reactionary period set in. We were told that the President could not accept the decisions reached by the majority of the committee and we were urged to retrace our steps.

I know full well the force of such an appeal, and I have no criticism for those who yield to it. Were the issue political I should yield to it on proper occasion. In my opinion, however, the banking and currency question is not political or partisan, and should not become so.

Moreover, Mr. President, I feel that when the Senate refers to a great standing committee of this body an important bill of this character the Senate is entitled to have members of the committee examine it carefully and vote according to their own convictions and beliefs. I should prefer to retire from a committee rather than to vote for a vital or fundamental feature against my convictions, even to meet the views of the President of the United States.

I recognize that the views of the President of the United States are entitled to the greatest weight. There is a proper time for consideration to be given to those views. That time is after the committee charged with the duty of making its recommendation to the Senate has done so. It is then for the Members of the Senate to consider whether or not those views shall be accepted. After the Senate has passed upon that question, and in case the Senate shall have voted to differ from the body at the other end of the Capitol, the conference committee is another place where necessary compromises should be made and where the views of the President may properly be considered, because he is ultimately to be confronted with the alternative of signing or vetoing the bill.

Therefore, Mr. President, when the issue arose in our committee I declined to change my vote. The result was that the committee became and is now deadlocked. It may be said that it is presidential influence which has produced the deadlock, or it may be said that I have produced it by refusing to change my vote. The deadlock may be broken. I hope so, but I do not know how at this time.

In this contingency a call has been issued for a caucus or conference of Democratic Senators to consider the situation; and this is quite likely to result in raising another issue and in making matters worse instead of better.

The bill is in the hands of the committee. There it must remain until reported voluntarily or by order of the Senate. A caucus can neither order a report nor compel the committee to return the bill to the Senate.

The caucus might enter into a discussion of the merits of the bill and the 243 amendments to it still pending before the committee, most of them offered by the chairman of the committee, but the decisions of such a caucus would not be binding, and after days or weeks of discussion in caucus the whole matter would have to be gone over again in the Senate. The result would be months of delay.

Personally I am already on record. I would not permit myself against my convictions to be bound by the decisions of a secret caucus on an important matter of legislation like this, not political nor partisan. I am assured by a number of other Senators on this side of the Chamber that they are equally opposed to a secret legislative proceeding such as a caucus is.

These considerations lead me to suggest that instead of attempting to submit this question to a caucus or conference it be submitted to the whole Senate.

The Senate is the proper place to discuss this bill. It should be considered here in public and not in caucus or conference in secret. The votes should be public. The discussions should be public.

If, therefore, Senators desire to take the matter out of the hands of the committee, let them order the committee to report, say, in 10 days; or if not able to agree upon a report in that time, let the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill. The bill then would be before the Senate, with or without a report, and could be taken up upon its merits and a decision reached without the unnecessary delay involved in a caucus.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator from Nebraska takes his seat, I wish to ask him if he would have any objection to going into a conference of Democrats for the consideration of this bill, with the doors of the conference wide open and the press permitted to report to the public the deliberations of the conference?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. None whatever, if I am not to be bound by party ties, as a result of the caucus or by a gentlemen's agreement or by any other restraint, to refrain from voting my convictions in committee or here in the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have listened to the Senator from Nebraska. As I was largely responsible for the circulation of the petition for a conference, I desire to make a statement with reference to it.

The very conditions portrayed by the Senator from Nebraska seem to me to necessitate a conference among Democrats to ascertain what they should do in this emergency. This is not to be a binding caucus. Such conditions had arisen in connection with currency legislation that it seemed to me wise and proper to have a conference among the 51 Democrats who were commissioned by the people to give to the country reform legislation of various kinds, included in which was banking and currency reform.

I felt that an emergency had arisen. I felt that good would accrue from having a conference of all the Democrats to ascertain the situation, to ascertain the differences, to see if they could be composed, and to see to what extent the party's obligation to the entire country could be discharged, not by depriving the Senate of a right to vote, which can not be done; not to settle matters outside of the Senate, for there is no possibility under the Constitution for that to be done, but to get together as a party, responsible for legislation in this country, to respond to our platform obligations and to see what is wise to be done.

We are anxious to hear from all Democrats in that conference as to what is being done, what they think ought to be done, how the matter can be facilitated, and how the best bill can be obtained. While, of course, the Democratic Party is no more interested than the Republican Party in having a good bill, we have a responsibility that the minority have not. We are responsible for legislation. We have been given control of all the branches of the Government to enact legislation, and this is a responsibility we can not shirk as an entire party. We can not shift it to individuals.

This conference was called, not to reflect upon any Senator, not to reflect upon any Member of the Banking and Currency Committee. They are all invited to attend the conference. We shall be glad to hear their views, to ascertain, without binding anyone, what the party as a unit should do in this emergency.

I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that the call is simply for a conference to advise in connection with the currency bill. We saw differences between Democrats that seemed to be irreconcilable. There seemed to be delay in getting a reconciliation. We thought no Democrat would resent having a conference and trying to get the wisdom and the thoughts and the views of 51 Democrats, to see if these differences could not be settled for the benefit of the party, and the benefit of the party means the benefit of the country. We realize that when this legislation is enacted it will be enacted for all.

I want to say that this conference is called simply for the purpose of taking our bearings, to ascertain what it is wise and patriotic for the party to do in this emergency. It is called for no other purpose. When the conference meets, after the 51 Democrats have expressed their views and convictions, they will know how to conduct the conference for the good of the party and the good of the country.

I hope the Senator from Nebraska will attend the conference. I should be very glad to hear from him. I know how assiduously he has worked. I have listened to the various points of view he has expressed. I have read them in the various hearings.

It seems to me, however, that the time has come for the party that is responsible in this Chamber and in the other Chamber to have a conference as to what the party should do to measure up to the obligation to the country which it assumed on the 4th of March. I think a conference should be held for that purpose and none other.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think it was about the middle of September that the bill which is under consideration by the Committee on Banking and Currency was referred to that committee. Since that time this body has been meeting and adjourning practically to every third day. A number of us have remained here from a sense of public duty, to the end that a quorum might be maintained and that the business of the country might not receive any check because of our absence.

It is quite apparent from what has been said to-day by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that there is no immediate prospect of a report from the Banking and Currency Committee; and the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] is that when the Senate adjourns to-day it shall adjourn until next Thursday. My purpose in rising is to oppose that motion and to insist upon an adjournment until to-morrow at the usual hour, and from to-morrow until the next day, in order that the business upon the calendar may be transacted.

It seems to me we are wasting time here most unprofitably and needlessly. There is business for this body to do outside of and beyond the banking and currency bill. The active calendar contains about 100 bills that have been reported, some of which are of considerable importance. These bills must receive our attention at some time. Why not now, instead of waiting and postponing action until the regular session shall be upon us, with all of its important business?

I think we should realize the fact that inasmuch as we are not going to have a banking and currency bill for consideration very soon, and inasmuch as there are other measures before us that we must dispose of at some time if they are to be disposed of at all, this body should act in a businesslike way and meet from day to day and transact business as long as there is any business upon the calendar to be transacted. If not, then we can perhaps serve the country better by adjourning the present session entirely and coming back here the 1st day of December, when the regular session begins.

Now, Mr. President, I do not want to be exacting in making this insistence. I have been very patient in seeing these adjournments over from time to time, the Senate practically standing still and doing nothing, until the 10th day of November has arrived, one-third of the month is gone, and we have but 20 days, including Sundays, between to-day and the date of the regular session. If we are to adjourn over every third day, we shall hold six sessions, and all that will be done will be the introduction of measures, the general discussion of topics of greater or less public concern, and the transaction of no actually important business whatever.

I hope, therefore, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it will adjourn to meet to-morrow and proceed with the calendar that is before this body.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, if there is any business to be transacted, if any Senator will suggest that he has business which he desires to bring to the attention of the Senate to-morrow, I shall certainly not insist upon my motion.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no business in the sense that I have any measure pending upon the calendar in which I am personally concerned, but with a calendar containing one hundred and odd measures which have been reported and which, therefore, is presumably the business of the Senate, I think that calendar ought to be called to the end. If that business is important, it should be transacted; and if it is not, it should be taken from the calendar.

Mr. KERN. If any Senator on either side of the Chamber has business that he wishes to bring before the Senate on to-morrow, I shall not insist upon the motion; but it was because I understood there was no business that was pressing upon the Senate, no business that would likely be brought before the Senate, that I thought it unwise to bring Senators here merely as a matter of empty form.

While I am on my feet—

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will state it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ordinarily I would not interpose an objection, but the Chair having held that this is not a debatable subject, I think we had better follow the rule. I understood the Chair to rule that the motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so rule. The Chair was under the impression that under the rule a motion to adjourn to a day certain is not debatable, and then the Senator from Nebraska, who wished to address the Senate, raised the question and called attention to the fact that it was not such a motion, but a motion that when the Senate does adjourn to-day it shall adjourn to meet on Thursday.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Chair's present ruling is undoubtedly correct, and I withdraw the suggestion I rose to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. KERN. While I am on my feet I have only a word to utter with reference to the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. There has been no caucus called. No caucus is contemplated, so far as I am advised. As caucus chairman I received on Saturday a request signed by a majority of the Democratic Senators, asking that there be called by me, as caucus chairman, a conference of the Democratic Senators for the purpose of talking over the situation respecting the banking and currency question and considering what ought to be done in view of present circumstances. That call has not yet been issued. It will probably be issued to-morrow for a conference on Wednesday afternoon.

When the Senator from Nebraska receives notice of the conference, which will be issued to-morrow, he will discover that there is no attempt being made to bind his conscience and bind him in any way or to interfere in the slightest degree with the legitimate work of the Committee on Banking and Currency, but simply a meeting of Democratic Senators for the purpose of talking over the situation and seeing what can best be done to promote the common good. He would not regard it as improper if four or five of his brethren on the Democratic side should meet with him and talk with him and advise with him on the situation, or meet with him for the purpose of ascertaining from him how he felt on the subject and what suggestions he had to make and to offer suggestions to him. That would not be objectionable, whether it was to be a public meeting or a private meeting, whether it was at his own home or in the conference room.

Certainly it could not be objectionable for the members of the Banking and Currency Committee who are on the majority side to meet with their brethren on this side and in an informal way discuss the situation, for the purpose of ascertaining from the members of the committee what the status of affairs may be, what is the prospect, if any, of agreement, and counseling together as to what ought to be done for the furtherance of some legislation on this subject. That is the sole purpose of the proposed conference. That is what it was called for, and that is what the call will state. The Senator will be in no wise bound. His counsel will be asked; his opinions will be asked. They will be asked because they will be desired.

I believe that the speech he has made here this morning is rather premature, and that it would have been better to have made it before the conference when it meets on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the propriety or impropriety of calling a conference at this time is not a question that I intend to discuss. So far as I am concerned, having been a Democrat all of my life, having never bolted a ticket or a convention, having never even run my pencil through the name of a single name found upon a Democratic ballot, I need hardly say to the Democrats of the Senate or to my brethren upon the other side that I can enter a party council and abide by its mandate with that Christian fortitude and spiritual grace so often invoked by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

If the time has arrived when the Democrats of the Senate feel that they want to take charge, either in a directory or an advisory capacity, of the conduct of the Democratic members of the Banking and Currency Committee, then I shall make no complaint, because I recognize the fact that if in council there is wisdom it goes as a matter of course that in Democratic council there is not only wisdom but righteousness.

But, Mr. President, I can not help calling attention to one or two matters. As a preliminary, let me say, in consonance with the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], that, whether it was wise or unwise to hold the Senate in session during all of the hot months of summer to enact currency legislation, manifestly a condition has now developed when in any view of the case the Senate might as well proceed with such matters of business as it has before it. The hour has come when there is no necessity, no good purpose, to warrant the Senate in simply waiting from day to day for the report of this bill.

When I say that, let no man put the construction upon it that I am favoring any delay in reporting the currency bill, or that I favor delay in taking action upon the bill as soon as it can be brought before the Senate. Whether it comes with a unanimous report, or with minority and majority reports, or whether it comes because the Senate shall see fit to discharge the committee and bring the bill before the Senate, in any of these cases I am unalterably of the opinion that the Senate immediately, to the practical exclusion of all other business, should determine what its action shall be upon this great measure. But in the meantime, until the bill shall be brought before the Senate, there is no reason, in my opinion, why the Senate might not proceed with other business.

Now, Mr. President, a word, since the matter is up for discussion, in regard to this measure. There seems to have been a sort of general impression given to the country that the drafting and enactment of a banking and currency bill was a sort of summer-day picnic excursion, to be indulged as a diversion from the ordinarily serious business of legislation. There seemed to be an impression that the task was a light one, and that impression has been given generally to the public.

Now, Mr. President, those of us who have been members of this committee and who have been to the best of our ability trying to solve its manifold problems entertain a different view; and before the bill shall have been debated upon the floor of the Senate for even one day every Member of the Senate, regardless of politics, will have arrived at the conclusion that we are dealing with most grave and important matters.

The bill that is before us contemplates what must be regarded if not a revolution at least a very radical change in our financial system. It proposes in a word to empower a board appointed by the President of the United States to authorize the issuance of money and to hold as security for that money a gold reserve of 33½ per cent and the promissory notes or bills of exchange which may be deposited with a Federal agent by the various banks. I shall not at this time discuss the propriety or impropriety, the wisdom or the unwisdom of that plan; but I do say that this is the first time in the history of the Republic that the issuance of money or currency upon that particular kind of security has been seriously contemplated.

Mr. President, lest I should be misunderstood again, let me say that I believe that plan can be worked out, and worked out safely, worked out to the great advantage of our country; but it must be agreed that so important a departure from the present system demands the exercise of the highest degree of care, prudence, and forethought.

It is proposed in this system, Mr. President, that we shall bring all the banks now existing under the Federal Government and all other banks which may see fit to join the system into membership in a certain number of regional banks. The dispute has been whether we shall establish one central publicly owned and controlled bank or a regional system having four or more members, and whether these regional banks shall be controlled by the banks or by the Government.

Mr. President, I submit to the intelligence and the patriotism of the Senate and of the country that the bringing together of nearly 20,000 banks, State and National, including trust companies, into a common organization of 12 banks or 4 banks involves an important change in our banking system, and that the man who would be willing to undertake to make that change without due regard for its gravity, without careful study of the question, is wholly unfitted for the responsible duties imposed upon Members of Congress.

I could continue now perhaps for some hours pointing out the very great changes this bill makes. I might add that it is intended to meet great evils which have fallen upon our country. It is intended to prevent the undue accumulation of reserves in certain great cities. It is intended to make a system of such character that when the evil days come, as they have come in the past and as they will come in the future, there will be a competent power in the hands of representatives of the Federal Government to relieve the situation upon the instant and prevent a calamity or a panic.

But, Mr. President, in dealing with questions of that kind men must understand that he who leaps without first ascertaining where he may alight is not proceeding with proper regard for the gravity of the matters involved. So this committee has been endeavoring to gain light and to arrive, if possible, at a common agreement.

It seemed to me, Mr. President, that this was not a partisan question in the ordinary sense of the term; it was not at all like the tariff controversy. Why, upon that question the Republican Party has gone out to battle, presenting an almost solid front for 25 or 30 years. Opposed to them, on the other side of a sharply defined line, the Democrats have massed their hosts; we have contended in many a campaign. It thus became a partisan question upon which we were absolutely divided. On the other hand, all men of all parties have insistently demanded the reform of our banking and currency laws. The question was of such overmastering importance that I hoped to see all Members of Congress approach its consideration inspired only by a patriotism exalted above mere partisan advantage. I said from the beginning—and I want to make this emphatic—that whenever I found that my Republican brethren upon the Banking and Currency Committee were playing politics, whenever I found that party lines were being there drawn, I would instantly go into conference with the Democratic members of the committee, for to that household I belong. Mr. President, the committee has been proceeding; we have had sharp debates; we have had some sharp differences; the Democrats have not been a unit; the Republicans have not been a unit; party lines have been broken time and again in voting; and it seemed to me—and I say to the Senate now, and to the country, it still seems to me—that there has not been a party alignment in the committee.

The Republican members of the committee naturally view the questions involved from a viewpoint somewhat different from the Democrats. Nevertheless, I firmly believe they have in good faith sought to reach an agreement with the Democrats. I believe that the committee ought to be permitted to proceed until they find that there can not be an agreement. When that time comes, if unfortunately it shall come, I will join others in insisting upon the Democratic members getting together and writing a bill and reporting it; but I do not think that time has come. If I find I am mistaken—and the matter will be developed, I think, within the next two or three days ultimately and finally—then, of course, everybody ought to know that I will be found over in the Democratic camp doing the best I can with my Democratic brethren to get them to formulate a bill that will present the wisest possible solution from our standpoint.

Mr. President, I lose not to say this; but, having risen, I found myself saying it because it was in my heart to say it, and I say it with all the kindness in the world for every Member of the Senate, for every man upon this side, for my friends who called this caucus, for my friends upon the committee who do not agree with me in regard to certain matters that are pending, and I dismiss it with what I have said. But I rose to a somewhat unpleasant task, and one which I would not assume if it were not for the fact that when statements are made to great newspapers in this country and go out to the country, about the second day, if they are not denied, they are taken as true and are thereafter assumed to be true.

The distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives has an interview in the New York World, which some of you may have seen. I desire no quarrel with that very eminent gentleman. His interview is couched in language of such moderation, of such toleration, of such kindness, that I feel that I ought scarcely to reply above my breath. It indicates that its author is at once possessed of that calmness, poise, and dignity which marks him as a master among statesmen; so that I have felt I ought perhaps not to correct any statement he may have made in even a minor particular. I do not intend to follow the interview throughout. I shall only call attention to just one important matter.

Some weeks since I made the statement that Mr. H. Parker Willis had been largely instrumental in drafting the currency bill—not the bill as passed by the House, but the bill as it was originally prepared to be sent to the House. I made the statement that the bill at that time provided for a considerable bank representation or a bank control upon a central board which is to exist here at Washington and which is to be, under the bill, the controlling power of this entire system. I simply want to justify that one statement and to leave to the country and to Members of Congress all other assertions made by the very distinguished gentleman who is the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the other House. Mark you, what I said was that as this bill was originally prepared and before it went to the House of Representatives it gave a banking representation or control upon the central board. That is the only question I propose to take your time to discuss.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand the printed testimony of Mr. H. Parker Willis given before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, and I want to read a little of it. Mr. Willis was testifying with reference to the original plan for the central board of control which is to sit here at Washington and manage the entire system of regional banks.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Were there 12 regional banks?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

Senator HITCHCOCK. With a Federal board of control?

Mr. WILLIS. I am not sure that that name was given to the board.

Senator HITCHCOCK. A board to be appointed by the President?

Mr. WILLIS. A board of control; yes.

Senator HITCHCOCK. A board that was a board of public officials, appointed by the President?

Mr. WILLIS. There were also banking representatives in the earlier draft of this bill, some banking representatives.

Senator REED. On what?

Mr. WILLIS. On the board of control.

Mr. President, I might stop at this point, for my statement is here fully proven; but there is more that is interesting:

Senator HITCHCOCK. How many banks were provided for?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know that I recall exactly. The first draft of the bill, in any perfected form, became public at some time during last June. It was given out then to the newspapers from some source, and the data are all given there. I think it would be better, probably, to refer to that.

Senator HITCHCOCK. In the newspapers?

Mr. WILLIS. It was given out and was printed by them.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Some of the members of this committee want to get an idea of how this bill had developed.

Mr. WILLIS. The bill has been developed, as I have said, Senator, with the cooperation of the Committee on Banking and Currency, by a gradual process of study, extending over about 18 months; and as far as my relation to it is concerned it has been, as I have said, that of an advisor and investigator. I have done what I could to advance the work, doing what ordinarily falls to one acting in that capacity, carrying out the instructions of the chairman at each stage of the process, consulting with him and doing what I was instructed to do.

Senator HITCHCOCK. What was the size of the board, Mr. Willis?

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me—I dislike, Senator, to give this data simply from memory, and can speak only subject to the qualification that I am speaking merely from memory, because there have been so many different changes and drafts—that in this draft which became public, and which was the first perfected draft, there was provision for two representatives from each of the regional banks; that is, a so-called commission was appointed, or elected, rather, and then a given number of Government executive officers were ex officio members of that body. That made a rather large body of, perhaps, 25 or 30 men.

Senator HITCHCOCK. If there were two from each regional bank, there would be 24 of them.

Mr. WILLIS. Well, in this bill I speak of I think the number of banks may have been 15. That was the first number hit upon.

Senator REED. That would be, then, 30 men directly representing the banks?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Senator REED. Then you added to that bank representation of 30 the Secretary of the Treasury and who else?

Mr. WILLIS. I think the same officers who are mentioned in the present bill, the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of Agriculture.

Senator REED. So the Government would have 3 representatives and the banks would have 30 representatives?

Mr. WILLIS. May I continue there?

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. This board was merely an advisory or consultative body which elected an executive committee—

Which elected an executive committee—and that committee was vested with all the powers of the advisory body. In the executive committee, which, I think, consisted of nine members, there were three ex officio Government officers, and I think three who were chosen by the banks, and three who were designated by the President of the United States either from this commission or outside of it. A provision was made, however, that bankers who became members of the executive committee should resign all banking connections. The effort was to get a board which fairly represented the business interests of the country and the Government to act jointly.

Senator REED. Was that the stage in which this bill was before it was submitted to Senator OWEN?

Mr. WILLIS. I beg your pardon?

Senator REED. Was that the stage in which this bill was when the draft of it was submitted to Senator OWEN?

Mr. WILLIS. I can not recall in detail, as I say, the exact stages through which the bill went. Senator OWEN went over different drafts of the measure as we went along, and cooperated in shaping the terms of it.

Senator REED. At one time was there not a discussion or argument between Senator OWEN and yourself in regard to the proposition as to whether the Government was to have the ultimate control or whether the banks were to have the ultimate control?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not recall such a discussion, Senator. Let me say at this point, however, that my feeling at that time was that it would be desirable to have certain banking representation on this board. I thought that by so doing we could get into closer touch with the banks of the country, and would have their advice, etc.; that if the membership of the board were partly selected from the best bankers, then called upon to resign their banking connections, their connections with banking institutions, so that they would become the servants of the public, you would have a stronger board for practical purposes than otherwise you would have. That was the view of Mr. Glass, as I understood it, and was a view in which I concurred.

As he worked further on the subject, I think he came to feel that the board should consist entirely of public appointees. When that idea was suggested to me, Mr. GLASS and I had some discussion of the matter. I recall. I do not remember in detail what it was. I think I said to him that it seemed to me that the entire elimination of bankers from the board would tend to lose us a good deal of support for the bill and might result in weakening the plan in practical operation.

Mr. President, if that be not a justification of my statement that the bankers were to be represented upon this board under the primary draft of the bill, then I know not how to make justification. As I have succeeded, I think, in proving that part of my case, and as it is really the crucial matter in dispute,

I pass without further consideration the other statements which have emanated, I think, from a superirritated and supersensitive state of mind rather than from the calm judgment which ought to characterize the utterances of one who assumes to be a collaborator with and spokesman for the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate for taking so much of its time, and I trust I will never have to occupy the floor again on a matter of this sort. I say this as a final word, that I believe the Senate will solve the banking and currency problem and solve it right. I believe that it is a time when temperance of statement, candor of expression, and deliberation of judgment ought to be employed.

I say one other word. In my opinion the business of the country demands as speedy action as can properly be taken. We should act, and we ought to act prudently; we should act promptly; but we ought to carry wisdom with us at every step. Beyond all question the banks of this country are to-day husbanding their resources in view of a contemplated change; not because of any desire to injure the business of the country, for I do not believe such a desire exists, but husbanding their resources because they know that in the near future, in all human probability, they—the national banks alone—will be called upon to remove from its present location something like $300,000,000 to $500,000,000 of their reserves, and in addition be called upon to contribute something over $100,000,000 of capital to the new institutions. In view of that fact they naturally will hesitate about loaning money; and because of that latter fact, which we all appreciate to its utmost, we recognize that there should be as speedy action as possible; but impatience may not make for speed so much as calm deliberation and patience.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on next Thursday at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD L. KEYES.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent to take up for immediate consideration Senate resolution 100, which is on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read for information, Mr. President.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. 100), which had been reported by Mr. FLETCHER from the Committee on Military Affairs June 5, 1913, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, or a subcommittee thereof, is hereby directed to send for Edward L. Keyes, who was formerly a second lieutenant of the Fifth United States Cavalry, and to afford him a full hearing. Furthermore, the said committee or subcommittee is authorized to send for witnesses and take testimony, if such a course should be deemed desirable, with a view of determining whether or not a bill should be reported to the Senate by the Committee on Military Affairs transferring said Edward L. Keyes to the retired list of the Army, and, if so, with what rank.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the resolution at this time, but I wish to ask some questions about it when it is before the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall be very glad to answer the questions.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely wish to say, in explanation of the resolution, that Col. Edward L. Keyes, while he was a lieutenant in the Army, was court-martialed under the old system, which we have since repealed. The presiding officer of the court-martial was his accuser and a witness against him. I know nothing about the facts in the case, except as they were brought to my attention; but it struck me that Col. Keyes ought to have a hearing before a Senate committee. All the resolution does is to provide that the committee shall give him a hearing, and that they shall then determine whether or not they shall go any further and introduce a bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Committee on Military Affairs ever taken up this matter of its own volition?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes. They have reported it and have recommended its passage.

Mr. GALLINGER. They have reported this resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; it was reported by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] from the Committee on Military Affairs. I introduced the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; I was laboring under a misapprehension on that point. I see the committee has reported it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; it is on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. As this bill has been before Congress for the last 10 years, I was going to ask the Senator whether the committee had not already had a number of hearings and decided, while not reporting it adversely, that no favorable report should be made?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The matter in this shape has never been before the committee. There were bills introduced to restore Col. Keyes to his rank, and all that. The Military Affairs Committee has never made any extended investigation of the subject. In the opinion of Col. Keyes it has never made a sufficient examination. I agreed with him after having my attention called to the subject matter; so, instead of introducing a resolution of the old sort, I introduced merely a resolution for a thorough and full investigation.

Another reason in my mind was that in the old times Congress used to seem to think it was right for a man to be a member of a military court, the accuser, and a witness all at the same time. While I was a member of the Military Affairs Committee we succeeded in procuring the repeal of that system. I will say to the Senator that you could have knocked me down with a feather when I first learned that such a system ever had existed in any civilized country.

Mr. SMOOT. I am fully aware of the legislation to which the Senator refers, and I fully agree with his position in repealing that legislation.

The resolution provides that a committee or subcommittee is authorized to send for witnesses and take testimony, but no provision is made in the resolution for the payment of the expenses thereby incurred.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That will have to be done later. Such a resolution will have to be introduced later and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The first thing is to order the investigation and to authorize the action of the subcommittee. Then, if it is found by the subcommittee that any expenses must be paid for out of the contingent fund, of course it will be necessary to introduce a further resolution and have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, under which such expenses are paid.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object to that, but I really think the appropriation ought to be provided for in the resolution. Of course it can be done later, however.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would rather have it done in that way, because I hope no expense will be necessary. All the witnesses may be right here in Washington.

Mr. GALLINGER. We frequently have done it in that way, making the appropriation afterwards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, November 13, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, November 10, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless His holy name."

"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits."

Too often in the rush and whirl of life's activities do we forget Thee, O God, and Thy manifold blessings. Too often do we wander from the paths of rectitude and duty in a selfish desire to promote our ends. Take us, we beseech Thee, into Thy nearer presence, as we thus enter upon the labors of a new week, that we may be worthy of Thy preferments. In the name and spirit of the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, November 7, 1913, was read and approved.

BRIDGE OVER SNAKE RIVER, IDAHO AND WASH.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the consideration of Senate bill 2779 and that it be put upon its passage.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 2779 shall be taken up for present consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.
The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2779) to authorize the conveyance of the steel bridge over the Snake River, between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., to the States of Idaho and Washington or local subdivisions thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That Lewiston-Concord Bridge Co., a corporation created under the laws of the State of Washington and owning a certain steel bridge over Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., authorized by and constructed under an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the Snake River between the States of Washington and Idaho," approved February 15, 1898, and appearing in volume 30 of United States Statutes at Large, page 245, chapter 24, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and empowered to sell and convey the said bridge to the States of Idaho and Washington, or to any commissions or local subdivisions of such States, and that the said States be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to make such provision and enter into such agreements for the maintenance thereof, as to the proper public officers may seem expedient, reserving to the United States all rights acquired under the act above mentioned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman if the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has taken any action on this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No. The committee has not had an opportunity to do so. This bill passed the Senate on last Thursday and was brought over here on Friday, but on account of the urgency of the legislation it was believed that when the House understood the provisions there would be no possible objection. It simply proposes to transfer the title to the bridge from a private corporation to the States of Washington and Idaho, the river forming the boundary between these two States.

Mr. HAMLIN. There never has been a similar bill introduced in the House?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the gentleman know whether or not the matter has been pending before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it has not been before the House heretofore, because there has been no report from the committee. When the bill came over here the gentleman asked to have it placed on the Speaker's table in order that he might have an opportunity to call it up.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This, as I understand, is what is called a toll bridge owned by a private company?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the purpose is to permit the private company to sell the bridge to the States of Washington and Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And those States expect to maintain it as a free bridge?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. MANN. My recollection, based upon an examination of the bill as it passed the Senate, is that it would not be necessary for Congress to act upon it at all.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was just going to suggest that.

Mr. MANN. Except for the fact that the Legislature of the State of Washington, in passing the law, provided that the State should take over the bridge, and put in a provision to the effect that it must be consented to by Congress, I will say to the gentleman that if the bill comes before the House I expect to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has uniformly made objection to every bill which has been called up on this side of the House, I object.

Mr. MANN. I will say, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Virginia that I have not uniformly objected, and that a number of bills have passed; but I shall be perfectly willing to accept that challenge if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I have been here pretty constantly, and I have never yet seen any bill coming from this side of the House escape the objection of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I think three bills from that side of the House passed in one day without objection here.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The War Department has reported favorably upon this measure, and the urgent reason for its immediate consideration is that the tolls being paid by the people of either side of the river now amount to about $2,000 a month, and the company which has sold the bridge to the States of Washington and Idaho is ready now to turn it over, and all that is needed is simply the formal approval of Congress to the transfer. It would seem to be an imposition on the people there to compel them to pay tolls, when the owners of the bridge are anxious to relinquish the ownership and the States are perfectly willing and ready to take over the bridge.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

STRIKES IN INDIANA.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia offers a resolution, which the clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does he offer a resolution, or ask unanimous consent for the consideration of it?

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I reserve the right to object, until the resolution is read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. MOSS] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] reserves the right to object. The Clerk will read the resolution, and then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House Committee on Labor is hereby authorized and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation of the present strikes of the employees of the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern Traction Co. and the Indiana Union Traction Co., and the recent strike of the employees of the Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co., for the purpose of ascertaining—

First. Whether or not at the time of the inception of said strikes the said traction companies, or any of them, were engaged in interstate commerce.

Second. Whether or not at the time aforesaid the said traction companies, or any of them, were engaged in the transportation of mail for the United States Government.

Third. The history of the relations of the employers and employees of the respective companies in so far as such history has a bearing on said strikes.

Fourth. Whether or not the said traction companies, or any of them, constitute a monopoly in restraint of trade.

Fifth. The capitalization of said companies and the gross and net earnings thereof for the five years just past.

Sixth. The wages paid by said companies to their employees, respectively, for such time, and whether or not they were just and reasonable, considering the services performed by the employees and the profits so made by said traction companies.

Seventh. Whether or not any Member of the Congress of the United States, either in the Senate or House of Representatives, was during the duration of any of said strikes or is now an officer or stockholder of any of said traction companies.

Eighth. Who is responsible for the injury or death of any persons injured or killed in the progress of such strikes.

Ninth. Whether or not said traction companies resorted to any harsh, unfair, or unreasonable means or measures to compel the acceptance by their employees of the conditions imposed by said traction companies.

Tenth. Whether or not said employees resorted to any harsh, unfair, or unreasonable means or measures to compel said traction companies to acquiesce in their demands.

Such committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby empowered to sit and act during the session or recess of Congress, or either House thereof, at such time and place as it may deem necessary; to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, books, and documents; to employ stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to take and make a record of all evidence taken and received by the committee and keep a record of its proceedings; to have such evidence, record, and other matter required by the committee printed; and to employ such other clerical assistance as may be necessary. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses. Subpoenas for witnesses shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee thereof. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the investigation herein authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The expenses of the investigation herein ordered shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FERGUSON. I desire to obtain unanimous consent to address the House to-morrow, immediately after the approval of the Journal, on the general subject of party caucuses, not to occupy exceeding 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, on the subject of caucuses.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BARTHOLOTT. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I demand the regular order.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the question on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 25, answered "present" 10, not voting 341, as follows:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting plans and detailed estimates for the construction of barracks and quarters for the garrisons of the mobile army and Coast Artillery in the island of Oahu and in the Panama Canal Zone, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 23, 1913 (H. Doc. No. 276); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Mackinac Harbor, Mich. (H. Doc. No. 274); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with accompanying illustrations.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Salmon River, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 275); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with accompanying illustrations.

4. A letter from the Assistant Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of heirs of W. O. B. Whatley v. United States (H. Doc. No. 273); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on examination of New River, N. C., from Jacksonville as far up as practicable (H. Doc. No. 277); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustration.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5827) granting a pension to Rosana Wavell, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MAHAN: Papers to accompany a bill granting an honorable discharge to Edwin S. Brown; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, November 11, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the name of the Lord, our God, whose mercy is from everlasting to everlasting and whose fatherly love is ever seeking the hearts of His children. We rejoice that we are involved in that love; that nothing can separate us from it. To the willful sinner it becomes a consuming fire, which shall never cease until the most obdurate heart shall turn for forgiveness and succor. May we be responsive to its call and find peace, joy, and comfort in His will after the manner of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PARTY CAUCUS.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the party caucus.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. FERGUSON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the party caucus. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. BARTHOLOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article written by Charles Fletcher Dole on the subject of the protection of American citizens abroad.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bill of the following title:

H. R. 7384. An act to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—WILLIAM BARTH.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. CURRY to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William Barth, H. R. 12383, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of illness.

THE WHIPPING POST.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution.

Whereas it appears from dispatches published in the public prints that six prisoners—two white men and four negroes—all convicted of robbery, were whipped on their bare backs, with a total of 95 lashes, at the Newcastle County workhouse, in the State of Delaware, on November 8, 1913; and

Whereas it further appears that two of said prisoners, James Bayard and William Reason, negroes, each received 20 lashes for burglary; and

Whereas it further appears that on Saturday next, November 15, these two men will each receive a similar number of lashes on the bare back, and in addition Bayard is sentenced to serve 14 years in prison and Reason 11 years; and

Whereas it further appears that the court divided the administration of the lashes for fear the victims could not stand the penalty all at once; and

Whereas the eighth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America provides that "cruel and unusual punishments shall not be inflicted"; and

Whereas it is manifest from the fact that the court divided the imposition of the number of lashes for fear of causing the death of the victims that such punishment is cruel; and

Whereas such method of punishment is a relic of medieval barbarism and is not generally practiced in civilized countries and is therefore unusual; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the Attorney General of the United States are hereby authorized and directed to cause to be brought in the Federal courts an injunction proceeding against the State of Delaware, or the officials and employees of such State who may be responsible for the condition of affairs above set forth, or that the President and Attorney General take such other action as in their judgment may be proper to enforce the provisions of the Federal Constitution and prevent the infliction of this cruel and unusual punishment upon these prisoners on Saturday next, November 15, and to prevent the practice of such cruelties hereafter in said State of Delaware or elsewhere in the United States of America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, meanwhile I also reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the resolution presented—and I think I have seen a copy of it before—it provides that the Attorney General shall endeavor to enjoin the State of Delaware from the enforcement of one of its laws providing for the punishment of criminal offenses. Is that correct?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think that is a matter too important to be disposed of by a scant minority of the House, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 25, answered "present" 11, not voting 333, as follows:

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: Memorial of citizens of New Haven, Conn., protesting against the imputation against the Jewish race involved in the so-called ritual murder trial taking place in Kief, Russia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, November 12, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who sendest the rain and the sunshine and scattereth the hoar frost like ashes and covereth the earth with snow and ice, temper the winds to the shorn lamb by opening the hearts of those whom Thou hast blest with plenty to deeds of kindness and generosity; that those in the storm-swept and snow-bound regions may be relieved in this hour of distress; and teach us anew to realize how utterly dependent we are upon Thee and upon one another, that we may be drawn closer together in the ties of brotherhood, and as a people under one flag whose common interests are the same. Hear us, our God and our Father. In His name, amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7384. An act to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that the House adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting]. Evidently a sufficient number has arisen, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 63, nays 26, answered "present" 15, not voting 325, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. PHELAN, and I wish to change my vote to "present."

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, pending the announcement of the vote, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 40 minutes or an hour to-morrow to address the House upon the resolution which I introduced the other day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, he shall have the privilege of addressing the House for an hour on the subject of the resolution he introduced the other day relating to Winston Spencer Churchill's proposition for a year's cessation in the building of battleships. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Speaker, pending the announcement of the vote, I ask unanimous consent that on to-morrow, after the conclusion of the address of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY], I may have 10 minutes to address the House to deny that the State of Delaware inflicts unusual or cruel punishment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent that on to-morrow, at the conclusion of the address of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY], he may be allowed to address the House for 10 minutes to demonstrate that Delaware does not inflict cruel or unusual punishment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

And then (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, November 13, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FREAR: A bill (H. R. 9264) to provide for a site and public building at Hudson, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9265) to provide for a site and public building at Rice Lake, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9272) granting an increase of pension to Christopher Spath; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9273) granting an increase of pension to George Liddle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9274) granting an increase of pension to Annie A. Purviance; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of New York: A bill (H. R. 9275) granting a pension to William Beitz; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the World's Purity Federation Convention, favoring House concurrence in Kenyon Act relative to prostitution in the National Capital; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also (by request), memorial of the Central Trades and Labor Union, protesting against the unjust competition of prison labor; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRITTEN: Evidence to accompany House bill 9257, granting an increase of pension to Jacob L. Biddinger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURLEY: Petition of the Boston Central Labor Union, of Boston, Mass., favoring investigation by Congress of conditions in the mining district of the State of Michigan; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALE: Petitions of sundry business firms of the State of New York, favoring 1-cent letter postage, as in the Bartlett bill; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Memorial of the Columbia and Snake River Waterways Association, at Kennewick, Wash., favoring the canalization of the Columbia and Snake Rivers, so that they may be safely and economically navigated by modern steamers and barges during the entire year; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MOORE: Memorial of the Board of Trade, Chamber of Commerce, Commercial Exchange, and Philadelphia Bourse, of Philadelphia, Pa., protesting against certain provisions of the Owen-Glass banking and currency bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition of the citizens of the State of California, favoring passage of House bill 5308, relative to mail-order houses; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: Petition of the Confederate veterans of the State of Florida, at Mayo, Fla., relative to cotton tax collected after the Civil War from the citizens of the South; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TOWNER: Petition of citizens of Randolph, Tabor, Moravia, Creston, Cincinnati, Gravity, Conway, Kent, Afton, Clearfield, Grand River, Tingley, Ellston, Clarinda, and Shenandoah, in the State of Iowa, favoring House bill 5308, to provide for a tax upon all persons, firms, or corporations engaged in interstate mail-order business, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILSON of New York: Petition of the Central Labor Union of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring passage of resolution asking for an investigation of the conditions surrounding the coal fields in Trinidad, Colo.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, November 13, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

NOVEMBER 13, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,

President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer:

H. R. 7384. An act to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject; and

H. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution to relieve destitution among the native people and residents of Alaska.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I present a letter from Hon. John J. Hawkins, a distinguished citizen of the State of Arizona, who discusses the necessity for currency legislation. I believe the suggestions he makes are well worthy of our consideration and attention. I ask that it be incorporated into the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., October 21, 1913.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I was pleased to note, some days since, your article in the New York World giving your views favoring the currency bill. I think this bill a very excellent one, and notwithstanding the position taken by the bankers at their meeting in Boston opposing same, the people are clamoring for a change in the currency system and are anxious to take the money system out of the hands of the bankers and lodge it with the Government, where it belongs.

I also desire to call your attention to one particular feature of this bill which the people will like, and that is the cashing of checks at par through the clearing house, or regional bank, of the patrons of all the banks of the country and doing away with a little petty charge that has been made for years by various little bankers all over the country on their customers' checks. There is nothing that so riles the feelings of the patrons of a bank as to go into some bank a few hundred miles distant from his own bank and ask to have a check cashed and be informed that that particular section of the country where your bank is situated is charging 10, 15, or 20 cents, or other petty amounts, on checks drawn on them.

I sincerely hope, in your following up this currency bill, that you will try and keep this feature of it therein, as it will go a long way toward using the credit and wealth of every individual who has money in the bank in supporting the commerce and business of the country.

There is no reason why a man who has money in a bank and draws his check therefor should not have it cashed anywhere in the United States at par, or have it go through the various clearing houses the same as any other cash item.

The tariff bill having been passed and the people being so happy thereover, I sincerely hope that we will soon see the control and issue of money in this country in the hands of the Government.

With kindest regards, I remain,

Yours, truly,

JOHN J. HAWKINS.

SPEECH BY HON. MORRIS SHEPPARD.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I present a copy of the speech which attracted, and justly attracted, such wide attention by reason of its statesmanlike and thoughtful expressions, as well as its progressive spirit—the speech delivered by the Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD before both houses of the Legislature of the State of Texas upon the event of his election to be a Senator of the United States. I ask unanimous consent that the same be incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. MORRIS SHEPPARD, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 29, 1913, BEFORE THE LEGISLATURE OF TEXAS, ACCEPTING ELECTION TO UNITED STATES SENATE.

"Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, gentlemen of the legislature, ladies and gentlemen, to be invested with the highest office the people of a great Commonwealth may bestow is a distinction of such character that it should humble rather than elate the man on whom it is conferred. While I am grateful beyond all words for this election, I am impressed as deeply as human feeling will permit with the sacredness and the immensity of the task before me. In my hands you have placed the commission of the people. It shall be consecrated solely to the people's good. On it the shadow of no special interest shall ever fall.

"The Senate of the United States is perhaps the most unique and powerful legislative body in the world. It exercises coequal lawmaking functions with the House of Representatives except as to bills raising revenue, and these it may materially amend. It has the executive powers of approving or rejecting practically all presidential appointments of importance and of ratifying, amending, or disapproving treaties, the latter prerogative making it the virtual arbiter of our foreign policies. As a high court of impeachment it may remove Presidents, ambassadors, or judges. It thus combines legislative, executive, and judicial functions; and in this respect it probably stands alone among the parliamentary assemblies of the earth. It is the distinctive feature of the Federal Union which without it could have had no existence. The smaller States would never have consented to the Union but for the concession of equal representation in a second Chamber with the larger States. The Senate is at once the preserver of State identity and the bulwark of the Nation against executive encroachment and hasty legislation. Linking the State with the Nation, it may be said to be the heart of the Federal organism. It has been called the masterpiece of the Constitution. It was evolved from the conditions that developed as the constitutional convention of 1787 proceeded, not a delegate having previously contemplated such a body.

"Bearing so essential a relation to the Republic, it is not surprising that the American Senate became within a few decades the foremost assembly of its time. It was the scene of some of the greatest speeches and most notable arguments that have illumined our constitutional history. In the decade preceding the Civil War it reached perhaps the highest prestige it has ever known. The discussion of problems affecting the Nation's life attracted the attention of the globe. Seldom has there been witnessed a more imposing array of intellectual power. Within that mighty circle sat the stalwart Mangum, of North Carolina; Cass, of Michigan, skilled in statecraft, the favorite of his party; Chase, of Ohio, with towering form and measured sentences; Berrien, of Georgia, celebrated in the law, remarkable in the art of eloquence; Bell, of Tennessee, the venerated commoner, the noted parliamentarian; Hunter, of Virginia, beneath whose impassive features reposed ability preeminent; King, the cultured Alabamian, renowned in diplomacy, distinguished in the service of State and Nation; Soule, of Louisiana, impassioned son of France, shepherd of Navarre, friend of liberty, and lover of the South; Houston, of Texas, warrior, legislator, patriot, whose personal majesty suggested the mighty domain he represented; Douglas, of Illinois, the resistless tribune, conspicuous alike in Senate, in courtroom, or in forensic dispute, the idol of his people, the dread of any adversary; Benton, of Missouri, turbulent as Danton, polished as Fox, profound as Pitt, defiant as Mirabeau; Clay, of Kentucky, orator superb, whose conciliatory measures kept within the cave of compromise the storms of war for 40 years; Calhoun, the immortal South Carolinian, philosopher, logician, sage, his potent comprehension penetrating every problem as with a lance of fire; Webster, of Massachusetts, emperor of controversy, monarch of debate, who gave battle to Calhoun in constitutional discussion and challenged Clay in the analysis of practical affairs; Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, whom the historian Prescott pronounced the most accomplished of them all.

"With the retention of the emergency tariffs of the Civil War and the consequent beginning of high protection, with its conspiracies against trade, its destruction of competition, its oppression of the masses, its concentration of wealth, its debauchery of government and society, the Senate began slowly to decline in public esteem. Its place of peculiar influence in the Federal system made it the goal of monopoly and privilege. The control of the Senate meant for the special interests, now growing with frightful rapidity, the control in large measure of the country. Representatives of the special interests soon saw that the possession of only a few Senators, when political parties were narrowly divided, would enable them to dominate the situation. The smallness of the body, the liberality of its rules, which by virtue of the omnipotent tradition of senatorial courtesy permit any Senator to hold the floor indefinitely and provide no limit for debate, make it possible for a mere handful of Senators frequently to arrest and sometimes to defeat legislation. And so the satraps and the janizaries of economic despotism began to turn their eyes and appetites toward the Senate. A wholesale trafficking in the votes of many State legislatures followed. Long and disgraceful deadlocks, from which floated whispers of bribery and dishonor, made the elections of many Federal Senators a source of public scandal and humiliation. The result is too well known. The American Senate became the reputed lair of privilege, the citadel of greed. It came to be denounced as an obstruction, a menace, and its abolition was seriously proposed. It was derided as the American House of Lords, the puppet of Standard Oil. A magazine of wide circulation astounded the country in a series of articles, under the caption of the Senate's Treason, by a detailed description of what it termed the questionable financial connections of several of its prominent Members. It came to be regarded as the grave of all good legislation. On one occasion two or three Senators paralyzed the Wilson tariff bill and sent the Democracy into the wildernesses of defeat for nearly 20 years. The circumstances attending the election of some Senators were so notorious that investigations by the Senate itself resulted. The demand for the reconstruction of the Senate's personnel became one of the main causes of the progressive movement that has at last restored the Democracy to national control. That demand has taken the shape of a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution calling for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people, and of preferential primaries for Senators in many States, which the legislatures almost without exception regard as sacred. Within recent years, therefore, new men have been pouring into the Senate who represent the popular choice in their respective States, and who are cooperating with those of their senior colleagues who have always stood for popular ideals. As a result of the last national election the infusion of progressive Democratic blood will be so large as practically to dominate that historic chamber after the 4th of March. To make the Senate again the mirror of the people's interest will be one of the chief purposes of the triumphant Democracy, a purpose in which I shall join with all the ability and enthusiasm at my command. I shall go to the United States Senate to promote the welfare of the people as a whole; to resist privilege and wrong wherever I may find them; to place my energies and my devotion at the call of progressive Democracy; to serve the policies and aspirations of that new apostle of human rights, Woodrow Wilson.

"Never in American history has there been more emphatic need than now for justice and for courage in the conduct of affairs. The conditions that tended to bring the Senate into derision have reduced the Republic to the mere shadow of what it was meant to be. We renounced the authority of King George over a hundred years ago, but to-day we have King Monopoly and King Trust in almost every phase of American industry. In the new feudalism the control of a commodity is the mark of power. The slavery of the black man was abolished by the force of arms; but to-day, for the white man of average means, an economic bondage as merciless as any slavery of the past is threatened, and thousands of white women are held in a subjection that damns their bodies and their souls in order that the liquor trade may thrive. We boast of progress and of peace, but we are in a state of war between labor on one side and capital on the other, a war in which government by dynamite is the answer to government by injunction. We see the gamblers of high finance gambling in the products of the people's toil, juggling credits, stocks, bonds, banks, buildings, insurance companies, railroads, the necessities of life by some mysterious wizardry into dollars for themselves, misery for others. We see our forests denuded, our mountains stripped, our streams depleted, our lands exhausted, our mines preempted or outworn, our water powers entrapped—in short, our once tremendous heritage of material resources sacrificed in the mad marathon for gold. We see women and children laboring under conditions that mean the degeneracy of the millions that are yet to be. We see the maiming and killing of more men by modern machinery than were ever mangled or destroyed in the bloodiest of the wars. We see these victims and their families often without the assurance of a penny, except through a doubtful lawsuit or a pitiless compromise. We see the traffic in intoxicating liquors widening and filling the path to the almshouse, the insane asylum, the penitentiary, and the tomb.

"It would be going too far to say that legislation alone is responsible for the afflictions of society or that legislation alone may relieve them. A complete remedy for human ills would require the interposition of Him who holds Congresses and peoples in His palm. It must be remembered that the truest standards for governments and men are in the rules of conduct that were given to mankind by divine announcement. And it may safely be asserted that the closer human laws approach these rules the more firmly will this Republic rest upon the rock of right and truth. Since the lowly Galilean taught the universal kinship of man, the inherent equality of every life and every soul, the doctrine that an injury to the humblest individual is an injury to Him, every dream of liberty, every struggle for justice, every upward step in human progress has been an effort to translate His teachings into the governments of humanity. To-day we are coming rapidly to see that as long as one child is born deformed in body or in mind, the fruitage of drunken parents whom society, by tolerating a damnable traffic, helped to degrade, or of foul surroundings the product of injustice or of greed—that as long as a single citizen is stripped of his substance to multiply the possessions of the few the Republic is to that extent a failure, civilization in that degree a crime. The Democratic doctrine of equal rights is an expression of the divine doctrines of equality and brotherhood, and the Democratic Party will live as long as it applies these principles to the varying emergencies of the world's development. The Democratic Party is therefore in its very essence a progressive party, and it can never be destroyed, unless it ceases to be true to its progressive nature.

"Let us now examine the application of Democratic principles to current questions. The Democratic Party is opposed to the spoliation of the people by the system of tariff taxation miscalled protection. It holds that the imposition of import taxes in such manner as to raise the price of corresponding domestic articles beyond their proper worth is legalized theft. It states in the Baltimore platform that tariff taxes shall be levied for purposes of revenue only. It is therefore against the levying of tariff taxes for purposes of protection either direct or incidental. The words 'revenue only' are meaningless unless they exclude the slightest suggestion of protection. In standing against the taking of a single penny by one American from another for which no adequate return is made the Democracy upholds the divine ideals of human conduct to which I have referred. And well may it summon all its powers for the overthrow of protection, a cancer in the vitals of the Republic already so far advanced that the most difficult and delicate treatment will be required.

"It may well be said that the Republican protective tariff has brought more humiliation and more ruin to the American people than all other agencies of legislative evil combined. It was fastened on this country in the turbulent hours of civil war, when the severest methods of taxation were employed to meet that sinister crisis. To compensate certain manufacturers for high internal taxes on domestic goods taxes on competing imports were lifted to so outrageous a figure that they were tolerated only on the ground of a great national emergency and on the understanding that they would be removed or reduced when the war should end. Thus the partnership between the Republican Party and the special interests began, a partnership becoming at once so strong that at the close of hostilities the war tariffs were continued and have been not only maintained but increased during the 50 succeeding years of peace. The Republican tariff law now in operation imposes an average of tariff taxes distinctly higher than those of one of the most gigantic conflicts in all the records of all the years. It would be difficult to measure the disastrous effect of this long riot of oppression on the American Republic. The Republican protective tariff has been one of the chief causes of the unequal distribution of wealth in the United States.

"The restriction of foreign competition by enormous tariff rates opened the way for combinations of domestic industries, and soon domestic competition, the normal safeguard against extortion, disappeared. The American trust sprang from the loins of the American protective tariff, and the era of monopoly began. To-day almost every article of necessity and comfort is in the control of a trust, and a concentration of wealth as appalling as it is colossal has developed. It is a modest calculation that less than a tenth of American families own nine-tenths of the Nation's resources and the Nation's wealth. The favorites of the law are displaying a wastefulness and a luxury that have permeated the social structure with debasing conceptions of life. The mere possession of great wealth has become a sufficient test of social position, the methods of acquirement being rarely questioned. Education, breeding, uprightness are too often as nothing in the scale with the dollar's naked weight. The extravagances of the wealthy have bred false standards that are too generally followed by people of smaller means. The result is that thousands are living beyond or to the limit of their incomes and find themselves in time of panic or in old age without the means of comfortable support. Corruption, both political and financial, has naturally followed in the tariff's track. The maintenance of privilege has required the continuous success of the Republican Party at the polls. Millions poured into its treasury until the popular demand for the publicity of campaign funds caused the larger contributions to cease.

"It may confidently be said that publicity of campaign funds did more to end Republican domination in this country than any other single measure. As the tariff rates have risen the cost of living has increased, until to-day the necessities of existence are more difficult to obtain than at any previous period in the history of this country or at any period in the history of any other country. The taxation of most of the basic raw materials of manufacture has led to their control by banded interests. The high prices made possible largely by high tariff rates lead to overproduction and therefore to recurring periods of readjustment and of panic, in which the weaker meet financial death. The restricted market of the present high-tariff system has encouraged combinations of middlemen that largely control the carriage and marketing of the farmer's products at an immense loss to him. The glitter of tariff-rooted profit only whets the desire for gain, and there naturally follow overcapitalization, stock watering, and other practices by which the public is exploited further. The accumulation of the Nation's wealth in a few hands is separating the Republic into classes, and already the bitter battle of class against class is on. To resist these tendencies and conditions the Democracy is committed to the immediate downward revision of existing tariff duties and to a material reduction on the necessities of life. It is committed to the policy of placing articles entering into competition with trust-controlled products and articles sold abroad more cheaply than at home on the free list. The Democratic Party realizes, however, that the present system of tariff taxation is intimately connected with the business of the country, that many vast concerns and interests have been built up and to-day have contracts in advance based on present conditions, and it will therefore advance toward the ultimate realization of its ideals with such care and such deliberation as not to injure or to destroy a single legitimate industry. In this last utterance I am quoting almost literally from the Baltimore platform, and with this idea of sane and careful revision I am in entire accord.

"So powerful have monopoly and privilege become that the removal of the tariff will be but one step in a successful crusade against them. Other measures must also be employed if we are to overthrow the power of the trusts, if we are to drive the dollar of corruption and dishonor from American politics and business. Effective laws must be enacted against monopoly. The Federal antitrust law should be amended in such manner as to restore the efficacy of which it has been deprived by judicial construction. The last pronouncement of the Supreme Court of the United States as to the meaning of this law leaves the business world in confusion. It is now impossible for the sponsors of any enterprise to know in advance the limitations within which they may operate. In reading the word "reasonable" into the antitrust act, in holding that there may be reasonable and unreasonable monopolies, the Supreme Court has made the application of this statute so uncertain, so incapable of ascertainment, without the expense, the delay, not to speak of the odium of an actual trial before some tribunal, as to amount to a virtual repression of business growth. Let the essence of the original statute be restored—the statute in the formation of which John H. Reagan performed so notable a part. Let laws be enacted prescribing conditions on which corporations shall engage in interstate trade, these conditions being such as to prevent interlocking directorates, holding companies, stock watering, discrimination of all kinds, and to forestall such control of any line of business by a single concern as would threaten its complete absorption. The failure of the Republican administration to invoke the criminal section of the antitrust act against the officials of the Oil and Tobacco Trusts after these giant combinations had been judicially declared unlawful is one of the most humiliating instances of legal favoritism in our history. What more signal illustration of the immunity of organized wealth from criminal prosecution could be imagined? It is not the object of the Democracy to attack property or to incite prejudice against the rich. On the other hand, the security of honest property and the preservation of honest wealth depend in the last analysis on the prevention of monopoly and conspiracies against rightful trade. I shall favor placing at the disposal of the Democratic Attorney General every possible means for the enforcement of the antitrust laws against men and corporations, regardless of social eminence or financial power.

"Hand in hand with the reduction of the tariff and the destruction of the trusts must go a proper measure of supervision over interstate transportation. Competition can never be preserved among producers in the various sections of the country, the products of the farm can never be marketed with satisfaction, unless the most rigid fairness obtains in the matter of carriage charges. Of what benefit would be the lowering of a tariff tax on a given commodity if the freight rate from seaboard to interior consumer should be raised in proportion? What encouragement remains for the farmer when combinations of middlemen control practically all available transportation space, making independent shipments extremely hazardous and establishing conditions whereby the farmer gets about 50 per cent of the amount paid for his article by the consumer in the centers of population? Or what encouragement remains when, regardless of whether middlemen control the cars, the rates of carriage consume the profits? The power of transportation is the power of economic life and death. The Interstate Commerce Commission must be provided with every facility for the maintenance of equitable rates. Provision should be made for a physical valuation of transportation properties, and this, with other elements of a fair calculation, should be used as a basis for future rate making. The most permanent protection against unfair railroad rates lies, however, in the immediate and thorough development of the Nation's waterways. The waterway is the cheapest form of transportation known to man, and it provides a rate standard at once wise and permanent and just. One of the chief economic needs of Texas is the improvement of inland waterways. I shall endeavor to make the development of Texas harbors, Texas rivers, and Texas canals one of the chief features of my service in the Senate.

"In the warfare against privilege every possible safeguard should be thrown about the hosts of toil by Nation and by State. I believe in the conservation of forests and rivers and mines, but I believe also in the conservation of men and women and children. I believe that the latter compose the Nation's most valuable resources. I want to see legislation for the prevention of accident and disease, legislation establishing safety and health standards in industrial occupations. I want to see the unemployed aided by proper legislation to find employment. I want to see the eight-hour day universally established—established for the women and the children as well as for the men. I want to see convict labor removed from competition with free labor. I want to see one day's rest in every seven provided for all the toilers of the land. I want to see publicity as to wages, hours, and conditions of labor in every line of industry. I want to see the employment of women in the sweatshops forbidden, child labor stopped. I want to see motherhood glorified and children saved. I want to see the law as to injunctions modified along the lines of the Democratic platform and the right of labor to organize held forever sacred. I want to see trial by jury in cases of indirect contempt, and I am against the issuance of injunctions where injunctions would not issue if no industrial controversy were involved.

"The battle against the domination of monopoly will be but half won until the control of the currency shall have been wrested from private hands. The issuance of money in currency or in coin is one of the essential functions of government; as much so as the power to declare war. As for me, I would as quickly intrust an individual or a corporation with the power of declaring war as with the power to control the volume of currency. There is a fundamental relation between the volume of currency and the price of every article the people make or use. Let the issuance of currency be restored to the primary control of government and let us have a system under such control that shall meet the demands of modern business. I think the existing system vicious because it places an essential attribute of sovereignty in private control, and for the same reason I am opposed to the Aldrich bill. I believe that banks exist for the accommodation of the people and not the people for the accommodation of the banks. I would never yield the issuance of the currency to an oligarchy of banks. The Aldrich bill provides for an association of banks to which shall be given over the power to determine when the volume of currency shall be increased or decreased. The capital of the association will be something like $300,000,000, and the stock will be sold only to banks investing one-fifth of their capital therein. Dividends are not to exceed 5 per cent, a provision unfair to smaller banks. The association is to be chartered for 50 years, during which all Government deposits—the money of the people—are to be used by the association without a cent of interest. No bank will be permitted to borrow money from the association unless it carries deposits with it on which no interest is paid. The way is thus blazed for a concentration of monetary control in this country that would dominate the destinies of the Republic. The law is so framed that permanent and actual control will rest in an executive committee of nine men, only two of whom are appointed by the President of the United States. Such a system of concentrated power over the earnings of the people and the currency of the Government has never been popular with the American people, and the Democratic platform in denouncing it calls attention to the fact that the Aldrich bill practically means a central bank, to which every tradition of Democracy is opposed. The Democrats in the House and Senate, assisted by the Democratic President and his advisers, will evolve a plan of currency reform based on Democratic ideas, and in the preparation of such a plan I shall gladly cooperate.

"Any recital of the measures which should be employed to end the reign of special privilege would be incomplete without reference to the assumption by the people of a more direct control of government. Indeed, the last national Democratic platform specifically asserts that 'only by a larger exercise of the reserved power of the people can they protect themselves from the misuse of delegated power and the usurpation of governmental instrumentalities by special interests.' The most effective system by which this larger exercise of reserved power by the people may be secured is the system commonly known as the initiative and referendum. No profounder misconception ever found lodgment in the human brain than the contention that this system means either the overthrow of representative government or a departure from a republican form of government. One of the clearest definitions of a republican form of government was announced by Mr. Justice Wilson in Chisholm versus Georgia, who said that it was one under which supreme power rested in the people. The system of the initiative and referendum rests supreme power in the people and is itself a means by which that power may be effectively exercised. If the people commit the powers of government to representatives for a term of years and provide no way in which those powers may be resumed during such term, they abdicate sovereignty for a given period, and if the representatives betray them have no remedy until the next election, when the damage may be beyond repair. On the contrary, if the people, while committing the powers of government to representatives, reserve the right to initiate legislation or to refer legislation to themselves they keep the reins of government always within their reach and make far more certain the loyalty of their representatives. The initiative and referendum means the life of representative government, not its death. No government is really representative unless the people have the power to make it so and keep it so. Do you say that elections are a sufficient check on legislation? I tell you that a few designing men may by a single vote on a single question in a great emergency fasten plutocracy on the land and either decline to stand for reelection or aided by the interests they have served attempt to purchase it. I say further that special interests will not expend vast sums or otherwise endeavor to corrupt the people's representatives if they know the laws they thus secure may be immediately submitted to the people. Neither will they infest the lobbies of our legislatures to resist measures in the people's interest when they know the people have the right to submit those measures to themselves if the legislature should fail to enact or should defeat them. Most of the States have adopted their constitutions by direct popular vote and many of these constitutions contain self-enacting legislative provisions.

"I say that if the people may adopt constitutions they may enact laws whenever such a step is necessary to protect their rights. Most of the State constitutions require certain kinds of legislation to be referred directly to the people, and in Texas at the last election some five or six amendments to the Texas constitution were passed by a popular referendum. Was it sacrilege for the people of Texas to lay their hands upon the machinery of government? Did this mean the destruction of representative institutions in Texas or the overthrow of the republican form of government? I call attention to the fact that while under the initiative and referendum the people may exercise legislative powers and may in a sense veto or defeat bills passed and approved by the legislature and the governor, still, in the practical working of this system, the legislative, executive, and judicial departments are not destroyed, but remain intact to continue the discharge of the vast mass of legislation subject only to corrective action by the people in the event they find their interests imperiled or betrayed. For 12 years both the Senate and the House of Representatives at Washington, containing able lawyers and gifted students of the Federal Constitution, have been seating Members from States whose constitutions provided for the initiative and referendum, thereby heaping precedent on precedent against the contention that this form of direct legislation violates the Federal guaranty of a republican form of government. If Members of the Federal Congress had believed that these States had governments which subverted the most fundamental guaranty of the Federal Constitution, it was their sworn duty to protest and vote against the seating of representatives from these States. The Supreme Court of the United States in Luther versus Borden says that when the Senators or the Representatives of a State are admitted into the councils of the Union the authority of the Government under which they are admitted as well as its republican character is recognized by the proper constitutional authority.

"It is urged that laws are too complicated now and that this system will further complicate them. I contend that this system will simplify the laws, because the people will defeat a law they do not understand. Laws too complicated for the people to understand ought to be defeated. One of the greatest needs of the time is for clearer and simpler laws. To-day the laws are hidden in thousands of volumes containing numberless and frequently conflicting decisions, and the citizen is often compelled to employ counsel at great expense to ascertain the meaning of what his own government did in supposed obedience to his own will.

"The most comprehensive and the simplest code the world has known, the basis of modern as well as ancient conduct, a code that has survived for 40 centuries, a code as lucid and as vital now as when fashioned on the thunder-shaken peak for tented Israel, is comprised in less than a dozen sentences, in fewer than 300 words. They tell us that the direct method will result in harmful legislation. They forget that the principle of self-preservation is too deeply rooted to permit the people deliberately to injure themselves. They say that it will mean turmoil and change. I answer that the people acting in mass are the safest and most conservative force in history, and that the very existence of such a check will make its exercise rarely necessary. They say that it means revolution. The answer is that with the people in control there will be no occasion for revolution except through the orderly expression of the people's will. It is only when government is outside the people's control that drastic methods become necessary for its recovery. It has been well said that Anglo-Saxon manhood confined beneath the pressure of accumulated injustice is the most dangerous explosive known to history. The initiative and referendum is a safety valve against both ultraradicalism and ultraconservatism. If laws are too radical, the conservatives may appeal through this method to the electorate; if too conservative, radicals may likewise employ it. In no State or country where the system has been in operation is there any movement of importance to repeal it.

"I am as loyal as any man or group of men to representative government. For this very reason I favor any measure that will make the Government more representative. It is not proposed to substitute direct legislation for the representative system, because of necessity the great mass of legislation must be enacted by representatives elected by the people to serve in legislative capacity while the people pursue the various callings of life. It is proposed to employ the direct method only to such extent as may be necessary to make the Government what the founders intended it should be—the true expression of the people's will.

"The income tax and laws providing for publicity of campaign funds, as well as prohibiting the lavish use of money in elections, are other features of the progressive program too well known and too generally approved to require enlargement here. Wealth should be subjected to its proper proportion of the burdens of taxation, and the dollar should not be tolerated as a governing force in American politics. I am proud of the fact that in the recent primaries I made a campaign throughout Texas of some 8 or 10 months' duration for one of the highest positions on a comparatively modest sum, demonstrating that such positions are within the reach of men of moderate means. Not only should candidates refrain from large expense, but public officials should avoid all connections and entanglements with interests that might in any way conflict with the people's service. Proper laws should be enacted to cover these suggestions. The Federal publicity law is in special need of immediate and thorough amendment.

"It is the mission of the Democratic Party not only to oppose every form of economic oppression but also to keep alive the underlying spirit of the Republic. Furthermore, it should promote in every proper way the development of the country's material resources and the well-being of the people. Nothing will do more to revive and vindicate the basic principle of this Republic than independence for the Philippines. The purchase of eight millions of the human race and their subjection to an alien government made the torch of liberty burn feeble not only here but throughout the world. It put the stain of despotism on the American flag. Mr. Wilson has already announced that one of his first recommendations will be for the passage of an act guaranteeing the autonomy of the Philippines within a reasonable time. The strengthening of governmental agencies relating to pure food, quarantine, vital statistics, and human health, the proper handling of the public domain, economy in the handling of public moneys, and the development of agriculture are measures demanding careful and patriotic study.

"The encouragement of agriculture calls for the best efforts of the Nation. It is a matter of national reproach that we have made smaller advancement in agriculture than in other lines of economic growth. Although we have cultivated the virgin acres of a fertile continent for fewer than a hundred years, these acres are in many instances producing less than those of countries that have been under intensive development for many centuries, and much of our soil is exhausted within a single generation. Although we have a population of only 31 to the square mile, the number of inhabitants in the rural districts is relatively decreasing, and the greater part of our people is being rapidly concentrated in the already overcrowded cities. The task that challenges the most capable statesmanship is the revival of the glory and the attractiveness of farm life. The main problems before us are the production of more and more per acre and the redistribution of our people among the villages and the rural sections. Farmers' organizations should be given every possible assistance. Federal and State departments of agriculture and agricultural colleges and institutes should all be brought into closer and more fruitful relationship. Rural routes, good roads, better marketing facilities, farm credits should all be constantly studied and developed to the end that the farm home may be brought into touch with modern progress. The pernicious practice of gambling in farm products must be stopped. In view of the fundamental importance of agriculture and of the fact that Texas is essentially an agricultural State, its principal splendor lying in its imperial expanse of soil, I am determined to devote especial attention to this phase of national development.

"In fact, let me say here that wherever it may be possible within the sphere of proper Federal activity to secure the co-operation of the General Government in the advancement of Texas I shall be found urging the claims of my native State. Texas has hardly emerged from economic infancy and already her resources, her achievements, and her possibilities have awakened universal wonder. Immense areas in Texas require irrigation, and other portions have other needs that must be seriously considered in order that our fullest capabilities may be realized. Our rivers, harbors, and canals must be improved to supplement our agricultural growth and to furnish a permanent and inexpensive highway to the sea. I shall endeavor to secure membership on Senate committees having these matters directly in hand. I may not be so fortunate as to secure membership on all such committees at once, but the sooner I enter the Senate and begin to work for places on them the earlier and more effective will be my success in this regard.

"I now come to one of the most important questions confronting the Nation, the question of prohibiting the shipment of intoxicating liquors into prohibition States for purposes of sale. It is a question involving the very essence of the American system of government. The Federal Constitution is based on a division of powers between the General Government and the States. In the skilful distribution of National and State functions the Constitution finds its chief permanence—its crowning excellence. In ratifying the Constitution the States yielded to the Central Government the powers which concerned the common destiny and interest, reserving the remaining attributes of sovereignty to themselves or the people. Any disturbance of this equilibrium is a blow at the existence of the most notable governmental system the brain of man has yet conceived.

"Among the most sacred rights reserved by the States under the Federal Constitution is the control of legislation pertaining to the health, the safety, and the morals of their respective populations—in other words, the control of all matters demanding the exercise of the so-called police powers of government within their respective limits. In the exercise of this right many States have enacted laws prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within their various boundaries and have taken every possible step to secure the enforcement of these laws. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that such laws are not in conflict with the Federal Constitution; that intoxicating liquor is an article of such character that a State in the protection of the health, the morals, and the safety of its people may prohibit the manufacture or sale of such liquor. The effect of this holding is to place intoxicating liquor in a class outside the usual articles of consumption and trade, such as flour, clothing, furniture, and the like. It has never been contended that a State could adopt similar laws as to these latter commodities in their normal condition. It would be a deprivation of an inherent property right possessed by every citizen of the United States. But no such right is recognized in intoxicating liquors.

"Despite the enactment of laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in certain States, the enforcement of such laws is seriously impeded and frequently prevented by vast shipments from other States. Great mail-order houses have been established for the purpose of invading prohibition territory and tearing down State laws. The Federal Government protects such shipments on the ground that they are interstate in character and can not be reached by State laws until after delivery to consignee, Congress having as yet passed no law excluding such shipments from interstate commerce. The result is that railroad stations and express offices in prohibition States are being converted into speak-easies and blind tigers, from which these liquors are secretly taken or secretly sold in defiance of the people's will. Thus the Federal Government is lending itself to the humiliation of the State, to the overthrow of the most sacred right which its own constitution guarantees. Thus the Nation has become a partner in a piracy as foul as any the high seas ever saw and in the destruction of the principle of local sovereignty as defined and approved by the Federal Constitution. Thus the American flag is wrapped around the whisky barrel and the beer keg and made an emblem of anarchy and crime. It is said that the States ought to be more vigilant in the enforcement of prohibitory laws. It would require a small standing army at an expense no State could bear perpetually to surround every depot and every express office with armed guards.

"The bill relating to interstate shipments now before Congress provides, in brief, that the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors intended to be used in violation of the laws of the State of destination shall be prohibited. It does not apply to liquor shipped for personal use, for sacramental purposes, or for any other disposition not forbidden by State laws. In my judgment, the constitutionality of such a law can not be seriously questioned. The Constitution clothes the Federal Government with absolute power over interstate commerce, a power complete in itself and subject only to the limitation of that great instrument itself. It is well understood that under this power Congress may prohibit the interstate transportation of articles destructive of public health or safety or morals or whose shipment would be violative of sound public policy. In the lottery case (188 U. S., 321) Mr. Justice Harlan said:

"But surely it will not be said to be a part of anyone's liberty as recognized by the supreme law of the land that he shall be allowed to introduce into commerce among the States an element that will be confessedly injurious to public morals.

"In Mugler v. Kansas (123 U. S., 162) the Federal Supreme Court says:

"It is within the knowledge of all that the public health, the public morals, and the public safety may be endangered by the general use of intoxicating liquors.

"Section 245 of the United States Penal Code provides that the sender and the carrier of any drug or medicine adapted or intended for indecent or immoral use from one State to another, and the consignee as well, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. The Supreme Court of the United States has gone so far as to uphold a Federal law denying to interstate commerce shipments of game killed in violation of State laws, showing the desire of the court to have the Federal Government cooperate with the State governments in upholding such laws, or at least to keep the Federal Government from crippling or interfering with them.

"Let us concede, so far as this argument is concerned, that an article properly in the channels of interstate commerce can not be reached by State laws until after delivery to consignee, on the theory that an earlier operation would be an arrest of interstate commerce and a practical delegation of the Federal power of regulation to the State, which under Federal decisions can not be permitted. No such objection lies to this bill. It deprives liquors intended to be used in violation of the laws of the State of destination of the right to enter interstate commerce under the protection of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution. Such liquors are divested of interstate-commerce character, and State laws may operate upon them before they reach the consignee, without in any sense operating upon or regulating interstate commerce. Do you say that the intent with which a thing is to be used ought not to determine its status? I answer that the Supreme Court of Massachusetts has held that liquor possessed with intent to violate the laws of the State is impressed with the character of a nuisance and thereby divested of property rights. It will be immediately conceded that a contract made in one State with intent to violate the laws of another State is illegal and unenforceable. Most of the successful liquor prosecutions in Oklahoma are based on the law in that State making possession with intent to violate any Oklahoma prohibitory law a crime, a law that has never been successfully attacked. Is it said that an innocent vendor, ignorant of the intention of the consignee, may suffer? I say let vendors of liquors to consignees in prohibition States collect their money in advance or make such shipments at their peril. Already the National Penal Code prohibits C. O. D. shipments of interstate liquors and permits no person to act as agent for the vendor in order to complete the sale. Is it insisted that an innocent vendor could not collect from a consignee who might interpose his own guilty intention as a defense against the debt?

"I submit that in no American court will a man be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong. Is it objected that it is difficult to prove intent? It is far easier to prove intent where a shipment of liquors is consigned to a notorious bootlegger than in nine-tenths of the criminal cases where intent is the very essence of the offense. Is it urged that under this law attempts will be made to enforce the laws of one State in the courts of another? The reply is that the courts of the State of shipment will never be involved, because one State can not enforce the penalties of another. Is it argued that vexatious interferences with interstate commerce will result? The difficulties of maintaining an espionage over all the commercial highways in the United States are such that in practical operation the law will, as a rule, be invoked only at or near the point of destination.

"The opponents of interstate liquor legislation in Congress have been advancing constitutional and other objections for 20 years. The American people now demand a vote. The time for discussion has passed; the hour of action has arrived. It is the duty and the right of Members of Congress to oppose this legislation if they believe it unconstitutional or inadvisable. It is equally the duty and the right of the people to send men in their places who believe the legislation both constitutional and advisable. An area equal almost to three-fourths of the inhabited territory of the United States has been voted dry but the solemn enactments of the people are being crushed and desecrated by those who operate from the outside. The Constitution is profaned, self-government overturned, the Nation made an accomplice in a conspiracy against the States in order that a traffic as odious as it is powerful may multiply its profits from the wrecked ambitions, the shattered hopes, the ruined homes of men.

"This legislation is but another step in the warfare against a traffic whose existence is the Nation's shame. The liquor traffic is a peril to society, because it undermines the health, the strength, and the integrity of man. It is a menace to the Republic, because a race of weaklings can not sustain or comprehend the institutions of liberty. It is a source of danger to posterity, because the alcoholic taint foredooms the unborn millions to degeneracy and to disease. I shall oppose this scourge from hell until my arm can strike no longer and my tongue can speak no more. I shall oppose it because I hear the cries of children who are hungering for bread. I shall oppose it because I see a mother's wasted face, her pale lips pleading with the besotted figure at her side. I shall oppose it because I see the staggering forms of men whose trembling hands hold but the ashes of their strength and pride. I shall oppose it because it mocks all manhood and makes of woman's virtue a commodity of the slums. I shall oppose it because I see its battle line outstretched across the globe, threatening to engulf the pure, the true, the good. I shall oppose it because its abolition will mean a new stability for the Republic, a new radiance for the flag."

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a few days since the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] had printed in the RECORD statements of associations and individuals who were supporting the so-called Hetch Hetchy bill. I have in my hand an article from the Boston Transcript, an editorial from the Stockton Daily Evening Record, and resolutions of several societies in opposition to the bill. I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the RECORD without the illustrations.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW LIGHT ON HETCH HETCHY.

[From the Boston Transcript, Nov. 8, 1913.]

That San Francisco is indulging in a colossal folly and one likely to develop into a wholesale calamity in pressing its Hetch Hetchy reservoir case in Congress is becoming apparent to some of its own citizens. At a meeting this week of the San Francisco Center of the California Civic League, Clement H. Miller, a civil engineer, made an address in which he analyzed the situation clearly. A certain political group in the city has become so obsessed with the idea of this particular water supply that they can not escape from it except by a sacrifice of their political vanity. As Mr. Miller pointed out, the city's own attorneys admit that if the grant of the valley is secured from Congress it will only invite years of litigation. He also stated that even Mr. O'Shaughnessy, the present city engineer, told his friends a year ago that the Hetch Hetchy project was "a hideous blunder," but that the city had gone so far that it could not back out and would have to go through regardless of cost.

In support of the city's petition for the valley a great deal of stress has been laid on the point that the domestic supply of a great city is "the highest beneficial use of water." A difference of opinion on this point has lately arisen in California, for the farmers in the San Joaquin Valley have just discovered that if this Tuolumne River water is granted to San Francisco some 250 square miles of their section would be doomed to permanent aridity. This point was discussed in great detail by Mr. Miller. It is not a new point, for the representative of the irrigation farmers of the region urged it at the hearing before the Public Lands Committee of the House last summer. It was he who stated that every one of those acres was capable under irrigation of producing annually food products worth $100, so that the diversion of their only source of irrigating water to San Francisco would mean a yearly loss to California of $20,000,000 worth of produce. Without this water this land can not be farmed at all.

Mr. Miller shows that Mr. Manson, for many years prominently connected with the Hetch Hetchy scheme as the city engineer, admitted in his annual report as long ago as 1904 that 200,000 acres would be deprived of water by the city's plan. This he justified with the reflection that the landowners had neglected to appropriate the water and that the city held it by right of prior legal filings. Continuing, Mr. Miller demonstrates by a close analysis of the records of stream flow and rainfall for a long term of years, that the reports which were the accepted basis of the Army board's conclusions in support of the city's petition were wholly unreliable and that there certainly is not water enough in the Tuolumne River to supply irrigation to the adjacent lands and at the same time to give 400,000,000 gallons a day to the bay cities. In substantiation of his assertion he cites reports made by the California Conservation Commission since the Army engineers rendered their decision.

On the other hand, it appears that the Sacramento Valley has a superabundance of good water, far more than enough to supply all of its irrigable lands, with a wide margin for domestic use. At its lowest recorded flow the Sacramento poured four thousand million gallons daily into the Pacific. "Would it be a crime or merely a hideous blunder," inquires Mr. Miller, "to rob those San Joaquin lands of their only water, when water as good for domestic use, and in ample volume for all uses, is running to waste in the adjoining watershed?" He goes even further and speaks in detail of the tributary of the Sacramento that is capable of fulfilling all the needs of the situation. It is the McCloud River, which rises in the snows of Mount Shasta. Is it too far to go? It is 10 per cent nearer than is Los Angeles's new source. And when it comes to a question of cost, Mr. Miller asserts—and this in a public address in the midst of the enemy's camp—that the assistant engineer who made an examination of the McCloud source for the city had never made a field survey of any kind, that his examination was based on an automobile trip, and that the estimates were "purposely made as high as imagination would permit." Col. Biddle, of the Army board, has said that the McCloud would furnish twice as much water as the bay cities would ever need without storage, and that the cost would be from fifty-eight millions to sixty-four millions, as against seventy-seven millions for Hetch Hetchy.

And as for hydroelectric power Mr. Miller figures that there must be 150,000 horsepower, probably much more, available at reasonable cost, and without any necessity for installing duplicate steam-generating plants which, he maintains, must be a part of the Hetch Hetchy power scheme in order to take care of the low-water periods that he shows to be inescapable. In short, San Francisco's officials appear to be trying to sell themselves a gold brick.

Nor does the Hetch Hetchy Valley have to be lost to the park and to the public in order to save the waters of its river for irrigation purposes. The present city engineer, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, is authority for the opinion that ample reservoirs can be provided in the foothills. As a matter of fact he urged this at one time as a water supply for San Francisco, though, needless to say, that was before he entered the service of the city, and in the capacity of consulting engineer for private parties.

Reasons multiply for the checking of this unnecessary legislation which would give away an invaluable feature of a national park without the slightest color of necessity. Evidently San Francisco needs to be saved from her own officials as much as the Hetch Hetchy needs to be saved for the people.

A. C.

THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY MUST SAVE HETCH HETCHY WATER FOR IRRIGATION—SAN FRANCISCO CAN GET WATER IN NORTH COAST RANGE.

[From the Stockton Daily Evening Record, Oct. 29, 1913.]

San Francisco bases its claims to the Hetch Hetchy water supply on the unfounded statement that it is the only available and sufficient supply for the present and future needs of the city.

San Francisco gives no indication of what use it purposes to make of the Spring Valley water system, which now supplies the city.

San Francisco proposes to capitalize a great water supply for the city's own profit, irrespective of the injury to the San Joaquin Valley.

San Francisco bases its claim to Hetch Hetchy on its own estimation of its future needs.

San Francisco has forced the Hetch Hetchy bill through the House. It is now in the Senate. The bill will be called up December 1, and there is unanimous consent to vote on it six days later.

If the San Joaquin Valley is to be aroused to the injury which will be done to the valley by the bill, action must be immediate and positive.

San Francisco can obtain a water supply—a larger water supply than the Hetch Hetchy—and at less cost; and not one drop of the water need be diverted from the limited amount belonging by nature and equity to the San Joaquin Valley.

The estimated amount of water available in Hetch Hetchy for diversion to San Francisco is 400,000,000 gallons daily. The Army engineers estimate the cost of the storage, diversion, and delivery of the water to San Francisco at $77,400,000. The Army engineers examined several sources of water supply and reported that the Hetch Hetchy was the most practical and easily available for the future needs of San Francisco. But perhaps the investigations of the engineers did not go far enough.

Let us consider what may be designated as the Snow Mountain, Clear Lake, and Putah Creek supply. The distance from Snow Mountain to San Francisco is 140 miles. Surveys just completed show that of this distance the water can be conveyed through natural channels for 66 miles, leaving only 74 miles for aqueducts, etc.

Where can this alleged supply be secured and how much of it is available?

From the South Eel River in Mendocino, from the watershed ranging south to Clear Lake, in Lake County, and still farther south to Putah Creek, in latitude with Napa.

This transfers the watershed for San Francisco's supply from the Sierra to the Coast Range, and from a diversion of the limited supply for the San Joaquin Valley to the surplus running to waste in the over-watered Sacramento Valley.

How much water?

Estimates just completed by competent engineers show that the South Eel River watershed may be relied upon for 200,000,000 gallons daily; that the Putah Creek watershed has a dependable supply of 300,000,000 gallons daily. The two sources combined assure 100,000,000 more gallons daily than Hetch Hetchy. Further, the cost of bringing this water to San Francisco across the upper Berkeley Hills and Carquinez Straits is only $41,250,000—about one-half as much as the Hetch Hetchy plan. The storage capacity of the Snow Mountain-Eel River-Putah Creek plan is 1,500,000 acre-feet—enough water to supply San Francisco with water for three and one-half years even if not another drop of water fell. There are practically no water rights filed against this proposed supply; less than 2,000 acres are now in cultivation in districts affected by it.

Get this fact in mind: Sacramento Valley has more water than it needs. The area of the valley susceptible to irrigation is small. Ten million one hundred and seventy-five thousand feet of water flow past Redding. The total available water supply for the entire San Joaquin watershed is officially placed at 10,065,000 acre-feet—more than 100,000 less than the volume of the Sacramento at Redding.

The total of the Sacramento Valley watershed is placed at 24,026,000 feet. The area of the Sacramento Valley available for irrigation is only 2,659,000 acres. The area in the San Joaquin Valley available for irrigation is 6,630,000 acres. Sacramento Valley's watershed has a supply of more than 24,000,000 feet for 2,659,000 acres, while San Joaquin has only 10,065,000 feet for its 6,630,000 acres. Yet San Francisco would divert the Hetch Hetchy supply, which San Joaquin Valley will soon need and which some of the districts already need.

The Eel River and Putah Creek supply always will be waste water, unless utilized for the supply of some large city.

The watershed belonging naturally to the San Joaquin Valley will not irrigate one-half the valley's acreage which can be brought under irrigation. The situation is reversed in Sacramento Valley, where there is not enough acreage susceptible to irrigation to use one-half its available water supply.

It is time for the people of San Joaquin Valley to get busy, and the press will be derelict in its duty if it fails to put the facts before the people.

The Hetch Hetchy scheme is unnecessary for the future of San Francisco, since a better and cheaper water supply can be secured in the Coast Range watershed.

The water of Hetch Hetchy ought to be conserved for the future use of San Joaquin Valley, which needs every drop of it.

The Record protests, as it has protested before, against the Hetch Hetchy bill.

It embodies nothing but the innate selfishness of San Francisco, shortsighted statesmanship by the bill's sponsors, and a wanton injury to the San Joaquin Valley, upon the development of which much of the future greatness of California depends.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE HETCH HETCHY AND THE APPLICATION TO CONGRESS BY SAN FRANCISCO TO FLOOD THIS VALLEY IN THE YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

[Issued by the Society for the Preservation of National Parks—Eastern Branch. Pemberton Building, Boston. 1913.]

There was never any reason or excuse for giving away this water, except that San Francisco wanted it, and was too stingy to be willing to go into the open market and buy. (Los Angeles Evening News, editorially.)

The legislation is objectionable for reasons which take it out of the category of legislation of doubtful propriety and expediency and place it in that of doubtful constitutionality and of unquestionably mischievous and dangerous character. (Hons. SCOTT FERRIS and F. W. MONDELL, in 1909.)

We believe that its passage will eventually exclude the public from the Hetch Hetchy Valley and the Tuolumne Canyon, and we are not willing that this should be done, as it does not appear to be necessary for the city of San Francisco to obtain this property for a water supply. (Hons. A. J. VOLSTEAD and A. J. GRONNA, in 1909.)

Taunted for years and everywhere, usually by nations envious of our prosperity, as worshippers of the almighty dollar, as ready to sacrifice everything to money profit and hopelessly commercialized, here is opportunity to answer and refute the charge; to demonstrate that there are some things even in America which money can not buy, and that when the people have reserved to themselves, for their use and enjoyment a beauty spot of nature, a masterpiece of nature's god, they will preserve and defend it. (Brooklyn (N. Y.) Standard Union, editorially.)

The real difficulty with San Francisco is that it does not wish to consider any other supply. The others might cost more. (Hon. Herbert Parsons, in 1909.)

REPORT OF BOARD OF ARMY ENGINEERS TO SECRETARY FISHER.

(Page 50.)

The board is of the opinion that there are several sources of water supply that could be obtained and used by the city of San Francisco and adjacent communities to supplement the near-by supplies as necessity develops. From any one of these sources the water is sufficient in quantity and is, or can be made, suitable in quality, while the engineering difficulties are not insurmountable. The determining factor is principally one of cost.

THE SITUATION IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The city is now suffering from a shortage of water and takes advantage of that situation to appeal to the sympathies of Congress. For this the city is wholly responsible. Owing to its quarrel with the local water company, the necessary extensions in the service have not been made. This quarrel is now settled, and the construction of the new "Calaveras" reservoir is about to begin. This will double the existing supply and provide for San Francisco for 25 years. There is now a 2 years' supply in the reservoirs near the city.

THE EXISTING SUPPLY TO SAN FRANCISCO.

John R. Freeman, expert for the city, says of it: "The present quality of the water furnished by the Spring Valley Water Co. is, I believe, thoroughly wholesome and safe." (Freeman's Report, p. 61.)

It is a mountain water from the coast range and, according to the Army engineers, can be developed to 131,000,000 gallons daily—more than three times the present supply (report, p. 16) and sufficient for a population of thirteen hundred thousand, according to Mr. Freeman. Even taking into account all the cities around the Bay of San Francisco, the Army engineers find the "economical development" of the coast-range supply is 233,000,000 gallons daily (report, p. 17), or enough for a population of two and a quarter millions of people—present population about 750,000. One hundred gallons a day per capita is the present use. (Freeman, p. 79.)

THE HETCH HETCHY AT LEAST FIVE YEARS AWAY.

Should this bill pass, water can not be brought from the Hetch Hetchy under 5 years (Freeman, p. 74), or 10 years according to former City Engineer Manson. Long before this the "Calaveras" supply would be ready, and with this Mr. Freeman advises "deferring" the building of the Hetch Hetchy works "4 or 5 years," and thus "put off for a few years the paying of interest on the large sum of money involved in building the Hetch Hetchy Dam." (Report, p. 69.)

The bill itself gives the city three years in which to file plans. Clearly the city is in no hurry.

VIEWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS IN 1890.

This park was established in 1890. (26 Stat. L., 651.) In reporting this bill (H. R. 8350) the committee said:

"The bill under consideration established as a national park the portion of public lands lying within the described boundaries, containing therein primeval forests, great valleys, and inaccessible heights, the walls of which vary from 2,000 to 5,000 feet, and from the highest points of which the plummet will swing clear of the base."

"The preservation by the Government in all its original beauty of a region like this seems to the committee to be a duty to the present and future generations. The rapid increase of population and the resulting destruction of natural objects make it incumbent upon the Government, in so far as may be, to preserve the wonders and beauties of our country from injury and destruction, in order that they may afford pleasure as well as instruction to the people."

VIEWS OF MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS IN 1909.

A similar bill was before this committee in 1909 and was reported by a vote of 9 to 8. The minority said, touching certain provisions regulating the amount of water to be taken by the irrigation districts and for electric power:

"But aside from this and all similar questions that have been raised, the legislation is particularly objectionable on account of features that are entirely unnecessary to the granting of the privileges that San Francisco seeks and which would, in fact, render the privilege granted of doubtful value, features which relate to subjects not under the control of Congress, and with regard to which it has no authority and ought not to attempt to legislate."

"The resolution came to Congress ostensibly on behalf of and for the benefit of San Francisco. As it is reported it is practically legislation for the benefit of the Turlock and Modesto irrigation districts and touching matters not within the scope of congressional authority."

"The legislation is objectionable for the reasons above mentioned, which take it out of the category of legislation of doubtful propriety and expediency and place it in that of doubtful constitutionality and of unquestionably mischievous and dangerous character."

This report (H. Rept. No. 2085, Sixtieth Congress, second session) was drafted by Hon. F. W. MONDELL, the then chairman of the committee, and is signed by Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, the present chairman. The argument is as potent now as then. This bill does not essentially differ from the one then considered.

Congressional action is desired because the proposed dam is to be built on the public lands, some of which will also be flowed. The other available supplies do not need congressional action. The disposition of the water in the river belongs to the State of California under its laws. Nevertheless this bill proposes to take the water of the river away from the riparian owners and the irrigable lands of the valley and give it to San Francisco, 160 miles away. It settles rights of irrigation districts in California, "notwithstanding any general laws of the United States or of the State of California or any general rules of property established by the courts." (Bill, sec. 9, i.) When was Congress ever before asked to settle purely State matters in such high-handed fashion?

PRIOR APPLICATIONS BY THE CITY TO CONGRESS.

Senate bill 4134, referred February 5, 1904, to give the Hetch Hetchy to San Francisco never emerged from the committee. (Letter of Secretary Hitchcock to the President of Feb. 20, 1905.) In 1905 a similar bill in the House was laid on the table by the Committee on the Public Lands by unanimous vote. (Letter of Secretary Murdock to the President of Mar. 1, 1905.) In 1909 a similar bill was reported to the House by a vote of 9 to 8, but no action followed. The Senate committee took no action after hearing. In each Congress since bills have been introduced by the city which have slept in the files despite efforts to induce the city to bring them forward.

PRIOR ACTION BY THE DEPARTMENTS.

In 1903 Secretary Hitchcock denied the application of the city for a permit to occupy the Hetch Hetchy, it then appearing that the surveys of the city had been "made surreptitiously." Upon a rehearing, in December, 1903, lasting three days, the permit was again denied. He reported against it to the President (Feb. 20, 1905), and Secretary Murdock, of California, wrote a supporting opinion (Mar. 1, 1905).

Secretary Garfield favored the grant, because, as he put it, "I do not need to pass upon the claim that this is the only practicable and reasonable source of water supply for the city. It is sufficient that, after careful and competent study, the officials of the city insist that such is the case."

This claim was at once vigorously disputed, and Secretary Ballinger, who visited the valley, caused an investigation to be made by engineers of the Reclamation Service, and as a result ordered the city to show cause why the Hetch Hetchy should not be eliminated from the Garfield permit, and subsequently caused the appointment of a board of Army engineers to report whether there were other sources of supply available which would be "adequate for all present and reasonably prospective needs of the city without the inclusion of the Hetch Hetchy Valley."

This board reported four other such sources: (1) McCloud River; (2) Sacramento River; (3) Lake Eleanor, etc.; and (4) American River, etc.—all ample. Upon this showing Secretary Fisher, who visited the valley, refused a permit to the city, which, therefore, now makes this appeal to Congress.

In 1910 George Otis Smith, Director of the Geological Survey, reported to the Secretary of the Interior, after a careful examination by engineers:

"The Lake Eleanor project is amply sufficient to meet the present and prospective needs of the city, and it is not necessary that the Hetch Hetchy Valley should be available to San Francisco for the purpose of a municipal water supply."

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY SQUARE MILES OF ARABLE AND IRRIGABLE LAND TO BE LEFT FOREVER ARID.

"The demands of the San Joaquin Valley for complete irrigation are in excess of the water available. * * * There can be no question but that a large portion, if not all, of the flow of the Tuolumne (from the Hetch Hetchy) could be used for irrigation if stored. * * * It seems quite certain that to irrigate the southern part of the San Joaquin Valley would be less expensive from the Tuolumne than from the streams farther north." (The Army engineers' report, p. 35.)

This 400,000,000 gallons daily for San Francisco is sufficient to irrigate at least 250 square miles (160,000 acres), which will thus be left forever arid, as there is no other source of water and there are foothill reservoirs where irrigation water can be stored. California land should produce $100 per acre annually, and $16,000,000 annually are thus to be taken from the resources of the Nation. In the Sacramento Valley the annual rainfall is sufficient to cover the irrigable portions to the "depth of 11 feet," while in this Hetch Hetchy region there would be only 18 inches. (Hearing on H. R. 6281, p. 80.)

"Much of these lands can be irrigated from the Tuolumne if the water of the river is not taken to San Francisco for municipal use." (Report of California Conservation Commission, 1912, p. 218; see p. 227.)

Can this be true conservation?

IS THIS CONSERVATION?

California needs all its water for irrigation. Domestic use must necessarily rob irrigation. Why should not Congress leave the State to settle these questions? One hundred and twenty-five miles north of San Francisco the Eel River pours 200,000,000 gallons daily of good water into the Pacific Ocean which can never be used for irrigation. (Report of hearing, p. 89.) In the Sacramento River vast quantities of water run to the ocean. Why waste these near-by supplies in order to rob the San Joaquin Valley?

The plan of San Francisco, according to Mr. Freeman (Report, p. 78), is ultimately to take 95,000,000 gallons daily and use it for irrigation in and about San Francisco. Think of it! Rob arid lands at the source and bring water 160 miles to irrigate land already well watered. Then, too, the city proposes to throw away the present coast supply (233,000,000 gallons daily) and use Hetch Hetchy water in its place. A pretty conservation this!

THE REPORT OF THE ARMY ENGINEERS.

Stress is laid on this report as recommending the grant of the Hetch Hetchy to the city. What the board says is this:

"The valley of the San Joaquin has less rainfall and less run-off from its rivers than the valley of the Sacramento. The Tuolumne River could, if not used for city supply, be used to irrigate a large amount of fertile land, as could almost any river in the valley of California, if means are found economically to store the water. The board believes that on account of the fertility of the lands under irrigation and the aridity without water the necessity of preserving all available water in California will sooner or later make the demand for the use of the Hetch Hetchy as a reservoir practically irresistible." (Report pp. 50-51.)

Let us cross this bridge when we come to it after full investigation of other reservoir sites. It is a lame and impotent conclusion to take this water away forever from irrigation where it is sorely needed and hand it over to San Francisco, which can turn to other sources.

SECRETARY FISHER REFUSED THE GRANT.

Secretary Fisher wanted more information, and refused to act on this report, saying: "I have decided not to base any official action upon such a conclusion now, and because, if I were now properly authorized to take official action I would prefer some additional information." And he specifies as to these points whether "the use of the Hetch Hetchy Valley as a reservoir site is necessary if the full flow of the upper Tuolumne is to be conserved," evidently referring to the possibility of utilizing the foothill reservoirs suggested by Hon. Francis Burton Harrison, M. C. (Army report, p. 145), and "the San Joaquin Valley is relatively less well provided with water than the Sacramento Valley, both as to rainfall and as to run-off of rivers. The demands of the valley for complete irrigation are in excess of the water available."

Surely Congress also needs this information before it dedicates 80 whole townships to perpetual aridity.

THE COST.

As Hon. Herbert Parsons, M. C., put it in his report to Congress in 1909 (60th Cong., 2d sess., No. 2085, p. 26):

"* * * Certainly the Federal Government is not bound to give up to San Francisco two-fifths of a national park simply because it is cheaper. Why is it cheaper? It is cheaper because having been made a national park it has not been possible for private interests to file upon the water in the same manner that they could have if there had not been a national park. * * * It (San Francisco) goes to Hetch Hetchy mainly because it is the cheapest. Hetch Hetchy is the cheapest because it belongs to all the people instead of some of the people."

The Army engineers figure the water rights that San Francisco would be obliged to purchase on other sources at a valuation of from four to nine millions of dollars. (Report, p. 49.)

But the Army engineers figure the Hetch Hetchy only as $13,000,000 cheaper than the next more expensive source (the Sacramento River filtered). (Report, p. 50.) If this water is filtered, the extra expense is figured by them at ten and a half millions (report, p. 33), so that the Hetch Hetchy is only two and a half millions cheaper. Filtration is required by the proposed act if the city becomes dissatisfied with the limited sanitary regulations; and its experts, Prof. Whipple, of Harvard, and Allen Hazen, told Secretary Fisher that filtration of this water would come in any event within 50 years.

The Sacramento River supply entails about one-half the actual outlay of the Hetch Hetchy—only $52,000,000—while Hetch Hetchy will cost seventy-seven. The extra cost of the former, as figured by the Army board, is made up by a theoretical capitalization of pumping and filtration expense, which is spread over many years.

ELECTRIC POWER THE REAL THING WANTED.

The city will acquire by this grant electric power worth, so the Army engineers say, $45,000,000. For this it pays nothing, except where power is sold, and then the payment to the Government diminishes with the price. But municipal lighting and power it gets free. We do not quarrel with San Francisco on any plan for municipal ownership of public utilities using electric current; but that should be at its own expense and not at the expense of the Nation. Already it has started a municipally owned electric railroad (Geary Street). Its engineer, Manson, estimated an annual saving of $300,000 from lighting the municipal buildings alone.

Is not this the real cat in the meal? The Sacramento River gives plenty of water, but no power.

THAT SUPPRESSED REPORT.

Secretary Ballinger, in May, 1910, gave the city of San Francisco a postponement of his order to show cause why the Hetch Hetchy Valley should not be eliminated from the Garfield permit, saying:

"Said continuance and postponement is granted for the purpose of enabling the city and county of San Francisco to furnish necessary data and information to enable the Department of the Interior to determine whether the Lake Eleanor basin * * * together with all other sources of water supply available to said city, will be adequate for all present and reasonably prospective needs * * * without the inclusion of the Hetch Hetchy Valley as a part of said sources of supply."

"In granting said postponement and continuance it is understood that said city will at once proceed, at its own expense and with due diligence, to secure and furnish to said advisory board of Army engineers all necessary data upon which to make the determination aforesaid."

Yet in the face of this the city deliberately suppresses the Bartell official report obtained for the above purpose, which shows that from the Mokelumne River alone 432,000,000 gallons a day may be had. This supply is nearly 50 miles nearer San Francisco than the Hetch Hetchy. It is a Sierra water drawn from mountain lakes.

If this report was suppressed, how many other reports were also suppressed, and what would the Army engineers have reported had they had these reports?

Nor did the present city engineer, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, inform the Army engineers of his discovery of the reservoir sites on Dry Creek, below Hetch Hetchy, on which he reported to William H. Crocker, saying:

"It would be possible to use this source as an auxiliary supply to Oakland, Berkeley, or San Francisco. The water would be pure, unpolluted water from the snowsheds of the Sierras, and the expense of developing and conveying would not be 60 per cent of many other Sierra supplies."

LETTER OF HON. FRANCIS BURTON HARRISON TO SECRETARY FISHER, OF DECEMBER 3, 1912.

Of this plan Mr. Harrison writes:

"The project would in no way interfere with the possible development of irrigation in that region."

THE PASSAGE OF THIS BILL WILL RESULT IN THE EXCLUSION OF THE PUBLIC FROM NEARLY ONE-HALF OF THE YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

The Hetch Hetchy Valley is the only large level place in the northwestern portion of the park where hotels and permanent camps can be located. The surrounding country is rough and mountainous beyond description, and other camping places are small and widely scattered. Flooding this valley would create a remote lake which would be rarely visited, as there would be no stopping places and no reason for visiting it, as mountain lakes are plenty.

Furthermore, how long will the people of San Francisco consent to camping on the watershed which covers hundreds of square miles where the enforcement of sanitary regulations must necessarily be very difficult, if not impossible, of enforcement? How long will it be before San Francisco demands and gets an act from some future Congress absolutely excluding the public from this territory—such an act as was passed to protect the Bull Run water supply of Portland, Oreg., where not even a road can be built into the watershed?

THE PRICE SAN FRANCISCO OFFERS TO PAY.

For this magnificent water supply, for $45,000,000 worth of electric power, the city offers—what? A road over which it will bring its materials and supplies. It offered Secretary Fisher a "scenic" road around the valley; but this is now to be abandoned on account of the expense or, at least, much shortened.

THIS SUPPLY IS FOR SAN FRANCISCO ALONE.

The bill makes a grant to San Francisco alone. True, the other bay cities are referred to, but they may share only on terms San Francisco may dictate. As long ago as 1903 the Legislature of California passed an act permitting the formation of a water district about the bay. (Act of Mar. 24, 1903.) This being forgotten, a similar act was passed in 1909, which was amended in 1911. No such water district has ever been formed. This matter should wait until these cities determine officially on some plan in which they shall have the right to share.

THE PROPOSED BILL LOOKS TO THE YEAR 2000 AND NOT TO THE PRESENT.

The Garfield permit without Hetch Hetchy will furnish water for many years according to the report of the Director of the Geological Survey. All that is now claimed by the great expert, Mr. Freeman, is that this provision may not be sufficient a century hence if these cities about the bay grow as fast as he predicts. That is all there is to this bill.

What the uses of the park will be a century from now are entirely ignored, and stress is laid on the fact that to-day comparatively few people visit Hetch Hetchy because the road to it stops 8 miles away. The Government has already built hundreds of miles of roads in the various national parks, and when this 8 miles is built the influx of visitors must be large.

THIS PARK SHOULD AT LEAST BE PRESERVED FOR THE DWELLERS IN THE HOT PLAINS OF CALIFORNIA.

Already many dwellers in the central plain of California take their families in wagons to camp in the mountains in the hot season. This park should be made a campers' paradise, for which it is admirably adapted. This bill turns it into a scenic display for the tourist who can afford Pullman cars, automobiles, and hotels. The altitude of the Hetch Hetchy permits its use for campers far into the fall months. The resort to the Swiss mountains in winter as well as summer by all classes of people bent on rest and recreation shows what the future has in store for our national parks.

UNANIMOUS RESOLUTION OF THE CIVIC CLUB OF BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

In view of the irreparable loss threatened by the invasion of commercialism by the building of a reservoir in the beautiful Hetch Hetchy, a part of the Yosemite National Park of California, thereby destroying some of our noblest scenery, we place ourselves on record as protesting against the bill now pending in the United States Senate.

This received unanimous vote from the Civic Club of Binghamton.

BOONE AND CROCKETT CLUB,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
New York, November 8, 1913.

Extract from minutes of a meeting of the executive committee of the Boone and Crockett Club, held on October 27, 1913:

"Resolved, That the Boone and Crockett Club records its opposition to the surrender of any portion of the Yosemite National Park. This park has been dedicated to the people of the United States. Its partition would be a blow to the entire country. There are other sources of water supply in the Sierras which the city of San Francisco can acquire by purchase. The precedent of destroying a large area of our most beautiful national park for the benefit of a single metropolis is a most dangerous one, and if adopted will be followed by other encroachments on the national parks, which are none too large for the people of our country."

NEW YORK ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

Extract from minutes of a meeting of the executive committee of the New York Zoological Society, held on June 24, 1913:

"Resolved, That the New York Zoological Society records its opposition to the surrender to the city of San Francisco of any portion of the Yosemite National Park. This park has been dedicated to the people of the United States. Its surrender to the people of San Francisco for a purely utilitarian purpose is a blow to the entire country. There are other adequate sources of water supply in the Sierras, which the city of San Francisco can acquire by purchase. The precedent of destroying a large area of our most beautiful national park for the benefit of a single metropolis is a most dangerous one, and if adopted will be followed by other encroachments on the national parks, which are none too large for the people of our country."

Attest:

[SEAL.]

H. J. SHORTER, Assistant Secretary.

Resolution passed by the American Civic Association at its annual convention held in Cincinnati, Ohio, November 18, 1909:

"Recognizing the wisdom of the Congress in setting aside for public use the great national parks and believing that any avoidable interference with the scenic integrity of these parks is in the highest degree undesirable, the American Civic Association, in convention assembled, urges the Secretary of the Interior to revoke the permit and the Congress to refuse to confirm such permit under which the city of San Francisco is assuming to control eventually for a domestic water supply more than 500 square miles of the best of the Yosemite National Park, unless after a full and impartial inquiry it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Congress that no other sufficient source of water supply is available to San Francisco. We further respectfully represent that the granting and confirmation of such a permit to invade the public domain would create a most dangerous precedent under which other scenic possessions of the United States would be unsafe from individual or corporate assault."

DECEMBER 3, 1912.

HON. WALTER L. FISHER,

Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There is an economical and adequate source of water supply for the city of San Francisco which has not as yet been brought to your attention and which unquestionably merits investigation. Mr. M. M. O'Shaughnessy, city engineer of San Francisco, acting in the capacity of consulting engineer for one of the individuals interested in this project before his election as city engineer, is familiar with a portion of it and has made a most favorable report in regard to its possibilities for San Francisco water supply.

The project consists of one large and three small possible reservoirs lying north of the Merced River in Merced County, Cal., on Dry Creek, as shown on the attached map. The total capacity of the large reservoir, estimated from preliminary surveys, is approximately 65,000,000,000 gallons. The combined capacity of the three small reservoirs is approximately 58,000,000,000 gallons, the total capacity of the four reservoirs being approximately 123,000,000,000 gallons. The elevation of the floor of the lowest reservoir is approximately 200 feet above sea level. The elevation of the floor of the largest and highest reservoir is approximately 300 feet above sea level. This means that water could be taken to San Francisco by gravity a distance of approximately 150 miles. The advisability of maintaining pressure greater than this over many miles of pipe line is questionable, and as even in the event of the development of the Hetch Hetchy project pumping would probably be resorted to after the water had actually reached the city, this project does not suffer when compared with the Hetch Hetchy project.

The proposed reservoirs are so situated that water can be drawn from both the Tuolumne and Merced Rivers. This means that flood waters could be impounded so that the rights of irrigators would not be jeopardized, and the development of the project would in no way interfere with the possible development of irrigation in that region.

Mr. O'Shaughnessy advises the construction of an earth fill for a dam in the instance of the largest reservoir, and the same construction can be carried out in the development of the other three reservoirs.

The preliminary surveys and investigations of this project have been made by Mr. Charles D. Martin, an engineer of Merced County. His work on the large reservoir was checked over and passed by Mr. O'Shaughnessy, but as the project was being considered then for its possible value in connection with land development only the amount of water that could be drawn off at a certain fixed level was estimated. This amount Mr. Martin and Mr. O'Shaughnessy figured at 125,625 acre-feet, or, in gallons, 40,933,000,000. Below this level in the large reservoir there are approximately 15,000,000,000 gallons more, which makes the total capacity of the large reservoir, as above stated, 65,000,000,000 gallons. Mr. O'Shaughnessy's suggestion that the project would be tremendously valuable for city supply led to further investigation which brought to light the other reservoirs herein mentioned. The following is a quotation from a report dated July 29, 1912, made by Mr. O'Shaughnessy to William H. Crocker, of San Francisco, concerning the largest reservoir herein referred to:

"As the outlet of the reservoir will have an elevation of 300 feet above the sea it would be possible to use this source as an auxiliary supply to Oakland, Berkeley, or San Francisco. The water would be pure, unpolluted water from the snowsheds of the Sierras, and the expense of developing and conveying would not be 60 per cent of many of the other Sierra schemes."

I have purposely refrained from giving my estimates and figures as to the cost of construction, as I would prefer that such figures should come after further investigation has been made. Owing to the fact that the reservoirs are situated in the foothills and that facilities for construction work are of the best, the cost would be, as Mr. O'Shaughnessy states, far less than the cost of the Hetch Hetchy project.

The estimates of the capacity of the small reservoirs have been made conservatively, and Mr. Martin, the engineer, states that in his opinion construction work will be hardly any more expensive per gallon of storage than in the case of the largest reservoir.

I would be glad to furnish you with such data as I have at my command, but would prefer that an unbiased engineer, whom you may care to appoint for the work, make a complete report.

Yours, very truly,

FRANCIS BURTON HARRISON.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 29, 1913.

HON. HALVOR STEENERSON,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have just had opportunity to read over the House RECORD of the two days' debates on the Hetch Hetchy bill, and have been gratified at your enlightened attitude in the matter and the staunch fight you put up for the people who own the parks.

I have noted that great weight has been placed by Representatives from other States on the unanimity of the Representatives of this State, and I have also noted in this debate with much regret the inaccuracies as to fact of statements made by our own Representatives. I see that Representative CHURCH, in a flight of eloquence, stated that the Hetch Hetchy Valley was now practically inaccessible, and that with a beautiful lake in it it might be resorted to and hundreds camp about the margins of the lake. How far this is from truth is shown by the fact that the city's plans contemplate at least a 200-foot dam, which will flood the entire Hetch Hetchy Valley, both upper and lower portions, and also the Little Hetch Hetchy Valley above and the lower end of the Tuolumne Canyon to a distance of 7 miles from the dam site, and the lake contemplated to be created in this valley would fill and cover the entire floor of the valley to the almost perpendicular walls at the side, so that unless ledges or benches are blasted out and prepared there would be absolutely no possible place for a human being to be, excepting on that portion of the road which the city promises to build along a portion of the north side of the valley.

I am inclosing some pictures of the valley, which indicate how nearly like it is in its many characteristics to the Yosemite Valley itself and how far it is from being a swampy marsh, as described by the proponents of the bill and our Representatives from California. I will not attempt to assign any reason for the attitude taken by our Representatives. However, the statements made by Mr. CHURCH and similar statements made by others of our Representatives must, of course, be founded on lack of information or else are intentional misstatements of the truth.

As a matter of fact we, largely doctors, professors, lawyers, business men, and school-teachers, who are opposing this unnecessary destruction of this beautiful valley, are those who have resorted to it many times. I have visited it myself personally four times, and each time in parties of about 200 people, so that it is easy of access except for vehicles, and one has not to scramble, fall over, slide down, nor incur any risk whatever in visiting the valley.

I noted also throughout the entire debate the persistent statement that the city was going to invest $77,000,000 "in the dam." As a matter of fact the dam, as planned, may not cost, with all the other contemplated works, more than $2,000,000 or $2,500,000, for which, if no further works are built, the city will obtain a $45,000,000 power plant. It will be easy to go thus far and then "discover" that there is not enough water for the needs of irrigation, and that according to the laws of California the irrigators have the first show, and therefore the city must be content with its power development.

It was originally planned and offered by this city to build a road entirely around the reservoir, bridging the far end. This would have made it possible for parties to visit the Tuolumne Canyon, going up or down through the canyon gateway to the Tuolumne Meadows. By conditions of the bill this will be impossible. The road as planned covers only a small portion of the circuit about the proposed reservoir that is cheapest to build. It passes on the same side as the waterfalls, and of course would not be a vantage point to view the beauties of either Wapama or Tueulala Falls.

There is no doubt but what your enlightened and statesmanlike stand will be appreciated at your home, and if you will see that we have the address of the officials of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, they shall hear from us in a way commendatory to yourself that will not be a hindrance to your future advancement.

Why should there not have been a bill passed calling for a complete and thorough investigation of all the streams of the Sierras flowing into both great valleys of the Sacramento and the San Joaquin, of all the possible storage sites, and for the formulation of a coordinated plan of water storage and reclamation that should provide every irrigable foot of land in both valleys with its due amount of water, and the surplus remain available for domestic use whenever needed in the State?

The taking of 400,000,000 gallons daily of water from the San Joaquin Valley will inevitably doom for all time 250 square miles of irrigable land to aridity, and this for the reason that the investigations already made show that all the waters flowing into the San Joaquin Valley, if conserved, would not be sufficient to supply all the irrigable land in the valley with water.

It takes 2 feet annual service. San Joaquin Valley has 21 inches and Sacramento Valley 7 feet for their irrigable land if all water is stored and utilized.

Hoping that we may count on you in the future, wherever you may be, to stand up, as you have in this case, for the true interests of humanity, I am,

Very truly, yours,

E. T. PARSONS,

Secretary Society for Preservation of National Parks.

CONSERVATIONISTS ON RECORD AGAINST THE SCHEME.

John Muir, pioneer of conservation, discoverer of the great Muir glacier and expert on Sierra scenery. Mr. Muir, leader in this fight, calls the scheme "a colossal grab" and says:

"Dam Hetch Hetchy! As well dam for water tanks the people's cathedrals and churches, for no holier temple has ever been consecrated by the heart of man."

Dr. B. E. Fernow, who brought to the United States and advocated, while in the Interior Department, advanced German ideas of conservation, says:

"It would be an amazingly ridiculous action, showing up the incompetence of democratic government, to reverse, in the face of the sane report of the Army engineers, the conservation policy of preserving this sublime work of nature when there was no necessity for doing so."

Edward A. Bowers, Yale professor of land law, formerly of the United States Land Office under Cleveland, author of the provision under which the vast system of national forests has been established, and who presented to Secretary Lamar a comprehensive scheme of conservation, says:

"I have always been opposed to the project as being destructive of a fine portion of the Yosemite National Park, which is entirely unnecessary as a water supply for San Francisco."

Hon. George F. Edmunds, who, while in the Senate, killed a bill to confer private rights in the Yosemite Valley, writes from Pasadena of "the despoilment of the Hetch Hetchy Valley in the interest of the commercialism of San Francisco water men; etc., without any at all adequate reason of real public interest and necessity. I do hope that the sober sense of Congress will refuse to authorize the accomplishment of this scheme."

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, first president of the Conservation Congress:

"If the valley is turned into a lake used as a water supply for San Francisco, the public will have to be shut out from all the borders of the lake for health and pleasure uses. This deprivation always follows the use of any large body of water, natural or artificial, for a water supply."

Robert Underwood Johnson, who in 1889 made The Century the pioneer of magazines in conservation and first proposed to Mr. Roosevelt the idea of the White House conference:

"This piece of vandalism, so repugnant to the enlightened opinion of the country, can be rushed through only by the deference of the judgment of Congress to the statements of interested parties."

J. Horace McFarland, president of the American Civic Association and champion of Niagara preservation, who knows the valley by heart:

"The value of great scenic possessions is being increasingly recognized the world over. This value is now known to have a great influence upon the development of that best citizenship, without which the country is poor indeed."

The late Hon. John W. Noble, Secretary of the Interior and father of official conservation:

"The city has abundant water supply other than the reservoir to be constructed here, and it is not necessary to give this up."

The late Hon. E. A. Hitchcock, former Secretary of the Interior, who refused California's request for the valley:

"It is the aggregation of such natural scenic features that makes the Yosemite Park a wonderland, which the Congress of the United States sought by law to preserve for all coming time, as nearly as practicable, in the condition fashioned by the hand of the Creator—a worthy object of national pride and a source of healthful pleasure and rest for the thousands of people who may annually sojourn there during the heated months."

Frederick Law Olmsted, distinguished landscape architect and member of the National Art Commission.

Mrs. Emmons Crocker, chairman of the conservation committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Dr. David Starr Jordan, late president of Leland Stanford University, California, says:

"Nothing short of absolute necessity can justify damming Hetch Hetchy."

The late James T. Gardiner, formerly of the California and United States Geological Surveys, who ran the lines of the Yosemite Valley Reservation. Dr. George Kunz, president of the American Scenic and Historical Preservation Society. The late Prof. Joseph Le Conte, of California, the eminent geologist. Prof. Henry Fairfield Osborn, president of the American Museum of Natural History and the American Zoological Society.

Samuel Parsons, landscape architect, for years in charge of Central Park, says:

"The assault on the Hetch Hetchy, if successful, would be a wanton outrage on the marvelous natural beauties of a great national park which no artificial devices can remedy. Injury of natural beauties of this kind are irremediable."

Ernest Thompson Seton, the naturalist, writes:

"The broad principle of conserving the parks and of enlarging rather than contracting them is one to which I am strongly committed."

Edmund A. Whitman, Esq., the distinguished lawyer of Boston, who has visited the valley, says:

"There is no place in the whole 500 square miles in that northwest corner of the Park where any number of people can stay at one time except on the floor of this valley."

Hon. Herbert Parsons, former member of the House Committee on Public Lands, who visited the valley, says:

"The impressive part of Hetch Hetchy is that after you have traveled through the park, through what you might call its waste portions and its rock-bound lakes, you come down to this gem of a valley. . . . its beauty is the beauty of the floor of the valley, which would be absolutely destroyed by the reservoir."

Hon. Henry L. Stimson, recently Secretary of War, after a personal visit of inspection, thinks the Hetch Hetchy in some respects more beautiful than the Yosemite. He says:

"I feel that this scheme would involve an irreparable loss to the national park, and would greatly impair its ultimate development and usefulness. Both I and the three Army officers who accompanied me felt that alternative water supplies could be secured that were adequate and satisfactory. The city finds it cheaper to obtain the Hetch Hetchy from Uncle Sam for nothing than to acquire by purchase or condemnation other sites where private interests have obtained a foothold."

Prof. Charles S. Sargent, etc., and chairman of the United States forestry commission of the National Academy of Sciences, which investigated the forestry question and recommended many reserves, created by President Cleveland, says:

"If it is possible, even with a larger expenditure of money, to obtain a water supply for the city of San Francisco from another source than the Hetch Hetchy Valley, the destruction of the natural features of that valley must be considered a national misfortune. An artificial reservoir in the valley will destroy some of the most beautiful and interesting scenery in the United States, and the use of a part of one of the national parks for such a purpose will establish a precedent which will make it easier in the future to invade other national parks for purposes which were not contemplated when these parks were established."

ARGUMENTS FOR THE SCHEME REFUTED.

(1) That there is a water famine in parts of San Francisco, making an emergency.

Answer. Any trouble is casual and is with the pipes, not the water. The Spring Valley Water Co., which furnishes the present supply, says there is two years' supply on hand. Mr. Freeman, the city's expert, says the quality of the water is of the best. It comes from a radius of 50 miles.

(2) That the city needs Hetch Hetchy to meet this emergency.

Answer. Hetch Hetchy is 150 miles distant, and could not be utilized for six or eight years.

(3) That Hetch Hetchy is the only supply available.

Answer. The Army Board of Engineers reports that there are several other sources, any one of which could be made available; that the problem is primarily one of cost. Ex-Mayor Phelan, of San Francisco, who is credited with originating the project, confessed before the Senate Committee on Public Lands in 1910 that the city could get an abundant supply of pure water anywhere along the Sierra by paying for it.

(4) That any other source would entail upon the city a cost exceeding that of the Hetch Hetchy by $20,000,000 (the "estimate" of the Army board).

Answer. The Army board reports that neither it nor the city has made a "thorough and complete" investigation of other sources, except the Sacramento River. Who knows that it would cost $20,000,000 more? If the Hetch Hetchy supply is filtered, this estimated difference must be reduced to $3,000,000. This great question should not turn on the mere guesswork of the board when accurate data are not available.

(5) That this assumed difference of cost constitutes a necessity.

Answer. This theory implies that the Nation should give up any part of its great national parks when any city 150 miles distant wishes to save money, though the city might be in the hands of grafters, as San Francisco has sometimes been since the Hetch Hetchy fight began and as it may be again.

(6) That San Francisco, having suffered a great calamity by the earthquake, may appeal in the name of humanity for this relief.

Answer. This was the purpose of the first bill in Congress—to supply water for drinking and other domestic purposes. The object of this bill is hydroelectric power worth, the Army board says, $45,000,000—a careful calculation. The San Francisco Journal of Commerce (Sept. 29, 1913) calls it "this wonderfully valuable privilege for San Francisco." The Call says, "Hetch Hetchy will bring an electric age." Leave out the power provision and the bill would be withdrawn. The humanity cry is pure humbug.

(7) That the city is in the clutches of a water monopoly.

Answer. The city has come to terms with the Spring Valley Co. and is to buy it out by condemnation proceedings. It might have done so years ago. The San Francisco Chronicle says (Oct. 14), "The company is ready to sell and the city is ready to buy." Again, it says (Oct. 4) "the condemnation suit seems to slumber soundly and strangely." As an argument for the bill the "monopoly" cry is pure humbug.

(8) That this "monopoly" is supporting the opposition to the bill.

Answer. In the same breath it is said that Mr. Bourn, president of the company, favors the bill. Men of integrity like John Muir all over the country are fighting it. They have no relation to the company.

(9) That everybody in California favors the bill.

Answer. Senator Works telegraphed to Senator Smoot that 99 per cent of the users of the water of Hetch Hetchy in the San Joaquin Valley are opposed to it. Many Californians outside of San Francisco also oppose it.

(10) That the valley will be improved by damming and flooding it.

Answer. The rare beauty of Hetch Hetchy, as the elder Frederick Law Olmsted said, consists in the contrast between the rugged cliffs and the exquisite floor. Destroy the latter and you destroy the "original beauty" which Congress determined to preserve by the act creating the Yosemite National Park. A city park is beautiful in its place, a natural lake in its place, but what is desirable in the Hetch Hetchy is the delightful charm of its lovely wildness, for which an ugly dam and an artificial reservoir with a dirty rim would be no substitute. If such a lake is more wonderful valleys in the national parks? Let the city politicians once get possession of the valley and who shall guard against a riot of vandalism? The mismanagement of the Yosemite Valley by California was a scandal until the valley was retroceded to the United States. The average politician would "coneyislandize" the Garden of Eden.

(11) That if the city doesn't take the national-park supply now the water will have to go to the irrigation farmers eventually.

Answer. For purposes of irrigation it can be impounded below and outside the park, as Mr. O'Shaughnessy, city engineer of San Francisco, has said. The bill would take the water from a naturally arid valley that is now using it, and will hereafter need it, instead of providing a supply for the city from the Sacramento Valley, which has more water than it can use.

The bald question is: Shall the Nation, in order to save San Francisco an assumed difference of cost between the Hetch Hetchy and any one of several other supplies spoken of by the Army board in its report, make the city a present of a franchise worth $45,000,000 and destroy the unique beauty of the valley, called by Mr. Pinchot "one of the great wonders of the world"? If the Hetch Hetchy is not worth saving, what else in the national-park system can be defended against the demands of commercial greed?

The National Committee for the Preservation of the Yosemite National Park urges every American citizen, man or woman, to make brief protest at once against this project to Senators of the United States and to the President. The proponents of the bill claim that a majority of the Senate are committed to its passage, but this is by no means sure. Most Senators, fatigued by the labors of the extra session, have not had time to weigh the testimony with the candor and thoroughness which should be given to a proposition of such importance and such irretrievable consequences. Committal to vote for a bill afterwards found to be against public policy is not likely to be considered binding.

But it is not to be disguised that only hard and continuous work can insure the defeat of this monstrous piece of folly.

"Winds blow,
And waters roll, strength to the brave."

AGAINST THE HETCH HETCHY BILL—A DECLARATION BY THE HEAD OF PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S FORESTRY COMMISSION.

Prof. Charles S. Sargent, the distinguished arboriculturist, director of the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard and chairman of the Commission for the Preservation of the Adirondack Forests, 1885, as well as chairman of the United States Forestry Commission, 1896-97, and otherwise known for his prominence in the conservation movement, has written as follows concerning the Hetch Hetchy controversy:

"If it is possible, even with a larger expenditure of money, to obtain a water supply for the city of San Francisco from another source than the Hetch Hetchy Valley, the destruction of the natural features of that valley must be considered a national misfortune. An artificial reservoir in the valley will destroy some of the most beautiful and interesting scenery in the United States, and the use of a part of one of the national parks for such a purpose will establish a precedent which will make it easier in the future to invade other national parks for purposes which were not contemplated when these parks were established."

AMERICAN SOCIETY OF LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS, New York, November 10, 1913.

The American Society of Landscape Architects has voted to oppose the principle of granting in any national park or monument either temporary or permanent rights in favor of individuals, corporations, or States that shall impair the beauty, freedom of use, or safety of such holdings. On this ground we oppose the proposed grant to San Francisco, Cal., of reservoir and power privileges in the Hetch Hetchy Valley of the Yosemite National Park that a bill pending in the United States Senate provides for, and also because it has been shown that such a grant is unnecessary.

CHARLES DOWNING LAY, Secretary.

WHAT MAKES THE HETCH HETCHY BEAUTIFUL.

In 1890 the unintelligent and inartistic treatment of the floor of the Yosemite Valley by the State commissioners—for it was then under control of California—was a matter of controversy throughout the country. There was a great outcry against the vandalism that was then being committed by the slashing of vistas, the cutting of underbrush, the conversion of natural meadows into hayfields, and other similar acts. At that time Mr. Frederick Law Olmsted, the elder, probably the most distinguished American landscape architect, wrote an article from which the paragraph which follows is taken. Its relation to the Hetch Hetchy Valley controversy at the present time will be manifest when it is remembered that, as John Muir says, "the Hetch Hetchy is a wonderful exact counterpart of the Yosemite," so that the principles which govern the beautiful effect of one valley are entirely applicable to the other. The lines printed in italics may, without the slightest straining for effect, be considered as applicable to the Hetch Hetchy itself. It is doubtful if Mr. Olmsted ever saw the latter valley.

EXTRACT FROM A STATEMENT IN REGARD TO GOVERNMENTAL PRESERVATION OF NATURAL SCENERY.

[By Frederick Law Olmsted, Brookline, Mass., Mar. 8, 1890.]

A systematic removal of all the young trees of the valley would be equivalent to the destruction in the course of time of just what the State of California stands voluntarily pledged to "hold, inalienably, for all time." That is to say, the distinctive charm of the scenery of the Yosemite does not depend, as it is a vulgar blunder to suppose, on the greatness of its walls and the length of its little early summer cascades; the height of certain of its trees, the reflections in its pools, and such other matters as can be entered in statistical tables pointed out by guides and represented within picture frames. So far, perhaps, as can be told in a few words, it lies in the rare association with the grandeur of its rocky elements, of brooks flowing quietly through the ferny and bosky glades of very beautifully disposed great bodies, groups and clusters of trees. In this respect its charm is greater than that of any other scenery that, with much searching, I have found. There is nothing in the least like it in the canyon of the Colorado, sometimes foolishly compared with the Yosemite. I felt the charm of the Yosemite much more at the end of a week than at the end of a day, much more after six weeks, when the cascades were nearly dry, than after one week, and when, after having been in it, off and on, several months, I was going out, I said, "I have not half taken it in." To the perpetuation of this charm nothing is more essential than the constant renewal of its wood. There will always be danger that fire will too much interfere with what it is necessary to provide in this respect.

SOCIETY FOR THE PRESERVATION OF NATIONAL PARKS, CALIFORNIA BRANCH, San Francisco.

MORE LIGHT ON THE DESTRUCTIVE HETCH HETCHY SCHEME—A CRISIS IN NATIONAL PARK AFFAIRS—LET EVERYONE HELP TO SAVE OUR GREAT NATIONAL PLAYGROUNDS FROM INVASION.

To the American people, fellow owners of the Yosemite National Park:

In 1890 Congress, with wise foresight, dedicated to the American people for all time this great health-giving playground. The Yosemite Valley had already been made a park, and it was primarily to preserve the Hetch Hetchy Valley and Tuolumne Meadows from destruction that the greater Yosemite National Park was created. This was done 10 years before San Francisco began to covet the national park.

Negligently allowing opportunity after opportunity for making adequate provision for a future water supply to slip away and pass into private hands, she finally awoke to the fact that one of the cheapest sources remaining was the so-called Hetch Hetchy source on the Tuolumne River, inside the national park. This source attracted San Francisco solely because Congress had wisely set it apart for the use and recreation of all the American people, and consequently during all these years it had remained free from private claims.

The Hetch Hetchy Valley is a wonderfully exact counterpart of the great Yosemite, not only in its cliffs and waterfalls and peaceful river, but in the gardens, groves, meadows, and camp grounds of its flowery parklike floors. Here on this wonderful level floor, carpeted with ferns and flowers, amid magnificent groves of nature's own planting, is room for thousands of campers and tourists. Here they can view the wonderful domes and cliffs and waterfalls of this Tuolumne Yosemite as they can from no other place. San Francisco schemes to flood these gardens and groves 200 feet deep and to wipe out all the extensive and available camp grounds. There are no other camp grounds anywhere in this region that are at all comparable to those that would be destroyed. The effect of flooding the Hetch Hetchy Valley would be the same as if the Yosemite Valley were flooded, leaving not a single spot for a camp on all the spacious garden floor.

This same application by the city has been denied several times in the past. Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock refused it in most emphatic terms in 1903. A little later Secretary of the Navy Metcalf rendered a concurring opinion. In 1909-10 the city applied to Congress, but recognizing that the bill would be defeated it was allowed to die. Secretary of the Interior Garfield granted a qualified permit to use Lake Eleanor first, but Secretary of the Interior Ballinger called on the city to show cause why the Hetch Hetchy portion of this permit should not be eliminated, and Secretary of the Interior Fisher, in 1913, confirmed this order, saying that there was grave danger in creating such a precedent where the saving of money only was involved.

Encouraged by the change in administration at Washington, the city is again asking Congress for this priceless wonderland which belongs to all the American people. The city has been persistently working in Washington for months, with unlimited financial backing at its command, and is now striving to rush this bill through at scandalous speed, without allowing time for the people, the owners of the park, to be heard in its defense. It will endeavor to have the bill called up in the Senate in the near future, and it is vital that every person who reads this letter, no matter how little weight he thinks his request may have, should write to his Senators in Congress and to President Woodrow Wilson, asking that the wise forethought and labor of years may not be undone, and urge that this new administration shall not create the dangerous precedent of destroying and turning to commercial uses the parks dedicated to the people.

Already, emboldened by this assault, there are other interests at work, hoping to get a foothold in the vicinity of Yosemite Valley itself, in order to utilize the water power of its magnificent falls. No part of the people's parks will be too grand or too sacred to escape unscathed from hungry hordes of despoilers if this destructive Hetch Hetchy scheme prevails.

SOCIETY FOR THE PRESERVATION OF NATIONAL PARKS, WESTERN BRANCH,
JOHN MUIR, President.

SAN FRANCISCO SPECIOUSLY CLAIMS AN EMERGENCY TO JUSTIFY ACTION
AT THIS SPECIAL SESSION.

In order to rush this bill through at this special session of Congress before the general public has become aroused to the danger which threatens their parks, San Francisco is speciously urging it as an "emergency" measure. It is quite true and well known that San Francisco needs water, but her own engineers admit that the present supply can be more than doubled by adding near-by sources, and under the circumstances this is the only possible plan of development before the city has to go to the Sierra.

As a matter of fact, those portions of San Francisco now experiencing any shortage are the regions in which service pipes have not been properly supplied, and these pipes have not been laid on account of fruitless dissensions between the officials of the city and the water company at present supplying the city. The sworn statements of the water company for May 1 last show in their reservoirs 400 days' supply, and they have in their subterranean gravel sources another 400 days' supply, or over two years' supply if rain does not fall meanwhile.

The claim San Francisco's representatives are making that portions of the city are without water, and that there is a water famine imminent, is entirely aside from the question, for this situation can not be relieved in any way by the Hetch Hetchy, even if the city gets it, for it must go elsewhere for water in the meantime. The city officials and the water company have finally come to an agreement and have commenced the construction of a dam in the Calaveras Valley across the bay which will add 40,000,000 gallons daily to the present supply and will relieve the situation, so that it will be unnecessary to commence any Sierra project for many years to come.

Brig. Gen. H. M. Chittenden, United States Army, who recently made an elaborate investigation of San Francisco's water-supply needs, reported as follows:

"There is no substantial reason to believe that the consumption of water in San Francisco County will exceed 92,000,000 gallons daily by 1950, or 235,000,000 gallons daily for the five bay counties, apart from the supply from private wells.

"The three main divisions of the Spring Valley system—the Peninsula, the Alameda, and the Coast streams—by careful development into a single unified system are capable of a dependable supply of over 200,000,000 gallons daily.

"By resort to the company's other sources and to the San Joaquin River, the supply may be indefinitely increased.

"So far as quantity is concerned, there is no present necessity for a resort to the Sierra and will not be for an indefinite period to come.

"The question discussed in the foregoing report is not that of the sufficiency or desirability of the Hetch Hetchy supply in itself, but that of the present necessity of such an outside supply for the people of San Francisco and vicinity. The result of the investigation has been to show that such a necessity does not now and possibly may never exist; that the supply would be in the nature of a luxury rather than a necessity, and a very costly luxury at that." (From 1912 report of H. M. Chittenden, brigadier general, United States Army.)

The estimates of Engineer H. H. Wadsworth, who assisted the Army board, and the conclusions of the Army board itself indicate that it will be many years before these near-by sources are exhausted, and that San Francisco's present claim of emergency is not consistent with the facts. John R. Freeman, the leading engineer employed by the city, reported that construction work on the Hetch Hetchy project could be deferred for several years, and that it would be greater economy to utilize nearer sources meanwhile. (See pp. 69, 74, Freeman report, 1912.)

MANY OTHER SOURCES AVAILABLE FOR SAN FRANCISCO.

The advisory board of Army engineers on February 19, 1913, after investigating the water-supply situation of San Francisco, arrived at the following conclusion:

"The board is of the opinion that there are several sources of water supply that could be obtained and used by the city of San Francisco and adjacent communities to supplement the near-by supplies as the necessity develops. From any one of these sources the water is sufficient in quantity, and is or can be made suitable in quality, while the engineering difficulties are not insurmountable. The determining factor is principally one of cost."

In the face of this report the truth that San Francisco can obtain abundance of pure mountain water for present and future needs without invading the Yosemite Park can no longer be questioned.

THE HETCH HETCHY VALLEY IN THE YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK: WHAT IT IS AND THE DANGERS THREATENING ITS DESTRUCTION.

(By John Muir.)

DESCRIPTION OF THE HETCH HETCHY VALLEY.

A few enterprising politicians up to all sorts of big business, calling themselves "The City of San Francisco," have been plotting and planning for the last 10 years to get possession of the Hetch Hetchy Valley for a reservoir to supply the city with water and electric power, working very hard, watching the political sky, scheming, log rolling regarding the invasion of national parks as the development of natural resources for highest uses, and at last, after repeated defeats, pleading dire necessity for the colossal grab.

This Hetch Hetchy mountain temple so attractive to campers from the lowlands seeking rest and recreation, as well as to seekers of water and power is a grand valley like Yosemite, on the north side of the Yosemite National Park.

After my first visit, in the autumn of 1871, I have always called it the Tuolumne Yosemite, for it is a wonderfully exact counterpart of the great Yosemite, not only in its river and sublime rocks and waterfalls but in the gardens, groves, and meadows of its flowery parklike floor. The floor of Yosemite is about 4,000 feet above the sea; the Hetch Hetchy floor about 3,700. The walls of both are of gray granite, rise abruptly out of the flowery grass and groves, are sculptured in the same style, and in both every rock is a glacial monument.

Standing out from the south wall is a strikingly picturesque rock called "Kolana" by the Indians, the outermost of a group 2,300 feet high, corresponding with the Cathedral Rocks of Yosemite, both in relative position and form. On the opposite side of the valley, facing Kolana, there is a counterpart of El Capitan, 1,800 feet high, and over its massive brow flows a stream which makes the most graceful fall I have ever seen. From the edge of the cliff it is free in the air for a thousand feet, then breaks up into a ragged sheet of cascades among the boulders of an earthquake talus. It is in all its glory in June, when the snow is melting fast, but fades and vanishes toward the end of summer. The only fall I know with which it may fairly be compared is the Yosemite Bridal Veil; but it excels even that favorite fall both in height and fineness of fairy airy beauty and behavior. In the first white outburst of the fall abundance of visible energy is seen, but it is speedily hushed and concealed in divine repose; and its tranquil progress to the base of the cliff is like that of downy feathers in a still room. Near the head is seen in groups of booming cometlike masses, their solid white heads separate, their tails like combed silk interlacing among delicate shadows, ever forming and dissolving, worn out by friction in their rush through the air. Most of these vanish a few hundred feet below the summit, changing to varied forms of downy cloudlike drapery.

So fine a fall might well seem sufficient to glorify any valley; but here, as in Yosemite, nature seems in no wise moderate for a short distance to the eastward of Tuolumne (the Indian name) booms and thunders the great Hetch Hetchy fall, Wapama, so near that you have both of them in full view from the same standpoint. It is the counterpart of the Yosemite Fall, but has a much greater volume of water. No two falls could be more unlike. Tuolumne out in the open sunshine sifting, floating, descending like thistledown; Wapama in a shadowy gorge roaring and thundering, pounding its way with the weight and energy of an avalanche. Besides this glorious pair there is a broad, massive fall on the main river a short distance above the head of the valley, a chain of magnificent cascades on a stream that comes in from the northeast, mostly silvery plumes, like the one between the Vernal and Nevada Falls of Yosemite, half sliding, half leaping on bare glacier-polished granite, covered with crisp clashing spray into which the sunbeams pour with glorious effect. And besides all these small streams come over the walls here and there with birdlike song, but they are too unshowy to be noticed in so grand a place.

The floor of the valley is about 3½ miles long and from one-fourth to one-half mile wide. The lower portion is mostly a level meadow, about a mile long, with the trees restricted to the sides, and partially separated from the upper forested portion by a low bar of glacier-polished granite, across which the river breaks in rapids.

It appears, therefore, that Hetch Hetchy Valley, far from being a plain common rock-bound meadow, as many who have not seen it seem to suppose, is a grand landscape garden, one of nature's rarest and most precious mountain mansions. As in Yosemite, the sublime rocks of its walls seem to the nature lover to glow with life, whether leaning back in repose or standing erect in thoughtful attitudes, giving welcome to storms and calms alike, their brows in the sky, their feet in the groves and meadows, a thousand flowers, leaning confidently against their adamantine bosses, while birds, bees, and butterflies help the river and waterfall to stir the air into music—things frail and fleeting and types of permanence meeting here and blending, as if into this glorious mountain temple nature had gathered her choicest treasures, whether great or small, to draw her lovers into close confiding communion with her.

Strange to say, this is the mountain temple that is now in danger of being dammed and made into a reservoir to help supply San Francisco with water and light. This commercial use of the valley, so destructive and foreign to its proper park use, is still being prayed for by the San Francisco board of supervisors, not because water as pure and abundant can not be got from adjacent sources outside the park—for it can—but seemingly only because of the comparative cheapness of the dam required.

Garden and park making goes on everywhere with civilization, for everybody needs beauty as well as water and bread, places to play in and pray in, where nature may heal and cheer and give strength to body and soul. This natural beauty hunger is displayed in poor folks' window gardens, made up of a few geranium slips in broken cups, as well as in the costly gardens of the rich, spacious city parks and botanical gardens, and in our magnificent national parks—the Yellowstone, Yosemite, Sequoia, etc.—nature's own wonderlands, the admiration and joy of the world. Nevertheless, like everything else worth while, however sacred and precious and well guarded, they have always been subject to attack, mostly by despoiling gain seekers eagerly trying to make everything dollarable.

THE BEAUTIFUL LAKE FALLACY.

Landscape gardens, places of recreation and worship, are never made beautiful by destroying and burying them. The beautiful lake, forsooth, would be only an unnatural blot on the landscape, like many others to be seen in the Sierra. For instead of keeping it at the same level all the year, allowing nature to make new shores, it would, of course, be full only a month or two in the spring, when the snow is melting fast. Then it would be gradually drained, exposing the slimy sides of the basin and shallower parts of the bottom, with the gathered drift and waste, death and decay of the upper basins, caught here instead of being swept on to decent natural burial along the banks of the river or in the sea. Thus the Hetch Hetchy dam lake would be only a rough imitation of a natural lake for a few of the spring months, an open mountain sepulcher the others.

VIEWS OF JAMES BRYCE.

The Right Hon. James Bryce, until recently British ambassador to the United States, has for years been keenly interested in the preservation of Hetch Hetchy. In his address before the American Civic Association on "National parks—the need of the future," he said:

"The world seems likely to last a long, long time, and we ought to make provision for the future.

"The population of the world goes on constantly increasing, and nowhere increasing so fast as in North America.

"A taste for natural beauty is increasing and, as we hope, will go on increasing.

"The places of scenic beauty do not increase, but, on the contrary, are in danger of being reduced in number and diminished in quantity, and the danger is always increasing with the accumulation of wealth, owing to the desire of private persons to appropriate these places. There is no better service we can render to the masses of the people than to set about and preserve for them wide spaces of fine scenery for their delight.

"From these propositions I draw the conclusion that it is necessary to save what we have got and to extend the policy which you have wisely adopted by acquiring and preserving still further areas for the perpetual enjoyment of the people."

THE WATER-POWER MOTIVE BEHIND THE SCHEME.

We have always contended that water power was the principal inducement for the city's acquiring the Hetch Hetchy source. The Freeman report declares that the city can ultimately develop 200,000 horsepower from this source, "an amount greater than is developed to-day at any one hydraulic power house outside of Niagara," and that this "power privilege will be a most valuable asset of the Tuolumne water-supply system." The Army engineers estimate the privilege to be worth $45,000,000. This fat plum it asks of the Nation as a free gift, to be attained only through the Nation's loss of a valley whose scenic assets are worth immensely more if preserved for future generations.

Even had the city proved a necessity, which she has not done, warranting the mutilation of the national park as the city plans, would it not have been a just proceeding for the Government to have reserved some measure of the spoils which are admittedly not an essential part of the city's plan to secure pure water, to have definitely laid down the policy that this power, should be forever reserved for sale, the proceeds to be devoted to improving and maintaining the parks? And this on the broad basis that these national parks, having been reserved for all the people who own them in common, thus having been "conserved" in the broadest sense of the term, they should be administered and maintained for all the people, including the citizens of California, rather than that they should be diverted, mutilated, or sequestered from their dedicated public use to the dollar gain of a section, a municipality, or a corporation of any sort.

The irrigation districts in the San Joaquin Valley started to fight this bill most bitterly, but all of a sudden the opposition ceased, and everyone wondered why. However, a colleague of one of the irrigation-district representatives states in explanation that the city attorney and the city engineer, representing San Francisco, promised the representatives of the irrigation districts that they would never interfere with their water supply, and that it was not water that they were after, but the power, and that they were perfectly willing that the irrigationists should have all the water, provided the city could get the power rights. By what right are San Francisco politicians entitled to capitalize for their own and the city's profit the wise foresight of this Nation, exercised in the interest of all its citizens? If such a rank policy of commercialism is once provided with a precedent, every one of the people's playgrounds will become the object of municipal and political greed. Shall we let the money changers ruin what is left to us of God's temples?

VIEWS OF J. HORACE M'FARLAND, PRESIDENT OF AMERICAN CIVIC ASSOCIATION.

"The value of great scenic possessions is being increasingly recognized the world over. This value is now known to have a great influence upon the development of that best citizenship without which a country is poor indeed. It is also admittedly understood to relate very closely to the maintenance of the health of the people. * * * The travel tribute paid to the Yosemite National Park is annually increasing, and as our population increases it must increase in larger proportion, for more and more are men driven for necessary rest and recreation to the few remaining spots presenting undamaged nature's sublimest works. It may therefore be assumed, I insist, that all of the Yosemite National Park, which in its wisdom Congress set aside many years ago for just the purpose I have been urging, holds a very large value, inhering to all the people of the United States. This value, I insist, should not be interfered with except for a grave public necessity and for cause fully shown to the satisfaction of the whole country, who own the Yosemite National Park."

A DANGEROUS PROVISION OF THE BILL.

A clause introduced into the Hetch Hetchy bill at the last moment provides that people must not deposit refuse within 300 feet of running streams. This, at one stroke, ousts all visitors from the sublimely wonderful Tuolumne Canyon, one of the greatest wonders in the park. For at most points the canyon walls are less than 300 feet from the river.

This will also make it impossible to camp in many most beautiful portions of the park where the cliffs come down close to the streams. By referring to the report of the Army engineers to Secretary Fisher, we find, on page 32 in the report of the city's sanitary experts, the statement that 50 feet from the banks of any running stream would be a satisfactory and sufficient restriction.

On account of its importance the communication to the city from Messrs. Hazen and Whipple, well-known experts on water supply, is quoted:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 25, 1912.

PERCY V. LONG,

City Attorney, City of San Francisco.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request, we suggest that the following rules are appropriate and sufficient for the purpose of protecting the water in the Yosemite National Park proposed to be used for a municipal water supply for San Francisco under present conditions and under all future conditions of which we can conceive as probable, even should 10,000 or 20,000 people per year visit this watershed upstream from the proposed reservoirs of the city of San Francisco.

RULES.

(1) No human excrement, garbage, or other refuse shall be placed in the waters of any reservoir or stream or within 50 feet thereof.

(2) All sewage from permanent camps and hotels within the watershed shall be filtered by natural percolation through porous earth or otherwise adequately purified.

(3) It is forbidden to bathe, wash clothes or cooking utensils, to water stock, or in any other way pollute the waters within the limits of the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir or in the streams leading thereto within 1 mile of said reservoir or in the water from the reservoir between it and the "Early intake" of the aqueduct.

The first and second of the above rules are requirements of common decency and are needed in order to protect campers along the stream from the effects of pollution by other campers farther up the stream, whether or not the city were to use the water. The third rule is substantially the same as that now in force on the waters and creeks above the Sentinel Hotel in the Yosemite Valley. This rule, so far as it relates to the stream between the Hetch Hetchy Dam and the "Early intake," will not be needed after the construction of the aqueduct through this distance.

We are of the opinion that no rules are required forbidding fishing in the reservoir or against boating or bathing in the stream upstream from the reservoir and that there will never be need for prohibiting camping, skating, and sleighing on the Hetch Hetchy catchment area.

Rules against littering the ground at camping places are not essential for sanitary reasons, but are desirable for making the park more attractive when frequented by large numbers of campers, whether or not used for municipal water supply.

We can not conceive it as even remotely possible that future conditions could call for the exclusion of tourists or campers from this watershed when guarded by the above rules and a very few sanitary inspectors; and should popular sentiment or higher standards as regards water supply arise 50 years hence there will always remain the opportunity for filtration.

This gathering ground, however much frequented, will remain so superior to the average surface water supply of American cities that action by the city toward the exclusion of campers may be regarded as certain to never be called for.

Respectfully submitted.

ALLEN HAZEN.

GEORGE C. WHIPPLE.

City officials, when interviewed on this matter, disclaimed responsibility for the change and referred to above report of their experts as embodying all they ask.

For what reason has this legislation closed to the 90,000,000 Americans large areas of the park they own in a way the city's representatives disclaim and admit to be unnecessary?

The late Hon. E. A. Hitchcock, Secretary of the Interior, denied San Francisco the use of Hetch Hetchy Valley as a reservoir December 22, 1903, saying:

"Presumably the Yosemite National Park was created such by law because of the natural objects, of varying degrees of scenic importance, located within its boundaries, inclusive alike of its beautiful small lakes, like Eleanor, and its majestic wonders, like Hetch Hetchy and Yosemite Valley. It is the aggregation of such natural scenic features that makes the Yosemite Park a wonderland which the Congress of the United States sought by law to preserve for all coming time as nearly as practicable in the condition fashioned by the hand of the Creator—a worthy object of national pride and a source of healthful pleasure and rest for the thousands of people who may annually sojourn there during the heated months."

HETCH HETCHY VALLEY.

"It is a veritable Yosemite Valley on a small scale. The Hetch Hetchy Falls, near the lower end of the valley, are fully equal in beauty and grandeur to many of the falls in Yosemite Valley. The rugged granite walls, covered with domes, towers, spires, and battlements, seem to rise almost perpendicularly upon all sides to a height of 2,500 feet above this beautiful emerald meadow, which, seen from the trail approaching it from the east, is a sight never to be forgotten." (Twenty-first An. Rep. U. S. Geological Survey, Pt. IV, p. 450.)

"* * * below me—hundreds of feet below—lay the valley, a broad meadow, green as emerald, skirted at the edge with forests and locked in precipitous granite cliffs, mountain high, between which white waterfalls stood erect and slim like dryads. Through this meadow a shining river wandered lazily—we could not see from so far how swift it was—turning back upon its course, tangling itself into Ss and Ms as if it were loth to leave so beautiful a place. It looked like pictures I have seen of the Vale of Cashmere, like that river whose meanderings have been the inspiration of a nation's art, whose pattern you may unravel in your Persian rugs and shawls. This was our Vale of Cashmere; ours forever, wisely dedicated to the people by our Government, preserved forever from despoiling hands within the sacred boundaries of a national park, and therefore indestructible, inviolable."

"* * * It was a garden of paradise, this valley, a lesser Yosemite but very different, with an infinitely charming individuality of its own; smaller but more compact, less grand but not less beautiful." (From description by Harriet Monroe at hearing before Senate Committee on Public Lands on S. Res. 123, Feb. 10, 1909.)

THE TUOLUMNE MEADOWS.

On the headwaters of the Tuolumne River, which runs down and drains into the proposed Hetch Hetchy reservoir, are situated the famous Tuolumne meadows.

The importance of these meadows as camp grounds and their scenic beauty have been described as follows:

Prof. Joseph Le Conte, the late eminent geologist, writes that "the Tuolumne Meadow is a beautiful grassy plain of great extent, thickly enameled with flowers and surrounded with the most magnificent scenery."

Referring to this same region, the United States engineers report as follows:

"Peaks capped with perpetual snow are numerous. Mounts Hoffman, Conness, and Gibbs, and many others raise their heads to an elevation in excess of 12,000 feet, while Mounts Dana, Lyell, and McClure (over 13,000 feet) have in addition living glaciers of great beauty, equal in interest to those of Switzerland. * * * Following along the Tioga Road a series of lakes and streams are passed that are unequalled for fishing. The scenery is particularly grand, and there are found here a number of mineral springs which are equal to any of the famed springs of the country. * * * Through this section of the park wood, water, and grass abound, making it a paradise for campers." (S. Doc. No. 155, 56th Cong., 1st sess., p. 21.)

John Muir, our honored president, says that "the upper Tuolumne Valley is the widest, smoothest, most serenely spacious, and in every way the most delightful pleasure park in all the high Sierra."

THE GRAND CANYON OF THE TUOLUMNE.

This stupendous scenic feature of the Yosemite National Park extends for 20 miles immediately above the Hetch Hetchy Valley along the main river, which drains directly into the proposed reservoir.

To describe it is almost beyond the power of words, but Herbert W. Gleason, the well-known traveler and lecturer of Boston, has written the following creditable description:

"The Grand Canyon of the Tuolumne River deserves to rank, in its sublime impressiveness, stupendous majesty, and rugged beauty with anything that this country affords. The Grand Canyon of the Colorado is, of course, superior in its vast extent and its brilliant coloring; yet the Tuolumne Canyon, by reason of the fact that its perpendicular walls, 4,500 to 5,000 feet in height, are as a rule less than a mile apart at their base, while the walls of the Colorado Canyon are from 10 to 15 miles apart, produces a sense of overwhelming grandeur which not even the great Arizona Canyon can give. Through the length of the canyon for 20 miles flows the Tuolumne River in a constant succession of magnificent waterfalls and cascades, some of which, though not as lofty, are more uniquely beautiful than the famous falls of the Yosemite Valley."

These features of the Yosemite National Park have been described to emphasize the fact that excepting the Yosemite Valley the Tuolumne watershed portion of the park is by far the finer and more attractive half.

The bill now before Congress provides that all garbage and refuse must be deposited more than 300 feet away from any running stream flowing into Hetch Hetchy Valley. Since there are few places in this canyon where the vertical walls are 300 feet from the river, the practical effect of this destructive bill would be to forever close to the public one of the most wonderful canyons in America.

EFFECT OF FLOODING THE HETCH HETCHY VALLEY.

The board of Army engineers who reported on this project said:

"It is admitted that the Yosemite Valley is as a whole more wonderful than the Hetch Hetchy Valley, but the floor of the latter is more diversified in its trees and flowers and of at least equal beauty. Flooding the valley would destroy this floor and the falls of the Tuolumne at the head of the valley."

G. Frederick Schwarz, a forest landscape expert, says:

"In many respects similar to the Yosemite, to which it lies nearest, it surpasses even that splendid valley in the grouping of its trees, its magnificent single specimens, its fine oak benches, meadows, and richly decorated walls."

THE UNIQUE AND STRATEGIC RELATION WHICH HETCH HETCHY VALLEY BEARS TO THE PARK AS A WHOLE.

"In traversing the northern portion of the park, owing to the mountainous and rocky nature of the country, suitable camping spots and forage grounds, especially for parties of a considerable size, are few and far between. Sometimes when a spot for the night's camp has been selected the packers are obliged to drive their animals—or allow them to wander—long distances in order to secure sufficient and suitable feed. Under these conditions Hetch Hetchy Valley, with its level floor and luxuriant meadows, is hailed as a paradise both by man and beast. It is owing to this circumstance that all the trails in the northern portion of the park center in Hetch Hetchy; and in time to come, as travel increases, it will be recognized that here is the spot above all others for a hotel to be built, not only because of the magnificence of the surrounding scenery but because here the demands of such an establishment can best be met. With Hetch Hetchy flooded, this important feature of the valley as headquarters for tourist travel will be forever lost, and there will be absolutely nothing to take its place."

ADDRESS BY COL. JORDAN ON AGRICULTURAL FINANCE (S. DOC. NO. 237).

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a document an address delivered by Hon. Harvie Jordan, of Atlanta, Ga., delivered before the General Assembly of Georgia at Atlanta, Ga.; the National Conservation Exposition at Knoxville, Tenn.; and the South Carolina State Fair, held at Columbia, S. C. Col. Jordan is a member of the United States commission and also of the American commission that investigated the subject of rural credits. The subject of his address is agricultural finance. I have an estimate of the cost of printing, and it is very moderate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the matter referred to by him be printed as a public document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS.

Mr. WEEKS presented resolutions adopted by the Central Labor Union of Boston, Mass., and resolutions adopted by Typographical Union No. 13, of Boston, Mass., favoring an investigation into the copper-mining industry in northern Michigan, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of the congregation of the Congregational Church of Agawam; of the Missionary Society of the South Congregational Church, of Springfield; and of the Woman's Guild of the Memorial Church of Springfield, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the so-called antipolygamy bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the board of directors of the Massachusetts Peace Society, praying for a suspension of the naval construction programs of the great powers, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LANE presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Commercial Association of Pendleton, Oreg., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for flood protection of the lower Mississippi River and the reclamation of its alluvial lands, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 3418) for the relief of the trustees of Mount Sinai Church, Prince George County, Va.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 3421) granting an increase of pension to Vincent Knapp (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3422) for the relief of James E. Hewey; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3423) granting a pension to Warren W. Norton;

A bill (S. 3424) granting a pension to Ira W. Arnold;

A bill (S. 3425) granting an increase of pension to David H. Hall (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 3426) granting an increase of pension to Chandler Swift (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3427) granting an increase of pension to Joseph P. Phillips (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3428) granting an increase of pension to Carrie M. Chase (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 3429) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Oregon City, Oreg.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 3430) to advance in grade certain officers of the United States Army, Navy, and Public Health Service, for their services in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 3431) to amend subchapter 1, relating to institutions of learning, and subchapter 3, relating to societies, benevolent, educational, etc., of chapter 18 of "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901; to the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 3432) granting an increase of pension to Etta M. Fleaharty; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 3433) granting pensions to Bull Snake and Old Coyote, Crow Indians (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 3434) granting a pension to Georgiana Chamberlain (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3435) granting an increase of pension to Albinia J. Pierce (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 3436) granting an increase of pension to Josephine H. Hawley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 3437) for the relief of H. Clay Howard (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 3438) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead"; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. LEWIS (by request):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) for the relief of applicants to purchase and actual bona fide purchasers of land under the terms of the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Lands.

GEORGE EDWARD LERRIGO.

Mr. THOMPSON. I introduce a bill admitting to citizenship and fully naturalizing George Edward Lerrigo, of the city of Topeka, State of Kansas, and in connection with the introduction of the bill I wish to make a statement.

The bill (S. 3419) admitting to citizenship and fully naturalizing George Edward Lerrigo, of the city of Topeka, in the State of Kansas, was read twice by its title.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I introduced a similar bill only a short time ago in this session and it was reported adversely by the Committee on Immigration, and on motion indefinitely postponed, I feel that I should say at least a few words in explanation of my act in introducing it a second time.

In the first place the committee were laboring under the impression that there was no precedent for a bill of this character. Since the action of the committee I have found that there have been at least two cases where the rights of citizenship have been conferred by special act of Congress. One is the case of Eugene Prince, of Boston, Mass. His grandfather was a native-born American citizen residing at Boston, Mass. He removed to Russia, and there the father of Eugene Prince was born, who married a Russian woman, and of that union Eugene Prince was born. Eugene Prince's father and mother never were residents of the United States. Eugene Prince came to the United States, and about a year ago, by special act of Congress, the rights of citizenship were conferred upon him.

The other is the case of Mrs. Sartoris, well known to all, the daughter of Gen. Grant, who lost her citizenship by marriage to a British subject. When she returned to America the rights of citizenship were conferred upon her by a special act of Congress.

The committee were also under the impression that Mr. Lerrigo could avail himself of the general laws of naturalization. After thorough investigation of the naturalization laws it has been shown conclusively that there is no way at all by which Mr. Lerrigo can avail himself of the general laws without giving up his position in China and returning to America and then establishing a five years' residence. Mr. Lerrigo has represented in China since 1909 the Young Men's Christian Association of America and has lost his residence in the United States, although he had lived here ever since he was 15 years of age and until receiving this appointment. We, therefore, have a young man in China doing a great Christian work in that new Republic by representing the Young Men's Christian Association of America who can not avail himself of the benefit and protection of the laws of his own country in that foreign land.

In this connection I send to the desk and desire to have read the statement of Mr. Lerrigo himself of his case, showing the situation he is in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be read upon request of the Senator from Kansas.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE CASE OF GEORGE E. LERRIGO, SEEKING NATURALIZATION BY SPECIAL ACT OF CONGRESS.

George E. Lerrigo, a white man, was born in Wellington, England, September 3, 1871.

In 1886, when George E. Lerrigo was 15 years of age, his father left England and brought his entire family to America, where they took up their residence in the State of Kansas that year.

In 1892, before coming of age, George E. Lerrigo made general inquiry to find out whether it was necessary for him to do anything to complete his citizenship. He was assured that his father's naturalization would include all members of the family.

Prior to the election in 1892 he registered as a citizen of the State of Kansas and voted at that election and at every successive State, county, and city election held in the State until 1909.

In 1899 he was married to Miss Annette Montgomery, a native-born white citizen of the State of Illinois.

From the year 1890 until the year 1909 he was general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of Topeka, Kans.

In 1909 he accepted appointment as representative of the Young Men's Christian Association of the city of Chicago and of the International Committee of North America to go out to China as a Young Men's Christian Association secretary, which he did, and resided in China in that capacity only from November, 1909, to February, 1913.

During his residence in China he continued to regard himself as an American citizen and was registered in connection with the consulates at Hongkong and Canton.

In 1911 he made application to the American consul in Hongkong for a passport to visit some of the interior provinces, and in proof of his citizenship sent for his father's papers.

When those papers arrived and he presented them at the consulate he discovered that his father had failed to take out his second papers and fully complete his naturalization as an American citizen until six weeks after the date of his (George E. Lerrigo's) majority.

Until that time he had always supposed that he was in good faith a bona fide citizen, fully naturalized, of the United States of America.

He returned to America in March, 1913, for a short furlough, which has now ended.

He returns to his work in China on the 16th of December, 1913.

On account of his absence in China it has become impossible for him to avail himself of any of the acts or amendments to such acts which have been passed for the purpose of remedying such cases, in that the law requires that he must have been continuously resident within the United States for the five years next preceding his admission as a citizen.

For more than 25 years he has supposed that he was a bona fide American citizen. All the members of his father's family and of his wife's family are American citizens.

All his sympathies and interests are centered in American civilization and he is very anxious to be a fully naturalized citizen of the United States. He is representing American interests and civilization as an American in the infant Republic of China.

He can not take advantage of any of the means of naturalization provided under the law without giving up the work which he is doing in China and becoming and remaining a resident of the United States of America for another five years.

The accident of the fault in his father's second papers not only deprives him of his citizenship, but deprives his wife of her citizenship, although she was born in America.

The only possible relief which can be given in this case is by special act of Congress.

He therefore asks Congress to take this action, which alone can complete his naturalization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill and accompanying statement will be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

IMPROVEMENT OF COLUMBIA RIVER.

Mr. LANE. I introduce a bill as a substitute for a bill (S. 3297) which I introduced a short time ago making an appropriation for the construction of a dredger to be used in the improvement of the harbor of the Columbia River. It seems that in the first instance I did not ask for enough money. I do not like to appear negligent in the matter, and I reintroduce the bill providing for an increased appropriation.

The bill (S. 3420) making an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the construction of a dredger to be used in the improvement of the harbor of the Columbia River was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

TELEPHONE SERVICE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. NORRIS. I submit a resolution, for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 214) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia be directed to supply the Senate with the following information:

First. The total number of telephones now in use by Government or District officials within the District of Columbia and paid for by appropriations of Congress.

Second. The total amount paid annually for the use of such telephones by the District of Columbia and the total amount paid annually for the use of telephones by United States Government officials.

Third. The total number of telephone exchanges in use by officials of the District of Columbia and by United States Government officials within the District of Columbia.

Fourth. Whether such exchanges were installed at the expense of the District of Columbia and at the expense of the United States Government or whether the same were installed at the expense of the telephone company.

Fifth. Whether said telephone exchanges are operated by employees of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. or whether they are operated by employees of the District of Columbia and employees of the United States Government.

Sixth. Whether under the rules and regulations adopted and enforced by the said Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. any preference is given to Members of Congress and Government officials over other users of said telephones, either in regard to the rental charged for the use of telephones or as to conditions under which the use of said telephones can be discontinued.

Seventh. By what law or statute has the said Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. been permitted to operate and carry on its business within the District of Columbia.

Eighth. A schedule of charges for the use of telephones within the District of Columbia enforced by the said Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.

Ninth. The total number of telephones now in use within the District of Columbia.

Tenth. The total capital stock of the said Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., and whether said stock, or any part thereof, is owned by other corporations.

Eleventh. How much of said capital stock was actually paid in cash. How much, if any, of said capital stock was issued at less than par, and if issued at less than par, then at what price. How much of said capital stock was issued for property other than money; and if so, what was the value of such property as compared with the par value of the stock issued for the same.

Twelfth. Whether said Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. owns the stock, in whole or in part, of other corporations; and if so, to what extent and the names of such corporations and the value of the stock so owned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my attention was diverted when the reading of the resolution commenced, and I did not hear all of it. I simply suggest, in connection with the resolution, that at the last session of Congress we created a public utilities commission for the District of Columbia, which, I apprehend, has jurisdiction over all these corporations. I know there has been more or less agitation by the citizens of the District in connection with this matter, with a view to having the public utilities commission, which is composed of most excellent men, look into all these subjects. It may be important that we go further than that. I do not know what the Senator from Nebraska proposes in the resolution, for, as I have stated, I did not hear the first part of it read.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire will yield for a moment I think I can explain the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say, to begin with, that my attention was attracted to this subject by the fact that when I came to this body the charges made for the use of telephones in the District of Columbia seemed to me to be exorbitantly high.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I have the resolution now, and I observe—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NORRIS. Since I have started, I should like to explain the resolution a little further.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. I found that upon some of the monthly rates, which must be agreed to for a year by the subscriber, the charges were over 5 cents for each call. I knew, in a general way, that the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia used a great many telephones that were paid for by the Government from appropriations made by Congress. I started out to find the number. It seemed to me it ought to be an object lesson in bookkeeping, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, for I found that there was no official who could give me the information I desired. There could have been calls made by resolution upon the heads of the different departments, which would have brought the information as to the number of telephones the Government used, the amount paid, the keeping up of the exchanges, and so forth, so far as the individual department was concerned, but it would have required a separate resolution for each department.

Then I found that there were a great many independent bureaus that were not under the head of any department, such as the Library of Congress, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Isthmian Canal Commission, and a great many others. There were also the Capitol Building, the House Office Building, the Senate Office Building, and the White House, and none of them were under the head of any department. We would not have been able to get the information, for instance, in this Capitol Building which I desired, unless we passed a resolution and asked the House of Representatives to inquire from some of its officials as to the amount they paid. I found that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations was unable to give me any information in regard to the matter and had nothing in his office from which he could furnish such information, because the appropriations were made in lump sums, and because out of the same appropriations items other than those for the use of telephones were paid.

I was unable to find any statute that gave to the telephone company the right to operate in the District of Columbia. I took up the question with the District Commissioners and finally drew the resolution which I have introduced calling upon the public utilities commission for the information.

Under the law we passed in the last session of Congress providing for the establishment of the body known as the public utilities commission this commission has a right to examine the books of all corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and can get all the information I have asked for in the resolution.

I found that this corporation, the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., for instance, which operates the telephone system in the District of Columbia, was a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York; that every share of its stock was owned by another corporation, which was organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and that all the shares of that corporation were owned by another corporation organized under the laws of some other State. Then, coming back to this corporation operating in the District of Columbia, it in turn owned all the stock of another corporation that was operating the telephone system in the State of Virginia; that it directly operated another telephone system in the State of West Virginia; and that, when it was formed, it took over property belonging to another corporation in the State of Maryland that was operating the telephone exchange of the city of Baltimore. So there was a maze of corporations that seemed to becloud the issue, and it seemed to me, if we wanted to get a full disclosure of the facts as to whether the rates charged are exorbitant, that the place to go is to the public utilities commission, which has the right to summon any officer of any corporation doing business in the District of Columbia or to send its own employees to make an examination of the books of such corporation.

If there are no further questions, Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be put upon its passage.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would not have made any observation had I heard the resolution read from the beginning. My attention was diverted by other Senators when the reading of the resolution was commenced. I observe that this is a call upon the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to furnish this information. I think they ought to take up the matter without being instructed by Congress, but if they do not choose to do so I see no objection to the resolution.

In the reading there is one phrase that attracted my attention, and that is that inquiry is to be made whether preference is given to Members of Congress by this corporation.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir; that is one of the inquiries.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume everybody knows that no preference is given to Members of Congress by this or any other corporation. Under the statutes it would be a criminal offense to do so. Those of us who use telephones know that we pay the usual rental for them; and yet, if the Senator desires that phraseology to remain in the resolution, I shall not object; but we seem to be constantly investigating ourselves.

Mr. NORRIS. Right on that point, I think, the Senator, when the investigation is made, will have to recall his statement. I believe he will find that he is mistaken, and that there is a preference given under the rules and regulations of the corporation to Members of Congress and some other high officials of the Government. I understand that it is one of the rules and regulations of this telephone corporation now doing business in the District of Columbia—that a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives and some other Government officials entering into a contract the same as any other individual, renting a telephone for a year, to be placed in his house or in his apartment, will have the privilege at any time he sees fit of discontinuing the service.

The telephone will then be taken out and he will be charged only for the time that he has actually used it. I am not complaining of the regulation; but if he is not some high Government official, if he is an ordinary citizen, if he has no voice in legislation either in this body or in the other House, he will not be able to get that kind of a concession; he will not be able to have his contract canceled; he will have to pay for at least one year, according to the statement contained in the contract; in other words, according to the bond.

I myself believe, Mr. President, that in effect that is a discrimination, that it is not fair, and that whatever rule or regulation is provided for a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives ought to apply to the most humble citizen in the District who wants telephone service. That was the object of that part of the resolution. If the investigation shows that I am mistaken, I would be very glad to have that fact developed.

Mr. GALLINGER. All I know about the matter, Mr. President, is that I am paying for telephone service in the District of Columbia about twice the rental I pay in my own home city. I had supposed that I was paying as much as anybody else in the District of Columbia; I hope so.

If there is a discrimination as to the length of time telephones may be used by men in public life and by the average citizen, I think myself that is a matter that might well be inquired into. I did not read the resolution to cover particularly that point, as it refers to the rentals which we are paying. However, as the Senator suggests, that matter will be investigated by the commission under the resolution, and I do not object at all to its passage.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah for a question.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not believe that it is proper that men who do not live permanently in the District, but who come here to attend Congress, and especially during a short session, when they are here only until the 4th of March, should not be compelled to pay a full year's rental for a telephone?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the question is a very proper one, but the same privilege should be accorded to the man who comes here to labor in the streets just as it is to a Senator of the United States. The rule does now apply to a Senator; but if a man comes here for a temporary purpose, for instance, if he should come here as an ordinary laborer and should put a telephone in his house or in his apartment and his labor should cease at the end of three months, he would be compelled to pay for that telephone for a year, while if he were a Senator he would notify the company, and they would discontinue the telephone service at once. So far as I know, the charges paid are the same; but it seems to me that it is just as bad, by rule or regulation, to give a preference to me as to the time that I may rent my telephone as it would be to give me a rebate on the price, for, in fact, it is a rebate on the price.

I have inquired of individuals who are not in the Government employ, who are not Members of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, and who have had experience, and I have never found a case where they were not compelled to pay for the entire year.

For fear there may be some misconception in regard to this proposed investigation because of one remark made by the Senator from New Hampshire, that the commission has the power to investigate and that perhaps the resolution is unnecessary, I wish to say that I have all the faith in the world in the public utilities commission. They are doing a great deal of good work. I thought, however, that this resolution would call their particular attention to the matter and would give them specific authority in addition to the general one. I consulted with them, I will say, before I introduced the resolution, and I am satisfied that they will do their full duty. It seems to me there can be no possible objection to eliciting the information, which may be a basis for any rule that the commission may adopt in regard to the regulation of the telephone service or a basis for any legislation that Congress may see fit to enact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MINING CLAIMS ON SEWARD PENINSULA, ALASKA.

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on Mines and Mining, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3397) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to mining claims, and I submit a report (No. 129) thereon. The matter being urgent, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not intend to oppose the immediate consideration of the bill. In fact, I intend to say just one or two words in support of it, as I had the honor of introducing the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate? We can not hear a word the Senator from Nevada is saying.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Secretary read the title of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3397) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to mining claims.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this bill, which I introduced, has been reported favorably from the Committee on Mines and Mining. It is simply a copy of a bill that was passed in 1892, relieving the miners of the necessity of doing the annual assessment work on mining claims for the year 1893, with the exception that this bill applies solely to the Seward Peninsula in Alaska.

I will state the reason for the passage of the bill. There has been a great catastrophe at Nome, Alaska. A storm destroyed a number of warehouses; and the storm was followed by fire, which also destroyed a number of warehouses and foodstuffs.

The conditions on the Seward Peninsula with regard to doing the annual assessment work are different from those anywhere else in the United States. There it is necessary to wait until the snow falls before the prospectors can transport their tools and provisions to the places where the assessment work is to be done. These creeks lie all the way from 100 to 200 or 300 miles away from Nome, which is the center of habitation. The prospectors wait until the snow falls, in October or November, to do this work. The storm and the fire have not only destroyed a large amount of the provisions in Nome but they have made destitute a great many people who ordinarily would have this service to perform.

I therefore think it is but reasonable that, so far as concerns mining claims situated on the Seward Peninsula, the assessment work for the year 1913 should be remitted. That is all the bill provides for.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be ordered at the proper time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Before the bill is read, I ask permission to interrupt long enough to inquire whether this is not the very neighborhood or place where such a catastrophe happened that an appropriation was made here the other day to aid the people there?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is the same place.

Mr. LANE. Before the bill is read, I wish to say that I am familiar with conditions in that part of the country. The conditions there at this time are very grave, and they are certainly exceptional. I think the relief asked for ought to be granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill (S. 3397) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to mining claims.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires that on each claim located after the 10th day of May, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, be suspended for the year 1913 as to mining claims situated on Seward Peninsula, in the District or Territory of Alaska west of longitude 158 west and north of latitude 64, so that no mining claim which has been regularly located and recorded as required by the local laws and mining regulations within such area so described shall be subject to forfeiture for nonperformance of the annual assessment for the year 1913: Provided, That the claimant or claimants of any mining location in order to secure the benefits of this act shall cause to be recorded in the office where the location notice and certificate is filed on or before December 31, 1913, a notice that he, she, or they in good faith intend to hold or work said claim: And provided further, That this amendment shall in no way annul, modify, or repeal said section as to any mining claims, either in the District of Alaska or elsewhere, except those said mining claims within the area herein particularly described.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I do not object to the present consideration of the bill, but I wish to make a statement in regard to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Nevada to the fact that the bill relieves every man, whether as a result of his own laches or otherwise, who has failed to make $100 worth of improvements upon his claim during the year 1913. Undoubtedly both Senators have considered that matter and are fully satisfied; but it occurs to me that the bill relieves those who have not been industrious as well as those who are industrious, and relieves those who had abundant opportunity and abundant means to do the required work up to the time of the storm mentioned and the difficulties that arose through the elements. It relieves all of them, whether they have been themselves to blame or not. I wanted to be sure that the Senators understood the situation.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is undoubtedly true, Mr. President, and if there were any practical method by which they could be segregated, we might try to accomplish it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can suggest only one thing to the Senator. The bill is new to me. I had never looked it over until I heard it read from the desk. But if in the certificate which is required to be filed by the entryman he should include something that would show, either by his own affidavit or by other proof, that up to the time of the passage of the bill he was unable by force of circumstances to complete his proof it might remedy the matter in some particulars. I do not know, however, but that it would be so cumbersome that it would defeat the whole operation of the bill, and that I do not desire.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to say that the pending bill is not to relieve anyone from a forfeiture. There has been no forfeiture as yet. The men have until the 1st day of January to commence the work. The object is to relieve them of an additional hardship, the community having already suffered such a terrific hardship that it becomes necessary for the Government to render them assistance.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator is undoubtedly correct in his statement. If I used the word "forfeiture" I did not intend to use it.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; the Senator did not use it. I interpolated it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In effect it relieves everyone who has held a mining claim in that district during the last year from putting upon it the $100 worth of work that the statute requires. It makes no difference whether the $100 worth of work has been prevented by the circumstances the Senator has detailed or whether the lack of it has been due to the negligence, the laches, and the carelessness of the entryman. That is what I wanted to call attention to.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true, but there are peculiar conditions existing on Seward Peninsula, with which I am personally familiar, having lived there for two winters.

Practically all of the miners in that peninsula, no matter where they own their claims—it may be that they are located two or three hundred miles away from there—make Nome their headquarters. They live there. They obtain their provisions there. They depend upon that center for their supplies. The wealthy men of Nome and the Seward Peninsula rarely spend their winters there. They are in San Francisco or Seattle or some other place in the United States. The three or four thousand men left in Nome this winter are the miners who are compelled to live there, as a general thing, by reason of their poverty.

While there may be in Nome to-day certain men who are financially able to do their annual assessment work, there are hundreds and hundreds of them who have hardly clothes to cover them or provisions for one day. From what I know of those people the men who have the means and have the clothes are undoubtedly dividing what they have with those who have none.

Inasmuch as the object of the assessment law was only to show good intentions, to show a bona fide intention to develop a property, I think we should not try to amend the bill so as to compel a man to testify that he is a pauper to enable him to get the benefits of it. I think it is a great, humane thing to say to the people in that vicinity, who have already suffered so greatly, "We will not compel you to suffer additional hardships, and we will not impose upon you the necessity of swearing that you are paupers."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The last statement of the Senator makes no impression whatever upon my mind. I am in favor of the passage of the bill, but I suggested what I thought might be an evil result from it.

In reference to the Senator's last statement, my impression always has been that this assessment work was done at the season which is most favorable for assessment work, which in Alaska, as I understand—and I must be pardoned for this statement if it is incorrect—is in the summer time.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I must correct the Senator in that respect. It would be thought that that would be true, that the weather conditions in the summer time would be favorable; but it is not the case, for the reason I shall state.

In the summer time everything in Alaska is saturated with water. There are very few horses in that country, and traveling in the summer is almost impossible on account of the water. Another thing: The method of prospecting a creek in Alaska is to sink to bedrock to see whether or not it contains gold. That is the character of work they do as annual assessment work. You can not sink to bedrock on a creek in the summer time unless you have a pump with you and pump it out, and the chances are that no pump you could furnish would do it. Therefore, as I said before, the time of the year that is used for doing annual assessment work and prospecting a claim is the winter-time.

Everyone uses sleds and dog teams up in that country. They can haul their provisions over the snow a hundred miles where they could not pack them on their backs 5 miles. So they wait until the wintertime, and they haul the provisions to the place they want to prospect. The ground is frozen hard. There is no running water. They pick the sagebrush and the willows around there, they melt the gravel, they thaw to bedrock, and by that assessment work they determine whether the claim is of sufficient value to justify draining it in the summer time and mining it in the ordinary course.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator's statement is informing. I was unaware of the situation, and, as I say, I am in favor of the bill. When I first rose I simply wished to point out that I thought perhaps by a little care some evil results might be avoided. I hope none will follow.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask, in a word, what the bill purports to do. I have been unable to find out specifically the object of the bill. Is it to relieve these people from making proof of their assessments?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is to relieve them from doing the work.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is to relieve the claim owners on the Seward Peninsula, who practically all live in Nome, from the necessity of doing their assessment work for the year 1913.

Mr. BORAH. Is that all the bill purports to do?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all the bill purports to do.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that the bill does not provide any way of notifying the entrymen of its passage. Does the Senator think they live in a sufficiently small space of country so that all will be notified and will be able to take advantage of the provisions of the bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say, from the telegrams I have received from various parts of Alaska, that they are watching and waiting for the passage of this relief measure, and there is not a man in Alaska who will require any notification after the bill passes.

Mr. SMOOT. I wanted to be sure about that. I am in favor of the bill, and think it ought to pass; but I did not want it to pass in such shape that next year we will have perhaps a hundred or more people coming here and saying they knew nothing about its passage and asking special acts of Congress for their particular relief.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator's question is very pertinent, but that is the fact concerning it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS BY MR. GEORGE WHEELER HINMAN (S. DOC. NO. 236).

Mr. LEWIS. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address by Mr. George Wheeler Hinman upon taking his seat as president of Marietta College, Marietta, Ohio, in which he sets forth what he feels to be the duties of colleges in their cooperation with legislative bodies in this country.

Mr. BACON. I do not like to object, Mr. President, but I do think the RECORD ought to be limited to utterances in this Chamber. If the Senator wishes to publish it as a document, I have no objection; but I do not think everything which may possess merit, however meritorious it may be, should find a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That is not the function of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The function of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is to narrate what occurs here.

If the Senator in making a speech makes it a part of his remarks, that is a different matter; but you can at once see the extent to which this may be carried. Hardly a day passes without the eye of each Senator falling upon something which he thinks worthy of preservation, and which probably he takes some little step to preserve, but not in the RECORD.

Mr. LEWIS. I concur with the able Senator from Georgia in what we have all observed, that the RECORD has been lumbered a great deal with wholly extraneous matters. Since, however, matters similar to this have been constantly put in the RECORD, and matters which in my judgment were not half so worthy, as suggested by the able Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and as the address relates to the duty of colleges to cooperate with the United States Senate and the House of Representatives in matters touching the legislation of the country, and advises the colleges to get in closer touch with the legislative bodies to avoid the prejudice which so generally prevails against legislative bodies for lack of general information, I assumed it would not be impertinent.

If it is the desire of the Senator from Georgia to make objection now as to all other matter in the future that does not consist of addresses delivered in this Chamber, I am willing to have my particular matter the initial one. But if the distinguished Senator from Georgia wishes to object merely to this particular matter, and in the future to allow the insertion of similar matter from other sources and other Senators, then I am unable to see the wisdom of the discrimination.

Mr. BACON. The honorable Senator is entirely mistaken when he speaks of it as an initial objection. The objection has been urged very insistently and persistently for a long number of years in this Chamber, and in very rare instances have those objections been surmounted and outside articles published in the RECORD.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course I take the word of the able Senator from Georgia from his long experience here as to the practice in this Chamber, and under no circumstances would I myself wish to visit an infraction upon it.

I will therefore adopt his suggestion and ask unanimous consent that the matter be printed as a public document, in order that I may not incidentally or accidentally violate any of the rules respecting publication in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Illinois has taken that course. I was very much disposed this morning to object to two or three different articles that were by unanimous consent inserted in the RECORD, one of them being a communication on the currency question. My table is loaded down with communications of that kind, and I have never thought of asking that any of them should be inserted in the RECORD. I think there were two other matters inserted in the RECORD that were extraneous.

I very heartily concur in the view that the Senator from Georgia has so well expressed—that we ought, on both sides of the Chamber, to agree to exclude all such matter from the RECORD. It is becoming a very cumbersome publication, and it ought to be confined, as the Senator says, so far as possible, to the utterances in the Chamber and not to speeches that are made outside or to communications on public questions from great varieties of people, most of whom know as little about the currency question as I do, and that is not very much.

So I am gratified that the Senator from Illinois, with his usual kindness and courtesy, has consented to have this article published as a document. I trust the Senator from Georgia, who is charged more particularly with matters of legislation now than we on this side are, will enforce his objection, and I shall be glad to cooperate with him in doing so in the future.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope I may not be put in the position, by the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, that I have any individual obligation or duty to discharge in this matter. I think it is one common to us all, and I certainly would not assume any higher obligation or duty in that matter than any other Senator.

I wish to say simply one word further. It appears from what the Senator from New Hampshire has said that there have been other articles introduced into the RECORD this morning. I wish to say, in justification to myself, that when I made the objection to the insertion of the article proposed by the Senator from Illinois I was not aware of that fact. I should have objected to them in the same way. I would not have the Senator from Illinois think that I had assented by my silence to the introduction of other extraneous matter and had then objected to what he proposed. I do not think that anything in the nature of an outside utterance in the way of a speech, magazine article, or anything else ought to be introduced into the RECORD unless it is in connection with some Senator's remarks, and then it is always permissible.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it was the fact that this morning other articles were presented and received for publication, to which I alluded when I referred to what I thought was a discriminating objection on the part of the Senator from Georgia; and I accept his own statement that of those other matters he had no knowledge.

Responding to the Senator from New Hampshire, I desire to say to that able Senator that this article does not relate to currency, if that was his opinion. It relates to the general subject of the ethics and the duties of colleges to cooperate with legislative bodies.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a very important subject.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator from Idaho wish to interpose?

Mr. BORAH. I simply desire to know what rule it is that has been laid down here this morning.

Mr. LEWIS. I will answer the Senator from Idaho by saying that I offered the address of the newly installed president of Marietta College, Ohio, where he made as his subject the duty of colleges to cooperate with legislative bodies in this country. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] objected upon the ground that he feels that no matter should go in the RECORD save matter expressed on this floor. I urged that I thought that was a new kind of objection; that I had not heard it urged against similar articles presented and which had been accepted for publication in the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. I think the rule perhaps is a wise one, but it is one that is constantly and persistently and universally violated. If it is going to be enforced, well and good; but there is no reason in the world why this article shall go out in view of the record which we have. We have cows in the RECORD and all other kinds of exhibitions.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I close the subject by saying that I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, by having the address made a public document rather than embarrass the RECORD by any innovation of the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois withdraws his first request—that the article be printed in the RECORD—and asks unanimous consent that it be printed as a public document. Is there objection? In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

CARTOONS IN SENATOR TILLMAN'S RETROSPECT OF 18 YEARS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, some three weeks ago I gave notice that I would bring up the question of a reconsideration of printing in the permanent RECORD the allegorical cows of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I have talked with the Senator a number of times on this question. He seems to feel that since the Senate has once given consent it would be rather an improper thing to ask for a reconsideration of the matter.

I wish to say that if it was any other Senator in this body I would still adhere to my original notice, and I would ask for a reconsideration of the order, and if necessary seek by a vote of the Senate to preclude it from being published in the permanent RECORD. But, Mr. President, as the Senate has ordered it once, and as the Senator from South Carolina feels a personal interest in the matter, I have decided that I would not press a reconsideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to remark that this emphasizes the necessity of our being very careful about giving unanimous consent. I will suggest to the Senator from Utah that my impression is that we could not well reconsider a unanimous consent. The matter is in the RECORD; I think it was unfortunate to have it printed in the RECORD; but I have an impression that it is there to remain.

Mr. SMOOT. I think, of course, that it could be excluded from the permanent RECORD by unanimous consent. But I want to express the thought I expressed before, that such cartoons ought never to be allowed to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. One of the able Senators on the other side expressed himself on the subject by saying that in a hundred years from now somebody perhaps would be looking over the RECORD and run across those cartoons and say: "That was the standard of the United States Senate in the year 1913."

Mr. President, I shall say nothing further about it. The chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing has held up the work on the preparation of the permanent RECORD until the question I raised might be settled. I will give notice to him now that I intend to bring the question no further to the attention of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether the Committee on Privileges and Elections has yet made a report upon Senate bill 2800. I see the chairman of the committee is here. I have not been in conference with that Senator to ascertain whether the matter has been reported from the committee or not. I will say in explanation that it is a bill providing an emergency measure for the election of United States Senators.

Mr. KERN. I will say to the Senator that the bill has not yet been reported, but that a meeting of the committee will be held early next week, when I think a report will be made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to say in this connection, Mr. President, that there might have been some possible reason pending the senatorial election in Maryland for delaying a report, as it might have complicated the situation there, but there can not be any reason whatever for further delay. In a great many States the senatorial elections of next year are now being discussed and preparation is being made for the campaign. Of course there is a great desire in those States to know exactly how the nominations are going to be made and how the elections are going to be held, and there is considerable anxiety as to some action upon the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, November 17, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 13, 1913.

MINISTER.

Alexander Sweek, of Oregon, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Siam, vice Fred W. Carpenter, resigned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, November 13, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite spirit, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee for that strange, mysterious, subtle quality of soul we call love, which suffereth long and is kind, envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, which binds us together into families, friendships, and nations. Increase, we beseech Thee, its potency and influence, till the whole world as one great family shall worship Thee in spirit and in truth, that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of foreign and domestic commerce and to make certain insertions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT IN DELAWARE.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, by unanimous consent, I was granted leave to address the House to-day upon the subject of corporal punishment in Delaware, and to make reply to certain statements in a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS]. The statements contained in the preamble of that resolution are false.

Delaware did not inflict cruel and unusual punishment upon the two men therein mentioned, and does not inflict cruel and unusual punishment upon anyone. I find that in order to discuss the question of corporal punishment it will take much more than the 10 minutes that I was granted. I therefore ask unanimous consent that to-morrow I may be permitted to address the House for one hour upon the subject of corporal punishment in Delaware, the speech to be made immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the transaction of routine business, he be permitted to address the House for one hour upon the subject of corporal punishment in the State of Delaware. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL HOLIDAY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I was very much gratified by the display of interest manifested on both sides of the House when a few days ago I submitted to Congress a resolution which I now desire to read:

House resolution 298.

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House of Representatives the declaration of the Lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain, the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, that the Government of the United Kingdom is willing and ready to cooperate with other governments to secure for one year a suspension of naval construction programs offers the means of immediately lessening the enormous burdens of the people and avoiding the waste of investment in war material.

That a copy of this resolution be furnished the President, with the request that, so far as he can do so, having due regard for the interests of the United States, he use his influence to consummate the agreement suggested by the Right Hon. Winston Churchill.

I appreciate the many things said in support of this resolution by the distinguished Speaker of the House, and also by the other distinguished gentlemen who spoke briefly but clearly upon the subject. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority leader, was cordial in his support of the resolution, as were also the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson].

If Congress passes this resolution, as I truly hope and believe it will, it means that we recognize the wisdom of the proposal made by the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain, to take a naval holiday for one year; that we believe he is acting in good faith, with a high sense of duty, and for the good of humanity; that we believe the proposition is practicable and feasible; that it is based upon common sense and common honesty among nations; and that we are now ready to join the other great nations of the world in a compact, in an understanding, whereby we may take a naval holiday for one year's time, thereby saving hundreds of millions of money, to be used for purposes more beneficial to mankind.

If the suspicion and distrust which prompt the present huge armaments, with their galling financial burdens, are justified by the facts, then civilization is a thin veneer and we are still savages at heart. But it is easier to believe that this is unjustified, and that if we would be governed by our judgment rather than by our fears, show some sincerity ourselves, the tension would be relieved and the armament question would solve itself. Mr. Jefferson said:

War is not the best engine for us to resort to. Nature has given us one in our commerce, which, if properly managed, will be a better instrument for obliging the interested nations of Europe to treat us with justice.

Now let us consult Mr. Churchill and ascertain what his position is on this important subject. In a great speech made at Manchester, England, only last month, he said, among other things—

That the trusted liberal supporters were becoming disquieted in their minds about the expense we are being put to by naval armaments.

In that connection he explains that they are forced to spend more than one-third of the national revenue of Great Britain upon armaments. He said:

That expense has markedly advanced of late years, and it is now higher than the highest point it has ever reached. Next year it will be higher still.

I am sure this is true; and what applies to Great Britain applies with equal force and effect to this and every other nation of the world, for I can take the record and show you that in something like 12 years, beginning 1897, we increased the appropriations for the Navy Department of this Government from approximately $30,000,000 to something over $130,000,000. The question therefore arises in my mind and must occur to you, When are we going to reach the end? How long shall we continue making increases at the rate of $10,000,000, $20,000,000, and $30,000,000 per year for one department of our Government? No wonder the total of the appropriations of our Government has reached the enormous sum of over one thousand millions of dollars. And continuing, Mr. Churchill argues "that this is not borne, to any great extent, by the laboring people of that country." That is because of the income tax, as I see it.

Mr. Speaker, I was heartily in favor of the income-tax law recently enacted by Congress, because I believed then, as I believe now, that the wealth of the country should be compelled to respond to the needs of government by bearing the proper tax burden, with a corresponding relief to others. I believe that when this law becomes thoroughly engrained upon our system of government we will find these individuals "sitting up and taking notice," as the expression goes, when we increase their tax burdens by great appropriations to meet the demands of those who now insist upon large increases annually for armaments. They will be inquiring of their Representatives in Congress. Why the need for these tremendous increases? I therefore, Mr. Speaker, was and am an enthusiastic supporter of the income tax.

Further on in his speech Mr. Churchill says:

We seemed to have reached a point when the relations of the great powers to each other, however intimate, however amicable they may become, produce no effect on warlike preparations. Italy and Austria, although they are allied, bound together by a solemn instrument for the purpose of defense and offense, are, in fact, according to all information available, likely to embark on large new naval programs balanced against each other.

He says:

That each of these countries will build three or four enormous ships, costing perhaps £10,000,000 of money to each country, and this, in turn, will probably force France to make a further large increase and to a certain extent this would require Great Britain to respond with some additions. None of them will have gained any advantage over the other, but all will have suffered the prodigious drain of wealth which can ill be spared.

Again, he says:

The fact that the triple alliance was building no ships would make it possible without the slightest danger or risk for the other three great European powers to do the same. Does it not seem likely that if such a great event, such a glorious and memorable event, ever came to pass it would produce an effect upon the naval construction of the United States, and that, again, would produce its repercussion upon the naval policy of Japan?

I can not understand how anyone can doubt this.

Mr. Speaker, let us not be a laggard in this great movement, which means so much to our people, which means so much to mankind the world over, and which means so much to generations yet unborn. Let us send a ringing reply to Great Britain and to the other nations of the world which can not be doubted or misunderstood that we, with fondest hopes, with absolute trust, seize this golden opportunity to put into force and effect the greatest reform of the age [applause], not only to the present generation, not only to mankind the world over, but also render a Christian service to generations yet unborn. [Applause.] The time is propitious beyond doubt. For it is my opinion, when this understanding or agreement has been entered into by and between these great powers, when we see the consummation of this plan to take a naval holiday for the space of one year, it will sound the death knell to reckless, wanton, nonsensical, and almost criminal waste of the people's money in the way of appropriations of this character. What more does Mr. Churchill say?

And so at the end of a year you might have all these great countries just as safe and just as strong as they will be if they build all the ships they have in mind at the present time, and a vast treasure of many millions, of scores of millions, will have been arrested for the progress and enlightenment of mankind. That is the proposal which I make for the year 1914, or if it is thought that 1914 is too near, then for 1915. I am quite impervious to the objections which will no doubt be raised by the great armament firms in this and other countries. They must be the servants and not the masters.

At that point the Englishmen cheered. So you see, Mr. Speaker, the First Lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain is "onto his job," as the boys express it. He is not unmindful of the fact that there are tremendous influences behind the armament proposition, there as elsewhere, and that they will be marshaled against the furtherance of this plan. He realizes that this influence will be employed in every way that powerful interested persons can devise; that strong individuals, ingenious individuals, will try to prevent the consummation of this glorious thought put forward by him on some two or three occasions. He realizes that we have reached a point in the history of nations where "patriotism" and "public safety" are mere catchwords, "sounding brass or tinkling cymbals," which are invoked periodically by vested interests in their desperation in carrying out their planned system that is sapping the very lifeblood of the nations. Oh patriotism! patriotism! how long will this sacred term be employed to further the interests of the selfish? In this connection I desire to submit some figures showing to just what extent the nations of the world have yielded to these influences within the past 12 years:

Naval expenditures of different European countries and the United States in 1900 and 1912.

	1900	1912	Increase.
Great Britain.....	$145,792,850	$228,430,064	$82,637,214
Germany.....	37,173,074	110,715,043	73,541,969
France.....	72,683,180	89,028,626	16,345,446
Russia.....	42,101,212	109,515,000	67,413,788
Italy.....	28,829,206	41,893,420	13,064,214
Japan.....	21,373,954	46,158,216	24,884,262
United States.....	61,721,695	123,151,539	61,429,844

Our item of expense does not include certain other expenditures for 1912, which makes the aggregate over $140,000,000.

Naval expenditures in 1898 and 1910.

	1898	1910
United States.....	$33,003,234.19	$136,935,199.05

So you see that, aside from the enormous sums which go to the Army, if we continue increasing our appropriations it will not be long until we, too, will be appropriating more than one-third of the total revenue for huge armaments.

Now let us continue. Mr. Churchill says:

That no doubt there are many in both countries that will pour ridicule upon the proposal which I make. They will try to involve it in clouds of suspicion and suggest that there is some trick lurking behind what looks like a fair offer, and who will blame me in unstinted terms for having referred to such subjects at all. Let them mock.

So you see he has this subject well in hand, his heart is right, and he has employed his great talent in an effort to serve mankind. We have influences to contend with here, but they are nothing, I take it, in comparison with the influences which will be marshaled against this movement in the older countries of the world. These influences are powerful enough here, God knows; but my information upon the subject is to the effect that the Krupp interests of Germany, to a very large extent, control the press of that country, and that they, together with other powerful interested individuals, form a combination which will require a great struggle on the part of the people to rid themselves of the octopus. But the latest dispatches from Germany indicate that the people are taking a hand in these matters and that some of the persons mixed up in the scandals are being prosecuted and convicted. So you can see that the people are in earnest in Germany, and that while these interests are against this proposition the people are in favor of a naval holiday. The people who have the burden to carry are strong in support of this movement. Why should they not be when it is said that every producer of wealth, let him be farmer, laborer, or whatnot, has fastened upon him the expense and burden of keeping up a soldier? In other words, "each taxpayer carries on his back a military gentleman." Mr. Churchill said that these powerful interests opposed to this proposition are the servants and not the masters. Now let me ask you, Have you at any time observed actions on the part of representatives of certain departments of our Government which indicated that they believed the department was the master and the Nation the servant? Have you? I say to you that these departments, however much some individuals may think they are masters, are not. They are the servants, and the millions of taxpayers of this land who constitute this Nation, who produce the wealth, who pay the taxes, who fight its battles, are the masters.

Let me relate to you a story which I heard only a few days ago, and it came from a gentleman very close to the Navy Department. He said that some few years ago an ex-Secretary of the Navy was at one of the hotels here in Washington conversing with several friends, his relations as Secretary having been severed only a few days previous to this. The distinguished gentleman looked somewhat dejected and cast down, and in the course of the conversation he straightened up and uttered an oath, declaring that he had seen times when he felt like tearing loose from the influences which surrounded him as Secretary and asserting his opinion as to what should be done in the way of bringing about reforms in the department and no longer be controlled by those who surrounded him; but he concluded "that had I done this, I would have come out second best in the mêlée." Tell me that these influences do not exist here. I submit this in all candor for what it may be worth to others who may follow in this high position.

Last year when the naval appropriation bill was pending I called the attention of Congress to the existence of the naval league and its activities. Among other things I pointed out to Members on both sides of the House, because there is no political division on this question, that J. P. Morgan, jr., was treasurer of this association. My attention has recently been called to the fact that, on account of this publicity quite likely, he is no longer an officer of the league. Now, what is the navy league and for what purpose was it created? I am advised that it is sending retired naval officers all over the country to make speeches before boards of trade and other business associations for the purpose of creating and fostering a stronger sentiment in favor of increased armaments, better preparedness as they put it. And yet will you say that they are not attempting to be masters? How many times have Members of Congress, especially Members of the Naval Affairs Committee, the chairman not excepted, been put up against embarrassing situations in this connection by being lectured and rallied at by individuals interested directly in naval appropriations? These things are not secrets. I am not violating any confidence or betraying a trust when I call your attention to these performances.

Why, Mr. Chief Justice Brewer in his last days spoke out against this situation; he felt it then as we feel it now, removed even though he was by reason of his high position. Some of them go so far as to tell us to what extent we should increase the appropriations. They are so numerous here in this great city when the society season is on that you can not throw a stone without endangering a naval man or a military gentleman, retired or otherwise. What did Mr. Chief Justice Brewer say about them and "preparedness"? He said:

The maintenance of 700 and more military and naval officers, active and retired, now living with their families in Washington, these, connected as they are with the military and naval forces, are gradually transforming the Capital of the country into a military and naval center, and their influence is constantly pressing upon Congress for continued development and increased expenditures in military and naval lines.

He would never have spoken out in such unmistakable terms if he had not felt it were absolutely necessary. The fathers of our country warned us against this very situation which he now tells us exists. He was criticized as Mr. Churchill has been criticized, and as I have been and will be criticized. Let them mock! They and their kind have always been present. These influences have had little to do with founding this Government or preserving our liberties. They have been and are vampires upon the body politic. They are a menace instead of a support to our Government.

Mr. Speaker, in this connection I desire to read the following, which indicates the reason these influences advocate war and large armaments:

THE GOD OF WAR.

"To safeguard peace, we must prepare for war." I know that maxim; it was forged in hell.

This wealth of ships and guns inflames the vulgar and makes the very war it guards against.

The God of War is now a man of business, with vested interests.

That is the proposition. [Applause.]

If I have read the history of my country aright, if I know anything about the doctrine preached by the fathers of our country with reference to the baneful effects to follow when the military reaches the ascendancy, I am warranted in saying that it will be a sad day for this Republic when the heads of these departments are permitted to lay down the policy of this country in time of peace. I am not depreciating them, we need them; but they are the servants, not the masters. The country does not exist for the glory of the departments, but rather the departments exist for the glory of the country. [Applause.] They understand the technique of war and all that, but we would not risk them in telling us how large the machine should be, for you may search history in vain to find an instance when they have not clamored for more power. The shame of it all, when they must know that away back in some remote section of the country, perhaps, is a fellow citizen who can not come to Washington, see and logroll with Members of Congress upon these questions, but who, in the language of the Good Book, "is eating his bread in the sweat of his face," and in addition is producing the breadstuff that feeds us all; but it is our duty to be ever mindful of his interest, whether he comes here or not. They insist upon being prepared. Preparedness is the way they express it. I have witnessed many a sad scene in the court rooms of the country where the near and dear ones of a poor unfortunate individual who was on trial for crime were grieved and heartbroken because of the prisoner's plight, all due to the fact that he had previously been in a state of "preparedness." I have seen too many tragedies of this kind, where my heart has gone out to the poor unfortunate ones, for me to advocate a "state of preparedness" upon the part of individuals; and I say to you, my friends, that what is true of individuals is true of nations, for what are communities and nations but the sum total of many individuals? They argue that all this is for the glory of the country; that it is patriotism that prompts it. I resent the imputation that one class of citizens are more patriotic than another class. I say, I believe, Mr. Speaker, it requires as much patriotism and love for country, as much courage and genuine manhood, for one to be a good citizen every day of the year and throughout life, to safeguard our liberties and to vouchsafe those liberties to those who will soon follow us, as it does to shoulder a musket and go out along the firing line—

Mr. GEORGE. More.

Mr. HENSLEY. Especially when the latter is a professional and the former a patient, uncomplaining producer of wealth, and, in addition, stands ready to respond at any time when his country calls him to arms. [Applause.] We can never gratify the greed and avarice of these individuals; neither is it our duty to satisfy them. We can not hope by legislation to gratify the wild-eyed extravagance of those who measure all political wisdom by the magnitude of the fund to be squandered. It is a great big yawning, gaping chasm, which can never be filled. The more you pour into it the larger it gets, the stronger and more insolent and impudent it becomes when it returns for more money. Why the need of all this? Is it for the purpose of having us rely upon our armaments, our Navy and our military strength, for peace and security among nations, instead of relying upon those God-given traits and graces that distinguish men from the brute generation? As the Speaker has so well put it, our Nation has been equal to every emergency from its infancy on down through its whole history to this good day. From the time it was in its swaddling clothes, only a handful of people, with no wealth to speak of, excepting the untouched resources of this great country, we have held our own and have gotten along nicely; and now when we are nearly 100,000,000 strong, men of patriotism and love for country, with our billions of wealth, we appear to be alarmed and want to continue arming ourselves for wars—wars such as a few fevered-minded individuals, who appear to be obsessed upon this question, imagine they can see down the long vista of the ever-uncertain future. Our people do not feel that way. We do not want strife with people individually or collectively. Let me know the traits and dispositions of a people, and I will come pretty near knowing what the nation stands for. Some there are who contend that preparedness and the ability to exercise force is calculated to protect or ward off danger. I say it provokes, it aggravates, it incites difficulty. Listen: let me tell you something. I can start out of this Hall of Congress with a brace of pistols upon me, with an exaggerated idea of my rights because I have the weapons, and I can go down the streets of this city and into the places of business and in dealing with the people insist upon everybody respecting my rights according to my views of what my rights are, based upon the weapons I have in my pockets, and I say to you I will have serious difficulty within 30 minutes. In my district two of my friends, one a doctor and the other a farmer and a stockman, both big, handsome, courageous fellows, became involved in a difficulty. The stockman called at the drug store to see the doctor. There were a few verbal exchanges when they locked horns, and it was like two big bald-faced steers fighting. Not only were vials of wrath uncorked, but vials of medicine were broken and scattered all over the storeroom, when finally something threw them apart, and the doctor, afterwards telling me the story, said: "Fortunately I thought of that glorious scripture which says, 'A soft word turneth away wrath,' so I said, 'Why this foolishness? Let us talk it over. So we sat down and talked it over, and no harm came of it.'"

Mr. SIMS. If they had been in a state of preparedness—

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes; as my friend from Tennessee says, if they had been in a state of preparedness one or both would have been killed. Now, then, in this connection I want to ask you in all candor whether or not you have contemplated just what the history of this country would have been if the battleship Maine had not been lying in the harbor of Habana on that awful, that eventful night, the 15th of February, 1898. I know just what transpired here in Congress. We might have had a war with Spain, but I think it is quite doubtful. But the battleship was there instead of elsewhere, and as a result we have paid out hundreds of millions of money; nor, gentlemen, is that all. You saw the sad procession that wended its way down Pennsylvania Avenue carrying the remains of the heroes of the Maine over to Arlington, where the last sad rites were said. Many an American boy kissed his mother and his sister good-by and shouldered a musket to fight for his country, as was his duty. Many boys there were who never saw their loved ones again; and we have the Philippines with us to boot, which we find hard to get rid of. The nearest I can get at it that war cost over $360,000,000, with the loss of over 10,000 citizens, all told. You know how I feel about that. I would not sacrifice the life of one manly, honest, patriotic Missouri boy for the whole archipelago [applause], much less sacrifice thousands of our citizens, unless it were necessary to protect our liberty, or for some other vital reason. I would say, let us insist upon our rights, but let us not have an exaggerated idea as to what our rights are in the premises, based upon the fact that we have a brace of pistols upon us. Let me further direct your attention and point out definitely some things that are very interesting and are certainly apropos to this discussion, and present a plan by which war may be avoided. I called up the State Department a few days ago, and at my request the office very kindly furnished me a document which contains all the papers concerning the disarmament of the Great Lakes. I desire to submit portions of these documents to you.

In response to the House resolution bearing date of January 15, 1900, requesting information in regard to the status of the agreement said to prohibit the building, arming, or maintaining of more than a single war vessel on the Great Lakes, the then President replied as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of January 15, 1900, requesting information in regard to the status of the agreement between the United States and Great Britain said to prohibit the building, arming, or maintaining of more than a single war vessel on the Great Lakes and all data bearing upon the subject in the possession of the Department of State, I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State and accompanying papers, giving all the information existing in that department in regard to the arrangement as to the naval force to be respectively maintained on the American lakes, concluded at Washington April 28-29, 1817.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 27, 1900.

I find that about the first thing bearing on this proposition, or the first reference to the matter, appears to have been under date of August 29, 1815, when Mr. John Quincy Adams, who was the minister to Great Britain under President Jefferson's administration, transmitted to the State Department some British newspapers in which it was announced that His Majesty's cabinet had determined not only to maintain but to augment its armed naval force on the Great Lakes. Mr. Monroe, Secretary of State, thereupon proposed in an instrument addressed to Mr. Adams, dated November 16, 1815, a mutual restriction of the naval force to be maintained on the Lakes by both parties, which I read, as follows:

[Mr. Monroe to Mr. Adams, November 16, 1815.]

The information you give of orders having been issued by the British Government to increase its naval force on the Lakes is confirmed by intelligence from that quarter of measures having been actually adopted for the purpose. It is evident, if each party augments its force there, with a view to obtain the ascendancy over the other, that vast expense will be incurred and the danger of collision augmented in like degree. The President is sincerely desirous to prevent an evil which it is presumed is equally to be deprecated by both Governments. He therefore authorizes you to propose to the British Government such an arrangement respecting the naval force to be kept on the Lakes by both Governments as will demonstrate their pacific policy and secure their peace. He is willing to confine it, on each side, to a certain moderate number of armed vessels, and the smaller the number the more agreeable to him; or to abstain altogether from an armed force beyond that used for revenue. You will bring this subject under the consideration of the British Government immediately after the receipt of this letter.

In a conference with Lord Castlereagh, on January 25, 1816, Mr. Adams submitted a proposal and briefly mentioned having done so in his dispatch written to Mr. Monroe on January 31, 1816, in which he said:

[Mr. Adams to Mr. Monroe, January 31, 1816.]

With regard to the other topics embraced in the conference, I can only now state in a summary manner that I think the proposal for mutually disarming on the lakes of Canada, which I made conformably to your instructions, will not be accepted.

I find in these notes which were exchanged between the two countries, and I shall not take the time to read them all, excepting those matters which have a direct bearing on this proposition, the representative of Great Britain, in discussing all phases of the proposition concerning the disarmament of the Lakes, seemed to be very apprehensive about the increased military power of the United States. This is shown by a letter from Mr. Adams to Mr. Monroe, dated February 8, 1816, as follows:

He said that just before the conclusion of the peace Great Britain had been under the necessity of making extraordinary exertions and to build a number of new vessels upon the Lakes to enable her to maintain her footing there; and when I remarked that this was not what had drawn the animadversion of the American Government, but the new armaments—vessels of war begun and built since the peace—he replied that we had so much the advantage over them there by our position that a mutual stipulation against arming, during the peace, would be unequal and disadvantageous in its operation to Great Britain. For as the hands of both parties would, by such an engagement, be tied until war should have commenced, the Americans by their proximity would be able to prepare armaments for attacks much sooner than those of the British could be prepared for defense. I urged that as at all events the state of the armaments during peace, on one side, must be the measure of those on the other, this advantage of proximity must be nearly the same whether they are great or small; that the agreement to forbear arming in time of peace would rather diminish than add to it, and that a war could not break out, on the part of the United States, suddenly or without such a previous state of the relations between the two nations as would give the British Government warning to be prepared for the event and to take such measures as might enable them to arm on the Lakes when the war commenced quite as rapidly and effectually as the United States could do on their side. But although Lord Castlereagh promised to submit the proposal to the cabinet, his own disinclination to accede to it was so strongly marked that I can not flatter myself it will be accepted. The utmost that they may be induced to consent to may be an arrangement to limit the force which either party shall keep in actual service upon the Lakes.

Do you see what it means? It means balancing one navy against the other. In another letter, which was from Mr. Adams to the representative of the British Government, dated March 21, 1816, I find the following language:

The increase of naval armaments on one side upon the Lakes, during peace, will necessitate the like increase on the other, and besides causing an aggravation of useless expense to both parties must operate as a continual stimulus of suspicion and of ill will upon the inhabitants and local authorities of the borders against those of their neighbors. The moral and political tendency of such a system must be to war and not to peace. The American Government proposes mutually to reduce, to the same extent, all naval armaments upon those Lakes. The degree to which they shall be reduced is left at the option of Great Britain.

See the disposition on the part of the United States Government at that time, ready to leave the question to Great Britain to what extent they should disarm. In another letter from Mr. Adams to Mr. Monroe, dated March 30, 1816, he said:

You may, however, consider it as certain that the proposal to disarm upon the Lakes will not be accepted. In all the debates in Parliament upon what they call their military and naval peace establishment the prospect of a new war with the United States has been distinctly held up by the ministers and admitted by the opposition as a solid reason for enormous and unparalleled expenditure and preparation in Canada and Nova Scotia.

Gentlemen, you see what influences were at work. Up to that time our representatives had received no encouragement. These influences were pressing then, as they are pressing now; the jingoes were there, as they are here; but the representatives of our Government were not impatient, they were determined to serve the people of this country, so they kept insisting upon this proposition. Several letters having passed between the two contracting parties in the interim, I find one letter, dated August 2, 1816, from Mr. Monroe to Mr. Bagot, as follows:

I have the honor to state that the President is willing, in the spirit of the peace which so happily exists between the two Nations and until the proposed arrangement shall be canceled in the manner hereinafter suggested, to confine the naval force to be maintained on the Lakes on each side to the following vessels—that is, on Lake Ontario one vessel not exceeding 110 tons burden and one 18-pound cannon, and on the upper Lakes to two vessels of like burden and force, and on the waters of Lake Champlain to one vessel not exceeding the like burden and force; and that all other armed vessels on those Lakes shall be forthwith dismantled; and likewise that neither party shall build or arm any other vessel on the shores of those Lakes.

Now, my friends, I go over here to where I find the absolute acceptance of the proposition laid down by the President of the United States. Great Britain at that time had on the Lakes, all told, 74 boats, because, as you recall, that was very shortly after the war between the two countries—

Mr. GEORGE. Men-of-war?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes; armed boats, some better than others, as they are to-day, because when you build a new boat according to modern methods, to a large extent you relegate the others. So out of 74 boats they had there they dismantled 70. Now I want to go a little further—

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Give us the exact terms of the treaty.

Mr. HENSLEY. I will say to my colleague this has the effect of a treaty, or convention, as they call it.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. To my colleague.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is an agreement in writing between the two Governments on that question, but the language which my colleague has quoted from the letter of Secretary of State Monroe is about the same as that agreement.

Mr. HENSLEY. I will say to my colleague that I thought this was sufficient to show the character of the agreement that had been entered into by the two high contracting parties.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the gentleman will permit, I will call attention to the fact that a few years ago I printed that agreement in the RECORD.

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes; I am aware that there may be seen in the archives of the State Department the original copy of the treaty, and I will have it printed in this connection. It is as follows:

1. The naval forces henceforth to be maintained upon the Great Lakes shall be confined to the following vessels on each side:

2. On Lake Ontario, one vessel not to exceed 100 tons burden, carrying not more than 20 men and one 18-pound cannon.

3. On the upper lakes, two vessels of same burden and armed in a like way.

4. On Lake Champlain, one vessel of like size and armament.

5. All other armed vessels to be at once dismantled, and no other vessel of war should be built or armed along the St. Lawrence River or on the Great Lakes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. I do.

Mr. MANN. I was under the impression the so-called convention was in the document which the gentleman has in his hand, the temporary arrangement entered into between the two Governments, the spirit of which has been observed ever since, though the language has not been literally observed, but by mutual understanding we have been able to keep peace on the northern border and armed vessels, in the main, off the Lakes.

Mr. HENSLEY. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for the suggestion, and I will say in that connection that I find that the President of the United States, Mr. Monroe, who had succeeded Mr. Jefferson, published to the world the agreement. The document from which I have just read does not contain the exact language, although it means practically the same.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may be permitted to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. HENSLEY] be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object; but how much more time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HENSLEY. I think only a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague [Mr. LLOYD] and the House. Now, there were some few disturbances upon the Lakes occasioned by pirates and Indians, and so on, which on several occasions necessitated the exchange of notes between the representatives of the two nations. The relations were somewhat strained, but they never reached the breaking point at any time. Now, in order that you may understand and appreciate to what extent attempts were made to put armed vessels upon the Lakes, I desire to read from the proceedings of the Senate, August 3, 1841, when Senator Allen, of Ohio, "moved an amendment to the fortification bill for the construction or armament of steamers or other vessels for defense on the northwestern lakes. This proposition was debated at some length on the day of its introduction and on the following day. Mr. Allen explained that he had not offered it with a view to benefit any particular section of the country, but that, having understood the British had two armed steamers on Lake Erie, he 'thought armed steamers were necessary to watch armed steamers.'"

Senator Allen's reasoning was clear and logical. Beyond any doubt it requires armed steamers to watch armed steamers. A great deal of significance is attached to that brief statement, because there is not a nation to-day that has armaments that does not balance her armaments against the armaments of other nations; and this, no doubt, is the very thought that occurred to Mr. Churchill. That is the point that I am trying to impress upon you. If I have a pistol in my pocket and you have one in yours, we are on the same footing; I buy another and you buy another, our positions are relatively unchanged.

Well, the appropriation was made, and so I find this in the document:

Soon after the passage of the fortification act of 1841, and in execution of the authority therein given to the President to build and equip war vessels on the Lakes, the Secretary of the Navy initiated steps for the construction of an iron steamer for service on the upper Lakes, and during the next two years there was constructed at Pittsburgh the side-wheel bark Michigan, which was removed in sections to Erie and there completed and floated in the summer of 1844.

Then it goes on to give her dimensions, and says:

This drew forth a remonstrance from the British Government.

The British Government registered a protest against this, because they believed it was an infringement upon the understanding that existed between the two Governments, so the representatives got together and discussed the whole situation and no harm grew out of it.

But I find that when this Nation was involved in the great War between the States, the Government of the United States seemed to think, whether justifiable or not I do not know, that the British Government was showing some favoritism toward the Southern States. The Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, took the matter up and protested against the things that seemed to be violative of the laws that govern nations, and it went on until finally formal notice was served upon Great Britain to abrogate this understanding, which notice was dated October 24, 1864. The British Government was so well pleased with the agreement that had existed between the two countries that her representative protested against the abrogation of it, and in this connection I desire to read a few lines from a letter from Lord Russell to Lord Lyons, under date of November 26, 1864, as follows:

It is perfectly competent to the United States to give notice that at the end of six months that Government will be at liberty to increase their naval force on the Lakes. It is certainly true that while both nations are disarmed on the Lakes marauders or depredators may destroy or capture unarmed vessels belonging to either party. Her Majesty will, of course, be at liberty also to increase her naval force on the Lakes at the expiration of the six months after notice if she should think fit to do so, but it is hoped that when peace is restored the former agreement, which was formed upon just and wise considerations, may be renewed as one that must be advantageous to both parties.

So you see they were anxious that the peace that had characterized the countries should continue.

In the naval act of May 4, 1898, a gunboat was authorized to be built on the Great Lakes to replace an old and obsolete one. Its construction was delayed from time to time, until finally Congress abandoned the building of it, due to the fact that this country did not desire to do anything which might be misunderstood by Great Britain; and Congress, in the naval act of August 22, 1912, authorized the reappropriation of the funds, and a gunboat is about completed for use in Chinese waters instead of upon the Lakes. Even the training of the Naval Militia has not been permitted upon the Great Lakes, so jealous have our officials been of the rights of the parties in connection with the treaty.

So we find that nearly 100 years has now elapsed and these people, British citizens upon the one side of the line and American citizens upon the other, dwelling in absolute peace and harmony, as brothers should, while on the other side, with thousands of miles of ocean separating this country from Great Britain and other countries, we are disturbed with reference to our relations. Why is this true? In my judgment it is because we have had no battleships on the Great Lakes, we have had no incitement for war or trouble between these countries. A simple agreement has not only saved this country hundreds of millions of money, and a like sum no doubt to Great Britain, but it has warded off, in my judgment, a war between the two countries. It therefore seems to me that the time is most propitious for action. We are soon to celebrate the one hundredth year of peace with Great Britain, and it is time for this country to take the initiative on a proposition which means so much.

Talk about war with Germany! We have something like 20,000,000 citizens in this country who have German blood coursing in their veins, and they constitute one of the chief assets of this great country of ours. They dot the hillsides and valleys of Missouri, as well as the hillsides and valleys all over the land. They have blazed the way and made sections of our country blossom like the rose. They left their country to escape military burdens. They came here and cast their lot with us in this land of which we boast as being the asylum of the oppressed. Now, will we follow in the wake of those great nations and pile burdens upon them which they had hoped they would escape by coming here? I say never; never. There is no occasion for it. In all our history we have never had a serious quarrel with Germany, much less war. Germany does not desire to maim and kill our people; most emphatically we do not desire to maim and kill her people.

I appeal to the executive officers of this Government to use the same persistency and the same earnestness in putting forward this proposition that Jefferson's administration employed nearly 100 years ago. I appeal to the press of the country, the avenues of information, to help us in this campaign of education. I appeal to the clergy—the men who thunder forth from the pulpits the doctrine of "peace on earth and good will toward men"—to be as courageous as our worthy Chaplain showed himself to be when, a few mornings since, he offered a prayer that should be quoted from every pulpit in this land. Although he stands enveloped in darkness, having sacrificed that God-given faculty on the altar of his country, there radiates from him a spirit of Christian manhood which not only reaches every Member of this House but extends throughout the whole country. In this connection I desire to print in full the prayer above mentioned, offered by Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., the day following the introduction of my resolution:

We bless Thee, Almighty God our heavenly Father, for every thought, every suggestion, every movement looking to a world-wide disarmament, since it is a reflection on the intelligence and religious life of any people to teach the arts of war on land or sea, for we realize in our better moments how infinitely wiser it is to conserve the brain and brawn of armies and navies for the peaceful pursuits of life. And we most earnestly pray that our Republic, with its intelligence, high ideals, and incomparable genius, may set its face heavenward and be the vanguard in every movement for the "peace and good will toward men" which all right-thinking men the world around pray for, hope for, long for. And unto Thee, O God, the Father of all mankind, be glory and honor and praise forever. Amen.

It is indeed a reflection on the intelligence and religious life of any people to teach the arts of war on land or sea. Nations no more than individuals should continue in wrongdoing. The Good Book says:

They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

There is a vast difference, Mr. Speaker, between those who for selfish reasons shape their sails to catch the faintest breeze that will drive them toward some haven of self-interest and the individual who with Christian fortitude starts out across the high seas and, even at a sacrifice, seeks to serve his people and promote his country's welfare—the one a licentious leader who unfurls the flag of corruption and marshals the interests upon the fields of degradation and at the right time for his purposes plunges his country into the vortex of utter ruin, while the latter unfurls the white flag of purity and sincerity, marshals under his banner men of patriotism and love for country, always pressing onward and upward to that glorious day which will usher in "the golden era of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God." Let us by unanimous vote and as speedily as possible pass this resolution. Gentlemen, I thank you one and all. [Applause.]

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,

Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committees on Accounts and Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, and trust that the same will be promptly accepted.

Respectfully, yours,

M. F. CONRY.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill and joint resolution:

H. R. 7384. An act to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject; and

H. J. Res. 139. A joint resolution to relieve destitution among the native people and residents of Alaska.

DISCOUNT ON CUSTOMS DUES.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion. I move to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from further consideration of House resolution 297, in order that I may bring the matter before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from further consideration of House resolution 297.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, may I ask what the resolution is?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives copy of any regulation, order, or instruction issued to any customs official concerning the enforcement or nonenforcement of subsection 7 of paragraph J of section 4 of the Underwood tariff law, reading as follows:

"That a discount of 5 per cent on all duties imposed by this act shall be allowed on such goods, wares, and merchandise as shall be imported in vessels admitted to registration under the laws of the United States: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of any treaty concluded between the United States and any foreign nation."

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 56, nays 23, answered "present" 14, not voting 336, as follows:

Mr. YOUNG of Texas with Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada.
 Mr. WILSON of Florida with Mr. GOOD (commencing Oct. 1).
 Mr. WINGO with Mr. PARKER.

Mr. WEAVER with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.
 Mr. BOOHER with Mr. SLEMP (for the rest of special session, except when two-thirds vote required; on party questions, record to show one party for and one against measure).

Mr. DICKINSON with Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska (after vote on currency, except at option of either).

Mr. REED with Mr. WINSLOW (commencing Oct. 1, for remainder of extra session).

Mr. WITHERSPOON with Mr. STEPHENS of California (commencing Oct. 3, except on cotton-futures amendment).

Mr. THACHER with Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts (commencing Oct. 16, and for balance of session).

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

The name of Mr. MANN was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with Mr. PHELAN, of Massachusetts. I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The name of Mr. SMITH of Minnesota was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Friday, November 14, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5341) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Willis, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LOGUE: A bill (H. R. 9277) granting to the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, a right of way over Government land; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HOBSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 150) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TAVENNER: Resolution (H. Res. 306) directing the Secretary of the Navy to investigate the advantages of the Rock Island Arsenal military tract as a possible site for the proposed Government armor-plate factory; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Resolution (H. Res. 307) authorizing payment out of the contingent fund of one month's compensation to the clerk of the late Representative George H. Utter; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. LINDBERGH: Resolution (H. Res. 308) compelling Members of the House to file a statement with the Clerk showing the nature of any and all kinds of business they may have interests in, together with pecuniary interests of their families, etc.; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CULLOP: A bill (H. R. 9278) granting an increase of pension to Isaac H. Orndorff; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DONOHUE: A bill (H. R. 9279) for the relief of Daniel Graeber; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9280) granting an increase of pension to Michael I. Gillin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9281) granting an increase of pension to Abraham S. Foster; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FERGUSSON: A bill (H. R. 9282) granting an increase of pension to Arthur L. Douglass; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 9283) granting an increase of pension to William L. Cook, alias James Leslie; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9284) for the reimbursement of Horace M. Blunt, for the loss of a horse while hired by the United States Geological Survey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GOEKE: A bill (H. R. 9285) granting an increase of pension to August Duvall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PATTON of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 9286) granting an increase of pension to Abraham Egler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9287) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Andrews; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAGGART: A bill (H. R. 9288) for the relief of Albert H. Campbell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9289) granting an increase of pension to George Stevens; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9290) to place the name of Capt. William H. Ward on the unlimited retired list of the Regular Army of the United States, with rank and pay as a retired officer of the regular establishment; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of citizens of Lincoln and Montgomery Counties, Mo., asking for a pension for Mrs. Kate L. Clare, widow of the late William D. Clare, an ex-soldier; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also (by request), petition of the Belknap Hardware & Manufacturing Co., of Louisville, Ky., favoring change in the parcel-post law relative to shipment of books; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also (by request), petition of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, protesting against placing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the funeral oration over the remains of the late Adolphus Busch, a brewer of St. Louis, Mo.; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring legislation by Congress for protection of the lower Mississippi River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: Memorial of the Columbia & Snake River Waterways Association, favoring canalization of Columbia River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the Pendleton Commercial Association, favoring legislation for flood protection of the lower Mississippi River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, November 14, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We would approach Thee, Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, in the spirit of the Master, that our spiritual vision may be enlarged, that our faith may grow stronger, that our hopes may burn brighter, that our thoughts and deeds may spring from pure and holy motives, that the perfection of our character may more and more obtain until we all come unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Clerk read that "Mr. MANN presented a privileged report."

The SPEAKER. It should have been a resolution, and the correction will be made.

The Journal as corrected was approved.

The SPEAKER. By a special order of the House made yesterday the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON] has one hour in which to address the House on the subject of cruel and unusual punishment in the State of Delaware. He is recognized for an hour. He does not seem to be here.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3397. An act to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to mining claims.

MINING CLAIMS ON SEWARD PENINSULA, ALASKA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make this statement at this time: The Senate yesterday passed the bill (S. 3397) for the relief of miners in the Seward Peninsula, in Alaska, and the bill will soon reach the Speaker's table. The emergency is urgent in the extreme. The bill provides for relieving the miners in that peninsula of their assessment work for this year, which has to be done before December 31. Many of the miners in the Seward Peninsula have nothing with which to do the work. In that country the assessment work is done in the wintertime with the use of sleds. Even if this relief measure passes, there is now no way of notifying these miners except by cablegram to Nome, Alaska.

I desire to give notice that as soon as the bill reaches the Speaker's table I shall ask to have it taken up and considered and disposed of by unanimous consent. I desire to state further that a full statement is contained in the record of the Senate proceedings of yesterday, showing the necessity of the passage of this bill and the need of unanimous action on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] gives notice that when the bill comes from the Senate relating to the matter he refers to, he will ask unanimous consent to call it up. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON] is recognized for one hour.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT IN THE STATE OF DELAWARE.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last Mr. EVANS, of Montana, asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which was sent to the Clerk's desk and read. The resolution was as follows:

House resolution.

Whereas it appears from dispatches published in the public prints that six prisoners—two white men and four negroes—all convicted of robbery, were whipped on their bare backs, with a total of 95 lashes, at the Newcastle County workhouse, in the State of Delaware, on November 8, 1913; and

Whereas it further appears that two of said prisoners, James Bayard and William Reason, negroes, each received 20 lashes for burglary; and

Whereas it further appears that on Saturday next, November 15, these two men will each receive a similar number of lashes on the bare back, and in addition Bayard is sentenced to serve 14 years in prison and Reason 11 years; and

Whereas it further appears that the court divided the administration of the lashes for fear the victims could not stand the penalty all at once; and

Whereas the eighth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America provides that "cruel and unusual punishments shall not be inflicted"; and

Whereas it is manifest from the fact that the court divided the imposition of the number of lashes for fear of causing the death of the victims that such punishment is cruel; and

Whereas such method of punishment is a relic of medieval barbarism and is not generally practiced in civilized countries and is therefore unusual: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the Attorney General of the United States are hereby authorized and directed to cause to be brought in the Federal courts an injunction proceeding against the State of Delaware, or the officials and employees of such State who may be responsible for the condition of affairs above set forth, or that the President and Attorney General take such other action as in their judgment may be proper to enforce the provisions of the Federal Constitution and prevent the infliction of this cruel and unusual punishment upon these prisoners on Saturday next, November 15, and to prevent the practice of such cruelties hereafter in said State of Delaware or elsewhere in the United States of America.

The House adjourned without action on that resolution. The resolution is so manifestly improper that it is quite certain the House will not adopt it and will probably never consider it.

If the United States courts had jurisdiction in the cases mentioned in the resolution and injunction proceedings were needed, it would not be necessary for Congress to direct the President or the Attorney General to perform their duties in the matter. Nothing more than sending sufficient information to the Attorney General would be required. But the United States courts do not have jurisdiction in these cases, as I will show later.

I desire first to comment upon the statements made in the preamble of this resolution.

The statement in the first three clauses are partially correct. I deny all the other statements contained in the preamble. The statement that "the court divided the imposition of the number of lashes for fear of causing the death of the victims" is absolutely false, and has been made without facts to support the statement.

No man's life is ever endangered by the infliction of corporal punishment in Delaware. In the cases of James Bayard and William Reason the court divided the sentences as to the lashes to make the punishment lighter because the defendants are young.

These two men were convicted jointly for breaking and entering the dwelling house of Mr. Reybold in the nighttime with the intent to commit a felony, and for breaking and entering another building, not a dwelling, during the same night. Bayard was also convicted of committing an assault during the same night.

While those two felons were in Mr. Reybold's house that night Bayard went to the bed in which Miss Reybold was asleep and had his hand upon her stomach when she was awakened by him. She ran from the room frightened almost into hysterics and aroused her brother, who rushed to her rescue.

Bayard struck Mr. Reybold with a brick, cutting a gash over his forehead, and escaped from the house.

For all these offenses Bayard was sentenced to 13 years' imprisonment and 40 lashes. Reason was given 11 years and 40 lashes.

I say, individually and for the State of Delaware, that I have no apologies to make to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Evans] and to no other man from any other State in the Union for the infliction of that penalty upon a man who will go in the nighttime into a house to commit felony and go up to a young woman lying in bed and take hold of her, undoubtedly for the purpose of committing a rape, and then assault and beat the brother who undertakes to defend his sister in the nighttime in her own bedroom. When you say to me that corporal punishment is cruel to a brute like that, I deny it, and say that the judgment of the man who alleges it is warped.

I know that there is an honest difference of opinion about corporal punishment, and I concede to those who honestly believe corporal punishment should be abolished the right to hold to that opinion. But I do contend that they should hold to that opinion in their own States; or, if they want to publish it abroad in the newspapers, and go around and make speeches, when they have nothing else to do, and advocate such a doctrine as that, I have no objection. But when they come to another State and say, for example, that the State of Delaware shall treat a criminal such as this one as though he were a hero, I protest. [Applause.]

Let us look at the ridiculousness of it, to carry out the idea of those "palace-prison" people that some folks waste their time in talking about. Would you take that man up before the court and say to him, "Now, Bayard, you knew that house did not belong to you. You knew very well that when you went into that house you committed trespass, and you made a greater mistake when you went up into the room where that young girl lay. She had a right to be there undisturbed. That was an awful mistake, Bayard. You put your hand on her, and that was another great mistake. You were trespassing on her rights; you ought not to do that; you ought to be good. Stay in your own home. Now, we are going to be lenient with you; you are a young man. Mind, you only did that undoubtedly with the intent to rape her. What else did you go and put your hand on her stomach for? Not to get money. The girl was undressed, lying in bed. No; we have pity on you; we are going to turn you out after we put you in jail a couple of years, and we want you to be a better man."

The absurdity and ridiculousness of talking in that way to a brute that has lost his manhood! We deal with such felons in Delaware as we have been taught through all ages. We make the punishment fit the crime. Having done so, we are willing to compare the records of our criminal courts with any other State in the Union.

I will make a guess right here. I do not know the six men mentioned in the resolution. I simply have the general information concerning them obtained from home and the newspapers, but I guess now that four out of these six men were not born in the State of Delaware. I guess further that when these six men have served out their terms and leave the prison that not more than one, if any of them, will ever be convicted again in the courts of Delaware.

A large per cent—yes; I believe 75 per cent—of the violent crimes committed in the State of Delaware are committed by foreign criminals. Keep your criminals at home and our court record will be even better than it is now after we have taken care of the criminals that have come into our State from other States.

We had an example of lax punishment a few years ago, to the sorrow of our State. A man had committed rape, I am informed, in a neighboring State and had served five years in the penitentiary. He came into the State of Delaware, and within a few months he committed the most horrible rape in the annals of history. There was a man that they had dealt with leniently to let him come into our State and ravish and mutilate the body and murder one of our girls.

I am willing to compare our criminal code and penal institutions, if you please, with those of any other State in the Union. We have a law that provides for probating a criminal. If these men had committed a crime that was not violent, they might have been probated under certain conditions. We have a law providing for youthful offenders for first offense, that they may be probated, upon giving a recognizance, with or without security. We also have a law for the first offense, not capital, no matter how old the man may be; if he can show previous good character, he may be probated. We also have a law providing that a man convicted of any offense for which whipping may be a part of the sentence, and is recommended for mercy by the jury, may have the lashes omitted.

These two felons had their day in court; they had their chance before a jury. I want to say to you that when a man has had his day in a Delaware court before 12 Delaware citizens and the court of Delaware has pronounced sentence upon him, I assure you gentlemen that justice, and nothing more nor less, has been meted out to that man.

Now, I say that these two men when tried, if they had been recommended for mercy by the jury, might have had the lashes remitted; but they were not recommended for mercy, and I would have been ashamed of any jury that would have recommended such felons for mercy. I do not have to blush for shame for anything of that kind, because a Delaware jury never does recommend such felons as those for mercy.

I want to read to you our law about probation and see whether a man does not have a fair chance. The law is as follows:

In any case in which a person is convicted before the court of general sessions in this State of any offense not capital and no previous conviction is proven against him, if it appears to the court that, regard being had to the character and antecedents of the offender, to the nature of the offense, and to any extenuating circumstances under which the offense was committed, it is expedient that the offender be released on probation of good conduct, the court may direct that he be released on his entering into a recognizance, with or without surety, and, during such period as the court may direct, to appear and receive sentence when called upon, and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behavior; and the court may, if it thinks proper, direct that the offender shall pay the costs of the prosecution or such portion of the same as may be directed by the court. At any time within the period mentioned in the recognizance, but not afterwards, the court may, upon being satisfied by information on oath that the offender has failed to observe any of the conditions of his recognizance, issue process for his apprehension, and thereupon, without any further proceedings, impose sentence upon him.

The court also, in such cases as it shall deem proper, where a defendant has pleaded guilty in any case before it of any offense not capital, in view of the antecedents and character of the offender, of the nature of the offense, and of any extenuating circumstances, may allow such person to withdraw such plea of guilty and may release such person on probation of good conduct upon his entering into a recognizance, with or without surety, and during such period as the court may direct to appear and stand trial when called upon, and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behavior. At any time within such period, but not afterwards, the court may, upon being satisfied by information on oath that such person has failed to observe any of the conditions of his recognizance, issue process for his apprehension, and thereupon order him to stand trial for such former offense. (See 26 Del. Laws, 721.)

We do have the whipping post in Delaware for several offenses, offenses which are of high grade and of such brutal character as to indicate the depravity of the felon. We have whipping for wife beating, for assault with intent to commit rape, for breaking and entering the dwelling house of another in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony, for robbery, and for larceny. We have those penalties provided for in our law, and, as I have said before, we have no apology for their being there. We know they have served a useful purpose in the past, and we believe that they will serve a useful purpose in the future.

Corporal punishment has been a means of correction throughout all ages of recorded history. We have authority for its beginning as far back as the Bible itself. All through the Bible we are taught that corporal punishment does have a good effect.

In Exodus xxi, 24, 25, we find: "Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe."

In Proverbs xxiii, 13, 14, we are commanded: "Withhold not correction from the child; for if thou beatest him with the rod, he shall not die. Thou shalt beat him with the rod, and shalt deliver his soul from hell."

And in Hebrews xii, 6, it is written: "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

I know in this advanced age we have people who undertake even to get around the Bible teachings. They undertake to ignore the teachings of not only their own forefathers, but of people of all generations. My colleagues, I am not here to preach a sermon, but I want to say that the Bible and its teachings have stood through too many ages for any man with his limited intellect to undertake to dispose of it. I say you are traveling on dangerous ground when you undertake to dispose of the Book that has been the foundation upon which every civilized nation has had its beginning, following the teachings of which Book man has become civilized. In countries where they have not the Bible they lack civilization.

As to the punishment:

The object of punishment is to reform the offender, to deter him and others from committing like offenses, and to protect society. (See 2 Bouvier's Law Dictionary, p. 796.)

Sir William Blackstone, in his Commentaries on the Laws of England, said:

As to the end or final cause of human punishments. This is not by way of atonement or expiation for the crime committed; for that must be left to the just determination of the Supreme Being; but as a precaution against future offenses of the same kind. This is effected in three ways—either by the amendment of the offender himself, for which purpose all corporal punishment, fines, and temporary exile and imprisonment are inflicted; or by deterring others by the dread of his example from offending in the like way * * *, or, lastly, by depriving the party injuring of the power to do further mischief; which is effected by either putting him to death or condemning him to perpetual confinement, slavery, or exile. (See 4 Bl. Com., 11.)

In 1910, while considering a sentence imposed under the Philippine law, Mr. Justice White, who is now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, said:

"Of course, in every case where punishment is inflicted for the commission of crime, if the suffering of the punishment by the wrongdoer be alone regarded, the sense of compassion aroused would mislead and render the performance of judicial duty impossible. And it is to be conceded that this natural conflict between the sense of commiseration and the commands of duty is augmented when the nature of the crime defined by the Philippine law and the punishment which that law prescribes is only abstractly considered, since the impression is at once produced that the legislative authority has been severely exerted. I say only abstractly considered, because the first impression produced by the merely abstract view of the subject is met by the admonition that the duty of defining and punishing crime has never in any civilized country been exerted upon mere abstract considerations of the inherent nature of the crime punished, but has always involved the most practical consideration of the tendency at a particular time to commit certain crimes, of the difficulty of repressing the same, and of how far it is necessary to impose stern remedies to prevent the commission of such crimes." (See Weems v. United States, 217 U. S., 349.)

I want to say to you that punishment in Delaware is not inflicted by way of revenge. We hold revenge against no man. Revenge belongs to but One, and that is the Supreme Being above. [Applause.] We do not attempt to arrogate to ourselves the right of revenge. Like other men, when we see the criminal in the dock before the judges and the jury we pity him. Our hearts can not help but beat with sympathy for him. So they did for these brutes that have brought up this discussion; but, my friends, we do not let our pity take away our judgment. After a fair, full, and free trial, if a man is convicted by 12 men of the county, the sentence is meted out to him such as the law directs; so that if, perchance, it be possible, to reform him, protect society, and deter others from like offenses.

Permit me to say that I know that the whipping post of Delaware is a terror to offenders of the law. I have practiced law in the courts of Delaware for more than 16 years, and have had a considerable practice in the court of general sessions and the court of oyer and terminer. My experience has been, as has been the experience of other lawyers, that after counseling with the defendant, if his case be desperate and the facts presented such that I had to advise him that he would be convicted, the very next request on the part of the defendant would be to have the lashes omitted, if possible. They would be willing to agree to practically any number of months, as much as a year or more, for the sake of having 10 or 20 lashes omitted; but in one case as in another no such agreement was made, but each criminal was adjudged and the sentence imposed according to the law. I merely speak of it to show you that the criminals know of the law. In many cases the lashes are omitted. If it is the first offense, and some man can give the criminal a good reputation, in most offenses less than capital the lashes are omitted, or if the prisoner be youthful and it be his first offense they are omitted. There are a number of other extenuating circumstances specified in the law. Let me go further right here. The State of Delaware has never permitted any man to be lashed at the post when there was danger of bodily injury or death.

If a man comes not within any of these provisions of the law, be an old offender, and his health be poor, the board of pardons and the governor have always come to his relief and saw to it that he was not whipped if his health would not permit it. And the whippings that are administered are administered in an orderly, reasonable manner, so as not to inflict any personal violence or injury.

Now, I want to go further along the line to prove that the whipping post of Delaware is a deterrent to criminals.

George Black, chief of police of Wilmington, Del., made an address before the International Association of Police at Toronto, Canada, in July, 1912, in which he said:

It is the opinion of myself—and I am sure I do not misrepresent the facts when I say that this opinion is shared by a large portion of our best thinking people—that the whipping post as now established under the laws of the State of Delaware has done and is doing much toward keeping a certain criminal class out of our midst. It has been many years since our city has been visited by any of the class known as "the expert criminal class," and I believe that it is the fear of the whipping post that keeps them away.

Many misleading statements have been sent out broadcast throughout our country in regard to the severity of the punishment at the whipping post, and I have no doubt these reports have caused a great misunderstanding in regard to the law in relation to the whipping post as administered in our State. Only a few months ago the report was spread far and near that great cruelty had been perpetrated by one of our wardens in carrying the law into effect.

This report was absolutely false in every particular and was a piece of sensational yellow journalism pure and simple. In no instance since I have occupied my position as chief of police have I known of any brutal whipping that has ever taken place in our State. The present warden who now administers the lashes in my county is a most humane man, and under no circumstances would he or could he inflict the kind of punishment as represented by these false and wicked reports.

Now, mark you, my colleagues: At the conclusion of his address Mr. Pinkerton, of Chicago, said:

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the paper read by Chief Black. I have always been an advocate of the whipping post for certain offenses. I think to-day that to the wife beater and the night prowler—men who enter houses where there is a sleeping family for burglary or theft—the whipping post should be applied. After an experience of 40 years among this class of people I want to say that I don't know of a burglar who would not kill. There were four crooks that I knew—Jim Brady, Joe Killoran, Jimmie Good, and James Hope-well—dude burglars they used to call them, whose game was to hold up the family of the cashier of a bank and make him give up the combination of the safe. They were caught at that game, tried and convicted in Delaware, and sentenced to 40 lashes each on the bare back. These people were well known in New York, and when the people in New York heard of the sentence they said, "My God, they are not going to whip them." But they did; they whipped them just like they were a lot of slaves. From that day to this there has been less burglary in the State of Delaware than in any other State you can name in the United States.

And I want to say to you that within my memory there has not been a bank burglary or serious holdup in the State of Delaware. After the speech of Mr. Pinkerton, Chief McKenna, of Waltham, then said:

I happened to be in Delaware at the time mentioned by Mr. Pinkerton, and I remember the remark made at the time by Brady. Brady made this remark after he got through being whipped, that he "hoped to God that Delaware justice is satisfied now."

Well, he was satisfied with it; he never returned to Delaware to commit another crime.

President Roosevelt, in 1904, in a message to Congress suggested the enactment of a law to provide corporal punishment for certain offenders. He said in that message:

There are certain offenders whose criminality takes the shape of brutality and cruelty toward the weak who need a special type of punishment. The wife beater, for example, is inadequately punished by imprisonment, for imprisonment may often mean nothing to him, while it may cause hunger and want to the wife and children who have been the victims of his brutality. Probably some form of corporal punishment would be the most adequate way of meeting this kind of crime.

I have not had an opportunity to collect recent statistics as to the commission of crimes in the several States. I have not had an opportunity to collect more recent comments, but they are numerous. I have read them, and so have you. There have been numerous statements, substantiated by proof, as to how crime is increasing in States where the punishment has become lax. While a majority of people seem to have gone too far in their laxity, yet the subject is now being seriously considered in the minds of the people of the country and the minds of gentlemen sitting here in this House. Many believe we have gone too far with laxity and that corporal punishment for these brutal offenders should be restored.

William Tallack in his Penological and Preventive Principles, speaking of the effect of cruel laxity, said:

As to other crime, in general, the experience of America has been similarly unfavorable. American crime has increased during the last half of the nineteenth century far beyond the proportion of increase of the population. And this is not at all to be wondered at. For our purpose we take the case of an honest workman, say in New York or San Francisco, toiling from morning till night, just able to get a living, with but few comforts and little amusement for himself and his family. He may have for a neighbor on one side a lazy, thievish loafer who never works, and on the other side a violent bully, guilty of cruel assaults on man and beast and of indecent outrages on women and children. Yet is it not a fact that if either the loafer or the bully is sent to an American prison, the chances are at present that he will there find comforts of dietary, recreation, music, newspapers, novels, gymnastics, and professional teaching even in the higher branches of education which the honest worker can never hope to obtain? And not only so, but the bully and the thief, if obliged to work in prison, will probably be put to labor of a lighter character and shorter daily continuance than the other, and, perhaps, also, be trained to some fancy trade or profitable art which he too, would most gladly learn.

Is such a system calculated to discourage the violent and the vicious, or, rather, to attract toward crime and pauperism the still honest toilers on the border land of temptation?

On both sides of the Atlantic this course has found plausible advocates. But their voices appear to have met with much more attention hitherto in America than in Europe.

The American people seem to be at last becoming conscious of the disastrous results of their penal system, for in 1895 there was a chorus of complaint from influential journals throughout the country, most of them demanding the introduction of corporal punishment in place of the prison failures and even of the "model" or "collegiate and hotel prisons" of the United States.

Thus the New York Tribune (1895) said:

A bill was recently offered in the legislature to punish with whipping men who inflicted brutal physical ill-usage on others. It was generally commended as the best means of dealing with this class of people. A little humiliation and physical pain has been shown to be more effective in dealing with the cowards who do not hesitate to inflict pain than any other method of punishment yet devised.

The Detroit Free Press (1895) remarked:

Under existing laws a brute in human form, who has no sentimentalism about the barbarities of the past, can maim a woman or child and get off with a few months or years in prison, where he will be well fed and cared for. He can use the lash or the bludgeon, but the State must not retaliate upon him, even for the sake of deterring others from imitating him. It has long been thought by the practical that this is sentimentalism run mad.

The Atlanta Constitution (1895) observed:

The fetish of "humanity" must be bowed to and the greater inhumanity be perpetrated, of taking away five years of a man's life, than giving him a good strapping and letting him go with the injunction that the application will be redoubled on his next appearance.

The Washington Post (1895) wrote:

The creature who cruelly maltreats his wife or other female dependents is in nine cases out of ten a worthless vagabond, an habitual criminal and outlaw, for whom the prison or the workhouse has no terrors whatsoever. He will serve his term under circumstances of greater physical comfort than he is accustomed to at home, and then return to freedom to resume his hideous brutality without fear of, if not actual relish for, the consequences. Meanwhile the forlorn creatures who are subject to his evil moods have absolutely no protection. They lead lives that the dumb brutes would shrink from.

Other contemporary journals expressed themselves similarly. It may be hoped that while discriminative mercy may be increasingly shown to the pitiable and unfortunate class of American offenders a more effective humanity may also be extended to the oppressed violated victims of cruelty through the community by giving to the ruffians who outrage them a penal treatment which shall have the truly beneficent effect of reforming them by intimidation and real restraint.

No one doubts but that the hope of reward and the fear of punishment are the two levers that move mankind to action.

Now, I desire to direct my attention to the legal phase of this question, which has been settled so long that I am surprised that any man would raise it to-day in this House or elsewhere, namely, as to whether or not the eighth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is a limitation upon the powers of a State.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Delaware yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MOON. I just want to make an inquiry. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROCKSON. I do.

Mr. MOON. Do you still have the pillory, the stocks, and cropping and branding as punishments in the State of Delaware?

Mr. BROCKSON. We do not; and never have had any of them in the time of my memory, except the pillory.

Mr. MOON. But you did have them, as a matter of fact.

Mr. BROCKSON. Not within my memory.

Mr. MOON. Not in your memory; but all those States had those methods of punishment, but now they have abolished them. Can you tell me why?

Mr. BROCKSON. Because they are cruel.

Mr. MOON. Are they any less cruel than the flogging of a man with 40 licks until the blood comes to the back?

Mr. BROCKSON. No, sir; and we do not flog any man with 40 lashes until the blood comes to his back; and I defy any man to name a man who ever had the blood cut out of him in Delaware.

Mr. MOON. That may be true; but you can by law do so. I will remind the gentleman of a thing I once saw in reference to his State. I do not know whether it is true or not; but not many years ago a cartoon was published in all the papers showing where a young, delicate woman was by law flogged by a negro constable in the gentleman's city of Wilmington, Delaware.

Mr. BROCKSON. That never occurred. We never had a negro constable in the State of Delaware in the history of the State.

Mr. MOON. Oh, yes you did.

Mr. BROCKSON. Not in my time.

Mr. MOON. Oh, yes. Perhaps not in the gentleman's time, but in fact.

Mr. BROCKSON. What is the first part of the gentleman's question?

Mr. MOON. This is the point I wanted to make to the gentleman, that—

Mr. BROCKSON. I want to make this clear, too. We do not whip women in Delaware. The law especially exempts them.

Mr. MOON. What led you to exempt them? Was not that in obedience to the promptings of an outraged public conscience that you quit whipping women?

Mr. BROCKSON. I do not know that we ever whipped women.

Mr. MOON. Then the gentleman does not know about the State of Delaware very well. I just wanted to make this point to the gentleman—

Mr. BROCKSON. Let me answer the gentleman's question. It might have been at a time when men did not consider women as women, but considered them as servants and slaves. But since women have been advanced to womanhood in the State of Delaware they have not whipped them.

Mr. MOON. Not in recent years.

Mr. BROCKSON. They have not whipped them for many years.

Mr. MOON. But this is the point I want to make, that the pillory and the stocks and branding and cropping, which were cruel forms of punishment, have been abandoned in Delaware. Then how can you justify a punishment by whipping, which to the mind of almost every ordinary citizen appears equally as cruel and inhuman as the stocks, the pillory, or branding?

Mr. BROCKSON. I will ask the gentleman a question in reply.

Mr. MOON. Oh, do not play the Yankee with me, but answer my question.

Mr. BROCKSON. I yielded to the gentleman for a question. Take a man that has a boy 16 years old, weighing 140 pounds, and the father asks the boy to go to the barn and gear a horse and carriage and bring them to the house. That boy says to the father, "I am going to town; you can go to hell and get your own horse." Would it be cruel for the father to take that boy out and lash him a little?

Mr. MOON. Not if he corrects him in a parental way.

Mr. BROCKSON. Then, why would it be cruel for the State to administer the same kind of punishment?

Mr. MOON. That is not the question. The reformation of a man or a citizen—

Mr. BROCKSON. Seventy-five per cent of the crimes committed in the State of Delaware are by criminals who come from other States—

Mr. MOON. When a father corrects a boy, it is done for the benefit of the child; it is done in love and affection for the child; it is not done cruelly; if so, he violates the law; it is not done as a means of punishment of the character that is inflicted upon the prisoner by the State of Delaware. A punishment is something that is inflicted in enlightened States, in all the other States of the Union—

Mr. BROCKSON. Does the gentleman from Tennessee mean to say that the State of Delaware is not enlightened?

Mr. MOON. I say that the punishment is for the reformation of the criminal. It is a method of reformation; the prisoner is supposed to be taught better; he is to be put under circumstances and conditions to enable him to become a better citizen when released from the prison, because he is not supposed to be punished except by deprivation of liberty and under conditions that are supposed to reform him.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Speaker, I yielded for a question.

Mr. MOON. When he comes out he is supposed to be reformed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Delaware has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Delaware have 30 minutes more.

Mr. MOON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended, as I have taken up some of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Tennessee both ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Delaware be extended 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Now, does the gentleman from Delaware yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BROCKSON. For a question.

Mr. MOON. I had only a word more to say, and I am sorry I have taken up so much of the gentleman's time. The higher and better sentiment of people upon the question of punishment is not to inflict a punishment upon the unfortunate prisoner for what he has done, but to bring about conditions in his life that will enable him to reform and become a better member of society. If the offense is so great that this reformation can not be produced, then the death penalty is fixed or life imprisonment is fixed. Corporal punishment has never been thought in recent years—and there is no reflection upon the gentleman—

Mr. BROCKSON. I did not yield for a speech. I hope the gentleman will conclude his question.

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman declines to answer—

Mr. BROCKSON. I do not decline if the gentleman will put his question.

Mr. MOON. I am stating the reasons leading up to my question, then I am going to put the question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Delaware decline to yield?

Mr. BROCKSON. No; not for a question.

Mr. MOON. If that is the theory in all the other States, if that is the policy being pursued by all other States for that purpose, does not the gentleman think that Delaware is a little behind the times when she does not follow in the same trend, but resorts to the inhuman and brutal system of beating and destroying the body of a human being because of a violation of law?

Mr. BROCKSON. I will answer the last part of the gentleman's question first. We do not destroy the human body. We do not injure the human body. We are not behind the times; we are standing for the right and the best good of humanity, and have not been led off by sentimentalism about palace prisons in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. May I ask the gentleman if there is any other State in the Union that maintains his position?

Mr. BROCKSON. I do not know how many and I do not care, so long as we are right. I am willing to stand by the right. I have not had time to investigate that question.

Mr. MOON. I will advise the gentleman that there is not, in my opinion.

Mr. BROCKSON. I will advise you that the State of Maryland does, and I will give the reference and you can read it from the book.

Mr. MOON. I will take the gentleman's word for it if he says so. It is so close to Delaware that I am not surprised.

Mr. BROCKSON. They are benefited by good association because of Delaware. I want to paint you a picture which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] would have us witness. Go down in the District of Columbia and find out one of those 500 cases of wife beating which were talked of here a few years ago. Go into an alley and find there a woman burdened down with three children and a worthless brute of a husband. That woman is going out working eight or nine hours a day and comes back home at night tired and weary. There are those children to feed and clothe. She tries to feed and clothe them, and that brute of a husband makes her give him a part of the money which she earns. She comes home one night and does not give that brute as much money as he would like to have. This is the fall of the year. That man proceeds to pick up a chair and beat and smash the head of that woman, already tottering with her attempt to keep the family together. Then, following out the gentleman's idea, he would have us arrest that man and put him in the dock, make a hero or a martyr out of him, send him to a palace prison for the winter, furnish him entertainment, give him newspapers to read, give him more comforts and better food than the wife at home has, and then say to me that that is justice. Well, my colleagues, that might be justice in Tennessee, but, thank God, it is not justice in Delaware. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROCKSON. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of New York. According to the gentleman's statement there are seven cases now pending in Delaware where corporal punishment is to be administered.

Mr. BROCKSON. Six.

Mr. SMITH of New York. If that is the fact, does it not indicate that corporal punishment has not stopped these brutal crimes? In a little State like Delaware you have six cases at the present moment in which that kind of punishment is to be administered.

Mr. BROCKSON. What State is the gentleman from?

Mr. SMITH of New York. New York.

Mr. BROCKSON. How many do you have within that time? [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of New York. We have quite a number more in the State of New York because the State is somewhat larger than Delaware.

Mr. BROCKSON. Was the gentleman here when I referred to the four New York State criminals that came to Delaware?

Mr. SMITH of New York. Oh, yes; we have more of them.

Mr. BROCKSON. Well, those New York State criminals never came back to Delaware. [Laughter and applause.]

I am asked the question, Does it prevent crime? Within the last 10 days there have been two or more women in this District assaulted by brutal men, with intent to commit rape, one of them in her own home. Two within 10 days! I have not heard of that many cases in the State of Delaware within two years. I believe there has not been one within the last 10 months. We have very few of such criminals, and when we do get them they are liable to a punishment of 20 years in the workhouse and lashes upon their backs. Such cases do not often happen.

I do not know whether the gentleman from Tennessee was here when I made the first part of my speech, referring to our laws in respect to youthful offenders getting off on first offenses because of good character?

Mr. MOON. Yes; I was here.

Mr. BROCKSON. Then I shall not repeat that. I come now to the question of what is cruel and unusual punishment.

In the general acceptance of law, as laid down by all of the courts, punishments are cruel when they involve torture and lingering death, not a mere matter of a little pain. If you are going to call cruel punishment such punishment as produces pain, then how do you justify your hanging in the State of Montana and in other States in the Union? The gentleman who introduced the resolution comes from the State of Montana, where for murder they hang a man by the neck until he is dead. As a matter of law that is not cruel punishment, but as a matter of fact can any man explain to me wherein there is less cruelty in hanging a man by his neck until he is dead than there is in giving a man a few gentle lashes laid upon the bare back? [Laughter.] If you can, I will yield the argument, and if you can not, then I contend that the conclusion is on my side. Therefore, I say, in the law punishments are cruel when they involve torture and lingering death.

Unusual punishment in the law is the punishment so long disused, because of its cruelty, until it has become unusual. Whipping has continued for thousands of years, and continues in England and other countries to-day, and in Delaware and in one or more other States of the Union.

It was in existence at the time this provision of the Constitution was adopted, has been ever since; therefore it has not been disused for any time, and therefore of necessity is not unusual.

The eighth amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides:

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

This amendment does not apply to the States of the Union, but applies only to the United States Government.

In the case of Pervear v. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts (5 Wall., 475) Chief Justice Chase said:

The third proposition of the plea is that fines and penalties imposed and inflicted by the State law for offenses charged in the indictment are excessive, cruel, and unusual. Of this proposition it is enough to say that the article of the Constitution relied upon in support of it does not apply to State but to national legislation.

It has been repeatedly held by the Supreme Court of the United States that the first 10 amendments to the Federal Constitution operated on the National Government only and were not intended to limit the powers of the State in respect to the citizens of that State.

In the case of Barron against The Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, when the court had under consideration a provision of the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, Chief Justice Marshall, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

The plaintiff in error contends that it comes within that clause in the fifth amendment to the Constitution which inhibits the taking of private property for public use without just compensation. He insists that this amendment being in favor of the liberty of the citizen ought to be so construed as to restrain the legislative power of a State as well as that of the United States.

The question thus presented is, we think, of great importance, but not of much difficulty. The Constitution was ordained and established by the people of the United States for themselves, for their own government, and not for the government of the individual States. Each State established a constitution for itself, and in that constitution provided such limitations and restrictions on the powers of its particular government as its judgment dictated. The people of the United States framed such a government for the United States as they supposed best adapted to their situation and best calculated to promote their interests. The powers they conferred on this Government were to be exercised by itself; and the limitations on power, if expressed in general terms, are naturally and, we think, necessarily applicable to the Government created by the instrument. They are limitations of power granted in the instrument itself, not of distinct governments, framed by different persons and for different purposes.

The counsel for the plaintiff in error insists that the Constitution was intended to secure the people of the several States against the undue exercise of power by their respective State governments, as well as against that which might be attempted by their General Government. For the support of this argument he relies on the inhibitions contained in the tenth section of the first article.

We think that section affords a strong if not a conclusive argument in support of the opinion already indicated by the court.

But it is universally understood, it is a part of the history of the day that the great revolution which established the Constitution of the United States was not effected without immense opposition. Serious fears were extensively entertained that those powers which the patriot statesmen who then watched over the interests of our country deemed essential to union, and to the attainment of those invaluable objects for which union was sought, might be exercised in a manner dangerous to liberty. In almost every convention by which the Constitution was adopted, amendments to guard against the abuse of power were recommended. These amendments demanded security against the apprehended encroachments of the General Government, not against those of the local governments.

In compliance with a sentiment thus generally expressed, to quiet fears thus extensively entertained, amendments were proposed by the required majority in Congress and adopted by the States. These amendments contain no expression indicating an intention to apply them to the State governments. This court can not so apply them.

That was the law in 1833 laid down by Chief Justice Marshall, and that is the law of the Supreme Court to-day. It is so universally settled that it is useless to take up the time of this body to cite further authority.

Now, in conclusion I want to say that the criminal laws of the State of Delaware have been framed and amended from time to time for the purpose of reforming the criminal, as well as for the general good of the public. But I say to you, in framing the penalties we have not made such penalties as would be pleasing to the criminal. No State undertakes to inflict penalties that will be approved by the criminal. It has been well said—

No man e'er felt the halter draw,
With good opinion of the law.

Now, one more word in regard to the reformation of criminals. In the beginning of my speech I showed where the youthful offender and offenders for the first time have every opportunity that anyone can reasonably ask; but when you come down to the brute criminal, I say to you that he can be better reformed in a cage than he can running loose preying upon the community.

The State of Delaware has made its laws for the benefit of the entire State, for the general good of the law-abiding citizens of that State. The laws of Delaware are constitutional and just. We will not permit other persons or States to interfere with the execution of those laws.

The practice of making martyrs of criminals is a modern curse of society. I have but little patience with any man who permits his sympathy to run with a felon so far as to forget the rights of law-abiding citizens of the State. The State of Delaware, being satisfied with the justice of her laws, is willing to demonstrate the principle, if need be, that it is better to stand alone for that which is right than to stand with the multitude for that which is wrong. [Applause.]

MINING CLAIMS ON SEWARD PENINSULA, ALASKA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3397 be taken from the Speaker's table and be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 3397 be taken from the Speaker's table and considered at the present time. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3397) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to mining claims.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which requires that on each claim located after the 10th day of May, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, be suspended for the year 1913 as to mining claims situated on Seward Peninsula, in the District or Territory of Alaska west of longitude 158 west and north of latitude 64, so that no mining claim which has been regularly located and recorded as required by the local laws and mining regulations within such area so described shall be subject to forfeiture for nonperformance of the annual assessment for the year 1913: Provided, That the claimant or claimants of any mining location in order to secure the benefits of this act shall cause to be recorded in the office where the location notice and certificate is filed on or before December 31, 1913, a notice that he, she, or they in good faith intend to hold or work said claim: And provided further, That this amendment shall in no way annul, modify, or repeal said section as to any mining claims, either in the District of Alaska or elsewhere, except those said mining claims within the area herein particularly described.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would explain the bill to the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed yesterday in the Senate. It was brought up from the Committee on Mines and Mining by Senator WALSH and reported favorably, and on page 5909 of the RECORD and the following page is a complete statement of the necessity for its passage. This is a bill permitting the suspension of assessment work on claims in the Seward Peninsula. I desire to state that the city of Seattle and the people of the north coast have brought out from that country many miners, for the reason that they could not be taken care of in Nome this winter, stricken as that city was by a great tidal storm six weeks ago. The reasons for the passing of this bill are stated fully in yesterday's RECORD. The bill passed unanimously in the Senate. The necessity is because the miners are not there to do the work, many are without means, and the time is very limited.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that this is for the purpose of accommodating the claimants on this peninsula because of the recent storm up there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; exactly so.

Mr. MANN. That storm practically put the work out of business?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. It should be stated that these miners go out on sleds in the wintertime. They go as far as 300 miles, and all along the Seward Peninsula coast the road-houses, where they stop at night, have been washed away. They can not make the trips—many of them. The mail will not be carried along those routes this winter in many cases.

Mr. MANN. Am I correct—some one told me so about these claims—that they have to be worked in the wintertime, when the ground is frozen, because they can not be worked in the summer time, owing to the amount of water in the ground?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; they can not get over some of the territory except in wintertime. Now but one month is left. That is the exact reason for the necessity of relieving these people now.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it, it is necessary for the miners to wait until the streams freeze in order to get to their claims?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. And in the summer time it is practically impossible for them to get to their claims. I understand further that in this disaster at Nome a considerable part of the supplies that were in the town were destroyed, and even if those men wanted to go to their lands they could not procure supplies to take with them—supplies necessary to enable them to subsist—and therefore under the laws they would lose their claims unless they did the work.

Similar legislation was enacted some 20 years ago, when there was a great disaster in California, and the law was suspended for a period of 1 year at that time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. This bill is a copy of the bill in that California case, except that in this case the suspension runs only to December 31.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do.

Mr. MACDONALD. Does this territory comprise what is known as the Nome mining district?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. It is the Nome district, comprising the Seward district, and the boundaries are fixed by latitude and longitude.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERSONAL STATEMENT.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to occupy six minutes of the time of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] asks unanimous consent to address the House for six minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, in the RECORD of yesterday I am recorded as being absent. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I was present on that occasion and voted "aye" on the motion to adjourn, which was not in keeping with my former record in voting upon that question.

Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye" on that occasion because of a serious conviction. We came here before the golden dandelions were born or the sluggish snakes had left their winter dens. We were here when the fair bosom of nature began to swell into beauty and activity, and by the aid and encouragement of sunshine and rain we have seen that beauty and activity develop into a bountiful crop worth more than $10,000,000,000. That crop has now been harvested, and we are witnessing its rapid transportation from the place of its production to the home of the consumer. We are now witnessing the last days of the old year, and the Speaker's patience in staying here all the time, steadfast to his duties, reminds us much of Job. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, we have stayed here until the leader of the majority, Mr. UNDERWOOD, has become afflicted with senatorialitis, and he can not be here. We have stayed here until the minority leader on the Progressive side, Mr. MURDOCK, is seriously afflicted with a feverish attack of Chautauqualosis [laughter], and he does not want to be here. We have stayed here until the minority leader on the Republican side, Mr. MANN, has become afflicted with a lingering type of that dreadful disease, filibusteroids [laughter], and he is anxious to leave for treatment. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the entire membership of this House is now suffering with an attack of prolong-temitis. [Laughter.] And, Mr. Speaker, if we get a fresh breath from the beautiful hills of our districts before the beginning of the next session of Congress, I have reached the conviction that it is absolutely necessary to vote "aye" on all motions for adjournment. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I changed my vote yesterday and voted "aye," and I intend to vote "aye" on all occasions for an adjournment during the remainder of this session, unless an emergency arises which demands a contrary vote. During all the long, drawn-out, hot, and weary months of this session I have remained here at my post of duty, except a few days, just long enough to pay my respects to Labor Day in my district, voting against adjournment, but now I want to be in my district when the old year dies to welcome the new year with my masters and take instructions from them concerning my duties in the next session of Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up any further time of the House on this question, but I am anxious for some gentleman on the floor of this House to make a motion to adjourn, so that I can register my vote "aye" with a faint hope that my longings for the sweet companionship and wise counsel of my constituents may be realized before we bid farewell to the old year 1913.

NATIONAL DRAINAGE CONGRESS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a statement of the National Drainage Congress concerning a bill (H. R. 8189) introduced by the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri, September 16, 1913, establishing a flood protection and drainage fund, and providing for the protection, drainage, and reclamation of the overflowed and swamp lands in the United States, in promotion of the general welfare, in prevention of the dissemination of malaria and other diseases among the several States, and to promote interstate commerce by navigation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to revise and extend the remarks that I made on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL ACTION FOR THE SUSPENSION OF NAVAL CONSTRUCTION PROGRAMS.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution passed by the Massachusetts Peace Society.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a resolution by the Massachusetts Peace Society. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

INTERNATIONAL ACTION FOR THE SUSPENSION OF NAVAL CONSTRUCTION PROGRAMS.

The directors of the Massachusetts Peace Society have learned with profound satisfaction of the resolution introduced in the House of Representatives urging our Government to cooperate with the Government of Great Britain in the effort for international action to secure a year's suspension of the naval construction programs of the great powers. We earnestly indorse this resolution and urge its prompt passage by Congress as a solemn expression of the purpose of the American people to do everything in their power to check the present mad naval rivalry of the nations, with its menace to the world's peace, and relieve the burden of taxation which is exhausting the peoples. While thus working for joint action to this imperative end, we demand that there shall be no increase of our own naval program.

We call upon our Massachusetts press, churches, and all agencies of public influence to unite in promoting this high endeavor; and we resolve that copies of this declaration be sent to the President of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Adopted at a meeting of the board of directors of the Massachusetts Peace Society, at Boston, November 6, 1913.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the resolution of the New York Peace Society on the same subject printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a resolution by the New York Peace Society. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if the resolutions are the same except as to the name of the society?

Mr. GEORGE. They relate to the same subject, but are worded differently and come from different bodies.

Mr. MANN. They are not the same resolution?

Mr. GEORGE. They are not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

The officers and directors of the New York Peace Society have noted with profound gratification and approval the introduction into the House of Representatives of the Hensley resolution, urging our Government to cooperate with the Governments of Great Britain and other powers in securing joint action whereby a suspension of naval construction programs relating to new vessels might be secured for one year, and the enlightened remarks thereon by the Speaker of the House and the leader of the minority.

We heartily indorse the resolution and urge its adoption as a promising and reasonable method of making a beginning in a permanent reduction of military and naval budgets all over the world, which would at one and the same time take a heavy burden from the back of industry and open the door to the economic and social betterment of all the peoples and to the establishment of a relation of mutual trust and neighborliness among the nations which might happily replace the present attitude of armed distrust and fear.

We call upon the people, the press, the churches, and all agencies for moral well-being throughout our great State to unite in promoting this high endeavor as in keeping with the best purpose and desire of the American people.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

SENATE.

Monday, November 17, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Assistant Secretary (Henry M. Rose) read the following communication:

NOVEMBER 17, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,

President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

TELEPHONE SERVICE IN THE DISTRICT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia acknowledging the receipt of resolution of the Senate of the 13th instant calling for certain information concerning the telephone service in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have brought to the attention of the Senate several times at this session Senate bill 3091, which provides for extension work in the State colleges of agriculture. In the near future I hope to present that bill somewhat in detail to the Senate and a little later on to ask for action upon it. In the meantime I wish to add another letter from the president of a State college of agriculture in commendation of the measure. It is from the president of the State Agricultural College of Colorado. It is a short letter, and I think it will be serviceable to Senators in considering the measure which we will soon be called upon to pass. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

THE STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE,
Fort Collins, Colo., October 31, 1913.

HON. HOKE SMITH,
Committee on Education and Labor,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your kind letter, and thank you for the opportunity of writing you concerning your bill, S. 3091, providing for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges of the several States and the United States Department of Agriculture.

First, I thoroughly believe in the principle of Federal aid for extension work. It is easy to estimate how helpful this will be when we take into account the great good that has come to the several States through Federal aid given to the agricultural colleges and experiment stations. This, in a way, will complete the lines of support and will give agricultural colleges, especially in the newer States, the opportunity of carrying their work to the people, which they have long desired, but have not been able to carry out on account of insufficient funds.

The bill as drawn by you meets the needs of the various States well, and the cooperation provided for between the agricultural colleges and experiment stations will insure that local problems are dealt with and the work directed by men who know local conditions. On the other hand, the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture or his representatives on all projects carried out under the funds provided will guard against their misuse. Ten thousand dollars provided each year will provide for permanent organization for carrying out the work and insure its continuance from year to year. The increase in appropriations on the condition that the State put in a like amount has been proven, by former experience, to be sound in every respect. It insures the interest of the State, and the whole provision is fair. Only those who have seen the good coming from well-directed extension activities can estimate the value of such. The appropriation of $10,000 will permit the establishment of a permanent organization, which to States like our own, where State appropriations vary in value from biennium to biennium and are at times uncertain, will make success of extension projects certain. It will do away with the necessity of practically discontinuing all extension work when State funds are not appropriated. We never could have reached the plane of service we have in our agricultural colleges and experiment stations had we not had the funds given by the Morrill, the Hatch, and the Adams Acts, together with their amendments.

I hope your bill will be enacted into law; it will prove an epoch-making piece of legislation. I appreciate this opportunity of writing you.

Respectfully, yours,

CHAS. A. LOBY,
President.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a few days ago there was inserted in the Record what purported to be a circular by the Society for the Protection of the Yosemite National Park of California. I never heard of the society before, but Mr. Robert Underwood Johnson appears to be its president. This same Mr. Johnson is opposing the bill pending here for supplying San Francisco with water from the Tuolumne.

Mr. Johnson petitioned the Secretary of the Interior to aid in obtaining an appropriation on behalf of the Government to build a wagon road into the Hetch Hetchy Valley. The Secretary of the Interior requested Maj. William P. Littebrant to investigate Mr. Johnson's request, so that it might be acted upon. I send to the desk a letter from Maj. Littebrant to the Secretary of the Interior relative to this matter, which I believe will be of interest to the Senate. I ask that it be read.

There being no objection, the letter was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT,
Yosemite, Cal., October 18, 1913.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 12, inclosing copy of letter and newspaper clipping from the New York Times on the Hetch Hetchy controversy, the author of both inclosures being Robert Underwood Johnson. The reply to your letter has been delayed, due to the fact that I had never been in the Hetch Hetchy Valley, and no opportunity occurred to visit there until recently. I have just returned from there.

It is believed by me that the Hetch Hetchy Valley, as a scenic attraction, is much overrated. In the lower portion of the Hetch Hetchy Valley there is a depression, in which the flood waters settle, forming a lake, which annually disappears through evaporation. No fish get in this lake, and it becomes a breeding place of mosquitoes, so that the people who visit the Hetch Hetchy during the spring and summer or live there are obliged to wear nets and gloves. The water in this lake, judging from the shore marks, stands at about 8 feet deep when its connection with the river is severed, due to receding waters.

There are other valleys in the park that are just as interesting for the tourist who might wish to gain access to them, either mounted or afoot. These canyons are, notably, Jack Main Canyon, Kerrick Canyon, Stubblefield Canyon, Benson Lake, Matterhorn Canyon, and Virginia Canyon. The Grand Canyon of the Tuolumne is now accessible by a wagon road, namely, the Tioga Road, but there is no evidence that any people avail themselves of this road to visit any of the scenic wonders in the eastern portion of the park. The Yosemite Valley itself is incomparably superior in every respect to the Hetch Hetchy.

The length of the road from Hog Ranch to the floor of the Hetch Hetchy Valley will be about 10 miles in length, 5 miles of it being through rock cutting. No estimate of this work has been made, but from our experience in rock cutting here it is believed that this road can not possibly be constructed for less than $150,000, whereas $250,000 would probably be more near its ultimate cost. It is believed that no circumstance or emergency would at present justify this expenditure, especially when that sum, if expended on the roads of and the approaches to the Yosemite Valley and the trails of the park, would place within reach of all the people a greater number of and more interesting attractions than the same sum if expended on the construction of a wagon road that would make the Hetch Hetchy Valley accessible by wagon transportation. There is already an excellent saddle-horse trail from the Hog Ranch to the floor of the Hetch Hetchy, and out of it in three different directions. Furthermore, it is believed that if the city of San Francisco constructs a reservoir in that valley and a wagon road around it on one of the upper benches of the bluffs that the charm of the location will be enhanced rather than injured. In case the city of San Francisco secures this right I am assured that it will construct a wagon road from the Hog Ranch, the steepest grade being 4 per cent, that will make this location accessible. The beholder will then observe not a mosquito-infested valley but a beautiful mountain lake surrounded by vertical cliffs, from the road around which the gorges north and east of the Hetch Hetchy, not now easily accessible, will be more easily within reach.

The undersigned does not believe that any person is deterred from visiting the Hetch Hetchy through the difficulty of the approach, nor is it believed that good hotel accommodations in there would present a sufficiently attractive feature to cause a larger flow of travel. At any rate, the difficulties at present encountered in securing better hotel accommodations in this valley do not justify any efforts being made by the Government to establish hotel accommodations in a place where the mosquito plague is so objectionable, and if made the probability is that no capital could be interested in a project the conditions surrounding which would doom the venture to failure in advance.

It is therefore recommended that no action be taken toward the construction of the road, as advocated by Dr. Johnson.

Very respectfully,

WM. T. LITTEBRANT,
Major, First Cavalry, Acting Superintendent.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented memorials of the Woman's Club of Durham, of the Tourists' Club of Keene, and of sundry citizens of Keene, all in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation authorizing the city of San Francisco to use the waters of Hetch Hetchy Valley, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRISTOW presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ramona, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called Burnett-Dillingham immigration bill and remonstrating against the enactment of legislation making the 12th day of October of each and every year a national holiday and designating it discovery day, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. GOFF presented a memorial of sundry employees of the La Belle Works of the American Sheet and Tin Plate Co., of Wheeling, W. Va., remonstrating against the proposed dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IMPROVEMENT OF COLUMBIA AND SNAKE RIVERS.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I present resolutions passed by the Columbia and Snake River Waterways Association at its fall meeting held at Kennewick, Wash., September 25 and 26, 1913. These resolutions refer to a matter that is of much importance to the people of the West, and I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CANALIZATION OF COLUMBIA RIVER.

Resolutions passed by the Columbia and Snake River Waterways Association at its fall meeting, Kennewick, Wash., September 25 and 26, 1913:

Whereas the existing project for the improvement of Columbia River and tributaries above Celilo Falls to the mouth of Snake River proposes to facilitate navigation by the removal of obstructing bowlders and ledges and raking the gravel shoals in order to make safe and available the channel that now exists; and
Whereas such improvement is at best only a step in the direction of making said river safely and profitably navigable; and
Whereas the growth and development of the country tributary to the said river and the needs of commerce require the canalization of said river in order to secure conditions adequate to modern transportation needs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Columbia and Snake River Waterways Association in convention assembled at Kennewick, Wash., this 25th and 26th days of September, 1913, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to secure appropriate action by the Congress of the United States at the earliest practicable moment authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to cause examination and survey, with estimated cost on a basis of continuous work to be made of that portion of the Columbia River above described, of a project for its improvement that will enable said river to be safely and economically navigated by modern steamers and barges during the entire year except when navigation is suspended on account of weather conditions, and in addition to report on the present and prospective commercial importance of the project covered by the report; on the benefit to commerce likely to result from the proposed plan of improvement; on the existence and establishment of private and public terminals; and the development and utilization of water power for industrial and commercial purposes and other improvements, as provided in the rivers and harbors act of the third session of the Sixty-second Congress.

CANALIZATION OF SNAKE RIVER.

Whereas the existing project for the improvement of Snake River in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho proposes to facilitate navigation by the removal of reefs and bowlders and scraping gravel bars; and
Whereas said proposed project will probably be completed within two years, and it is apparent that when completed such improvement is at best only a step in the direction of making said river safely and profitably navigable; and
Whereas under the existing project it is not assumed that the Snake River from Riparia to the mouth can be navigated except during the high-water periods, which do not exceed four to six months in every year; and
Whereas the growth and development of the country tributary to said river and the needs of commerce require the canalization of said river in order to secure conditions adequate to modern transportation needs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Columbia and Snake River Waterways Association in convention assembled at Kennewick, Wash., this 25th-26th days of September, 1913, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to secure appropriate action by the Congress of the United States at the earliest practicable moment authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to cause examination and survey, with estimated cost on basis of continuous work, to be made of that portion of the Snake River above described, of a project for its improvement that will enable said river to be safely and economically navigated by modern steamers and barges during the entire year except when navigation is suspended on account of weather conditions; and, in addition, to report on the present and prospective commercial importance of the project covered by the report, on the benefit to commerce likely to result from the proposed plan of improvement, on the existence and establishment of private and public terminals, and the development and utilization of water power for industrial and commercial purposes, and other improvements, as provided in the rivers and harbors act of the third session of the Sixty-second Congress.

Attest:

WALLACE R. STRUBLE,
Secretary Columbia and Snake River
Waterways Association.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I have recently received from various parts of my State, by the dozens, petitions and letters in the nature of petitions asking immediate consideration of the pending currency bill. I do not care to encumber the RECORD with a number of the petitions, but I send one to the desk for reading. It illustrates the sentiment set forth in all. I do not ask for the reading of the signatures.

There being no objection, the petition was read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., November 8, 1913.

To the Hon. BENJAMIN F. SHIVELY and the Hon. JOHN W. KERN, United States Senate:

We, the undersigned citizens and voters of Montgomery County, Ind., being interested in the welfare and prosperity of our country and believing that the currency bill now pending in the United States Senate will be for the best interests of our people as a whole, ask that you each use every honorable means to bring about the passage of such bill at the earliest possible date in order that the present financial situation be relieved and normal business conditions established.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE, INDIANA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 8702) to authorize the county of Miami, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Wabash River, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It is an ordinary bridge bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by him. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber I could not hear the title of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please preserve order, so that Senators may be able to understand the business that is being transacted. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 3440) granting an increase of pension to Jacob W. Smith (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3441) granting an increase of pension to William H. Stewart (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JACKSON:

A bill (S. 3442) providing for the purchase of relics of James Monroe and others; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 3443) to correct the military record of Orceles Evans; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 3444) granting an increase of pension to Carrie A. Wells (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 3445) granting an increase of pension to Mary Parsons (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 3446) granting an increase of pension to Pleasant W. Logan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 79) authorizing a survey of the Snake River from Riparia to the mouth; and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 80) authorizing a survey of the Columbia River and its tributaries above Cello Falls to the mouth of the Snake River; to the Committee on Commerce.

EXTERMINATION OF HOG CHOLERA.

Mr. POMERENE. I introduce a bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The bill (S. 3439) appropriating funds for the purpose of providing and administering remedies for hog cholera was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have a letter here from the Hon. A. P. Sandles, president of the agricultural commission of the State of Ohio, bearing upon this subject. The disease of hog cholera has become a menace throughout the entire corn belt of the Central West. The losses are estimated annually at about $50,000,000. It is believed that remedies have been discovered which, if administered in the incipient state of the disease, can control it.

It is not a matter which is limited to one State. It is limited only by the number of States that raise corn in large quantities. The disease has become so prevalent that it is a serious loss not only to the farmers, but to the meat-consuming public.

I shall not ask that the letter be read, but I do ask that it be incorporated in the Record for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

STATE OF OHIO,
THE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION,
Columbus, November 15, 1913.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your efforts a year ago to secure Federal appropriation to combat the ravages of hog cholera in the Middle West corn belt leads me to believe that we can enlist your influences in this matter again.

The swine plague has assumed the proportions of a national blight and menace, and is the most discouraging handicap laid against the farmer in a dozen States.

Daily thousands of swine have died from this plague for the past several months and the money value of the loss climbs into millions.

At the present time our department here in Ohio has over 1,000 applications for serum treatment. Our veterinarians are swamped with the demands of swine owners for protection.

We can not keep pace with the demand. Other States are in like condition. Owners of pure breeds are disheartened. Their annual sale-day prospect is ruined. County and State fairs were scourged the past season and exhibits ruined.

Cattle feeders are discouraged. They do not feel secure and justified in purchasing or growing swine to fatten after their cattle, which is the rule whereby cattle feeding is made most profitable.

The high cost of meat is becoming a public-welfare question. Unless hog cholera can be checked the cost will go higher.

Many students of this swine plague believe that it can be controlled and eradicated, but such results can only be obtained by wide cooperation, strict quarantine, and stringent regulation.

Food supply is of nation-wide concern. Hog cholera materially affects food supply. The use of meat is almost universal. Why should not the Government become an interested party in the control of hog cholera?

Your efforts a year ago secured a small appropriation to fight this disease, but $75,000 is only a drop in the bucket of what is needed to fight this scourge of the corn-belt country.

When the estimated loss is $50,000,000 annually, surely Uncle Sam would be justified in spending half a million or more to prevent this tremendous loss, which involves both producer and consumer.

I believe Ohio and the country at large will applaud the men who will make a fight to have the Government undertake to control and eradicate hog cholera. Will you give some sign that the tens of thousands of farmers in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys have a friend in court?

Experiments are being made in three or four States, but these will afford no immediate relief. There should be a general and vigorous campaign at once, and States and United States should cooperate.

Please to have your views on this matter. Your interest appreciated. Thanks.

Respectfully,

A. P. SANDLES, President.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—GRACE HARRINGTON.

On motion of Mr. DILLINGHAM, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of S. 5868, Sixty-second Congress, granting an increase of pension to Grace Harrington, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report thereon.

SUSPENSION OF NAVAL CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. THOMAS. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read and that it may lie over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 215), as follows:

Resolved, That the recent suggestion of the Lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain, the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, that his Government was willing and ready to cooperate with other Governments to secure for one year a suspension of naval-construction programs presents a practical method whereby the nations of the world may at once materially reduce the enormous expense of increased investment in war material and equipment of which the United States should avail itself.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded the President with the request that, consistently with the interests of the United States, he use his influence to consummate the arrangement suggested by Mr. Churchill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

THE TELEPOST.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I submit a resolution for the appointment of a committee to investigate and report to the Senate upon the merits of the Telepost now in operation between St. Louis and Chicago as to its word-carrying capacity, accuracy, economy, and general efficiency; as to its use in connection with the Post Office Department; and any obstacles in the way of its extension, either in connection with the Government or otherwise. I ask that the resolution may be read and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The resolution (S. Res. 216) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three Senators, including the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, be appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate and report upon the merits of the Telepost now in operation between St. Louis and Chicago as to word-carrying capacity, accuracy, economy, and general efficiency; as to its use in connection with the Post Office Department; and any obstacle in the way of its extension, either in connection with the Government or otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I am well acquainted with the president and secretary of this company. I know them to be upright and honest men. I have personally investigated this matter, and I desire that a committee consisting of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and two other Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate the subject. I send a letter of explanation to the desk, which I ask may be printed in the Record without reading and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to accompany the resolution.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

New York, September 30, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your inquiries at our recent interview I submit for your consideration the following facts:

Two years of actual work between cities of the Middle West, including Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Indianapolis, have proved beyond controversy that the telepost system answers all the requirements of commercial telegraphy and surpasses all other systems in word-carrying capacity, accuracy, economy, secrecy, and general efficiency.

The inventor of the system, Patrick B. Delany, spent nearly 30 years in working out and solving the many problems confronting him in his effort to devise an automatic rapid system of telegraphy that would be able to cope with the steadily increasing inductive disturbances due to the rapid electrical developments of the country.

In 1899 my brother and myself joined forces with Mr. Delany for the purpose of perfecting the system and of building up an independent telegraph company, as we all were convinced that only in this way could the greatest benefits of his remarkable discoveries benefit the people of the entire country.

Too many inventions had been bought up and suppressed, too much discouragement had been given to inventors for us to be willing to trust to the telegraph companies the proper handling of our joint work. All scientific men had come to realize the correctness of a statement made by the eminent Prof. Pupin, of Columbia University, that over the doors of the telegraph companies was the legend "No inventors or scientific men wanted."

After some years spent in seeking money from men of means we were forced to feel that it was practically impossible to finance the telepost in this way. Every man approached by us was, either by persuasion or threats, induced to have nothing to do with the enterprise.

We therefore organized the Telepost Co. with $18,000,000 capitalization, no bonds, no preferred stock, shares $10 each, all common.

As a guaranty of absolute safety for our shareholders and to prevent anyone on the inside or the outside of our organization bringing about a merging or selling out of the enterprise by the usual method of buying on the open market the stock control of the company the entire capitalization was issued to a board of voting trustees, each pledged to maintain the integrity of the company and each having full veto power against any attempt to destroy its independence.

Voting trustees' certificates were issued to shareholders entitling them to all the rights and privileges of the actual stock excepting the right to vote. This board consists of—

Hon. Henry W. Blair, Manchester, N. H., and Washington, D. C.; Gen. A. R. Buffington, United States Army, Madison, N. J.; Hon. Charles J. Faulkner, Washington, D. C.; Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., New York City; Rear Admiral Charles D. Sigbee, United States Navy, Washington, D. C.; H. Lee Sellers, New York City.

No one was allowed to buy more than 100 shares of stock, as we recognized that our strength would lie in the number of people interested in the enterprise as fully as in the money secured from the sale of our securities.

Our shareholders, now numbering over 17,000, are scattered over the entire country. This has simplified and reduced the cost of getting rights of way and franchises to a remarkable degree, as we felt we were justified in expecting.

It would have been impossible for us to have overcome the vicious opposition of our opponents and the many obstacles put in the way of every forward step we attempted to take but for the helpful cooperation and support of our shareholders and of the thousands of friends secured by the campaign of education we have carried on from the beginning. Even with their help our progress has been shamefully delayed, it being a well-known fact that an enterprise depending upon popular support can be most easily injured by delaying its progress and thereby discouraging its supporters.

Our poles have been cut down; property owners have been persuaded to charge us exorbitant prices for rights of way; franchises have been refused or held up; our wires continually tampered with where we were in operation; our customers threatened by the telegraph companies if they gave us their business; expensive litigation instituted against us, much of which is at the present moment pending, and all of it based on frivolous grounds; and in many cases well-planned efforts for securing the necessary funds for the construction of our lines have been killed by the active efforts of men of the highest prominence in the financial world. Boards of trade that had taken up actively the work of securing funds for extensions of our lines were practically forced to withdraw their support by the powerful interests against which we were contending.

Contracts had been agreed upon for the use by the Telepost of independent telephone lines throughout the State of Ohio, and by which we would have been able to connect our western offices with Pittsburgh, Buffalo, and Detroit, in addition to all the important cities in Ohio. Our men were choosing offices, and Telepost installations were being prepared when the Bell Telephone people bought up, lock, stock, and barrel, these Ohio independent telephone companies. Our contracts naturally were not executed.

When the laws of Ohio prevented the holding by the Bell of these companies J. P. Morgan & Co., at a cost of $7,200,000, purchased the properties in question. In their sworn affidavits they stated that these properties were bought as an investment and would be operated in entire harmony with the independent interests.

Believing these statements to be true, the president of the company in Ohio agreed to furnish us the lines we had previously arranged for, brought the contracts to New York for formal authority from Morgan & Co. to sign them, only to find himself forced to refuse us the use of the lines wanted.

The independence of the Telepost is and has always been fully recognized. The "independence" claimed by J. P. Morgan & Co. was evidently of a different kind.

After two years of commercial work between the western cities named above, the Bell Telephone interests bought the bonds of the company, leasing us the line running into Chicago. From this time on our wire service became so utterly unreliable that it was practically impossible to handle our business. When, during a period of six weeks we had a working wire only four days, we realized that the only wise thing for us to do was to stop service until we could build our own wires or lease them from companies friendly to our interests.

Fortunately for us, the work we had done absolutely proved the claims we had made for our system. It had also secured for us the good will of numerous firms and corporations in the cities in which we had been operating.

We have now secured a satisfactory wire between Chicago and St. Louis and opened up Telepost offices in those cities. As against the 35 cents for 10 words charged by the other companies we are giving 25 words for 25 cents when delivered by messenger or telephone. We also give 50 words for 25 cents and 10 words for 10 cents, when these messages, having been sent by wire, may be delivered through the post office.

We feel that the fuller development of these latter services in cooperation with the post office might be made to be the entering wedge in bringing about Government ownership and operation of the telegraph.

We have sold about one-ninth of the stock of the company, the amount received having come in in small sums spread over the six years in which our progress has been delayed by our opponents.

We have secured rights of way and franchises covering practically all of the distance between New York and Washington, with many miles of poles already set along this route.

We own an entrance into Boston and have a franchise unlimited as to time, permitting us to lay our ducts in the streets of Boston, connecting us with the business districts of that city. Under this franchise much of the work has been done, and we are free to do the remainder when occasion demands.

We have secured entrances into New York, with necessary office space. We have entrances into Chicago and connections into the business district.

We have arrangements made with a number of independent telephone companies throughout the country for the fullest cooperation they can give us, which includes entrance into their cities and distribution facilities.

We are now building, through a subsidiary of the Telepost, known as the Metropolitan Telephone & Telegraph Co., a trunk line between New York and Chicago, work having been centered thus far upon the Chicago-Toledo section, a large part of which is completed.

Mr. Delany and ourselves as well have from the beginning believed in Government ownership of telegraphs. We feel that the Telepost can best serve the people of the country when it is owned by the Government in connection with the post office.

Telepost rates, as stated above, are uniform throughout the country, regardless of distance. As our lines are extended and new offices opened, 25 cents will carry 25 words between any two offices connected by our wires. When the Government decides to own and control the telegraph business of the country, as is now the case in practically all nations, civilized and uncivilized, it should have the best.

It should handle the enormous business which will surely come when the shackles are taken off the telegraph service of the country by means of a system in which one wire has the word-carrying capacity of 40 to 60 as now operated by the companies that have for so long controlled the telegraph business of the United States.

While we feel abundantly able to build up and make fully successful the Telepost as an independent telegraph company, and while this success for our enterprise will force the other companies to give lower rates and better service than are at present enjoyed, we stand ready at any time to turn over all we have to the Government on terms that will be recognized as fair and reasonable, the chief feature being that our 17,000 shareholders, whose money and patience have enabled us to reach the position we now hold, shall be fairly and liberally dealt with.

It would be very gratifying to us if a committee could be appointed to investigate the claims we make and to secure reliable data as to the serviceableness and value of the Telepost system as a condition precedent to intelligent action on the part of the Government in the matter of Government ownership of the telegraph.

Every facility will be given for such investigation, our offices now operating in St. Louis and Chicago affording full opportunity for the most careful examination of the subject in all of its details.

Yours, very respectfully,

H. LEE SELLERS.

BANKING LAWS OF KANSAS (S. DOC. NO. 238).

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bank depositors' guaranty law of the State of Kansas, and also the charter and by-laws of the Bankers' Deposit Guaranty & Surety Co., of Topeka, Kans., be printed as a Senate document. The deposit-guaranty law is a State law by which the State banks in the State of Kansas guarantee their depositors. The Bankers' Deposit Guaranty & Surety Co. is a corporation organized under the laws of the State by the national banks of the State as a private insurance company for the purpose of insuring depositors. I ask that the matter be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the matter presented by him may be printed as a public document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I received some days since a notice that a Democratic conference would be held with reference to the banking and currency bill. I was at that time in Nevada, and immediately started for Washington. The conference was held, however, before I was able to arrive. On my way I telegraphed to the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee my views regarding a modification of the pending banking bill, and I ask leave to print that telegram in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, together with a telegram addressed to the chairman of the Democratic conference upon the same subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OGDEN, UTAH, November 10, 1913.

Senator OWEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Will you kindly present to your committee the suggestion that the pending bill be modified so as to adapt our banking system to our Federal system of government by taking the States as the basic units and organizing in each State a federation of the State and National banks in the form of a State reserve association, and consolidating and mobilizing the reserves of the member banks for mutual protection against bank runs and stringencies, and then capping this structure by one Federal reserve bank of which the State reserve associations shall be members, in which the Government funds and a portion of the reserves of the State reserve associations shall be deposited, and which shall exercise similar functions in interstate commerce?

It seems to me of the highest importance that we should preserve the functions of the States and encourage in them a robust individuality. Many of the States will sometime equal in population and wealth the great European powers, and the importance of local self-government near to the people will be accentuated. I believe that our present dual system is the best that could be devised, both economically and politically, and that our economic units should, as far as legislation can control, correspond to our political units. We find that this rule obtains as to every form of voluntary organization, whether fraternal, charitable, social, economic, or professional. I do not see why it should not be extended to commercial organizations created by law. The much-complained-of contradiction of policies between the Interstate Railroad Commission and the State commissions is being adjusted by the annual conferences, and comity without force is gradually bringing them in harmony. I think the policy which is working out so successfully in transportation should be applied also to banking exchange and trade, and that the basic units should be the States and not newly created and shifting regions. I am on my way to Washington to attend the Democratic conference. I can not arrive before Thursday, but hope no conclusion will be reached before my arrival.

FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

CHICAGO, November 12, 1913.

Senator KERN,
Washington, D. C.:

I started from Nevada for Washington immediately upon announcement of Democratic conference. Can not arrive before 11 Thursday morning. I wish to present to the conference the Federal reserve system outlined in my telegram to Senator OWEN as opposed to the regional and central systems, which alone have thus far been considered. The distinction is basic and, in my judgment, must be determined by party action. In the interest of party harmony I urge that the conference shall not proceed until Democratic Senators have timely opportunity to be present, and therefore suggest its postponement for a day or two at least.

FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should also like to have printed in the RECORD one or two brief extracts from previous speeches and public documents containing my views upon the same subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IMPORTANCE OF INTERSTATE EXCHANGE.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 22, 1911.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, so far as the Democratic view of this question is concerned, it seems to me that interstate exchange is just as important a branch of interstate commerce as interstate transportation or interstate trade. We have stood patiently these biennial and decennial paralyzes in exchange which have arrested the business of the entire country, and which, as a matter of economics, are just as easily prevented as would be the obstruction of transportation itself.

With what patience would the people of the United States view a process by which the railway cars of the country could be gathered into the city of New York and there used as storehouses for goods, and then when the various sections of the country would call for cars for the moving of the crops New York would deny these cars upon the ground that they were being used as storehouses? And yet that has been practically what has been accomplished in interstate exchange. The circulating medium of the country, absolutely necessary both to transportation and to trade, has been locked up in New York through a vicious system of sending the reserves of the country banks to the great central banks to be loaned out by the latter in speculative promotion and development, thus arresting and obstructing their use when they are required for the exchanges and the trade and the transportation of the country.

This is a great question, involving just as scientific adjustment as that of transportation itself; and yet Congress has done nothing whatever upon this subject under the administration of the Republican Party. For years nothing whatever was done by way of amendment of our banking act except to give the banks larger powers in the increase of credit. No restrictions have been imposed upon them tending to the security of depositors or the prevention of panics.

DEMOCRATIC PLAN OF BANKING REFORM.

In my judgment, the Democratic plan of bank organization should be practically like that of our system of Government, the recognition of each State as an economic unit and the union of the State associations under some plan of federalization. The Aldrich plan absolutely obliterates the States, and creates in their place 16 commercial zones, in which the branch organizations of the central organization are organized. I would substitute for those zones the States themselves, and organize in each one of the States a national reserve association similar to the central national reserve association which the Senator from Rhode Island desires. I would have both the State banks and the national bank organized in these reserve associations within the boundaries of each State as a separate and individual unit, and then having created 46 such associations I would devise some method of federalizing them just as we federalized our State governments by the creation of a National Government. I would find some method of federalizing them through some commission at Washington that would fairly represent all these various States, with powers of recommendation, with powers of examination, and with powers of suggestion, in the hope that ultimately these State organizations thus federalized would by a process of evolution fill every useful purpose that could be accomplished by the Aldrich plan.

BANKING REFORM.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 10, 1911.]

The Senate had under consideration the bill to require the National Monetary Commission to report, etc.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Logical national legislation on the banking question involves, in my mind, the recognition of interstate exchange as a branch of interstate commerce by taking hold of and regulating the State banks engaged in interstate exchange, just as we take hold of purely State railroads that are engaged in interstate transportation. The purpose of the legislation being to prevent paralysis of interstate exchange through constantly recurring bank panics, any legislation which leaves the State banks out of consideration as factors in the maintenance of an unimpaired interstate exchange is sadly lacking, for the State banks to-day equal the national banks in the extent of their capital, deposits, and credits. They are all engaged in interstate exchange, and constitute links in the general banking system of the country; and just as the strength of a chain is that of its weakest link, so it may be claimed that the strength of our banking system is affected by the condition of its weakest bank, and that all banks, both National and State, must be regulated by the National Government in the interest of interstate commerce.

STRENGTHENING THE INDIVIDUAL BANKS.

I would first strengthen the individual banks by requiring of them a certain relation of capital and reserves to their obligations. As it is, the national banking act prescribes no proportion between the capital of a bank and the amount of deposits it can receive. The capital of a bank constitutes the margin of security upon which depositors rely. Sound banking requires that it should equal 20 per cent of the bank's obligations. I would not at first, however, attempt to reach this limit, but would simply provide that every bank should maintain a capital and surplus equal to 20 per cent of its deposit obligations.

As to reserves, sound banking requires that a bank should keep on hand at least 20 per cent of its deposit obligations in order to meet the current checks of its depositors.

The national banking act requires 25 per cent reserve in central reserve cities, of which all must be kept in cash; a reserve of 25 per cent in reserve cities, of which one-half can be deposited in central reserve city banks; and 15 per cent in the country banks, of which nine-fifteenths, or three-fifths, can be deposited in reserve city and central reserve city banks.

I would not at present increase these reserves, but I would diminish the proportion of the reserves which the country banks can deposit in other banks at the rate of one-fifteenth annually until such permitted deposits in other banks reach five-fifteenths, or one-third, of the total reserve; and there I would stop for the present.

I would also diminish the proportion which the reserve city banks can deposit in the central reserve city banks at the rate of one-twenty-fifth annually until such permitted deposits in central reserve city banks reach five twenty-fifths, or one-fifth, of the total reserves instead of one-half, as at present.

THE STATE BANKS.

I would require the same capital and reserves of State banks engaged in interstate exchange as are required of national banks; but the question is whether this shall be made coercive or persuasive. I have no doubt of the power of the National Government to compel State banks, as instrumentalities of interstate commerce, to comply with its regulations as to capital and reserves; but as this is a comparatively new contention and may arouse opposition to any general measure which contains it, it might be well to make it merely persuasive by providing that State banks may become members of the national reserve association, hereafter referred to, upon complying with the requirements of the national banking act as to capital and reserves and as to examination and inspection by the National Government.

UNIONIZING BANKS FOR PROTECTION OF DEPOSITORS AND FOR PREVENTION OF BANK PANICS.

The next step would be to unionize the banks for preventing bank panics and the interruption of interstate exchange by enabling them to summon their reserves to any point of danger, just as the Government concentrates its troops at the point of attack.

The Aldrich plan centralizes these at Washington by the creation of a reserve association of America, embracing in its membership as stockholders all the national banks and dividing the country, regardless of State lines, into 16 subdivisions or zones. In the most prominent commercial city of which is located a branch of the reserve association.

There are two objections to this—one, that it practically creates a central bank, concerning which there will be a great difference of opinion between the two political parties, and the other that with the concentration of the money power of the country now existing such central bank would fall under the control of such power, and that the perversion of the proper function of banking from that of advancing exchange to that of promotion and speculation would continue. Even if the Aldrich plan be theoretically and economically sound, I regard it as utterly impracticable at present, because of the balance of the political parties, each controlling a part of the Government, and because of the universal distrust of certain powerful banking groups, to give it the sanction of law. Nor do I think that the reasoning regarding a central bank which would apply to similar institutions in England, France, and Germany can be applied in America, a union of 46 States, most of which in area and population will some time rival those great countries.

It must be recollected also that in those countries the national power is absolute over commerce in its entirety, whilst in our country the National Government is absolute only in interstate and foreign commerce, the State commerce being under the jurisdiction of the respective States. As, therefore, commerce itself under our system of government is divided into two parts—one part under the control of the States and the other part under the control of the union of States, or the Nation—it is desirable that in the exercise of the regulating power we should have regard to the States as the units or subdivisions with reference to which the national power is to be exercised; and we should endeavor to bring about cooperation and harmony between the individual States on the one hand and the union of States on the other in the regulation of our commerce.

I would therefore organize under national law a reserve association in each State, to be formed by the national banks of each State; membership in which I would grant also to State banks engaged in interstate commerce, as all except the savings banks are, upon compliance with such requirements as to capital, reserve, investigation, and correction as exist with reference to national banks.

I would provide that such reserve association should have the power to examine the individual banks composing its membership and to exercise a certain degree of corrective power over them, and that it should have the power to insure the depositors of each individual bank composing its membership. Some speedy method should be provided for immediately taking over the assets and paying the depositors of any failing bank. I would give to such State reserve associations such of the powers, rights, and privileges given by the Aldrich plan to the proposed central reserve association as may be deemed destrable. In other words, I would endeavor to create in each sovereign State a financial center for that State, holding a position with reference to the State similar to that which New York holds to the United States.

As the banks of some of the smaller or weaker States might not be strong enough to form reserve associations under this plan, I would grant them the privilege, if they so desired, of joining a reserve association organized in an adjoining State.

I would turn over to such reserve associations all the note-issuing functions of the individual banks constituting its membership, including the issuing of emergency currency.

FEDERALIZING THE ASSOCIATION.

I would then federalize these State reserve associations through the organization of a national banking board, of which a certain proportion of the members should be selected by the national reserve associations under some plan that would promote proper geographical distribution, the National Government, through the President, with the aid and confirmation of the Senate, to name the other members. I would make the Secretary of the Treasury the chairman of such commission and the Comptroller of the Currency its secretary.

I would not, in the first instance, give such commission large powers, but would invest it with powers of examination, correction of evil practices, and recommendation to the President and to Congress. I would expect the national banking commission, by a process of evolution, to gradually increase in its powers as the result of experience in administration and legislation, and I would expect it to perfect a system of cooperation with the banking commissions of the respective States.

NOTE-ISSUING FUNCTIONS.

I do not understand that Mr. Aldrich's plan provides for any additional currency, unless it be emergency currency. It simply provides that all the existing note-issuing functions of the national banks shall be turned over to the reserve association of America, of which the national banks are constituent members. The national-bank notes during the past 10 years have increased from about $300,000,000 to over $600,000,000 as the result of the increase of the percentage of the bond security available for note issue and also as the result of the increased amount of United States bonds. The national banks also have the power to issue emergency currency to the extent of $500,000,000, the retirement of which is forced by a gradually increasing interest rate or tax.

None of the latter is now extant. Under the Aldrich plan, therefore, the National Reserve Association would have the power to keep outstanding the present issue of national-bank notes of over $600,000,000, and I think a similar provision should be made that the National Reserve Association of each State should take over the note-issuing functions of its constituent members. I would see no present necessity for changing the character of this issue. I would allow it to be gradually retired by the payment of the bonds themselves or by refunding such bonds into national bonds similar to the Panama Canal issue, bearing a rate of interest of about 3 per cent and without the note-issuing privilege.

I do not think we need seriously concern ourselves in the near future regarding either an asset-secured currency or a bond-secured currency or a national currency. The country is now firmly established on the deposit and check system, under which banks are permitted to give credit to their customers on their books aggregating, on the average, more than five times the amount of cash which the banks have on hand. The borrower turns his loan into a deposit and checks against his deposit, and his checks constitute a currency admirably adapted to the requirements of the country, the checks remaining out long enough to close the particular exchange or sale or transaction and then being retired. Under this method $1,000,000,000 of cash in the banks as reserves is given an efficiency of $5,000,000,000 through the loan and deposit system in the national banks and a similar amount in the State banks, so that during the past 10 years, as the result of a constantly increasing volume of gold which has been drawn into the banks as their cash reserves, we have had an increase of bank loans and corresponding bank deposits from about five billion to ten billion dollars, or, in other words, an increase of 100 per cent in the credit facilities of the banks, whilst the population has increased only about 20 per cent. This accounts in great part for the extraordinary rise in prices which has taken place and which has seriously disarranged the relations of debtor to creditor, of employer to employee, and of consumer to producer. An era of constantly increasing prices is almost as bad as an era of constantly falling prices, and both are caused by variation in the value of the medium of exchange as the result of the quantitative theory.

If stability in the value of the medium of exchange is desirable, it is clear, all other things being equal, that as the number of basic dollars increase the number of paper representatives should diminish, and paper representatives should only be availed of in order to tide over the time when there is a diminution in the production of basic dollars and a danger of a fall of values through contraction. It is clear, therefore, that at no period in the history of the world has there been so little need of the issue of paper money as at present, for the number of our basic gold dollars has vastly increased in quantity, in much greater proportion than the population, and the loan and deposit system has opened up such a vast area of credits as to do away with the need of so-called credit money. Indeed, the only occasions upon which credit money is needed at all under existing conditions is when a bank panic comes and depositors withdraw from the banks the actual dollars which stand at the base of the loan and deposit system. Then an emergency arises which necessitates some substitute in the shape of paper money which can be used as legal tender and can be paid out as a substitute for the basic money.

August 14, 1911.

Mr. BURTON. Has the amendment of the Senator from Nevada been read?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It has not. I will—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada desires to offer it, and it is in order.

Mr. BURTON. I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada desire to offer it as an amendment to the substitute or as an amendment to the original bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer it as an amendment to the substitute, as an additional section, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the proposed substitute the following words:

"Sec. —. That the Monetary Commission be, and it is hereby, instructed to draft and report for the consideration of Congress such amendments to the national banking act as, in its judgment, are necessary to secure the following results:

"1. The proper proportion of the capital of the individual national banks to their obligations.

"2. The proper proportion of the reserves of the individual national banks to their obligations.

"3. The proportion of such reserves, if any, which may be deposited by the individual banks in other banks, and the restrictions and nature of such deposits.

"4. The examination of such banks by the national authorities.

"5. The organization of such banks into local clearing house and emergency currency associations, and the inclusion therein of State banks engaged in interstate exchange, and the terms of their inclusion.

"6. The union of the national banks of each State in reserve associations for mutual protection and for protection of depositors, and the inclusion therein of State banks engaged in interstate exchange, and the terms of such inclusion.

"7. The federation of such State associations through a national banking board, composed of members fairly apportioned to the different sections of the country, and partly selected by such State associations and partly by the President of the United States; the inclusion in such board of the Secretary of the Treasury as chairman thereof and of the Comptroller of the Currency as secretary thereof.

"8. The powers of such national board, including therein the powers of investigation, publicity, and recommendation to the President and to Congress.

"9. The transfer to the associations above referred to of the note-issuing functions of the constituent banks and the gradual retirement of a bond-secured currency without dangerous contraction.

"10. The enlargement of the powers of the national banks with a view to enabling them to transact certain business now monopolized by State banks, and the restrictions thereon.

"11. And such other amendments as may be advisable to strengthen the individual national banks and the State banks engaged in interstate exchange and to mutually protect them against bank runs, to secure depositors in the prompt payment of their deposits, and to prevent breaks in or paralysis of interstate exchange."

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state that that simply asks for a report upon these questions for the consideration of Congress.

Mr. NEWLANDS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say, Mr. President, that the views which I expressed in these telegrams from the West were in favor of a Federal as against a regional or central bank system.

FIRST COUNTERPROPOSAL TO ALDRICH PLAN.

When the Aldrich bill was under consideration I presented my views to the Senate in opposition to that measure, and urged that in place of a central bank we should organize in each State a reserve association composed of both national and State banks within the boundaries of the State, and that we should enable such associations to consolidate a portion of the reserves of the member banks and mobilize them in such a way as that they could be presented at the point of attack and thus suppress any bank panic or do away with any temporary stringency that might prevail. I also urged that for interstate and national purposes the various State reserve associations should be federated in such a way as that, if a panic became interstate or nation wide, or if the stringency embraced more than one State or locality, the federated powers of these associations could be brought to bear to relieve the condition.

My impression is that that was the only definite plan presented on the Democratic side in opposition to the so-called Aldrich bill. At all events, I heard of no other. Democrats generally contenting themselves not with a presentation of a complete plan but with criticism of and objection to the then pending Aldrich bill. I still think, Mr. President, that such a system as I have indicated is the simplest and the best system; that it is a system of natural evolution.

The people of this country have become accustomed to think by States and also to think nationally. Our system involves 48 State sovereignties federated together in one national sovereignty. The people of the country in every form of organization, whether charitable, professional, or commercial, have been accustomed to organize first the State associations and then to federate them into some form of a national association. It strikes me that this natural form of evolution should be followed when we seek to organize a commercial association of the banks now existing under national and State laws. The natural method is, first, to federate all the banks within a State into a State association and then federate the State associations into one national association.

It may be said that this national association assumes the form of a central bank, which is forbidden by the Democratic platform. My reply is that it is in no sense a central bank. A central bank in the sense in which it is used in our party platform is a bank created by the Nation, its stockholders and its membership selected from the citizens or the banks of the Nation regardless of State lines, whilst the Federal system involves the States as the basic units, the banks in each State constituting the membership of the State association and the various State associations constituting the membership of the national association; so that the system is not regional; it is not central; it is Federal, and as such is in accord with the principles, the traditions, and the platform of the Democratic Party.

These are the individual views which I have long entertained and which I presented years ago in opposition to the Aldrich plan. In fact, if my recollection is right, it was the only plan presented on the Democratic side in opposition to the Aldrich plan. I think the basic plan, whether central, regional, or Federal, must be determined by a party conference. The party is committed by its platform against a privately owned and controlled central bank, such as that contemplated by the Aldrich plan; but I do not think the party platform applies to a central bank owned by the Government. The party, in my judgment, is at liberty to select either the Government-owned central bank system or a regional system or a Federal system such as I have outlined. Either can be successfully worked out and would be infinitely preferable to the existing system. I think prompt action is of the highest importance to the commerce of the country.

I believe that the President has been wise in calling attention to the necessity of banking and currency legislation and in urging immediate action. We have, according to the general admission of all interested in legislation, the belief that our national banking system is probably the worst in the civilized world. We have gone as far as we can in that system toward decentralization; we have organized thousands of individual banks; and we have provided no method whatever for the unionizing of those banks for mutual protection against bank panics and stringencies and the promotion of interstate exchange. The natural form of union is, first, to take the State—

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before the Senator—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Before the Senator takes up that branch of the discussion, I do not now recall and therefore I ask for information, whether or not he embodied his ideas in a proposed bill at the time of the passage of the Aldrich bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I did not. I embodied them in a motion to refer back the whole matter to the Finance Committee, with instructions to report upon the lines which I have indicated, and also in a legislative program which for years I have been urging upon Congress.

Mr. CLAPP. Has the Senator in mind at this time to submit in a detailed bill the views which he has just expressed?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have in view the presentation of such a bill.

Mr. CLAPP. I think there is a good deal of force in the Senator's position, and I should be glad to see it worked out in detail. I am very much interested in the details of such a plan.

PRESIDENT'S COURSE IS WISE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say, Mr. President, that I have nothing but commendation for the President in his presentation of this important issue to Congress. I believe that we should act; I believe that we should act quickly; and I believe that we can act quickly if we act simply. I believe that we are involved in unnecessary complications; that by a very simple process we can create a union of the State and national banks within a State in a reserve association; that we can create a union of the State reserve associations in a Federal reserve association, and that simply under that organization, with a reserve board or a banking commission exercising powers over interstate exchange similar to those exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission over interstate transportation, we will by a gradual process of evolution work out a perfect system.

I see no reason why a State reserve association such as I have indicated should have any capital. I see no reason why we should increase at all the banking capital of the country. We have to-day more banking capital than any other country in the world, in proportion to our population. All we have to do is to provide that each one of the member banks in the State association shall deposit with the reserve association a certain amount of cash, which shall constitute a part of the member bank's reserve, and we have in that fund itself a capital upon which the reserve association can commence business. If we provide that a part of this cash deposited by the member banks, National and State, in the State reserve association shall be deposited in the Federal reserve association at Washington, we will collect there from 48 reserve associations throughout the Union an enormous sum of money which can be used by the Federal association in checking financial panics and stringencies which have gotten beyond the control of the local State associations.

When we back that up by the power to issue reserve notes through the Federal association, either directly to individual banks or to the reserve associations of the various States, for rediscount of commercial paper, we have all the resources of this reserve note system to call upon. Recollect that there can be no loss, for these advances, made either by the State reserve associations or by the Federal reserve association, will be made in rediscounting commercial notes indorsed either by the individual banks or by the State reserve associations, and backed in addition to that security by deposits of cash made by the individual banks in the State reserve associations, part of which will have been transferred to the Federal association.

The whole difficulty of local panics and of monetary stringencies can be met by providing a system of rediscount. All local difficulties of moderate proportions can be met through the resources of the State reserve association; and whenever the difficulty becomes so extended as to involve interstate commerce, or becomes national or international in character, the Federal association can come to the aid of the State reserve associations or to the aid of the individual banks.

OBJECTIONS TO A CENTRAL BANK.

Mr. President, I object to the central banking system because it centralizes everything in the National Government, centralizes everything at Washington, and ignores the States. I object to the regional system because it creates new units, unknown to our system of government, shifting in size and in character, varying with the day according to the views of the reserve board. I favor a purely Federal system because it is in accord with our system of government, which regards the State as the basic unit, and regards the Nation as a federation of States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I am very greatly interested in the Senator's remarks, particularly in the one he has just made. I understand that he advocates a system of reserve associations for each State and that he opposes the system of eight regional banks, or any regional system, because it makes new economic units.

Does the Senator mean to say that the commerce of the country is to-day circumscribed by the boundaries of States, so that if you were to create a reserve association in each State you would not be creating new economic units?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not think you would be. I believe the best economic unit that can be created is one that is limited by the boundaries of a State. In every form of association in this country, whether it is benevolent, charitable, commercial, or professional, we find that the natural method of formation is first to form the State associations, and then by combination of the State associations to form the national association. To-day we find that the banks of every State, by voluntary association, are organized, and that they are thinking by States, and that when they propose to think and to act nationally they federate these associations into a great national banking association.

If the natural way would be to create a regional unit, why have not the States done it already in the creation of their banking associations? On the contrary, we know that State associations are formed and are meeting in every State every year, where every question relating to the economic development of the banking system is considered and mutual conferences are held.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have no desire to engage in debate with the Senator at this time. While it is true, as he says, that we do have State banking associations, and we do have national banking associations; those associations transact no business. Those associations do no banking. They meet for the purpose of discussion and mutual benefit of that kind. Certainly the Senator does not mean to say that State lines fix the boundaries of commerce. Certainly he can not mean to say that State lines have anything whatever to do with the lines of commerce or the centers of trade.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the woolgrowers of his own State do a great deal of their eastern banking in the city of Boston, because that is the wool market, and that instead of State lines fixing the boundaries of trade and commerce the streams of commerce flow across State lines; that centers of trade and commerce have been fixed in this country; and that, regardless of all the associations that ever have been organized and regardless of all the laws that ever may be passed, business will be done in the trade centers of this country, and any law seeking to interfere with that business or to fix arbitrary lines for that purpose would be absolutely ineffective.

I am interested in knowing whether the Senator does not propose to fix 48 separate economic units, arbitrarily located by the State lines on the map, and if he is not therefore violating the economic principle he invokes much more than the worst enemy of this bill would claim it violated those principles.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it was not my intention to engage in any extended remarks, but simply to state my position; and it is not my intention to engage in debate. I should prefer to postpone to some later day the discussion of the considerations presented by the Senator from Missouri, my idea at this time being simply to call attention in some concrete form to the suggestion I have to present.

I will state that so far as I am individually concerned I believe that any one of the three systems suggested—the regional, the central, or the Federal—is superior to the existing system, and that any one of them should be enacted into law in preference to allowing present conditions to continue.

I am presenting my views, however, with reference to what I regard as the best system, and my purpose was simply to give a historical statement of my contention with reference to it by putting in the RECORD some telegrams, resolutions, and so forth, upon the subject.

BASIC PRINCIPLES SHOULD BE FIRST SETTLED.

I will say, however, in reply to the Senator from Missouri, that I regard it as essential that the basic principle upon which this bill is to be shaped shall be settled at the start. I believe it is absolutely necessary for the party that has responsibility to determine that principle in party conference. Having once determined the principle, the preparation of the details will be comparatively simple. For that reason I favored, and still favor, a conference of the Democratic Senators, divided as we are in the consideration of these three systems, so that by a majority vote we may determine what system shall be pursued, and then leave it to the Committee on Banking and Currency to work out the details.

With reference to accommodating the economic unit to State lines, I have to say that there is one great controlling reason why the Federal system should be pursued with reference to the organization of a banking system rather than a new system called the regional system, and that is that the States have jurisdiction over purely State commerce, while the Nation has jurisdiction over interstate and foreign commerce. Every bank within the boundaries of a State, whether national or State, must yield to the jurisdiction of that State so far as its action relates purely to State commerce; and all the banks in a State, whether State or National, must yield to the jurisdiction of the Nation so far as its action relates to interstate and foreign commerce.

A majority of the transactions of every bank are purely local. There is a reason, therefore, why a reserve association should be organized within the boundaries of a State, as a part of the State machinery for the control of purely State commerce or its protection against local bank panics and stringencies. There is also a reason why there should be a national organization, with a view to meeting conditions that are interstate or that involve foreign nations.

We carry out this principle in every form of voluntary association. It is a natural form of evolution. The medical societies are all first organized into State bodies and then federated as a national body. The art societies, the musical societies, the architectural organizations, the benevolent organizations, the fraternal organizations, the boards of trade are first organized as State bodies and then federated into national bodies. Why is it that they have not been persuaded to follow this idea of regional control and jurisdiction?

So it is with reference to transportation. We have State railway commissions organized for the purpose of controlling purely State transportation. We have a national commission organized to control interstate transportation, and though there has been some contradiction of policies between the two we find these contradictions gradually disappearing under a system of voluntary conference between the national Interstate Commerce Commission and the various State railroad commissions held annually, and comity, without force, is gradually bringing these organizations in harmony.

Then why should not this apply to banking also? Why should it not apply to trade? Why should we claim that the National Government only can act and can act only as a nation? Why should we not carry out the system which we pursue in transportation and apply it to trade? Why should we not have local trade commissions in the various States and an interstate trade commission to take care of trade in its interstate and in its national aspect? Why should we not do this with reference to banking, just as we have done with reference to transportation?

Mr. President, it seems to me that the simple and the logical thing to do is to enlist the intelligence and the energies of the banks of every State in the Union in a local association to take care of matters of the locality and then to enlist the intelligence and energies of the Nation in the formation of a Federal union of these State associations, which will take hold of these very difficult questions in their national and interstate aspects, and thus by cooperation of the two sovereignties insure the harmony of action so essential to the prosperity of our country.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if the morning business is concluded—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is not yet concluded. Are there further resolutions to be submitted?

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I present a notice of an amendment to the Rules of the Senate which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the notice.

The Secretary read as follows (S. Res. 218):

Notice is hereby given that during the next legislative session of the Senate I will propose and offer an amendment to the standing rules of the Senate.

A copy of the proposed amendment is hereto attached and made a part hereof.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS.

Add a new rule, as follows, viz:

"There shall be a standing committee of the Senate known as the Committee on Public Documents. It shall be composed of three Senators, elected in the same manner as the members of other standing committees.

"No book, pamphlet, article, paper, address, or other matter requiring the consent or order of the Senate in order to be printed as a public document shall be so printed or an order therefor entered until the request or motion for such order shall have been referred to the above committee and its report thereon received: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to interfere with the right of the Senate to discharge the committee from the further consideration of any such request or motion.

"In making its report the committee shall describe the general character of the matter sought to be printed as a public document and shall specifically state whether it is of such value to the country that it ought to be printed and circulated at the expense of the Government."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa desire to have the proposed amendment to the rules referred to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. CUMMINS. I beg pardon; I think it will have to lie on the table until the next legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before it passes to the table I desire to say that we are in danger of abusing the privilege which has heretofore been exercised by all Senators. I have in my hand a list of the papers, pamphlets, speeches, and other things of that kind that have been, by order of the Senate, printed as public documents during the last session of the last Congress and during the present session up to November 10. The third session of the Sixty-second Congress ordered 43 of these papers and pamphlets to be so printed. The present session up to this time has ordered 94. The total number printed since December 1, 1912, is 137. The number of pages so ordered printed and which are now entitled to the privilege of being sent free through the mail is 3,280. The character of the publications is fairly well shown in the titles which they bear, and which I ask to have printed in connection with my present observation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. CUMMINS. This list will show how very far from the real purpose of that privilege we have wandered. I hope that Senators may examine it before the proposed amendment to the rules comes on for consideration.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Number of documents printed by order of Senate during the third session of the Sixty-second Congress.....	43
Number printed from Mar. 4, 1913 up to present time.....	94

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment to the rules will lie over.

W. D. McLEAN, ALIAS DONALD McLEAN.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed, and the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

MR. STONE. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1829) for the relief of W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean, who was a sergeant in Company K, Sixty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and sergeant of Company F, Tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of the last-named regiment on the 1st day of November, 1864.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

MR. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a minute. I have not had time to read the report. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if there is a favorable report from the War Department on the bill?

MR. STONE. Yes; the report is a favorable one. I will say to the Senator that this same bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs in the last Congress, and it was passed by the Senate. I am not sure at which session it was passed, but it was passed after having been favorably reported. There is a report now before the Senate, merely adopting the former report.

MR. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator I have not had time to read the report, and upon the statement that there was a favorable report from the department that the bill be passed I have no objection to its consideration.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

MR. STONE. Mr. President, I think I am correct in saying that the department recommends that this be done. In running my eye over the report I do not find a letter from the department, but I find the report states that—

The report of the Adjutant General comments upon discrepancies and contradictions in the statements of Donald McLean as to his movements in the fall of 1864, and states that these were so contradictory as to lead to the conclusion that none of them should be credited or were founded on fact.

That is not favorable; but the report proceeds:

The records of the War Department show Donald McLean to have been on detached service in June, 1864. The department helps to supply evidence as to his movements that fall by reciting the fact that the certificate of the adjutant general of the State of Missouri, the genuineness of which is admitted by the War Department, shows that Donald McLean enlisted in September, 1864, in the Eleventh Enrolled Missouri Militia.

There is considerable evidence set forth of officers and comrades of this soldier, and twice the Committee on Military Affairs has reported favorably on it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the statement in the report—if his eye did not happen to rest on it—that the soldier left his regiment under orders and was prevented from returning to it by no fault of his own.

Mr. STONE. Yes; there are statements to that effect. I ask that the bill may be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until next Thursday at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I did not have an opportunity when the motion was put to adjourn until Thursday to make an objection. There is before us a calendar of reported bills. I should like to know why we should adjourn until Thursday? Is there no work for us to do?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be compelled to rule that the motion is not debatable. On a previous occasion, when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] wished to debate the motion, the Chair, without passing on it, expressed the opinion that it was not debatable; but on the attention of the Chair being called by the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that it was not a motion to adjourn, but a motion that when the Senate did adjourn it should adjourn to a day certain, the Chair recognized the Senator from Nebraska in order that he might proceed. Since that time the Chair has examined the rules and is satisfied that under the plain language of Rule XXII a motion that when the Senate adjourns it shall adjourn to a day certain is not debatable, and the Chair must so hold.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to be recognized in my own right.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arizona will permit me, in this case the motion can not well be debatable, inasmuch as the Senate has voted that when it adjourns to-day it will adjourn until Thursday next. It is an accomplished fact.

Mr. KERN. The motion was put and carried.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is another reason why the motion is not debatable.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to be recognized in my own right. I wish to make some observations and to ask some questions. I should like to ask the Senator who made the motion why we should adjourn until Thursday?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Arizona that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] was recognized and that he is entitled to the floor. The Chair will ask the Senator from Georgia if he will yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. The people of the United States are beginning to believe that in this great Congress, from which they hoped so much, the committees of Congress now are graveyard committees. The country is beginning to believe that this Congress can not do anything and that it will not do anything; that it even can not get a quorum in many instances, much less do anything.

My Democratic brethren, we are in power; I trust we will remain in power forever; but if we are to continue to conduct ourselves as we have been doing for the past two months we ought to go out of power, and we inevitably will go out of power. Here are 48 sovereign States demanding legislation from us, and, as I said before, we are ping-ponging from Monday to Thursday and from Thursday to Monday.

Most respectfully, of course, but with all the vehemence at my command, I protest; and I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate agreed to adjourn until Thursday, in order that we may proceed to the consideration of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona moves to reconsider the agreement of the Senate to the motion of the Senator from Indiana by which when the Senate adjourns to-day it will adjourn until next Thursday at noon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to lay the motion of the Senator from Arizona on the table. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt, and will ask Senators who are in favor of the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to lay the motion to reconsider on the table to signify it by rising in their places, and that they remain standing until they are counted.

There were on a division—ayes 19, noes 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider made by the Senator from Arizona is laid on the table.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not willing myself to let that announcement pass. I do not think when there is a count of the Senate and less than a quorum is disclosed that that can be a vote on any subject. I voted in the affirmative and the announcement of the Chair would be in accordance with my vote, but I do not think that is a correct rule of the Senate. I think whenever there is a count of the Senate or a call of the roll of the Senate and less than a quorum vote, it can not be a vote of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that I coincide with the statement just made by the Senator from Georgia. Whenever there is a division asked for in the Senate and it is developed that there is no quorum, there can be no decision by the Chair as to how the question is settled, whether for or against, and the only thing that the Senate can do now is to develop the presence of a quorum.

Mr. STONE. Or adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. Or adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. As the vote was taken on my motion, I cordially concur. The Chair inadvertently has made what I regard as an incorrect ruling, and the roll should now be called to ascertain whether or not there is a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is very willing to acknowledge his inadvertence, due to his ignorance of the rule on that question. The absence of a quorum having been disclosed, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Goff	Newlands	Smoot
Bacon	Gronna	Norris	Sterling
Bradley	Hitchcock	Overman	Stone
Brady	Hollis	Pittman	Sutherland
Brandeggee	James	Pomerene	Swanson
Burton	Johnson	Ransdell	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kern	Root	Thompson
Clapp	Lane	Shafroth	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Lewis	Sheppard	Tillman
Crawford	McCumber	Shields	Vardaman
Cummins	McLean	Simmons	Walsh
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Ga.	Williams

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is detained from the Senate on official business. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. KERN. My colleague [Mr. SHIVELY] is unavoidably detained from the city. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to state that my colleague, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], is unavoidably detained from the city.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] are unavoidably detained from the Senate on account of illness.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is unavoidably absent on account of illness.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. LODGE] is absent on account of illness, and I ask to have this statement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, the Chair announces that a quorum is present. The question now recurs on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which is that the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that the vote be reconsidered by which the Senate has agreed to adjourn until Thursday next be laid on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, November 20, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, November 17, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Father, that we may lay aside the cares and responsibilities of a busy life and come into Thy nearer presence, that our souls may be refreshed and glorified by the touch of Thy spirit. May it shine with exceeding great brightness and warm our hearts with new zeal and energy, that we may prosecute every best thing without the fear or favor of our fellows, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, November 14, 1913, was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS SNAKE RIVER, IDAHO AND WASH.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will lay before the House the bill S. 2779 I would like to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the bill S. 2779 be laid before the House for present consideration. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2779) to authorize the conveyance of the steel bridge over the Snake River, between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., to the States of Idaho and Washington or local subdivisions thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That Lewiston-Concord Bridge Co., a corporation created under the laws of the State of Washington and owning a certain steel bridge over Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., authorized by and constructed under an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the Snake River between the States of Washington and Idaho," approved February 15, 1898, and appearing in volume 30 of United States Statutes at Large, page 245, chapter 24, be, and the same is hereby authorized and empowered to sell and convey the said bridge to the States of Idaho and Washington, or to any commissions or local subdivisions of such States, and that the said States be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to make such provision and enter into such agreements for the maintenance thereof as to the proper public officers may seem expedient, reserving to the United States all rights acquired under the act above mentioned.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend as indicated in the copy which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

"That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the Lewiston-Concord Bridge Co., a corporation created under the laws of the State of Washington, owning a certain steel bridge over Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., constructed under the authority of an act entitled 'An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the Snake River between the States of Washington and Idaho, approved February 15, 1898,' to sell and convey the said bridge to the States of Idaho and Washington, or to any commissions or local authorities of any subdivisions of said States, and the consent of Congress is also hereby granted that said States may make provision or agreement for the maintenance and operation of such bridge: Provided, That in all respects the maintenance, operation, and further status and treatment of such bridge shall hereafter be in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL THURSDAY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on next Thursday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PURE-FOOD LAW.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the pure-food law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the pure-food law. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I read from an item in one of the local papers:

Repeal of the present Federal pure-food law, with its misleading guaranty label, will be urged upon Congress by a committee of State and Federal food and drug officials.

A similar item, I think, has been transmitted quite generally throughout the country in the press. I do not know whether this is an error of the reporter who prepared the item or not, although I presume that is the case. It is proper to say that the guaranty label provision which goes on articles in the form of "guaranteed under the food and drugs act" is not a provision of the pure-food law. It is a regulation made by the departmental officers who have charge of the matter and was never contemplated by the authors of the law or by anyone in Congress when the pure-food law was passed. There is a provision for a guaranty to the effect that the manufacturer of articles covered by the pure-food law may give a guaranty to the wholesaler or jobber to whom he sells, and the jobber or wholesaler may give a guaranty to the retailer to whom he sells that the goods comply with the pure-food law, and that in such case that retailer is not to be prosecuted for a violation of the law, but that the prosecution shall relate back to the person who gave the guaranty. The departmental officers, or the three Secretaries, in making their regulations provided for the manufacturer or wholesaler filing with the department a guaranty and then placing upon the goods the provision, "Guaranteed under the food and drugs act." Many people have supposed that that meant that the goods were guaranteed by the Government. That, of course, is not the case. Personally I have always been opposed to that form of label, and introduced a bill and endeavored to push it to do away with that, meeting objection on the part of the Department of Agriculture or some of its officials.

If it is to be corrected, it does not need an act of Congress, being a mere regulation. And the idea that is cast by this article, and by others of the same kind, to the effect that the trouble was in the act of Congress, is misleading and unfair to gentlemen in Congress both now and in the past. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On October 24, 1913:

H. J. Res. 142. Joint resolution to provide for furnishing the additional rooms in the House Office Building.

On November 14, 1913:

H. R. 7384. An act to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject.

On November 15, 1913:

H. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution to relieve destitution among the native people and residents of Alaska.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.), the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, November 20, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

By Mr. WILSON of New York: Petition of the board of directors of the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce, favoring passage of the Ransdell-Humphreys bill for prevention of floods in Mississippi River Valley; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, November 20, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, November 20, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,
President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3397) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to mining claims.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2779) to authorize the conveyance of the steel bridge over the Snake River, between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., to the States of Idaho and Washington, or local subdivisions thereof, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SNAKE RIVER BRIDGE, IDAHO.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the amendment of the House to Senate bill 2779 be laid before the Senate and concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2779) to authorize the conveyance of the steel bridge over the Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., to the States of Idaho and Washington, or local subdivisions thereof, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the Lewiston-Concord Bridge Co., a corporation created under the laws of the State of Washington, owning a certain steel bridge over Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., constructed under the authority of an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the Snake River between the States of Washington and Idaho, approved February 15, 1898," to sell and convey the said bridge to the States of Idaho and Washington, or to any commissions or local authorities of any subdivisions of said States, and the consent of Congress is also hereby granted that said States may make provision or agreement for the maintenance and operation of such bridge: Provided, That in all respects the maintenance, operation, and further status and treatment of such bridge shall hereafter be in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Mr. BORAH. I move that the amendment of the House be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Eureka City, Utah, praying that an investigation be made into the conditions existing at the military post at Fort Stevens, Oreg., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the memorial of H. E. Warner, of Grafton, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation authorizing the city of San Francisco to use the waters of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have received a number of resolutions from commercial clubs of towns in my State in regard to the reclamation of swamp lands in the South. I desire to have one set of the resolutions spread upon the RECORD and referred to the proper committee.

There being no objection, the resolutions of the Commercial Association of Pendleton, Oreg., were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PENDLETON, OREG., November 6, 1913.

At a meeting of the Pendleton Commercial Association, held November 5, 1913, the following preamble and resolutions were offered and, after consideration, unanimously adopted:

Whereas the Democratic, Republican, and Progressive Parties in their 1912 platforms declared that flood protection of the lower Mississippi River and the reclamation of its alluvial lands was a national obligation; and

Whereas we believe these declarations should be enacted into legislation; and

Whereas we believe the protection of this vast area from floods caused by the drainage from 31 States of the Union and its reclamation will benefit the whole Nation and is a work of such magnitude that it justifies separate treatment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Pendleton Commercial Association hereby urges upon Congress the immediate adoption of legislation for flood protection and reclamation of this section of our country by methods which shall be approved by United States engineers.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to each of the Members of the Oregon delegation in the National Congress at Washington.

J. V. TOLMAN, President.

Attest.

C. K. CRANSTON, Secretary.

Mr. WEEKS presented resolutions adopted at the Plymouth and Bay conference of the Unitarian Churches at Whitman, Mass., relating to the proposed segregation of colored employees in the executive departments of the Government, which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Central Labor Union of Boston, Mass., relative to the existing mining conditions in the State of Colorado, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also (for Mr. LODGE) presented resolutions adopted at the Plymouth and Bay Conference of the Unitarian Churches at Whitman, Mass., relative to the proposed segregation of colored employees in the executive departments of the Government, which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also (for Mr. LODGE) presented resolutions adopted by the Central Labor Union of North Adams, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the city of San Francisco to use the waters of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. LODGE) presented the petition of Robert R. Lamb and 170 other citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a petition of the board of trustees of the Chamber of Commerce of Spokane, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation for the development of a reserve force in the Army and for a more scientific development of the Militia, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a petition of the Central Labor Union of Hallowell and Gardiner, in the State of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the city of San Francisco to use the waters of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SIMMONS presented resolutions adopted by the North Carolina Bankers' Association, favoring certain modifications in the so-called Glass-Owen currency bill, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 3462) granting an increase of pension to Marshall Jones (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia:

A bill (S. 3463) for the relief of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac and Richmond & Petersburg Railroad Connection Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill providing for national aid in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads. The first portion of the bill contemplates an appropriation to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State authorities, looking toward the construction of a limited number of roads in the nature of demonstration work. The second portion of the bill is along the line of the Shackleford bill, which was passed by the House at the last session of Congress but defeated in the Senate. We have endeavored to modify some of the provisions of the Shackleford bill so as to meet the objections presented to it in the Senate.

The distinctive feature of the bill is the effort to turn national aid toward road improvement generally rather than the construction of a few great national highways. As the services of the Secretary of Agriculture will be called into use for the performance of the national responsibility in connection with this work, I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. President, I also desire that the bill be printed in the RECORD. I do not think it is necessary that the bill should be read in full to-day, but I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3452) to provide that the United States shall in certain cases aid the States and the civil subdivisions thereof in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 3452) to provide that the United States shall, in certain cases, aid the States and the civil subdivisions thereof in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to cooperate with the officers of the several States designated for that purpose by the duly constituted authorities of the respective States in the construction and maintenance of post roads; that the amount of money which may be expended on behalf of the United States for that purpose in any fiscal year under the provisions of this section shall not exceed $2,000,000, and the portion thereof which may be expended in any State under the provisions of this section in any fiscal year shall be determined upon the following basis, to wit: One-third in the proportion which the total area of such State bears to the total area of all of the States, one-third in the proportion which the total population of such State bears to the total population as shown by the next preceding Federal census, and one-third in the proportion which the total number of miles of rural post roads in such State bears to the total number of miles of rural post roads in all of the States as shown by the report of the Postmaster General at the close of the second quarter of the last preceding fiscal year; that on or before the 20th day of January in each year the Secretary of Agriculture shall make and file in his office a statement showing the amount which may be expended on behalf of the United States under the provisions of this section in each State during the next fiscal year, and on or before the 31st day of said January shall cause a copy of such statement to be transmitted to the governor of each State by registered mail.

That between the 1st day of February and the 30th day of June in each fiscal year the Secretary of Agriculture and the officer or officers of each State, having lawful power so to do, may jointly consider and determine the roads in such State which under the provisions of this section may be constructed and maintained during the next fiscal year and the material, character, and manner of such construction and maintenance; that such construction and maintenance shall be conducted under such supervision as shall have been previously agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and said officer or officers of said State; that in no case shall the United States bear more than one-third of the cost of construction or maintenance of any road under the provisions of this section; that the Secretary of Agriculture shall not commence such joint construction of any road in any State until the portion of the cost thereof which is to be borne or provided by such State has been made available.

SEC. 2. That certain roads in the States which are regularly used by the United States as rural post roads may be divided into three classes to be known as class A, class B, and class C.

Class A shall embrace roads upon which no incline is steeper than is reasonably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track composed of macadam or other material of equal utility and cost, constructed and maintained in such manner that it shall have continuously a smooth, firm surface.

Class B shall embrace roads upon which no incline is steeper than is reasonably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, well drained, with a road track composed of gravel or other material of equal utility and cost, but less expensive than macadam, constructed and maintained in such manner that it shall have continuously a smooth, firm surface.

Class C shall embrace roads upon which no incline is steeper than is reasonably necessary in view of the natural topography of the locality, with ample side ditches, constructed so as to quickly shed water into the side ditches, and kept continuously crowned and compacted by dragging or other adequate means, so that it shall have a smooth surface and be passable for wheeled vehicles at all times.

That on or before the 1st day of March in each fiscal year the governor of any State may file in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture a statement setting forth the location and the number of miles of roads in such State which he claims to be in each of classes A, B, and C, respectively, and if such State have a State highway department, then his said statement may be accompanied by a report from such State highway department showing the total number of miles of roads in such State in each of classes A, B, and C, the location of such roads, a description in detail of their physical features, the material, manner, and (as far as may be) the cost of their construction, and the manner and cost of their maintenance.

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall consider such statements and determine which of the roads mentioned therein are in class A, which in class B, and which in class C, and make a report of his determination thereon to the respective governors, filing the same on or before the 20th day of the following June.

That no charge shall be made for so considering and determining such statement of any governor if the same shall be accompanied by a report from the State highway department of such State as hereinbefore provided; but in all other cases there shall be deducted 10 per cent of the gross amount which shall be payable on account of the roads in such State under the provisions of this section.

That to aid the States and civil subdivisions thereof in the maintenance of roads in classes A, B, and C there may be expended, under the provisions of this section, in the several States on behalf of the United States, in each fiscal year, a sum not to exceed $20,000,000; that the portion of said $20,000,000 which may be so expended in any State shall be in the proportion which the total number of miles of rural post roads in such State bears to the total number of miles of rural post roads in all of the States as shown by the report of the Postmaster General for second quarter of that fiscal year.

That at the end of each fiscal year the United States shall pay for all roads in class A $80 per mile, for all roads in class B $30 per mile, and for all roads in class C $15 per mile: Provided, That if the total of such payments in any State shall aggregate more than the amount which may be expended in such State by the United States as hereinbefore provided, then such payments per mile shall be reduced pro rata till they shall aggregate said amount which may be so expended in said State, and no more.

That nothing whatever shall be paid by the United States under the provisions of this section for any road which does not clearly come within the requirements of class A, B, or C.

That such payments shall be made to such officers of the respective States as the governors thereof shall designate as being entitled to receive the same by the Treasurer of the United States upon warrants drawn upon him by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. That the term "rural post road" as herein used shall be held to mean a road over which the United States regularly transports rural mail, whether by rural free delivery or star route.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to make all needful rules for the proper administration of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That this act shall be in force from and after July 1, 1914.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill being printed in the RECORD. It is a very important bill and touches upon a very important public matter; but it does seem to me that the proper reference is to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and not the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It is a bill concerning post roads along post routes and evidently the proper jurisdiction of the subject matter rests with the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I will suggest to the Senator from Georgia that it had better be referred to that committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am upon both those committees, and I gave my reason for requesting that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It is because under the terms of the bill the entire national responsibility for the work falls upon the Department of Agriculture and the Post Office Department will have no connection whatever with the actual work. The bill has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and my statement, which I suppose the Senator from Mississippi did not catch, was made to show why I wanted to have it so referred.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Mississippi caught the statement perfectly. The reason given for referring the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is because the Secretary of Agriculture is given certain authority and jurisdiction and power under the bill. But my objection to its going to that committee is that it starts the precedent of permitting the Secretary of Agriculture to control and manage public roads and postal routes which fall clearly within the jurisdiction of the Postmaster General.

I think that a bill concerning post routes and post roads ought to go to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The mere fact that the Secretary of Agriculture is given certain authority and certain jurisdiction in the bill is not a reason for the course suggested, but a reason against it, because we do not want to begin to turn over the question of postal routes to the Agricultural Department instead of keeping them where they properly belong, under the Postmaster General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

Mr. LEA submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 217), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ an additional assistant clerk at $1,440 per annum, to be paid from "Miscellaneous Items" of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

ADDRESS BY F. S. WASHBURN.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document an address delivered by Mr. F. S. Washburn, of Nashville, Tenn., before the National Conservation Congress on November 18, 1913. In making the request I wish to say that it is not necessarily to be regarded as approving all the ideas advanced by Mr. Washburn, but as merely presenting his viewpoint.

Mr. SMOOT. Twenty or thirty addresses will be delivered before the congress, and I do not believe we ought to undertake to print them all. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to have the address referred to the Committee on Printing for action. Then we can see how many more will come in, and we will submit a report from the committee.

Mr. LEA. I shall be very glad to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper presented by the Senator from Tennessee will be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

AGRICULTURAL FINANCE.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] the other day asked that a paper entitled "Information and Evidence on Agricultural Cooperation and Rural Credit in Europe" be printed as a public document. It is found that there are two maps accompanying the document, and I ask that the following order be entered.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the maps accompanying the manuscript of Senate Document No. 214, Sixty-third Congress, entitled "Information and Evidence on Agricultural Cooperation and Rural Credit in Europe," shall be printed therewith.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by A. C. Johnson, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8702) to authorize the county of Miami, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Wabash River in Miami County, Ind., and it was thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer.

SUSPENSION OF NAVAL CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if there be no further bills to be introduced, I ask the Chair—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend for a moment? Morning business is closed, and the Chair desires to lay before the Senate—

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; Mr. President. But before the morning business is closed I desire to address the Senate on a resolution which I have introduced.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not ask the Senator to yield now; I simply asked the recognition of the Chair. But as soon as the Senator from Colorado concludes I want to address the Chair before the close of morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from Colorado, coming over from a previous day, which the Secretary will read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 215) submitted by Mr. THOMAS on the 17th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the recent suggestion of the Lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain, the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, that his government was willing and ready to cooperate with other governments to secure for one year a suspension of naval construction programs, presents a practical method whereby the nations of the world may at once materially reduce the enormous expense of increased investment in war material and equipment of which the United States should avail itself.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded the President with the request that, consistently with the interests of the United States, he use his influence to consummate the arrangement suggested by Mr. Churchill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the recent proposal of the First Lord of the British Admiralty that the great powers of the world mutually suspend their programs for battleship building for the period of one year rises to the dignity of a most important, courageous, and patriotic event. As such it should commend itself to the intelligent consideration of mankind. It is important because it concerns a subject whose vast and constantly increasing demands upon national revenues points the way to national bankruptcies. It was courageous because it inevitably provoked criticisms, resentments, antagonisms, misconstruction of motives at home and abroad, while arousing the implacable hostility of the internationally allied beneficiaries of naval construction, whose vast profits are imperiled whenever the prevailing system is challenged by an appeal to reason and common sense; because the storm of passion, of obloquy, and of misrepresentation it was bound to arouse would center upon and around the devoted head of its author, who with his party might be swept from power by its insensate but resistless fury.

It was patriotic because it disclosed a willingness by the first maritime power of the world, concededly more dependent than any other upon its naval strength for its commercial and political supremacy, to take the initiative in a change of naval policies by calling a halt in naval expenditures, although subjecting itself by such action to the surmise that its motive was more selfish than altruistic; that it was inspired rather by a meager exchequer than a regard for the world's well-being; that its open suggestion concealed sinister and far-reaching policies; that its pretense, though fair in form, was false in fact; that fear of Germany and not dispassionate concern for the burdened taxpayers of the nations lay behind its mask of outspoken suggestion. But it comes straight from the Admiralty, albeit the acceptance of its suggestion presages greater loss to British shipbuilding interests than to any others, while its rejection may react upon the national sentiment so strongly as to imperil the structure of the existing ministry. And it comes at a time when social and political disturbances in some portions of the world justify apprehensions of grave problems in the early future whose solution may demand the arbitrament of the sword.

Mr. Churchill's proposal has received scant attention from those to whom it was directed. In Germany it is regarded with derision and denounced as a fraud destitute of good faith, and designed to overreach any nation foolish enough to accept it. The British press, with few exceptions, condemns it as a sign of weakness or as an artifice to delude rivals into a feeling of false security. The other powers are either hostile or indifferent to it, and the hasty observer might conclude that it had only seemed to show the unwisdom of its author.

But, Mr. President, this proposal has somewhat abruptly directed the world's attention to one of its most extraordinary and illogical obsessions. It has suggested that the great maritime nations do voluntarily and temporarily what they will ultimately be compelled to do permanently through sheer inability to proceed; and it sharply reminds them of an extravagance of which all of them are guilty and in which each of them, at the risk of ultimate exhaustion, is endeavoring to outstrip the others. It has proposed a truce, so to speak, in a competitive struggle, which if persisted in must prove disastrous, in the hope and with the belief that the truce will result in permanent adjustment. And I shall be surprised and disappointed, Mr. President, if the passionate rejection of this proposal is not followed by that sober second thought through whose untrammelled exercise comes the ultimate solution of all the problems which vex the counsels of statesmen and retard the progress of nations.

The future historian of the world will describe its naval activities from the period beginning with the consolidation of the German Empire as a sort of international panic created and continued by false alarms deliberately sounded from time to time by syndicated interests engaged in the manufacture and sale of munitions of war. He will justly censure the credulity of mankind, whose mutual fears and suspicions were so long made to pay toll in unnumbered millions to those who during that period capitalized international jealousy and made a commercial asset of national patriotism. And he will deplore the consequences of that senseless rivalry in naval equipments, not the least of which will be the revolt of the taxpayer against the intolerable burden which the system has fastened upon his already overloaded shoulders.

Mr. President, what is this burden which Mr. Churchill proposes that the nations shall lay down for a twelvemonth and give themselves a holiday? What has brought it into being, and how does it affect the people of our great Republic? These are questions of vital import. They are easily answered, and they demand immediate consideration.

The burden is defined in terms of hundreds of millions in the increasing debts and expenditures of Great Britain, Germany, the United States, France, Japan, Austria, Italy, and Russia. It swells the budgets of Chile, the Argentine Republic, and Brazil. Its tentacles are reaching out for Canada, Australia, and China. It finds pretended justification in what are called provisions for national defense, for the protection of merchant marine, for the enforcement of national policies, and for offensive warfare. England determines to build four battleships a year. Therefore Germany builds two or more. Therefore France builds two or more. Because of this Japan builds two or more. Because Japan does this, the United States builds two or more. This necessitates one or more by Austria, by Italy, by the Argentine Republic. And then England swings into line and constructs four more battleships the ensuing year. Hence the other nations continue the never-ending circle by repeating their programs also. And each recurring year brings its increase in size, in strength, in the range of guns, and in the enormous cost of construction. At the same time it throws large numbers of vessels of earlier and less desirable construction upon the scrap heap. In the mad race for designing and constructing the largest, the deadliest, and the most expensive of all these floating monsters the millions of earlier expenditure are as nothing.

The ships of two years ago are both inferior and obsolete. They are no longer fit either for offensive or defensive purposes. They only seem by contrast to mark the advance which the nations have made in the creation of costlier and deadlier engines of destruction. And these must give way to others yet more expensive and more destructive while the mad race continues. No nation will suspend its program unless all the others do. Every nation will continue and enlarge its program because all the others do. And so the millions of the people are being squandered and great leviathans are being launched, with England in the lead, with Germany and the United States and France and Japan contending for the second place, and with the smaller nations bringing up the rear. The annual budgets are swelling; taxation is increasing; deficiencies are encountered; but the nations are pressing forward with increasing energy of purpose, apparently unmindful of the inevitable consequences which these huge expenditures must produce. For this contest can not go on much longer. The strain upon the economic structure of the nations is too great. These must collapse if the strain is much increased. France faces a deficiency of more than a hundred and fifty millions as a result of last year's administration. Germany has levied a tax upon capital to meet her increasing demands. England gasps under a load of taxation which has been applied to all conceivable properties and pursuits. Japan takes one-fourth of every man's earnings, and must have more or leave the race. And in our own Republic the totals of our annual expenditures are so vast as to be appalling. We are becoming the prodigal among the nations. Our disbursements are increasing by leaps and bounds. According to Mr. James J. Hill the net ordinary expenses of the United States Government increased 1.4 per cent between 1870 and 1890, while between 1890 and 1908 they increased 121.4 per cent. Our revenues are vast, but we are passing beyond them. And much of this outlay is devoted to building ships of war which become obsolete before they are completed and ready for action.

Since 1892 we have spent $2,109,912,973.30 on the Navy. Thus far we have managed to pay as we have gone. Other nations have not been so fortunate. The debts of the nations are constantly growing. They have reached the huge aggregate sum of more than thirty billions of dollars. The annual interest charge upon them is more than twelve hundred and fifty millions of dollars. This toll is levied upon the productive energies of the people, who carry as well the budget of the annual expenditures amounting to an aggregate of eight thousand millions more. What wonder that with these huge sums plucked by their governments from the earnings of mankind, that which remains may not suffice to meet the further demands of the local tax gatherers, the expense of living, and the payment of private debts. What wonder that discontent is rife among all the peoples of every clime, that they are resentful of their governments, and are becoming the zealous advocates of economic and political revolutions? But the nations must have larger navies to protect themselves each from the others. We dare not pause and take our bearings lest more reckless ones outdistance us in the race and leave us behind with fewer ships, with smaller guns, with slower turbines.

What has caused this frenzy of the nations? What dangers menace their several pathways to avoid which they waste their huge resources? We are told that each harbors its fell designs against the others. England resents the growing supremacy of Germany, and would crush her if unprepared. Germany hates England and must strengthen her sea power. France remembers Sedan, and builds her navies while she waits on time and fate. Austria and Italy glare at each other across the Adriatic. Japan, victorious over Russia, must find new domains for her crowded population, and Russia may seize her by the throat unawares; so she must have ships and more of them. Mastery of the Pacific, the Yellow Peril, the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine, expanding commerce demanding armed protection, securing that respect of the other powers which comes only with the count and the caliber of cannon, assuring peace by extending preparations for war. These are some of the reasons advanced by the advocates of huge and huger navies.

Mr. President, these and kindred conditions are only the apparent causes of our vast naval equipments. The real ones are closer to us. They are sordid ones and ignoble altogether. We have builded and are building navies in obedience to a public opinion created and stimulated by the interests which fatten upon public expenditure through the suggestion of international differences, the circulation of war rumors, and comparisons of the relative naval strength of nations. Commercialism has laid its hands upon national rivalries, both actual and potential; upon national ambitions and possibilities; upon the Monroe doctrine and the balance of power; upon the antipathy of the races; upon the conflict of democracy with absolutism; upon the opposing religions of neighboring peoples; upon the jealousies of rival cabinets, and capitalized them all. It has issued its common stock upon the passions and ambitions of men as an asset. It has divined the policies of monarchies and of republics and entered the possible results in its ledgers. It has formed and organized a war trust and sold or distributed its securities where they would not only receive but bring substantial returns. It manufactures and sells all sorts of articles designed for the wholesale slaughter of men, for the devastation of countries, and for the making of widows and orphans. It reaps harvests of gold by clearing the way for other harvests of blood and tears. It owns gun factories, armor-plate factories, dynamite factories, powder factories, ship yards, and naval supplies in every country of the world that has a seacoast and a treasury.

It has placed its dollar mark upon patriotism and levied its toll impartially on both hate and fear. It treats all countries alike. With the assemblage of every Congress it warns the United States of Japan and points to our unprotected Pacific coast. With every meeting of the Japanese Parliament it whispers of American ambition and points to our unprotected Pacific coast. With every disturbance in Central or South America it predicts European intervention and reminds us of our inferior Navy. With every such disturbance it urges European intervention and suggests our inferior Navy. It inspires German animosity toward England and French animosity toward Germany. It secures contracts for two battleships from the Argentine Republic as a reward for disclosing the plans of American battleships it had constructed.

On the 18th day of last April Dr. William Liebknecht astonished the German Reichstag by exposing the association of the Krupp and War Munition companies of Germany with the creation and circulation of war rumors; laid bare their relation to the making and selling of guns, of gunpowder, and war supplies; the interest of French officers and business men in the specific enterprise; the financing of leagues, societies, and publications which clamor for more battleships and armor plate to shield the nations against impending dangers, carefully shaped and groomed for the purpose; leagued them with great financial interests within and without the Empire; exposed the alliance of cabinets, legislators, and newspapers with great armament concerns to quicken the market for their wares by inciting disputes and appealing to patriotism. "Patriotism," said old Dr. Johnson, "is the last resource of a scoundrel." This definition is altogether too narrow for twentieth century big business war enterprise that hungers for public appropriations. Patriotism has become its constant resource.

But, Mr. President, Dr. Liebknecht's greatest service is that he has lifted the curtain upon a vast alliance between the war syndicate and political, public, and private interest than that which he so fully exposed. He riveted public attention upon two concerns and their associated policies, and in so doing he stimulated public inquiry into the conduct of similar and kindred enterprises everywhere. And this has revealed a union of practically all who deal in munitions of war that is world wide in its scope. By the system of interlocking directorates they are intertwined with each other and act upon the principle of each for all and all for each. They know no country, no creed, no language, but with the arms of Briareus this combination reaches out and embraces them all.

In a recent number of Harper's Weekly Mr. David Starr Jordan thus comments upon Mr. Perris's "War traders." My recollection is that this article appeared in the first issue of Harper's Weekly for the month of November.

WAR TRUSTS.

[By David Starr Jordan.]

Under the head of "The war traders," Mr. George H. Perris, of London, has given a very interesting analysis of the interlocking-directorate system, as applied to the most greedy and dangerous of all corporations—those who deal in the munitions of war.

He shows that the several British firms are for the most part not real competitors, but joined in a general trust, and that this trust is by no means confined to one country. The scandals in the case of the Krupp Co. and the Deutsche Waffen & Munitions Fabrik have their parallels in every country. The Nobel Dynamite Trust affords an illustration of the "cosmopolitan character which the modern war trade is assuming." "This British company, with its capital of £3,285,400, its net profits for 1911-12 of £3,819,000, and its regular 10 per cent dividends, is a shareholding rather than a manufacturing concern. It is, in brief, an Anglo-German dynamite alliance." It holds the entire capital of the Nobel Explosive Co. (Ltd.), and it has large holdings in the British South African Explosive Co., the Birmingham Metal & Munitions Co., the Chilworth Gunpowder Co., as well as in the Dynamite Actien Gesellschaft, of Hamburg, the Dresdner Dynamit Fabrik, and two other German firms.

With the extension of the great navies, the smaller nations have patriotically established armor-plate industries and shipbuilding of their own, but this is only in appearance. Most or all of these in Russia, in Canada, in Spain, in Portugal, in Italy, in Japan are but tentacles of the great British trust, the subsidiary being formed by the Vickers, Armstrongs, and Browns to meet the feelings of the people they rob or serve. "Time was when England bled for Portugal; now our old ally must bleed for us."

A most remarkable combination is that of the Harvey United Steel Co. "Although a dividend of 7½ per cent had been paid in 1911, it was decided last year to wind the concern up. Why, it does not appear. The managing director was Mr. Albert Vickers, chairman of Vickers (Ltd.), with a holding of 2,697 shares. Other directors were Mr. Beardmore, of William Beardmore & Co., Mr. J. M. Falkner, of Armstrong-Whitworth, and Mr. C. E. Ellis, with a holding of 7,438 shares, representing John Brown & Co., Coventry Co., and Thomas Firth & Co. The chief American partner was the Bethlehem Steel Co., holding 4,301 shares. The chief French partner was the Schneider Co., with 9,862 shares. The combine had four French directors; two of these held 2,000 shares each. This did not in any way prevent the collaboration of the two German armament firms condemned in the Reichstag by Herr Liebknecht—the Essen Co., holding 4,731 shares, and having two representatives on the board, and the Ellingen Co., having one representative and holding 2,731 shares. Finally the Italian Terni Steel Co. held 8,000 shares. Behind the managers stood the bankers, the same extraordinary amity prevailing. The house of Ernest Ruffer, with 6,169 shares, linked hands with the Bougeres Frères of Paris (3,000) on the one side and the Deutsche Bank of Berlin (1,350) on the other.

"In 40 years all the peace societies have not succeeded in effecting such a Franco-German reconciliation as this. In the share list Mr. Newbold found the names of one British general and two major generals, and behind these were the shadowy figures of a vast host of princes, peers, ministers of the crown, soldiers, sailors, and clerics. A veritable brotherhood in arms. I can not believe that the Harvey United Steel Co. was really dead. Somewhere it has surely had a glorious resurrection. It surely lives and works to prove the pettiness of national prejudice, with ease of forgetting such sores as Alsace-Lorraine, when men have learned the golden wisdom of good business."

This article is illuminating. It reveals the fact that our own armor bearers and makers are within the fold. They never compete, they always divide. We do not know who, in high positions, may minister to their desires and share their plunder. They can not in America place behind them "the shadowy figures of princes, peers, or ministers of the crown," but there be many kings of finance and captains of industry, many banks and bankers who, like those beyond the sea, may smile upon big battleship programs, albeit they shudder at the prospect of a national currency.

In a recent magazine article, Mr. Charles Edward Russell has called public attention to our own Navy League, whose activities are all devoted to the extension of our Navy before it becomes too late; whose literature exaggerates our weakness and our dangers; whose mission, "according to its own announcement, is to further the ends of patriotism." According to Mr. Russell, many of its directors and officers are closely associated with the great banking houses, transportation companies, and industrial corporations of the country. Its motives and its ideals may be of the loftiest character, but it is difficult to believe that its activities which involve large expenditures are wholly disinterested.

Mr. President, I believe as ardently as any man in an efficient navy. But what is an efficient navy? We have expended over $2,000,000,000 in 21 years upon our Navy. We have 277 vessels in the aggregate, of which 38 are battleships, with 33 in commission. We have 11 armored cruisers; we have 63 submarines, of which 47 are in service. We have 28 torpedo boats and 54 destroyers, and we have 6 battleships in process of construction. Our patriotic press and platform declare that we are invincible; that our men behind the guns are unequalled in courage and in accuracy; that we need not fear the world in arms. But when Congress meets and its committees consider a naval program our deficient Navy, our unpreparedness, our smaller guns, our obsolete warships, are said to invite not only the contempt but the active hostility of the nations.

When shall we have an efficient Navy? Some say when we have 41 battleships of the line. Not such battleships as the Connecticut or the Iowa, but the Wyoming and the Texas, and costing from $18,000,000 to $20,000,000 each, with cruisers and smaller craft to match. But when we shall have builded them what then? If England and Germany and Japan continue to build, will we dare to stop, when to do so must soon leave us a tempting prey to their more enterprising and far-sighted policy? No, Mr. President, our war-material makers, like the daughters of the horse leech, will continue to cry, "Give! Give!"

Mr. President, if our Navy is inefficient, it must be due to some other cause than the size and the number of our ships.

We doubtless need transports and supply ships. Without a complement of them, our equipment is deficient. We certainly need more officers and more men to make all our ships effective. Last February Representative WITHERSPOON asserted that we required 3,000 more officers and 6,000 more men than we had for the ships then in commission, and that our naval schools could supply the former in 20 years, while men were not available. Why should we drain our Treasury for the construction of more battleships, when we are unable to fully man the battleships we have? No reason can be assigned, except that the war syndicate clamors for them.

This preparation for possible future conflicts is defended upon the ground that it is the surest if not the only preventive against them; that it bears a close analogy to insurance, which makes provision against future contingencies involving loss and which has stood the test of long experience. If it be true that the nations are impatient to fly at each others' throats and can be restrained only by the creation and interdisplay of huge naval armaments which must be increased by a policy of perpetual competition without regard to expense, then all must concede both the wisdom and the necessity of the prevailing policy. I am unable to perceive any basis for the claim.

Many nations are without navies. Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Spain, and Portugal may be cited. But these countries are more immune to wars and rumors of wars than their more formidable neighbors. Russia suffered the destruction of her fleet in 1905, since which time she has been quite as free from foreign controversy and danger as her victorious adversary. Our treaty of peace at Ghent with Great Britain prohibited the maintenance of ships of war upon the Great Lakes. This has prevented instead of promoting discord between the United States and Canada. Who shall say that our relations with the great Dominion would have been as peaceful had their battleships and ours been launched upon the waters of the Great Lakes a hundred years ago and since maintained in constantly added strength and numbers? In our days of maritime weakness the Monroe Doctrine was quite as effective as it is to-day. England responded to Cleveland's demand in 1895 for the delimitation of Venezuelan boundaries when our sea strength was negligible.

Our annual spawn of battleships and cruisers had just begun. Its subsequent growth has been hand in hand with the growth of dollar diplomacy. The South American Republics do not regard our Navy as designed to protect their shores from foreign invasion. Rather do they apprehend that our national policy masks a sinister design of territorial aggrandizement at their expense, and point to Porto Rico and Panama in confirmation of their fears, while the Old World is content that our fleets shall do police duty for them, collect their debts, and thereby aggravate the distrust in Latin bosoms of the integrity of our purposes and the sincerity of our assurances.

Mr. President, I had occasion some months ago to refer to the fact that it was not the superb fleets and the standing armies of France and Germany which prevented war between these great nations over the Morocco problem. Nor does ample preparation for war often prevent it. On the contrary, it encourages belligerency. It is the armed man upon the streets who seeks or who does not avoid collision with his fellows. It is, of course, a wise precaution that one should be armed who lives in an armed community; and that our country should have its fleet in this age when all the nations have theirs, but not because it is a means or a guaranty of peace. The influences which in recent years have promoted the cause of peace are more potent than cannon in shaping the policy of nations. It is the expansion of that sentiment of brotherhood which protests against the use of the sword and which more and more perceives that the rulers declare war and the masses wage it; that the few enjoy its benefits, while the many reap its bitter harvest of blood and destruction; that lives are squandered for the glory of commanders; and that the huge burden of war's accumulated waste and debt rests upon the wages of toil to remote generations.

Socialism is a word of many meanings. It is repugnant to ears long tuned to the prevailing scheme of things, but has a pleasant sound to many who have come in ruder contact with some of its ragged angles. It protests against the contrasts and inequalities of modern society and would reform them by methods which sometimes startle and always alarm. I am neither its opponent nor its advocate. Parts of its program are to my mind commendable; others do not command the approval of my judgment. But I respect the sincerity of its purposes and the logic of its advocates. It may be wholly evil, but we are told that out of evil good may come. And I affirm that the spread of socialism among the nations, its indifference to national boundaries, its protests against the maintenance and the use of navies and armies for cutting throats and burning cities is one of the great peace agencies of this century. It was this which commanded Germany and France to lay down their arms, and they obeyed.

It was this which proclaimed the injustice and the cruelty of war wreaked upon the innocent and the unoffending, to whom all its glamour and its glory are denied. It spoke through the voices of assembled thousands in public squares, through the lips of speakers on 10,000 platforms, through the columns of all the journals in both countries, through the bank deposits, and from the workbench. And if Socialism never does anything else this great and beneficent achievement nobly justifies the existence of the spirit which made it possible.

Mr. President, this proposed holiday, if accepted, will enable us to sit down and take our breath. It will give the people of all nations the opportunity to inquire what our mad competition is all about and whether it is worth while from any viewpoint. It will enable us to devise some other and cheaper and more effective method of national defense and a better understanding of international attitudes and policies. All the nations will be given time to perceive the importance of developing their peoples, their opportunities, and their resources instead of their war factories and shipyards; to understand the great truth that national prowess, dignity, and true greatness rest upon the character and the condition of its masses. If their well-being is considered, their industries developed, their numbers increased, their rights and liberties safeguarded, their powers respected, and their opportunities enlarged, no nation will menace our future or seriously obstruct our pathways of progress. And thus perceiving, the twelve-month holiday will become a permanent surcease of profligate competition for naval supremacy between the nations. Vast economic waste will be avoided. Our revenues can be devoted to the liquidation of the national debt, and the expansion of our agricultural pursuits, to the growth of trade and manufacture. Let the United States join hands with the great English-speaking nation across the sea in making this proposal effective, and persuade the co-operation of the other powers by the force of our mutual example.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. SMOOT. There is scarcely a day, Mr. President, that I do not receive from some part of the United States newspaper clippings showing, it seems to me, a concerted action on the part of the clothing distributors of this country to impress upon the American people that there is not going to be any reduction in the price of clothing on account of the passage of the tariff act. I receive them by way of circulars, and I receive them by way of newspaper clippings, as I stated, from every part of the country.

I hold in my hand a little circular, and on the back of it I find it is compiled by E. H. Van Ingen & Co., wholesale woolen merchants, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-first Street, New York. I suppose every member of the Finance Committee knows this company and what they represent. They have these circulars sent to their customers, and they are distributed for advertising purposes.

I notice its title is "What effect will reduced tariff rates on woollens have upon market prices of goods and custom-made clothes?" and then, within its lids, we find the reasons why the price of clothing is not to be reduced to the American people.

Mr. President, rather than to ask that all these different requests from all over the United States to print in the RECORD be complied with, I wish simply to call the attention of the Senate to one this morning. I find in this circular the following:

The reduction in duties which are looked for will be equal to about 3 cents per ounce on foreign goods, or, say, 50 cents per yard on winter weights. On Americans it will be less, or about 2 cents per ounce, say 35 cents per yard on winter weights.

Even those reductions will be partially offset by advances in prices, both here and abroad. Such advances have already begun.

These advances, which will almost certainly continue, are and will be caused (a) by increased demand from this country certain to follow reduced tariff rates, and (b) by higher cost of wool, which is owing to its decreased world production and the constantly increasing world-wide consumption of it.

Hence we do not believe that any tariff reductions which are at all likely to be made will lower the market values of woollens as compared with the prices of fall 1913, more than 30 cents per yard on foreign goods and 20 cents per yard on American.

These calculations are based on 17 to 19 ounce cloths, such as now make up the great bulk of winter suitings. On summer weights, 10 to 14 ounces per yard, the difference would be still less, probably not over 20 cents on foreign and 12 to 15 cents on American.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from what document he is reading. I did not understand what it is.

Mr. SMOOT. This is a compilation of E. H. Van Ingen & Co., wholesale woolen merchants and importers, located in New York.

Mr. GALLINGER. Importers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Who are Van Ingen & Co. that it should be of any interest to the Senate to know what their views are upon this question, or whether or not they are in a conspiracy of false prophesying?

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the Senator did not hear what I said.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I heard what the Senator said.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been requested nearly every day for the last few months to have printed in the RECORD certain newspaper articles from all over the country. It is evident to me that there is a concerted effort on the part of the retailers distributing clothing in this country to impress upon the people that there is to be no reduction whatever in the price of woolen goods or woolen clothing on account of reductions in the tariff. I do not feel like asking that these shall be printed in the RECORD, and I simply make a statement this morning covering the whole matter.

Mr. BORAH. What is the difference whether there is concerted action, that the price is going to fall or going to rise? Time will demonstrate the fact, and this is a mere fruitless prophecy on the part of these people. The act has been passed; it is a law, and it will either raise the price or lower it; but it can amount to nothing that somebody is prophesying about it now that the legislation is over. Their prophecy can not resuscitate Schedule K or help the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. There was a good deal of prophecy before ever the act was passed. The American people were told it was going to greatly decrease the cost of living; but so far everything goes to demonstrate that it has not done so.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think that the American people will be misled upon that proposition at all. I do not believe anybody believed there was going to be reduced cost of living to any extent.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, I think, is mistaken in that. I know that at least a great many of the American people believed it, and I know it was heralded from one end of the country to the other that there would be a decrease in the cost of living. That was one of the great cries in the last campaign.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is true. That is ancient history. But after the campaign was closed and long before Congress enacted the bill the Secretary of Commerce announced that in his opinion there would be no reduction in the cost of living. That was abandoned, as I understood, before the bill ever received the signature of the President. The reduction of the cost of living ceased to be urged in the debates as a reason for the passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not a day that I do not receive an article published in some of the magazines or papers of the country showing that there is at the present time a great decrease in the cost of living. I remember yesterday seeing in one of the papers where some person had figured out that the Thanksgiving dinner of the American people would be $9,000,000 less this year on account of the reductions in the tariff.

Mr. BORAH. It is evident that the people figuring on that proposition did not expect to eat eggs on that day. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. Or anything else that makes up a Thanksgiving dinner.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. I gladly yield.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator if he indorses and approves what he is reading?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not believe that there is going to be very much reduction in clothing to the ultimate consumer; I do not believe that the wool raiser is going to be benefited; I do not believe that the American manufacturer is going to be benefited; I do not believe that the American consumer is going to be benefited; but I do believe that the foreign importer is going to be benefited; I do believe that the retailer is going to be benefited and all persons who handle the goods between the manufacturer and the ultimate consumer.

Mr. STONE. The Senator thinks that the reduction of the tariff will not tend to reduce the price of commodities?

Mr. SMOOT. Not to the consumer very much. It will to the person who perhaps buys from the manufacturer or the importer, but before it comes into the possession of the ultimate consumer the difference in the tariff will be consumed by those who handle it from the manufacturer until it reaches the ultimate consumer.

Mr. STONE. As I recall, the Senator from Utah, when the last tariff bill was before the Senate, was very persistent in contending that the reduction provided for would lower the cost of manufactured products in this country to an extent that would embarrass the manufacturers and—

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is right there.

Mr. STONE. And that the consequence would concern the wages of laborers, and all that. Has the Senator changed his position? Does he think now that the cost of the products of our factories will not be lowered?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps I can cite one particular case to the Senator that will explain my position, if he does not already know it. I pleaded with the minority not to reduce the tariff on pyrogallic acid to the extent they did—

Mr. STONE. The Senator pleaded not to reduce on anything.

Mr. SMOOT. Wait a minute; that is a mistake. And I said at that time if it was reduced the German manufacturer could control this market. Well, what has been the result? The tariff has not been in operation very long, Mr. President, but I find this notice:

For sale: The machinery and stock of the Eastern Chemical Works, at public auction, on Saturday, November 1, 1913, at 11 a. m., at company office. Property may be seen by appointment with W. A. White, agent of trustees, P. O. box 3, Elmwood, Conn.

I have a letter here from the company stating that they were compelled to close it because of the fact that it was impossible to make pyrogallic acid in competition with the German manufacturers at the rate provided in the tariff act.

Mr. STONE. That was the contention of the Senator from Utah with reference to practically every item in the bill the rate on which was reduced.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator is absolutely mistaken.

Mr. STONE. That was the general contention of the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Only on those items I named specifically.

Mr. STONE. The attitude of the Senator from Utah and his colleagues on that side was opposition to the reduction provided for in the bill just passed based on the ground chiefly, if not wholly, that it would so affect the selling value or price of manufactured products that our home industries could not successfully compete with foreign competitors, and that as a result it would compel the curtailment of the output or a cessation of the industry or a reduction of wages, and so forth. That was the argument we heard in this Chamber day after day.

Mr. SMOOT. And the argument should be good to-day, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. Now, the Senator tells us that there is not, and will not be, any reduction in price in the general run of commodities to the consumer of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. No; Mr. President—

Mr. STONE. And that the importer only will get the benefit of the reductions.

I should like to ask the Senator if the importers can bring in goods which have heretofore been excluded from our markets at a lower price, why is it that they can do so? It must be because the competition they find here is such that they can meet it, whereas formerly they could not meet it. That is to say, the prices at home are lower and therefore they can bring in the goods, pay the tariff prescribed by this law, and enter upon our markets when they could not do it under the tariff prevailing before the passage of the law.

Mr. President, if an importer can bring goods from abroad—winter clothes of which the Senator has been reading—and sell them here at from 35 to 50 cents a yard less than they were sold before, he can do that only because the American manufacturer of the same goods must sell them at the same price.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. Well, he would not come in here and sell them at a higher price than the American manufacturer offers them on the market.

Mr. SMOOT. That argument would not hold good at all.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator think the foreign importer would bring them in here and sell them at a higher price than his competitor would offer them for in our market?

Mr. SMOOT. If the foreign manufacturer sells them, the American manufacturer certainly does not. They both could not sell them.

Mr. STONE. No; they both could not sell them; but there is competition between them for the same market, for the same merchandise.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Missouri does not yet seem to catch my idea.

Mr. STONE. But now the Senator holds that, although the goods are sold at from 35 to 50 cents a yard less—

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. STONE. Well, if the Senator does not mean that, I do not know what he means, and I do not know what that article means, unless it means to say that there is a combination between the importers of foreign goods and the American manufacturers of the goods, and I do not believe it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I mean that it takes $3\frac{1}{2}$ yards of cloth to make a suit of clothes, and the difference in price on a 12 to 14 ounce cloth, with the advance that has been made in England, according to this booklet, is 12 to 15 cents a yard. Supposing it is 15 cents and $3\frac{1}{2}$ yards in a suit, that would make 52½ cents on a suit of clothes. Does the Senator mean to say that the American consumer is going to buy a \$20 suit of clothes for \$19.47½?

Mr. STONE. Yes; I say he can.

Mr. SMOOT. I say, Mr. President, he can not or he will not.

Mr. STONE. I see them, and the Senator can see them, advertised in the windows of the stores at $18 and $19 and certain cents.

Mr. SMOOT. That has been going on for 30 years; but that is not for a $20 suit.

Mr. STONE. And I should like to ask the Senator this question: If it be true that the lowering of the tariff rates does not lower the price of the article, if the manufacturers of the United States can go on selling to their customers at the same price, then why was the Senator waking the echoes of this Chamber and disturbing our peace for months here in a complaint that it would destroy our industries by reducing our manufacturing prices to a level that would compel the closing of their doors?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not yet made the statement that the purchaser of the goods from the manufacturer is not going to buy his goods for a little less; I have never heretofore made such a statement as that on this floor, and have not done so to-day. I did make the statement, however, that the reduction that is made to the jobber—who purchases from the manufacturer, who again sells to the retailer, and then the retailer sells to the consumer—will be divided among those who sell the goods, and the American consumer will get no reduction; and, Mr. President, you will find, and the American people will find, that that is and will be the case. There are some few items that no doubt go direct from the producer to the consumer in the price of which there will be a small reduction; but the great bulk of goods that are distributed by the retailers of this country go through not only the hands of the retailers, but through the jobbers' hands, and they in turn purchase from the manufacturer in this country or the foreign importer, and when the goods reach the ultimate consumer whatever reduction has been made in the tariff law will be taken by those who distribute the goods.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Utah points his accusing finger at me, and that leads me to suggest, inasmuch as this controversy seems to be becoming again serious, that the Senator from Utah move a reconsideration of the vote by which the Underwood bill was passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I would rather have that motion come from the Senator from Colorado, for I think it would then have more chance of being adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Colorado is quite content with the law.

Mr. SMOOT. But the motion could not come from me, because I voted against the passage of the bill, while the Senator from Colorado voted for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the time within which to make a motion for a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill passed has expired.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, there is one thing that seems to fill the heart of the average standpat Republican with bubbling joy and hope, and that is the fact, wherever he finds it, that something has not been reduced in price; that there has been no material reduction here or there in the cost of living.

Mr. SMOOT. Can the Senator from Missouri tell me of anything the price of which has been reduced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. One Senator complained to me the other day about a reduction in which his constituents in North Dakota were particularly interested. It seems to me that our friends on the other side are sitting with wide-open eyes waiting and watching to start a propaganda proclaiming that there is no reduction in the cost of living; it fills their bosoms with delight and joy. If there is anything that would surpass that in its exhilarating influence on the mind of the average standpat Republican, it would be a panic. I think as to a great many of them, Mr. President, if they ever pray—and I suppose they do—the invocation they send up nightly, when on their knees, to the powers in the blue heavens, is that some sort of industrial and financial panic will sweep over the country; and as they go around in broad daylight, if you meet them on the street you can see their lips moving with whispers, mumbling the same prayer for some such convulsion. [Laughter.] Nothing in the world would delight them more.

Well, we have passed the tariff bill, and, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said, let us wait and see what the effect of it will be, unless the Senator is a knight-errant, leading the charge, and opening the way for this assault, stating that eggs have gone up and that other things have not been reduced; that the cost of living has not been materially lowered. If we want to go into that argument in due time, why, we will take that up, too, but the Senator is premature. He is starting a little too early, and he might restrain his impatience until some time in the future—the near future. I would not have the Senator bottle himself up so that he would feel uncomfortable [laughter]; but he should let it off by degrees—small degrees—until we have more data upon which to base our contention.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not blame the Senator for being a little piqued this morning. What he has said in relation to the standpatters wanting a panic he repeated time and time again in the discussion of the tariff bill; so the present declaration is not new for the Senator; but I want to say to the Senator from Missouri and to the whole country that I know of no one in this country who desires a panic, and I know of no one who hopes with a greater hope than I that the business of this country will go on and that prosperity will continue. I said before the bill was passed that I thought business would go on as long as the prosperity existed in Europe that exists there to-day; but I believe with all my heart that when the time comes that Germany or England desires to take this market under the present law they can do so, unless the wages of the workingmen of this country are reduced, and I never want to see the day come when that will happen.

Mr. President, the Senator has referred to the Senator from North Dakota, and I suppose he had reference to wheat—that the price of wheat had declined; but has the price of flour to the ultimate consumer declined? Does not every man who buys 10 pounds or 25 pounds of flour in Washington to-day pay the same price that he did before, no matter whether or not the price of wheat has dropped? My whole argument, Mr. President, has been that the ultimate consumers, the great body of the American people, are paying to-day as much for goods as they did before the passage of the tariff bill, and that there is no reduction in the cost of living to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I assume that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has been stirred to this deliverance from the fact that he has not forgotten the promise of the Democratic national platform that the cost of living would be reduced to the American people. That declaration was an important factor in the last campaign. We have been waiting patiently to see the promised reduction; it has not come, and I do not wonder that the Senator from Utah, who has to support a family, as some of the rest of us have to do, is disappointed that those prophecies have not come to pass.

Mr. President, I think we ought to possess our souls in patience. I agree with the Senator from Missouri on that point. The Democratic Party has given the country a legislative bichloride of mercury tablet. It is slow poison, and it will take some time for it to work out ultimate effects; but in my judgment, as I said during the debate on the bill, the bad result is sure to come.

The Senator from Missouri, if he calls me an average standpatter, is mistaken in charging me with desiring to see either industrial disturbance or a financial panic. We all hope for prosperity and hope that it will continue, but there are already evidences that we can not wink out of sight that there is going to be a good deal of industrial disturbance in this country in the near future. I hope it may be avoided, but I have very grave fears that it will not be. I give the Democratic Party the credit of entire sincerity. They worked out an economic problem that has been in the Democratic mind for the last half century, and they worked it out in the full belief, I have no doubt, that it would be for the benefit of the American people. I hope, we all hope, that that will prove true, but I have very grave apprehensions that the problem has not been worked out wisely.

If it has not been, the American people will correct it in due time and restore to the statute books a law that will better protect our people from the cheap labor of European and Asiatic countries.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if my friend will permit me, I should like to ask him—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask him if he delivered the same speech, or substantially the same speech, in Massachusetts during the last campaign?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not been in Massachusetts delivering speeches. I am expressing a conviction that I have long held; and where I have expressed that conviction matters not to the Senator from Missouri. We will just wait; I am waiting; we all are hoping; but the country will have to be the final judge of the wisdom of the Democratic Party in enacting the tariff law now on the statute books. I have no disposition to agitate the matter now—not the least in the world.

When the Senator from Missouri said that the average stand-patter—and I suppose I am in that category—was praying for industrial disturbance and financial panic, the Senator did not do himself credit and did not do me justice; that is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] remind me somewhat of the old woman who went to the bored well in Livingston, Ala. They are like her in this, at any rate, that they expected too much too quick. The old lady had heard that the water there was a great medicine to cure dyspepsia and all sorts of other ailments. She went there and hired a little dinky, who went down and got her a glass of water. She drank it, and then he got her five more glasses, and she drank all those five, and then she turned around to her daughter, who had come with her, and said, "Well, let's go and catch the next train; it ain't doing me no good yet." [Laughter.] You can not expect things to do you good immediately. The utmost that you could hope for was that you should be disappointed in your prophecies of dire panic and trouble and worry and financial destruction of industries and the closing of factories. You have been disappointed about that, have you not? So far we have not had any of those panics or closed factories, have we?

Mr. GALLINGER. We have had some.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was not a single duty that we reduced in connection with which you did not say that we were going to close down factories, start soup houses, and heavily reduce wages. We have not reduced wages; we have not closed down any factories; all your prophecies have been proven to be idle wind. You will come to the proof of the pudding after awhile; you can not all at once get a reduction from the importer to the ultimate consumer, because it has got to go down the line, and it takes a little bit longer than two months for it to go down the line.

The Senator from Utah comes here and tells us that the importers are going to profit, but that the consumer will not. How in the name of common sense can the importer profit except by being able to sell more goods at the same profit at a cheaper price? And if he sells more goods at the same profit at a cheaper price, he can not do so except by benefiting the consumer.

Now, Mr. President, it is true—and I am glad of it—that God made the world, and made it to run by certain general laws. Thank Providence, the world does not run by senatorial prophecy or prediction or threat, and very frequently a senatorial or political prophecy and a menace are about the same; frequently the prophecy is made as a menace; it is made for the sake of the effect it will have upon the people. The world is run by certain general laws and not by senatorial verbalities. It is a curious thing, a lesson of instruction to all of us—principally, amongst us, for me, as well as for others—that things are going to depend upon natural laws. What you say and what I say will have nothing in the world to do with it, except in so far as it may influence men psychologically to deceive themselves about the operation of the law for a little while.

This is a great law of economics. It can not be avoided. It can not be evaded. It can not be jumped over. It can not be walked around. It can not be tunneled under. It is that just in proportion as you reduce the cost of getting a thing from the producer to the consumer you reduce the price of the thing. You can no more help that than you can help two and two making four. You may talk here until you are blind; you may predict until you are insane; but every time you reduce a part of the cost of a thing on its way from the producer to the consumer you are going ultimately to reduce the price of the thing to the consumer.

Here is a turnpike. Here is a man given power by law to collect so much for each wagon that comes through loaded with freight. He collects a dollar on each wagon. Nobody but a fool imagines that that dollar is not going to be paid by the ultimate consumer, or else the man in the wagon is going to lose money and go out of business—one or the other. Even if he does lose money and go out of business the price is not going to be reduced to the ultimate consumer, because the other man with the other wagon is going to carry the goods, no matter what sort of a wagoner he is, whether a foreign or a domestic wagoner.

Here is your great tariff system, well named from El Tarifa. Here is your great tariff system—just a fellow put at a certain place to collect a turnpike charge, put there to levy tribute on the world's commerce. Mr. President, just as surely as fate is fate, and God is God, and law is law, an increase of that turnpike charge increases the ultimate price of the goods, and a reduction of it reduces it if everything else is equal.

Of course tariffs are not the only things that enter into the cost of production. You may raise a tariff 100 per cent on a given article, and a man may come along about the same time and make an invention which saves 50 per cent of the cost of labor expended in the production of the article. If that shall happen, then, in spite of your raising the tariff, the article will go down in price.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment, and then I will yield. If you were to reduce the duty upon a given article, and the whole world happened to be in a situation where it was making for a lesser and lesser production of the article in comparison with the demand for it, your reduction in the duty upon the article would not reduce the price. It would keep it from going up as high as otherwise it would have gone.

Take meat, for example: The price of meat is going up, regardless of all tariffs, for quite a while, because the people who are raising meat are falling off in numbers in comparison with the people who are buying meat. All of your tariffs and protectionism in this country and Germany and everywhere else have hothoused the people out of the country life into the city life, and as a result you have made meat consumers comparatively more numerous and decreased meat producers. But, undoubtedly, the moment you put meat on the free list you can say that however high it may go it can not go as high as it could have gone if you had kept that turnpike charge on it on its way to the producer.

I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am always interested in the discussion of this question by the learned Senator from Mississippi. I should like the Senator from Mississippi to enlighten my somewhat obtuse mind as to why it was, when we took off the duty on hides—and the Senator will remember the promises we had then that we would have cheaper shoes and cheaper leather—that we had instead dearer shoes and dearer leather shortly afterwards. What was the process?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Fewer hides and more hide wearers; that is all. That is the answer to the question.

Mr. GALLINGER. That answer is not quite satisfactory to me, but we will let it go.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But will the Senator from New Hampshire tell me this, frankly—because he is not obtuse; on the contrary, he is very far from it. I know of no man in whose intellectual ability I have more absolute confidence than in that of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will not the Senator frankly say to me that he knows that, although shoes have gone up, and although hides have gone up, they have not gone up as high as they would have gone if the duty had been kept on them?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am unable to answer that question. If I answered it, it would be pure speculation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think if the Senator would answer the question frankly he would say that that is the fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think likely in that respect there has not been any change.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will admit that a tariff does not keep down prices, because it is put on for the purpose of raising them?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly it does not put down prices, as a rule, and in most instances it does not increase prices.

I should like now to ask the Senator one other question, and it is about a matter that will come home to us sooner or later.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] read an advertisement of a manufacturing plant in New England that is offered for sale at public auction on the ground, as they say, that they are unable to manufacture the product in competition with Germany under the existing law. Does not the Senator agree with me that if we are going to put out of commission any industry, great or small, because of the reduction of duty, and Germany pays for her labor about 50 per cent of what we pay here, after the American industry is put out of commission the foreigner will increase the price?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, indeed.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not think so? When the foreigner has control of our market, does not the Senator think that is what will follow?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; that is neither inductive nor deductive. Neither the experience of the world nor the logic of the world justifies it. The only way any people can keep another people out of engaging in any industry in the world is to continue all the time to produce the article so cheaply that others will find no profit in going into the business. It is just as easy for us to go back into a business as it is to stay in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It takes time to build factories and re-establish a business once destroyed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The only way in which Germany can give a final deathblow to any industry in the United States is not simply by selling for a little time at such a figure as to kill a particular John Smith who is engaged in the industry, but by continuing all the time to sell at such a figure as to keep all the John Smiths from going into that industry.

One more thing in that connection which is eternally true, too: If John Smith can not make whatever he makes of a given quality at a price low enough to compete, then John Smith is carrying on a losing business. You may by a tariff make it profitable to him, but it is a losing business for the people among whom he lives and who must pay the expense of John Smith's business. I have no sort of sympathy with the John Smiths of the world who insist that they shall be given a lot of legal privileges whereby they may make a living at my expense by transferring to me a tax which the Government has originated for them.

I have no sort of sympathy with the idea that there is any such thing as "the foreigner."

There are about 1,500,000,000 foreigners, and they are competing with one another all the time. They are not merely competing with the people over here who are making goods, but they are competing with one another. Millions of them in England, desiring to export goods to the United States, are competing with one another to sell them here at the lowest price. Millions more in Germany and France and British India are competing with those in England to ship goods to us at the lowest price. You people keep talking about "the foreigner" as if somebody had gone out and discovered him and put a suit of clothes on him and one pair of shoes, and he had just one body and one head, and all he had to do was to fix one price for selling goods in your market, when as a matter of fact he would have to agree, if there could be an agreement—and, of course, there could not be—with about 1,499,999,999 other foreigners in order to monopolize the American market for himself.

The foreigner who will sell to the American market will not be the abstract foreigner; he will be a concrete foreigner, and he will be the foreigner who will underbid the other foreigners. If any American goes out of business, he goes out of business because he is carrying on a business that is not profitable for the American people.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I understand the illustration of the learned Senator about the wagonload of goods that had to pay a dollar for passing through a tollgate, or something of that kind, and the other wagon did not have to pay it, the wagon that did not have to pay it would get the business?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did not the Senator say substantially that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. My supposition was that both wagons paid it, but that the driver of one understood his business well enough to stay in business, notwithstanding the payment, and the other did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not change the illustration very much.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not change the illustration, and it does not change the eternal fact that the dollar of turnpike charge has to be charged against the goods.

Mr. GALLINGER. What I was getting at was this: The Senator closed his illustration with a suggestion that it did not make any difference to him which wagonload of goods was sold to the American people. I assume the Senator thinks it does not make any difference to us, if we get cheaper goods, whether the goods are manufactured in this country or manufactured and sold to us by foreigners?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, yes; I think it makes a difference of a psychological, sentimental sort; but I am arguing an economic proposition now. It does not make any difference to me, as an ultimate consumer of cotton goods, who sells me those cotton goods, as an economic proposition. Of course I would rather take a meal with the Senator from New Hampshire at my own cost than take a meal with somebody else at his cost; but I am now debating an economic proposition, and we are not considering the mere sentiment of it.

So far as commerce is concerned, so far as the welfare of mankind is concerned, every single highway charge upon trade which trammels it, delays it, disturbs it, or burdens it is a misfortune, no matter to whose private benefit it may inure. So far as the world is concerned, so far as doing business with one another in the world is concerned, every man who has any right granted to him by law anywhere to touch the goods of others and say, "Give, pay, 10 per cent or 25 per cent," is an encumbrance and a burden and a nuisance, and ought to be dispensed with as soon as possible. There is only one excuse in the world for it, and that is that a government needs to levy a tax in order to carry on governmental functions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator can differentiate between his economic and psychological views on this question, he will demonstrate anew the acuteness and brightness of his intellectual equipment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope not. That is not necessary to prove my intellectual equipment. It seems very simple to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. What I am looking at is the practical working out of the problem. The Senator in debate a little while ago practically stated, and I think openly stated, that if it were not for the matter of revenue he would absolutely abolish all tariff duties. I think the Senator said that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; not all. I would keep some duties on a few things that I think might well be discouraged by taxation for the benefit of mankind; but I would not keep a tax on anything the production of which I wanted to encourage.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is repeating an argument that is familiar to some of us. The present President of the United States, a man of great intellectual ability and high integrity, declared a good many years ago that if we did not have tariff duties England would trade more freely with us. Of course England would. Anybody knows that. If we did not have any tariff duties, in view of the fact that England pays not quite half the wages we do and Germany only one-half, they would send us practically all our goods and we would not be manufacturing anything at all in this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I do not know about that. That does not follow.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me it does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; that does not follow.

Mr. GALLINGER. At any rate, the present President of the United States declared that if we had no tariff duties England would sell us more goods.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is not going really upon second thought in making that statement. The Senator knows that I am paying four times as much for labor in my cotton fields to-day as is being paid in the cotton fields of India. The Senator knows that I am paying nearly three times as much as is being paid in the cotton fields of Egypt. The Senator knows that neither India nor Egypt can compete with me in raising cotton.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course not. They have not the intelligence that we have, and conditions are entirely different.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All of which goes to prove that it is not the per diem payment to labor that constitutes an important part of the cost of the product as it finally comes out, but that it is the percentage which the labor cost constitutes of the entire cost. There is not a country in the world, and I think the Senator from New Hampshire knows it, that produces goods at so low a percentage of labor cost as his own section, New England, to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, Mr. President; I think I will accede to that proposition; but the difference is not so great as the difference in wages. I am not very familiar with German manufacturers, although I have been in some of their factories. The Senator knows more about the conditions there than I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has seen a German woman handling four looms where a New England woman will handle six.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but I also know that the manual-training schools of Germany are far ahead of ours. That goes without question; does it not? It seems to me that when it is a well-established fact that Germany pays only 50 per cent of the wages we pay here, that difference can not be overcome by increased efficiency.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator is begging the question. He is asserting that Germany pays 50 per cent of the wage we do. What the Senator means to say is that Germany pays 50 per cent per diem of what we do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He does not mean to say that the total cost of labor in a yard of goods or in any other pound or yard of product in Germany is only 50 per cent of what it is here.

Mr. GALLINGER. I qualified my statement. The Senator did not hear my qualification. I said I thought that the difference could not be overcome by the increased efficiency of the American manufacturers, admitting that we have increased efficiency.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are a lot of things besides the mere labor cost per diem that enter into the calculation. Take the cotton business we were talking about just a moment ago. There has got to be a man on the quarter-deck in field and factory as well as a man in the field behind the gun. Superior intelligence of administration and management amounts to a great deal.

Mr. GALLINGER. That certainly is so, but I greatly doubt that there is much difference between the German, the Englishman, and the American in point of efficiency.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, I did not intend to take up the time of the Senate this far. I merely intended to emphasize this fact, and I am going to repeat it and reemphasize it, and then sit down. It is that no amount of talk on my part, no amount of indulgence in verbalities on the part of the Senator from Utah, no amount of discursiveness upon the part of the Senator from New Hampshire, can prevent just what you and I are going to see, and that is the fixed operation of a fixed law, and that if the cost of living shall not be reduced to the American people by the reduction of the highway taxes on the public road between the producer and the consumer, it will be because of the operation of other factors in the game.

A great many other factors are at work. I illustrated it a moment ago about meats. They are at work there. You and I are not going to have any cheaper meat for quite a time in consequence of the tariff. We are not going to have any cheaper meat until we put more people to raising meat or fewer people buying it—one of the two. In other words, the tariff will keep meat from going up as high as it would have gone if we had still kept the tariff there, but the price of meat is going up in spite of the reduction of the tariff because the other things are more important.

But it is useless for us to talk. It is useless for us to argue. It is useless for us to predict. There is going to be upon the whole, as far as the tariff touches the problem at all, a reduction of the cost of living to the American public, and it is already coming and partially has come.

Now, of course, the price of eggs has gone up because they have had such a terrible destruction of eggs in England, the suffragettes throwing them at Asquith and the administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to suggest that according to the Washington papers the other day another reason for the rise in the price of eggs is that the hens have gone on a strike. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may be true. They may have become imbued in some occult way with this pessimistic philosophy which actuates the Senator from Utah and the Senator from New Hampshire, and it might have discouraged the hens; and even if the hens did not go on a strike, they might have felt impotent to lay as many eggs as they did lay in the good old times of standpat Republican egg laying.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the introduction of resolutions. If there are no further resolutions, the morning business is closed.

ADJOURNMENT TO SATURDAY—BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. STONE. I ask the Senator to withhold that motion for a moment.

Mr. KERN. Very well.

Mr. STONE. Before the motion is put to the Senate, I desire to say that I conferred with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, some half hour or more ago, and he told me that the committee of which he is chairman—that is, the Committee on Banking and Currency—would on Saturday report the banking and currency bill sent to that committee after it was received from the House some time in September. I understood from him that that had been agreed to by the committee of which he is the nominal chairman. I should like to inquire at this juncture of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who is, according to the newspapers, chairman of one wing of this committee, whether the statement of Chairman OWEN is in accord with his understanding that the bill will be reported on Saturday?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say in reply to the Senator from Missouri that in the full meeting of the committee this morning an agreement was reached and a vote was taken by which the two factions of the committee should report the bill to the Senate on Saturday, with a statement of their disagreement and their inability to make a report. At the same time each half of the committee is to ask leave to file what might be termed a statement of position or views, each such statement to have an equal status in the Senate for whatever it may be worth, and the Glass bill as it came from the House then to go upon the calendar. I will say that as far as the part of the committee that I speak for now is concerned we shall be ready on Saturday to file such a statement.

Mr. STONE. Then it is understood that the so-called Glass bill will be reported by the committee to the Senate on Saturday?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. With the disagreement.

Mr. STONE. With the disagreement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. STONE. For such action as the committee or the two wings of the committee may see proper to take.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. I thought the Senator from Nebraska really had the floor. I merely desired to ask a question. It will take but a moment.

Mr. STONE. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator from Nebraska to say that the Glass bill in its entirety as it came from the House will go to the calendar as a report of the committee?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That will be for the Senate to consider. We will report to the Senate our disagreement, the fact that the committee is equally divided, and unable to agree upon amendments to the bill. Every member of the committee and both factions of the committee desire to report very considerable amendments to the bill, but as neither has a majority there is no possibility of reporting those amendments except as I suppose by the consent of the Senate in the form of a statement of views. I suppose the bill would then, under the order of the Senate, go upon the calendar, and when it comes up for consideration it is our intention to ask that preference be given to amendments recommended by either division of the committee.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. The only suggestion I would make, if the Senator will permit me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KERN. I yield for a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The only suggestion I was about to make was that it seems to me the parliamentary status will be somewhat involved unless the so-called Owen-Glass bill shall be reported to the Senate without recommendation, and then amendments will be offered by the members of the differing so-called factions of the committee.

Mr. STONE. That is exactly what I understood the Senator from Nebraska to say, that it would be reported without recommendation, and that each division of the committee would report its view.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is the correct parliamentary procedure.

Mr. STONE. It seems to me so. I hold in my hand a document purporting to set forth the amendments that certain members of the committee, namely, Messrs. HITCHCOCK, NELSON, BRISTOW, CRAWFORD, McLEAN, and WEEKS, intend to present to the Senate as representing their views, and I assume they will be offered in some form by way of amendment to the bill you report; that is, the House bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. They can be offered as a substitute for the original bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Missouri is correct.

Mr. STONE. The only purpose I had in asking the Senator from Indiana to withhold his motion for a minute was to have it clearly understood, if the Chair please, that the bill would be reported on Saturday and be before the Senate at that time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is the understanding. That is in accordance with the vote of our committee.

Mr. STONE. I did that because a number of us at least have had some disappointments as to the reporting of the bill, by which I mean that it has been suggested by certain members of the committee from time to time that the bill would be reported on or about certain dates, but for one reason or another the committee did not report the bill. I thought now would be a good time to have it distinctly understood that it would be reported on Saturday.

Mr. KERN. I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana renews his motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day it will adjourn to meet on Saturday at the hour of 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Saturday, November 22, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, November 20, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, out of Whom proceedeth all things that are and were and shall be, we rejoice in this newborn day, with its inestimable treasures, its hopes and aspirations, which leap like angels from the temples of our hearts. Teach us how to use these blessings, and guide us by the hopes and aspirations to larger life and nobler achievements, that we may not only be recipients of Thy bounty but servants in Thy vineyard; that, working together with Thee, we may hasten the triumph of good over evil. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, November 17, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN A MEMBER.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, Judge FRANK PARK, Representative elect from the second district of Georgia, whose credentials are here in due form, desires to take the oath.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will present himself at the bar. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], Have the credentials of this new Member been presented?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir; they are on file.

The SPEAKER. In the Clerk's office?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman asks unanimous consent to have his colleague sworn in, that can be done.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit, there is no contest about this at all, is there?

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir.

Mr. PARK appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 8702. An act to authorize the county of Miami, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Wabash River in Miami County, Ind.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

S. 1829. An act for the relief of W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 1829. An act for the relief of W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8702. An act to authorize the county of Miami, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Wabash River in Miami County, Ind.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE EXTRA SESSION.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 22d day of November, 1913, at 1 o'clock p. m.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offered that resolution—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is the resolution debatable?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think it is not.

Mr. SIMS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise.

Mr. SIMS. To make a parliamentary inquiry. Is not a resolution at this time of the kind to authorize adjournment at a future date debatable?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will find out.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Chair rule that the resolution is not debatable?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is going to find out whether it is or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If this motion is debatable, the other gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] has the floor. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raised this point of order, and if he has any authority on it the Chair would like to have it. It might shorten up the proceedings.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not make a point of order. I made a parliamentary inquiry for the purpose of getting a ruling of the Chair. I do not know whether the resolution is debatable or not. If I felt sure it was, I would have had it introduced a dozen times for the purpose of debating it.

Mr. Speaker, while I did not make a point of order, but raised a parliamentary inquiry, personally I have no knowledge as to the precedents. I remember I looked this matter up some time ago, and I did not find any authority at that time. On principle I think the motion would be debatable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the motion is debatable. There does not seem to be any authority on it, except the way you would reason.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend half a minute. The motion is undoubtedly privileged. Now the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer this motion in good faith, because we ought to have adjourned, at least this House, two or three months ago. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I see in the newspapers that some people say it would be a public scandal for this House to adjourn now, because the Members would be paid their mileage. Well, I want my mileage. [Laughter.] I am entitled under the law to my mileage, and the people that I owe would be glad to see me get it. [Renewed laughter.] And whatever they may say or do, nine-tenths of the Members of this House feel exactly as I do about this matter. We ought to have adjourned long ago, and I hope that this resolution will pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves the balance of his time, which is 55 minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I trust that no Member of this House and no citizen of the country will criticize me for changing my position on the question of voting for adjournment. I have stayed here persistently from early dawn of spring, with the exception of a few days to pay my respects to Labor Day down in my district, voting on all occasions against adjournment, in order that the House might discharge every known duty to the country. We have discharged one noble duty—the passage of the tariff bill, which is now the law, and which will give relief not only to Democrats but to the Populists, Socialists, Prohibitionists, Progressives, and Republicans—all ought to be happy now, because the people of all political parties were in favor of a reduction of the tariff.

Mr. Speaker, there is a contention over the country as to what effect the passage of this tariff bill and the bill on banking and currency will have on the prosperity of the country in general. A few men throughout the country have accumulated large sums of wealth, and some of them undertake to hold a threatening hand over Congress and over the people of this country every time we undertake to pass legislation for the good of all.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to know on which side of this resolution the gentleman from Illinois is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not tell the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, to relieve the mind of the gentleman from Kentucky I desire to say that I am on the right side of this question. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, about six weeks ago a gentleman from my district visited me here. I was informed by him that the banking institutions of southern Illinois and southern Indiana were calling in some of their loans and refusing to make any more, except on short time.

Now whether that is true or not I can not say, except as I gathered from his statement and from statements of others. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that what is true in this territory is true to a greater or less extent in other territories. I saw in the press about 10 or 15 days ago that a banquet had been held in Chicago which was attended by such distinguished gentlemen as Frank A. Vanderlip, James J. Hill, and George M. Reynolds—three of the biggest financiers of the country. These gentlemen sounded a keynote of warning to the people of this country that a panic was going to come down upon us like a hurricane from the heavens.

Soon thereafter Jacob Schiff, of New York, gave a similar warning, saying that he predicted the panic of 1907, and no one believed him, and that while he was not saying that we were going to have a panic now, yet he warned the people against a panic which he thought might come pretty soon, if certain banking and currency legislation were not enacted in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, about 10 days ago down in my home county something transpired which might indicate what is in the minds of some of the big financiers of this country. Whenever the body is afflicted it usually shows itself in the weakest place. If a man has weak eyes and he contracts a severe cold it usually shows itself first in his eyes. What is true of the physical body is usually true of the commercial conditions of a country. Whenever a commercial disturbance occurs it usually shows itself in the most sensitive and weakest places.

The steel people are compelled to use fluorspar. They do not use it in large quantities, but they must use it in order to get the best results. Ninety-nine per cent of the fluorspar mined in America is produced in my district and in what is known as Senator JAMES's old district, now represented by Judge BARKLEY. About two weeks ago the largest fluorspar mine in that territory closed down because the steel people refused to buy any more fluorspar. That means one of three things—that the steel people have on hand a supply of fluorspar; that they are getting their fluorspar from abroad; or that they are intending to close down their works in the near future.

In order to get some idea as to what these people intend to do, I undertook to find out whether they were getting their supply from abroad. I went to the Secretary of Commerce, and he furnished me with certain figures of importation of fluorspar during the months of September and October, 1912, and during the months of September and October, 1913. The figures speak for themselves. First, let me say that the port of Philadelphia receives nearly all of the fluorspar that is imported to this country. During the month of September, 1912, there were imported into the port of Philadelphia 3,239 tons, and in October, 1912, 1,922 tons. During the corresponding months for 1913 there were imported to this port 917 tons in September and 3,634 tons in October, making a total of 4,551 tons for 1913 as against a total of 5,162 tons for 1912. From these figures it appears that less fluorspar is being imported into America now than was shipped in a year ago, so we may naturally conclude that these people are not getting in their supply from abroad. Whatever bearing these facts may have as to the intention of the steel people is entirely conjectural at this time.

The figures respecting the amount shipped into the port of Philadelphia may be interesting. During the entire year there were shipped into America 22,588 tons. The port of Philadelphia received 21,129 tons; Boston, the next largest, received 901 tons; and New York, 321 tons. This reveals that nearly all of the fluorspar shipped into this country from abroad is received at Philadelphia.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the Chair how a discussion of fluorspar can elucidate the question of adjournment.

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry. Unless some one raises the point of order, the Chair has no duty in the matter.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, the anxiety of my friend from Kentucky is often displayed on the floor of this House, and I am always gratified to relieve him whenever it is possible. I want to say to him now that I am in harmony with his resolution, but not for the same reasons offered by him awhile ago. I will give my reasons for supporting it later on. When it is considered that the Steel Corporation of this country has upon its directorate 23 members who, by an interlocking system of directors, control in franchise, banking, insurance, and industrial corporations of this country more than $30,000,000,000 worth of capital, which is more than one-fourth of all of the entire wealth of the country, it shows what influence they can wield; and, if they so desire, they could deal a serious blow at the commercial interests of the country. I desire to say now, not for anyone except myself, that if any of the great financial interests of this country conspire against the best interests of the country the people will not tolerate it. Congress has ample power to go into that question and see whether it is a matter of conspiracy against the welfare of the country or whether such acts are brought about by commercial conditions. To tolerate captains of industry to conspire against the best interests of the country, without an investigation and without punishment, is to say that we have no power in our Government to punish men for wrongdoing.

The man who shoulders his musket and leaves the army of his country, believing it is in the wrong, and joins the enemy on the battle field to fight is considered a traitor under the laws of nations; but we have seen in this country financial interests, great concerns, conspiring against the welfare of the country, and yet they have gone unpunished and untouched. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the steel people of this country are contemplating a closing down of any of their furnaces or factories, but if this little indication of a refusal to buy fluorspar foretells what they are thinking of doing, it is well for them to understand that Congress has ample power to order an investigation to discover the real cause.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to know if the gentleman from Illinois knows that many of the lumber and shingle mills of western Washington are already closing down and that the American consul at Vancouver in British Columbia reports that the shingle industry there has doubled in the last two months—

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of order. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] made the point of order that this discussion was out of order, and the Chair sustained that point, and yet the gentleman from Illinois has gone right on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was busy looking after some other point.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman ought to conform to the rules of the House and take his seat.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MANN. I did not know whether my colleague was through or not. When he has finished I wish to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has the floor. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. FOWLER. The anxiety of my friend from Georgia shall always receive my courteous consideration. I desire to discuss the merits of this resolution, Mr. Speaker, and have no desire whatever to bring in any irrelevant matter, but I thought this was an opportune time to give these captains of industry to understand our attitude.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order. The gentleman is discussing captains of industry and matters which have nothing whatever to do with this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman under the rule, when the point is made, must take his seat and then, if any gentleman thinks he ought to proceed, he can make the motion to allow the gentleman from Illinois to proceed in order.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to interfere with my friend from Illinois, although I thought we ought to hold this matter down, and I move that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to proceed in order and address himself to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] be permitted to proceed in order.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order and confine himself to the question.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I have already said all I desire to say, except to beg the pardon of the House for having detained it so long. I intended to present my remarks in a very brief way, referring to a few figures and facts, giving my reason for adjournment in connection therewith.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the remainder of my time.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will reserve his motion for a moment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman defer for a moment in order to allow me to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some remarks on good roads?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no objection to that if I will not lose my right.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I would like to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the speech which was delivered—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] has demanded the regular order, and the regular order is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] will withhold the motion for a few minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. How many minutes?

Mr. MANN. I would like a few minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will have to insist on my motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 45.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 75, nays 42, answered "present" 9, not voting 304, as follows:

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record the address delivered by President Lincoln at Gettysburg on the 19th of November, 1863, 50 years ago yesterday. The House was not in session yesterday; if it had been, I would have made this request then.

Mr. Alfred King, of Arlington, N. J., a veteran of the Civil War, with a highly creditable service, who was one of the first to suggest that the U. S. S. Maine be raised from its watery grave in Habana Harbor, asked me to have the wonderfully simple but profoundly patriotic speech of the martyred one made part of this day's Record. I wish to preface the speech by inserting a copy of the letter sent out to all the public schools in New Jersey, indicating how the day was observed by our boys and girls.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] asks unanimous consent to print in the Record the address delivered by President Lincoln at Gettysburg 50 years ago yesterday, and asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter and address above referred to are as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION,
Trenton, November 3, 1913.

To superintendents, principals, and teachers in New Jersey schools:

Wednesday, November 19, will be the fiftieth anniversary of the delivery of Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg address.

Quite apart from its sentiments of lofty patriotism, the Gettysburg address is universally recognized as one of the great masterpieces of English prose. It is recommended that all pupils in the high schools and the older pupils in the grammar schools commit the address to memory and recite it on the afternoon of the anniversary.

Respectfully,

CALVIN N. KENDALL,
Commissioner of Education.

LINCOLN'S ADDRESS AT GETTYSBURG.

Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that Nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure.

We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that Nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here.

It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced.

It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, November 21, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting a statement of expenditures made from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, pursuant to act of Congress approved July 1, 1902 (H. Doc. No. 278), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed, with accompanying document.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1028) granting a pension to Edward Flannery; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, November 21, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God look, we beseech Thee, with compassion upon our infirmities; when we are weak impart unto us strength, when we are perplexed impart unto us wisdom, when we falter impart unto us courage, that we may meet all the conditions and circumstances of life with a firm resolve to do the right as it is given us to see the right, keeping step with our convictions, harmonizing our acts with the eternal fitness of things and thus glorifying ourselves by glorifying Thee our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tully, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2779) to authorize the conveyance of the steel bridge over the Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., to the States of Idaho and Washington or local subdivision thereof.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend a speech which was made by me in this House on Friday last.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks delivered the other day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONSERVATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the next meeting of the House I may be permitted to address the House for 40 minutes on the subject of conservation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that at the next meeting of the House, after the reading of the Journal and the ordinary routine business, he be permitted to address the House for 40 minutes on the subject of conservation. Is there objection?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask unanimous consent to couple with that request permission for me to deliver an address to the House for about 15 minutes, winding up a little subject that I started on the 6th of September.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington, Mr. BRYAN, couples with the request that after the gentleman from Washington, Mr. JOHNSON, concludes his remarks he shall be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes on the same subject that he started on the 6th of September. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington, Mr. JOHNSON, as modified by the request of the gentleman from Washington, Mr. BRYAN?

Mr. HAMLIN. What is the subject of the gentleman's remarks?

Mr. BRYAN. Some developments that arose in connection with the Seattle riots. Some features that had not been presented to the House at the time I delivered my speech. I desired just before leaving for home in September to present those facts to the House, but my colleague thought it was inopportune. I suppose now he will have no objection to my presenting those facts and certain facts that have since transpired.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the double request?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Washington wants to discuss the Seattle riots.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; it is connected with the Seattle riots.

Mr. HARDWICK. I object.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will not object. The objection that was made before came from this side of the House.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand.

Mr. MANN. I think no one on this side of the House has any objection.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington, Mr. JOHNSON, as modified by the request of the gentleman from Washington, Mr. BRYAN?

There was no objection.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the next meeting of the House, at the conclusion of the addresses of the gentlemen who have secured consent, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on corporal punishment inflicted as a penalty.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent that at the next meeting of the House after the two gentlemen from Washington, Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. BRYAN, have concluded their remarks, he may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the subject of corporal punishment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3397. An act to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to mining claims; and

S. 2779. An act to authorize the conveyance of the steel bridge over the Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., to the States of Idaho and Washington or local subdivisions thereof.

MAILABILITY OF GAME BIRDS.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, before the resolution is read I would like to ask what it is about.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is a resolution of inquiry to the Postmaster General in regard to a ruling that is said to have been made by the department on Tuesday last as to the mailability of game birds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know what it is, but on account of the small number of Members present I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have my resolution acted upon at as early a date as possible. I am not willing that the House shall adjourn three days at a time if we can do any business.

The SPEAKER. It is not three days from now until Monday. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on next Monday. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Two Members, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, November 22, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, November 22, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, November 22, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,
President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer:

S. 2779. An act to authorize the transfer of a steel bridge over the Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Clarkston, Wash., to the States of Idaho and Washington, or local subdivisions thereof; and

S. 3397. An act to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to mining claims.

PETITIONS.

Mr. SHIVELY presented resolutions adopted by Elmer Post, No. 37, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic, of Elkhart, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation granting a pension of $1 per day to all surviving soldiers of the Civil War, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WEEKS presented petitions of the Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Second Congregational Church of Palmer; of the Missionary Society of the First Highland Baptist Church, of Springfield; and of the congregation of the First Congregational Church of Westfield, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the so-called antipolygamy bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the pending banking and currency bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation providing an international suspension of naval construction, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to the members of the United States Military Telegraph Corps of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CHEROKEE FREEDMEN (S. DOC. NO. 239).

Mr. CLAPP. I present a memorial of the Cherokee freedmen and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and also printed as a Senate document, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I desire to say that this memorial goes to the question of the right of enrollment, and that I may not be misunderstood I will state that I am not in favor of any general opening of the rolls; but if there are individual cases where it shall be ascertained that injustice has been done I believe they should be corrected.

I should like to ask consent of the Senate that this personal statement may appear in connection with the memorial printed in the RECORD and also as a document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to have the memorial he has presented printed in the RECORD and also as a document.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator before that order is made what the memorial is.

Mr. CLAPP. It is a memorial of Cherokee freedmen setting forth that there are cases where injustice has been done with reference to closing the rolls and leaving them off the rolls.

Mr. BACON. How long is the memorial?

Mr. CLAPP. About three pages.

Mr. BACON. I wish to say in reference to this memorial, that my position as to the printing of other memorials may not be misunderstood, I recognize that this is probably something a little out of the ordinary and relates to a subject that may be entitled to a little more consideration than is usually the case.

Mr. CLAPP. Unquestionably. I think it is an exceptional case, and therefore I have made the request.

Mr. BACON. I understand, furthermore, it has reference to immediate legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL OF THE CHEROKEE FREEDMEN.

To the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned, representing the Cherokee freedmen who have been wrongfully excluded from the final rolls of the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma, do hereby memorialize Congress to enact legislation which will protect us in the rights guaranteed us under treaties between the United States and said nation, under the laws of Congress, and the rules and regulations of the Interior Department, and the decisions of the courts.

By the act of Congress of June 10, 1896 (the Indian appropriation bill), the rolls of citizenship of the several tribes, as they then existed, were confirmed, yet a number of our people whose names appear upon the various rolls have been denied their rights. (See Whitnire v. The United States and the Cherokee Nation, decided by the Court of Claims Mar. 29, 1909, and Feb. 20, 1911.)

Under the act of June 23, 1898, the Commission to the Five Tribes was directed as follows:

"It shall make a roll of Cherokee freedmen in strict compliance with the decree of the Court of Claims rendered the 3d day of February, 1896."

This direction was plain and simple, yet it was not obeyed.

The court in this opinion clearly set out the rights of the Cherokee freedmen, and we call your attention to the following extract:

"Said commissioners, in ascertaining the identity of the freedmen entitled to share under this decree, shall accept what is known as the authenticated Cherokee roll, the same being on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, having been furnished to him, and purporting to have been taken by the Cherokee Nation in 1880, for the purpose of showing the number of freedmen entitled at that time to citizenship in said nation * * * and their descendants."

The Secretary of the Interior in his letter of instructions told the commission what it should do, and had the commission followed the law and his instructions there would have been no trouble, but the commission did neither. He informed them that—

"The roll of 1880 made by the Cherokee Nation is to be accepted by you as conclusive of the rights of all persons whose names are found thereon and of their descendants to be enrolled by you; * * * no evidence was to be accepted tending to disprove the citizenship of any person whose name was upon the roll of 1880."

Notwithstanding the decree of the court and the strong language of the Secretary, the commission did fail and neglect to properly place upon the final roll the names of a number of freedmen who were on the 1880 roll. Many of the freedmen whose names were on that roll and their descendants have been and still are wrongfully denied membership in said nation, and they will lose their valuable rights unless some action is taken by Congress. There can be no reasonable excuse offered for the neglect of the Commission to the Five Tribes, for it was fully instructed what to do in regard to the Cherokee freedmen. (Please read letter of Secretary in his report of 1902, p. 124.)

Many of the people have lived in the Cherokee Nation all their lives, some of them have occupied and cultivated the same tract of land for from 30 to 40 years, and some were permitted to make tentative selections. They have raised stock and crops, built houses and barns, have developed the agricultural wealth of the Cherokee country. They have voted, held office, and exercised all the rights of citizenship. They applied for enrollment within the time fixed by law. All of them have been enrolled once as citizens and many of them twice by the Government, and these rolls have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and many of them, at various payments, were paid as members of the Cherokee Nation of Indians.

The act of Congress provided for the removal of intruders; none of these freedmen were disturbed.

Under the act of June 23, 1898, authority was given to the chief or to any member of the tribe to bring suits against any person holding wrongful possession of lands in the Cherokee country, yet no action was brought against any of your petitioners. Under the act of 1902 the Secretary was to cause allottees to be placed in possession, but the Secretary did not remove the freedmen claimants. This shows how they were regarded before the final rolls were made up and before they were wrongfully left off of the final rolls, which will deprive them of their interest in the tribal property, and they will be driven from the homes they have occupied for years, and others will be deprived from making their rightful selections.

By reason of valuable oil and gas deposits in the lands, which by rights belong to your petitioners, the same—worth many millions of dollars—we will lose, also be deprived of other property and our homes if Congress does not give us relief.

We are satisfied that the records of the Interior Department cover all the facts, and that the questions involved could be settled fairly and justly within a very short time.

We therefore pray Congress to give us a chance to present our cases to a committee of Congress, to any court, or to the Secretary of the Interior. We know that we can establish our rights, and we are only asking for just and fair treatment.

Hoping that our memorial will be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that an act of Congress will be passed which will give us an opportunity to present our cases,

We are, respectfully,

JACOB B. WILSON, President.
NELSON GRUBBS, Secretary.

SUSPENSION OF NAVAL CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have before me the preamble and resolutions adopted by the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' Exchange on the subject of the suspension of naval construction in harmony with the declaration of the Lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain, the Right Hon. Winston Churchill. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CINCINNATI CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE.

Resolutions adopted by the board of directors November 18, 1913.

Whereas the following resolution (H. Res. 298) has been introduced in the United States Congress:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House of Representatives the declaration of the Lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain, the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, that the Government of the United Kingdom is willing and ready to cooperate with other Governments to secure for one year a suspension of naval-construction programs, offers the means of immediately lessening the enormous burdens of the people and avoiding the waste of investment in war material.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be furnished the President, with the request that so far as he can do so, having due regard for the interests of the United States, he use his influence to consummate the agreement suggested by the Right Hon. Winston Churchill: Therefore Resolved by the board of directors of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, That we heartily approve the above resolution, and the secretary is hereby instructed to send copies of the action of this body to the President of the United States, the Senators from Ohio, and to Representatives ALLEN and BOWDLE.

W. C. CULKINS,
Executive Secretary.

KEOKUK DAM CO. AND NORTH AMERICAN CO.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present resolutions adopted by the Progressive Party Club of St. Louis, Mo., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the request of the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state what the petition is.

The SECRETARY. Resolutions adopted by the Progressive Party Club of St. Louis, Mo., favoring the investigation of certain charges pertaining to the Keokuk Dam Co. and North American Co. and the securing of legislation that will adjust all differences between consumer and producer of hydroelectric products now being generated by use of Government waters throughout the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., November 10, 1913.

"To the Members of the Sixty-third Congress of the United States:

"Whereas The Keokuk Dam Co., a public-service corporation, controlled by Stone & Webster, of Boston, holds a franchise from the United States Government for the generating and sale of hydroelectric current at Keokuk, Iowa; and

"Whereas in a pamphlet issued by said company previous to beginning the operation of its plant it is stated that the current 'will be sold much cheaper than steam power costs'; and

"Whereas the same pamphlet goes on to say: 'That it is well known that only 10 to 15 per cent of the energy in coal comes out on the shaft of the steam engine. But, on the other hand, over three-quarters of the energy of the moving water of the Mississippi River is delivered over the transmission wires to St. Louis, over a hundred miles away.' 'And that right here is where water power scorns the competition of steam power, even in the fields of cheapest coal'; and

"Whereas, notwithstanding these assertions of the pamphlet leading the public to believe they were to have cheaper light and power, it has been openly charged by some of the St. Louis press that the hydroelectric current is no cheaper, but on the contrary has been contracted for by the Union Electric Co., through the North American Co., a distributing company of St. Louis, for a period of 99 years, based on the cost of coal; and

"Whereas it has been stated that the Keokuk Dam Co. has entered into an agreement with the said North American Co., a distributing company of St. Louis, not to sell its product to anyone else within a 30-mile radius of St. Louis, and, further, that by this agreement and arrangement the Keokuk Dam Co. enters into collusion with the North American Co. to deliver its current not into St. Louis, but to a point 10 miles or more distant, and from which point the North American Co., converting a part of its double or, rather, its treble self into what is styled the distributing company, is enabled to convey the current over a 10-mile line to the utilities companies of which it is the owner and at an additional cost of 50 per cent over the price netted by the Keokuk Co.; and

"Whereas the reason alleged for this is to furnish a subterfuge for basing the price of hydroelectric current on the cost of coal; and

"Whereas Congress, having granted a charter to the Keokuk Dam Co. for the use of the Mississippi River to manufacture electricity, then that body unquestionably has power to protect the public from gross imposition by regulating the distribution and sale of the company's product; and

"Whereas that within the power of Congress to conserve and control natural resources and to grant the privileges of utilizing them also lies the power to compel an equitable treatment of consumers or to amend or repeal the charter of the holding company; and

"Whereas the Keokuk electric plant is a public utility using public property for a public service; and

"Whereas if these allegations be true, then and therefore be it

Resolved by the Progressive Party Club of the city of St. Louis, representing the Progressives of the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth congressional districts of Missouri, That the Keokuk Dam Co. and the North American Co. are violating a moral obligation, betraying a public trust, and usurping the God-given rights of the people by organizing subsidiary companies, or so-called distributing companies, through which to not only practice extortion, but to create and foist upon the people of St. Louis and vicinity another unholy and unjust arbitrary; and, furthermore, that by entering into an agreement or alliance to exclude others within a 30-mile radius of St. Louis from using the Keokuk Dam they directly enter into an agreement which constitutes a most flagrant violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act and a glaring and shameful example of two corporations entering into an agreement for the direct restraint of trade: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we appeal to Congress, and especially to the Progressives and progressive Members of all parties, to not only investigate the foregoing charges pertaining to the Keokuk Dam Co. and the North American Co., but to endeavor to secure as speedily as possible such legislation as will adequately adjust all differences between consumer and producer of hydroelectric products now being generated by use of Government waters throughout the United States; and, furthermore, to guard zealously any and all pending concessions, to the effect that these national resources, though developed by private capital, may be conserved as consistently as possible for the Government and the people to which and to whom they wholly and solely belong; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to Hon. MILES POINDEXTER and Hon. VICTOR MURDOCK, to present the same to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States."

The foregoing resolutions were unanimously adopted at a regular meeting of the Progressive Party Club of St. Louis this 10th day of November, 1913.

W. J. LONGBOTHAM, President.
EUGENE A. VOGL, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1967) regulating the manufacture of smoking opium within the United States, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 130) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1966) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved February 9, 1909, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 132) thereon.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I have the honor to report from the Committee on Banking and Currency the bill (H. R. 7837) to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes, and I submit a formal written report (No. 133) thereon. I ask to have printed as appendices to the report views of the two sections of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma, in behalf of the Committee on Banking and Currency, or a portion of it, submits a report which he desires to have printed. What was the further request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair did not catch it on account of the confusion in the Chamber. Will he please repeat it?

Mr. OWEN. The request was that the individual views of members of the Committee on Banking and Currency be printed as appendices to the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before that request is granted I should like to inquire whether the Senator means by the views of the individual members of the committee the views signed by the two sections of the committee?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to request, in addition to what is requested by the chairman of the committee, that the views and reports of facts submitted by the section of the committee of which I am a member, accompanied also by a print of the bill as we propose to amend it, be printed separately, and that of this print 25,000 copies be printed.

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to the request of the Senator and to have it printed separately. That is what I understand he would prefer.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma how many copies of this joint publication he proposes to have printed?

Mr. OWEN. I had not intended to ask for any more than the usual number—a thousand copies for the use of the Senate document room—unless there should appear to be some urgent demand. In that case I thought the number might be enlarged when it proved to be necessary.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In my judgment there will be a very large demand for both these reports with the accompanying bill, and it was my intention—it was the intention of the section of the committee which I represent—to print with our views the bill as we propose to amend it, so as to enable an intelligent opinion to be formed by the country.

Mr. OWEN. I intend to ask the consent of the Senate to have printed in parallel columns the House bill and the amendments proposed by the section of the committee in sympathy with my views, and also the amendments proposed by the Senator from Nebraska and those in sympathy with his views.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that would be very desirable, providing, then, in addition to the request we make—

Mr. OWEN. I submitted my request, not knowing what the Senator from Nebraska might ask. I see no reason why the appendices might not be printed separately, and in that way the number desired by the Senator from Nebraska might easily be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inquire whether, in consequence of the agreement between the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Nebraska, the requests will be combined in one or are they to be submitted separately?

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it can be made one unanimous-consent agreement, embodying the requests made by the Senator from Oklahoma and myself.

Mr. OWEN. I should prefer to have the Senator from Nebraska make his own request.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I will wait until the Senator submits his request.

Mr. OWEN. I will be glad if the Senator will permit me to do so. I see no reason why the first request I made should not be complied with, which is that the report of the committee returning the House bill to the Senate shall have printed with it the individual views of the two sections of the committee. I understand the Senator from Nebraska also prefers to have the views of his section of the committee printed as a separate pamphlet.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Also.

Mr. OWEN. I agree to that. If that course be agreeable, then I will only ask that the report have attached to it the views of the individual members of the committee in accord with my own views, leaving as a separate pamphlet the views of the Senator from Nebraska and his section of the committee. Is that agreeable?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Entirely.

Mr. OWEN. If that is agreeable, I—

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, let me make a suggestion. I think it is desirable that the report as submitted by the Senator from Nebraska and the bill accompanying it be printed separately, and I also think it would be very desirable to have the bill which is reported back, the bill which is suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma and the bill suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, printed in parallel columns—the three bills.

Mr. OWEN. I had intended to make that request at the proper time.

Mr. BRISTOW. In addition to the individual reports, so that that print may be used by Senators.

Mr. OWEN. I had intended to make that request at the proper time. I simply wanted to dispose of one matter at a time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Kansas that they should not be printed in three columns but in two, because each one of the bills presented here crosses out the part of the House bill intended to be cut out and consequently bears on its face a comparison with the House bill. Consequently the publication of the House bill as it passed would add nothing to the two columns, which I think are all that are necessary.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it seems to me, for purposes of comparison and study of these bills, it would be best to have three parallel columns.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Then we would have before us the three distinct propositions in the way of legislation. I hope the document proposed may be printed in that form.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will allow me right there, I should like to suggest to him that each one of the sections of the committee, as I understand it, have as a basis the House bill, and if printed in two columns, the amendments being printed in italics and the text of the House bill being stricken through as it usually done, we would get the entire measure in print.

Mr. BURTON. I do not quite understand the form which that would take.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator must recognize that in every bill which comes from the House and is reported from a committee with amendments the parts stricken out have a line run through them and the amendments are printed in italics. If that was done with the bills reported by the two sections, we would only need a column to know what either section proposed as amendments to the House bill.

Mr. BURTON. The proposition is to make the House bill the basis of the two?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. And to print in italics the portions added, with the House bill as the basis?

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. I think no matter which section of the committee one may wish to follow, he will want to compare their work with the House bill, and if printed in the usual form, by striking through the text that which is stricken out and printing the amendments in italics, we will be able to see at a glance when printed in two parallel columns, and we can compare not only the bill as reported by each section of the Banking and Currency Committee, but compare at the same time either one of those bills with the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that that has already been done. The House bill will be printed with the amendments proposed by each section of the committee inserted in italics, and this print in three columns is to enable those who desire to see the three proposals side by side to do so without being compelled to sift it out for themselves.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that I would not have any objection to its being printed in three columns instead of two if in the two instances where the different sections of the committee have reported their bills they have followed the usual form in a bill by which the amendments are put in italics and the text of the House bill stricken through.

Mr. OWEN. That will be done.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to hear that, but I do not see that there is any use in having a third column if that will be done. That will make the comparison complete.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand the request of the Senator from Oklahoma to be that these bills shall be printed as a part of the report of the committee?

Mr. OWEN. That they shall be printed as an appendix to the report of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is what I desired to inquire.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. It seems to me that the only way we can get a proper comparison of these bills is to have each bill—the bill reported by one section of the committee and the bill reported by the other section of the committee—printed in parallel columns, for the reason that we have not always made the same changes or eliminated the same portions of the Glass bill. If we have in one column the bill reported by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], with his proposed amendments, and in another column the Glass bill, with the amendments reported by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] from his section of the committee, that will give the body of the Glass bill with the amendments proposed by each portion of the committee. That is the only way in which we can print them, it seems to me; so that there will be two columns, with each bill as reported by each section of the committee.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if every section of the House bill has been amended?

Mr. OWEN. No; not every section, but almost every section has been amended.

Mr. STONE. Is it not possible that some sections of the bill that neither section of the committee has amended might contain propositions that some Senator not on the committee would desire to have amended?

Mr. OWEN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. STONE. And in that view, it would seem to me better if the three propositions were printed in juxtaposition in parallel columns.

Mr. OWEN. I think, Mr. President, that it is of importance and of value to the Senate that they should have the three proposals in parallel columns, so that they can at a glance see exactly what they are and read them coherently, one by one.

Mr. SMOOT. May I inquire what the request of the Senator from Oklahoma is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will direct the Secretary to read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. OWEN asks that House bill 7837, together with the report thereon submitted by himself and Senators O'GORMAN, REED, POMERENE, SHAFROTH, and HOLLIS, together with the views of these Senators, attached as an appendix, be printed as a document.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not understand that the Senators named make any report as indicated in the proposed agreement just read by the Secretary.

Mr. OWEN. The report is confined to returning the House bill to the Senate without recommendation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly; and for that reason I call attention to the wording of the request as made by the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. The request as read at the desk is not aptly phrased. The request of the Senator from Oklahoma was that to the report of the committee returning the House bill without recommendation be added as an appendix the individual views of the members of the two sections of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is exactly as I understand it, and exactly as it was not read from the desk. I ask that the request be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the request in accordance with the correction made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The Secretary read as follows:

That to the report of the committee on House bill 7837, submitted without recommendation, there shall be attached the views of the chairman of the committee and Senators O'GORMAN, REED, POMERENE, SHAFROTH, and HOLLIS, and that, then, the same shall be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] upon that point. It seems to me that the views of the members of the committee associated with the Senator from Nebraska ought also to be printed as an appendix to the main report that brings the bill back into the Senate, but as the request now comes from the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] the report of the committee would have attached to it only the views of the members associated with the chairman of the committee. It seems to me that to be a complete document it ought to contain the views of both sections of the committee.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Nebraska has withdrawn his objection to have the views of both sections of the committee attached to the report. In that event I know of no objection to the motion made by myself.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say, Mr. President, that I do so with the understanding that, in addition to that, we may have 25,000 additional copies of our own views printed in connection with our bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Before that agreement is reached I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that it would be impossible to print 25,000 copies of this document simply by an order of the Senate. The bill itself contains 78 pages. To print that amount of matter would cost $37 a thousand. All that you could print within the $500 limit would be about 13,000 copies of the bill, and if it is desired to have 25,000 copies printed it must be done by concurrent resolution of the two Houses.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that it is not proposed to print the bill as it appears in the copy which he has before him, which occupies nearly one-half of the pamphlet, but it is proposed to omit all those portions stricken out, and only to print the bill as we propose to have it amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, as I understand, the request of the Senator is that there be printed 25,000 extra copies of the bill only that he and his associates have reported to the Senate.

Mr. STONE. Together with the report.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, Mr. President. I have reduced to writing the request which I make, and I send it to the Secretary's desk and ask to have it read.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed 25,000 copies of the views and report of facts by Senators HITCHCOCK, NELSON, BRISTOW, CRAWFORD, WEEKS, and McLEAN, and following the same, in the same document, the bill as proposed to be amended by those Senators.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Nebraska how long is the report or about how many printed pages will it contain?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This typewritten copy [exhibiting], liberally spaced, contains 18½ pages. To meet the objection raised by the Senator from Utah that the cost of printing might perhaps exceed the $500 limit, I will modify my request so as to provide at first for the printing of only 20,000 copies.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to suggest that to the Senator. I want the Senator to understand that I have no objection to printing the number of copies he desires, and that it was only to keep within the law that I raised the point. If the Senator modifies his request and asks for the printing of 20,000 copies, I think that the cost of printing that number will come within the $500 limit.

Mr. STONE. But suppose it does not come within the limit?

Mr. SMOOT. Then that number can not be printed, and the matter will have to come back to the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I also desire to insert in my request the words "and in no case to exceed the $500 limit."

Mr. BRISTOW. What is the use of that? Can not the Senate have the printing done which it needs?

Mr. SMOOT. It can up to $500. When it exceeds that, it has to be done by a concurrent resolution of the two Houses. I think that, in view of the information which the Senator gives, 20,000 copies can be printed within the $500 limit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], on behalf of one section of the Banking and Currency Committee, returns to the Senate House bill 7837 without recommendation and requests that the views of the two sections of the committee be printed as appendices to the report. Is there objection? In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

Now, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] submits in writing an order, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed approximately 20,000 copies of Senate Report No. 133, part 3, being the views and report of facts by Senators HITCHCOCK, NELSON, BRISTOW, CRAWFORD, WEEKS, and McLEAN, and following the same, in the same document, the bill as proposed to be amended by the Senators, such printing not to exceed the sum of $500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk, as a separate proposition, an amendment which I propose to offer as a substitute to the House bill, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma submits an amendment to the bill which he asks to have printed and lie on the table. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that the reported bill be printed, showing the changes proposed by the amendments suggested by myself and those Senators agreeing with me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not hear the request. Let it be again stated.

Mr. OWEN. I simply asked for a print of the bill as proposed to be amended by my section of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask that, within the $500 limit of cost, copies of the report containing the individual views of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the members agreeing with him be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to and reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That as many copies as may be furnished for $500 of the Report No. 133, part 2, containing the individual views of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the members agreeing with him on H. R. 7837, "To provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes," be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document the House bill as proposed to be amended by myself and those Senators agreeing with me, and also as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senators agreeing with him, so that they will appear in parallel columns. (S. Doc. No. 240.)

There being no objection, the order was agreed to and reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the bill H. R. 7837, "An act to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes," as proposed to be amended by Mr. OWEN and the Senators acting with him, and in opposite column the same bill as proposed to be amended by Mr. HITCHCOCK and the Senators acting with him, be printed as a Senate document.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Mr. WALSH. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred the bill (S. 2860) providing a temporary method of conducting the nomination and election of United States Senators, introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I submit a report (No. 131) thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he has submitted a written report on the bill?

Mr. WALSH. The committee submit a written report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it a very lengthy report?

Mr. WALSH. No; it merely embodies the proposed substitute for the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like very much to have the report read. It is a very important matter, which at the present time is engaging the attention of the people all over the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the report.

The report (No. 131) submitted this day by Mr. WALSH is as follows:

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 2860:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, which has had under consideration the bill (S. 2860) providing for a temporary method of conducting the nomination and election of United States Senators, makes the following report to the Senate:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"First. That at the regular election held in any State next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress, at which election a Representative to Congress is regularly by law to be chosen, a United States Senator from said State shall be elected by the people thereof for the term commencing on the 4th day of March next thereafter.

"Second. That in any State wherein a United States Senator is hereafter to be elected, either at a general election or at any special election called by the executive authority thereof to fill a vacancy, until or unless otherwise specially provided by the legislature thereof, the nomination of candidates for such office shall be made, the election to fill the same conducted, and the result thereof determined, as near as may be, in accordance with the laws of such State regulating the nomination and election of candidates for Members at Large of the National House of Representatives: Provided, That in case no provision is made in any State for the case of the nomination or election of Representatives at Large, the procedure shall be in accordance with the laws of such State respecting the ordinary executive and administrative officers thereof who are elected by the vote of the people of the entire State: And provided further, That in any case the candidate for Senator receiving the highest number of votes shall be deemed elected."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Montana for a moment. During the reading of the bill my attention was diverted. I should like to ask the Senator whether he offers the bill which has just been read as a bill to be referred to a committee, or is it a report from a committee?

Mr. WALSH. It is a report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections proposing a substitute for the bill referred to that committee and which had been introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. STONE. It is reported and goes to the calendar?

Mr. WALSH. It goes to the calendar. It is intended to have the bill printed, so that it may have the study of Senators for the purpose of later being called up for consideration.

Mr. STONE. Has the committee filed a report?

Mr. WALSH. Nothing except tendering a substitute.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if the report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections just read is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. WALSH. My recollection is, I will say to the Senator from New York, that one member of the committee dissented from the report and the other members signified a desire to reserve the right to propose amendments to the draft of the bill which has been prepared by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 3464) granting a pension to Sarah Wilson; and

A bill (S. 3465) granting an increase of pension to E. H. Mileison (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3466) providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona fide settlers, and reserving the public lands for that purpose; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 3467) granting a pension to John J. Boesl; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 3468) granting an increase of pension to Susan E. Bain; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 3469) for the relief of William E. Halley; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted an amendment proposing an appropriation of $10,000 for the importation of Corriedale sheep from New Zealand for breeding purposes, intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I present the certificate of appointment of Hon. FRANK P. GLASS, of Alabama, to be a Senator from that State to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator JOSEPH F. JOHNSTON, and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The credentials presented by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The credentials were read and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States of America:

A vacancy having happened in the Senate of the United States of America by reason of the death of Hon. JOSEPH F. JOHNSTON, one of the Senators from the State of Alabama in the Senate of the United States of America, and I, Emmet O'Neal, as governor of the State of Alabama, having heretofore appointed one HENRY D. CLAYTON a Senator of the United States of America from the State of Alabama to fill the vacancy caused by the death of said JOSEPH F. JOHNSTON, but said HENRY D. CLAYTON having failed to qualify as such Senator and having notified me of his purpose not to do so, and having returned the commission heretofore issued to him and having by unanimous consent withdrawn his credentials from your consideration, I have this day appointed and do by these presents appoint FRANK P. GLASS a Senator of the United States of America from the State of Alabama under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States of America and the provisions of the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America and the constitution and laws of the State of Alabama.

In witness whereof I, Emmet O'Neal, as governor of the State of Alabama, have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be hereunto affixed at the capitol at Montgomery this 17th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1913.

[SEAL.]

By the governor:

EMMET O'NEAL, Governor.

CYRUS B. BROWN, Secretary of State.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In this connection, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document a short statement of the governor of Alabama in relation to his constitutional power to make the appointment, and also a brief and opinion prepared by Hon. R. P. Evins, legal adviser to the governor, and a brief prepared on this question by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if a part of that has not been already printed as a public document?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It has not. The brief prepared by the Senator from Kentucky was printed as an executive document, for the use of the committee. It has had no distribution. I simply desire to have that brief printed as a public document, in order that the Senate may have the benefit of it.

The other brief, prepared by the governor's legal adviser, is entirely different from the one to which the Senator refers as having been heretofore printed, and is directed to a different phase of the question.

Mr. SMOOT. What I want to know is whether the brief which the Senator asks now to have printed as a public document is the same brief that he asked to have printed as a public document in the case of Mr. CLAYTON?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it is entirely different.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed as a public document.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I was called from the Chamber for a moment. May I ask what is the request of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I simply asked unanimous consent for the publication of this brief as a public document. I stated that the brief prepared by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] had been printed, but it was printed as an executive document, for the use of the committee. It has had no distribution.

Mr. WALSH. The request is for the publication of a brief prepared by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Why not print them all?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They have all been printed except this one.

Mr. WALSH. In exactly the same way?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if I recollect rightly, the views submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] were not printed as a document. As I understand the suggestion of the Senator from Montana, which I think is a very proper one, it is that if some members of the committee have their views printed as a public document all of the views presented by members of the committee should be published.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I myself have read the views submitted by the Senator from Montana, and I understand that to be the suggestion. I do not think the Senator from Alabama intended otherwise.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should be delighted to have the views of the Senator from Montana printed as a public document.

Mr. BACON. Then I will ask, for the Senator from Montana, as he does not make a formal request, that the views of the Senator from Montana be also printed, not as a separate document, but as a part of the same document.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall be delighted to have the three documents printed together. I ask that the documents I have sent to the desk and the views of the Senator from Montana be printed as a public document. (S. Doc. No. 241.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, on Monday last I gave notice of a proposed amendment to the standing rules of the Senate. I desire to submit a resolution, and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Rules. A copy of it was attached to the notice filed on Monday last.

The resolution (S. Res. 218) was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be a standing committee of the Senate known as the Committee on Public Documents. It shall be composed of three Senators, elected in the same manner as the members of other standing committees.

No book, pamphlet, article, paper, address, or other matter requiring the consent or order of the Senate in order to be printed as a public document shall be so printed or an order therefor entered until the request or motion for such order shall have been referred to the above committee and its report thereon received: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to interfere with the right of the Senate to discharge the committee from the further consideration of any such request or motion.

In making its report the committee shall describe the general character of the matter sought to be printed as a public document and shall specifically state whether it is of such value to the country that it ought to be printed and circulated at the expense of the Government.

PROPOSED FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MYERS. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask that it be read, and I also ask for its immediate consideration.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 10) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 24th day of November, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution submitted by him. Is there objection?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I hear what the resolution is? My attention was distracted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the concurrent resolution.

Mr. STONE. Just a moment, Mr. President. This is a concurrent resolution proposing an adjournment sine die on the 24th of November, and present consideration is asked?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Present consideration is asked.

Mr. STONE. I object.

Mr. MYERS. I claim that the concurrent resolution is one of the highest privilege, and that one objection is not sufficient to defeat its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution. That ends it, unless, on a vote, the Senate orders to the contrary.

Mr. MYERS. I make the point of order that one objection is not sufficient to defeat the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator again state his point of order?

Mr. MYERS. It is that one objection is not sufficient to defeat the consideration of the concurrent resolution at the present time; that it is a matter of the highest privilege, and that, upon being offered, on the demand of any Senator, it must be considered at that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it seems to me that inasmuch as the Senator has asked unanimous consent—

Mr. MYERS. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not ask unanimous consent. I asked for the immediate consideration of the resolution. That was my request.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator point to any rule that relieves the matter from the objection that was made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]?

Mr. MYERS. Instead of engaging in a parliamentary contest with the veteran Senator from New Hampshire, I move the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] objects to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. STONE. I do; and the Senator from Montana moves, notwithstanding the objection, to proceed with the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I make a motion for immediate consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the rule the Senator from Montana can not even do that until the hour of 2 o'clock arrives. I simply wish to call attention to the rule; that is all. Of course, whatever the Chair decides in the matter will be satisfactory; but the rule says that the Senator can not make that motion until 2 o'clock.

Mr. MYERS. What is the ruling of the Chair on that point, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ruling of the Chair is that the contention made by the Senator from Utah is correct.

Mr. MYERS. Then I give notice that at 2 o'clock of this day I shall move for immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to know where the Senator from Utah gets his authority for the proposition just stated by him to the Chair, that a motion of this kind can not be made at this time. Is it in the rules of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. The rules really state that a resolution has to go over for one day upon objection. If a Senator objects, a resolution has to go over until the next day.

Mr. BORAH. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. The statement I made was that the motion could not be made until 2 o'clock. I had in my mind then the idea that if it was presented after 2 o'clock, after the morning business was closed, perhaps it could be voted upon. I think I am in error even in that statement, however. I think at any time of day, if one objection is made, a resolution must go over until the following day.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Utah is correct in the proposition he has just stated, that if there is an objection a resolution must go over for one day; but in this case there was no objection. There being no objection, the Senator from Montana has a right to move for consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. STONE. But I objected to it, Mr. President. I objected to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution; and I submit to the Chair that the effect of the objection is to carry over the resolution for a day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the rule is explicit. I read paragraph 5 of Rule XIV:

All resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

It seems to me that under that rule the resolution must of necessity go over under objection.

Mr. MYERS and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. MYERS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I do not take issue at all with the rule nor with the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire; but that was not the condition of affairs. The Senator from Montana made a motion, and at that time there was no objection. He had a perfect right to make the motion and have the concurrent resolution considered, unless there was an objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Before ever the Senator from Montana made the motion, however, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] objected to the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the Chair so stated to the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. What has that to do with the point that the resolution can not be considered until after 2 o'clock?

Mr. BACON. I call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to paragraph 3 of Rule VII, in which he will find laid down what the Senator from Utah said.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Idaho that I had in mind paragraph 3 of Rule VII, which reads as follows:

Until the morning business shall have been concluded and so announced from the chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar shall be entertained by the Presiding Officer unless by unanimous consent; and if such consent be given the motion shall not be subject to amendment and shall be decided without debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be taken up.

Mr. GALLINGER. This concurrent resolution is not on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the rule I had in mind. I say to the Senator now, as I said before, that the objection of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] carried the matter over, and there was no occasion for invoking this rule.

Mr. BORAH. That rule has no application, then?

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever, the objection having been made.

Mr. BORAH. The objection of the Senator from Missouri could carry it over; but that has nothing to do with the question of moving it before 2 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, does the Chair rule that a motion for immediate consideration at this time is out of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has so ruled. On the objection of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the Chair ruled that the concurrent resolution could not be considered at this time.

Mr. MYERS. Then I give notice that at 2 o'clock of this day I shall move for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution. Meantime I wish to say a few words to Senators, for them to think about between now and 2 o'clock.

I understand that it has been the custom to adjourn about three weeks for the Christmas holidays. I think a better plan would be to adjourn two weeks for the Christmas holidays and one week now and divide up this joyous and hilarious celebration. I fear that three weeks' celebration at the Christmas holidays might incapacitate Senators for active work immediately after resuming business in the new year. I fear there might be an excess of dissipation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. In view of the lack of progress this body has made in the last two months, I should like to inquire what kind of dissipation could possibly render it more seemingly incapacitated to do business than during that period?

Mr. MYERS. That is a very startling question, Mr. President, and I am not prepared to answer it at this time, but I think that three weeks of celebration and jollification at the Christmas period would be too much for the body, and it might not be able to do anything at all for a long time, but we should take one week now and two weeks then.

More than that, Thanksgiving falls during the next week, and I do not believe in lightly passing over that period with just one day's adjournment and eating a big turkey dinner. I believe we ought to adjourn for at least one week out of honor to Thanksgiving Day. I ask Senators to consider the propriety of dividing the period of rest into two periods—one week now and two weeks later on. I shall have nothing further to say about the matter until I make my motion at 2 o'clock.

Mr. THOMAS. Instead of dividing up the period of prospective rest, it would be better to put an end to our present period of rest and get to work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further resolutions, the morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. OWEN. I move that House bill 7837 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks that House bill 7837 be laid before the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. We did not hear the motion in this part of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has moved that House bill 7837 be now proceeded with.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the title at least be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7837) to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the only object the Senator from Oklahoma has in bringing up the bill at this time is to make it the unfinished business. The bill has not been printed, and, of course, we could not enter upon the consideration of it to-day.

Mr. OWEN. I do not anticipate to do anything with the bill at all, except to have it laid before the Senate for consideration so that it may occupy the status of unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no objection to hastening the consideration of this bill, but I am seriously in doubt whether when we have made two unanimous-consent agreements we can displace them by a motion.

Mr. OWEN. I had not the slightest idea of displacing the unanimous-consent agreements or to ask that this bill should be made the unfinished business in disregard of the unanimous-consent agreements now on the calendar with regard to the Hetch Hetchy Valley bill and the Alaska railroad bill, but otherwise I should be glad to have it made the unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. With that understanding I do not object, but I think we ought to be very careful and preserve our unanimous-consent agreements.

Mr. OWEN. I did not make the suggestion with the view of any such contingency. I merely wanted to put the bill before the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question. Of course as a Member of this body and also as a member of the committee that spent a number of weeks considering the bill I have a very active interest in it. I realize the importance of having as early action taken upon it as can be had consistent with the full consideration that a bill of its importance demands. I am practically compelled to leave the city and to be absent for a few days, and I should like to know, if the Senator can state at this time, whether it is his intention to press immediately before the end of the special session a consideration that may involve final action upon amendments.

Mr. OWEN. I do not anticipate that the Senate can possibly pass upon this bill at the extra session. I simply want to have the bill made the unfinished business, and I want to give notice that on Monday I would like to address the Senate upon the bill. My object is to get the measure before the Senate and also to give an opportunity to other Senators who may wish to deliver set speeches on the bill to be heard.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator think it necessary to make it the unfinished business?

Mr. OWEN. I thought it was better to make it the unfinished business, because it can be easily laid aside when there is no one to speak upon it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask by what process the Senator can make it the unfinished business during the morning hour?

Mr. OWEN. Only by unanimous consent, which I was proceeding under.

Mr. BORAH. It can not be made the unfinished business by unanimous consent, as I understand it, until morning business is closed.

Mr. OWEN. I did not move that it be made the unfinished business. I thought that unanimous consent would be granted to make it the unfinished business; that no one would object to it.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to taking the bill up, but the proposition remains that we can not make it the unfinished business unless we take it up and consider it after morning business is closed.

Mr. OWEN. The morning business is closed, and I made the motion that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understood the Senator. The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. The bill not having been reported by a majority of the committee, it is not entitled to be placed upon the calendar until a request has been made for that to be done. Has the Senator from Oklahoma asked that the House bill be placed on the calendar?

Mr. OWEN. I reported the House bill without recommendation from the Committee on Banking and Currency in pursuance of a resolution of the Committee on Banking and Currency that that should be done, but it simply puts the House bill on the calendar without any recommendation on the part of the committee, the committee itself having divided.

Mr. NELSON. I would suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma—and I am not saying this for the purpose of embarrassing him—that the first request, in view of the double report, ought to be that the bill be placed on the calendar as a bill reported by the committee.

Mr. OWEN. It is on the calendar now.

Mr. NELSON. By what authority?

Mr. OWEN. By the result of a report of the Committee on Banking and Currency, reporting it back to the Senate without recommendation.

Mr. NELSON. It is not on the calendar. The Committee on Banking and Currency did not unite in a report. Each half of the committee made a separate report.

Mr. OWEN. That is already quite clearly understood. I think that the Senator from Minnesota did not observe that the report was simply a report of the bill without recommendation, and then as an appendix to that report there was ordered printed by the Senate the views of the two factions of the committee.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, I do not think that would entitle the bill to be placed on the calendar. I think if the Senator has not already done so he ought to ask that the bill be placed on the calendar, like a bill that stands reported by the majority of a committee.

Mr. OWEN. I do not understand, under parliamentary practice, that it is necessary to ask that it go on the calendar, but it goes automatically to the calendar when reported by a committee in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is on the calendar. The Senator from Oklahoma now moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7837. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. The morning business having been closed, I understand that that has the same effect on the business of the Senate as if the hour of 2 o'clock had arrived, and I now make my motion for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution which I sent to the desk a moment ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Montana that under the objection of the Senator from Missouri the resolution has gone over until to-morrow.

Mr. STONE. I made the point of order that under the rule the resolution must go over for a day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has so held.

Mr. MYERS. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana appeals from the ruling of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. JAMES. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves to lay on the table the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair by the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I now ask that House bill 7837 be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LANE. I ask the Senator from Georgia to withhold the motion for a few minutes.

Mr. BACON. I will withhold the motion temporarily.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—WRECK OF THE "GENERAL SLOCUM."

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, during the discussion of the seamen's bill there was a statement made by me in regard to the safety appliances carried on board the General Slocum which has been questioned. At that time, while discussing the fraudulent and inefficient type of life-saving appliances which are carried aboard many vessels and which are used to and do delude passengers into placing dependence upon them as a means of self-preservation, I said that the Slocum lost hundreds of her passengers for the reason that her lifeboats were ill equipped and ill manned; that they went over the sides with plugs out of them, and they went down like lead and drowned every passenger that was aboard of them; that they were a fraud and a snare and caused the loss of the lives of hundreds of people who would never have been lost if those lifeboats had not been aboard the Slocum.

At the time of the wreck of the Slocum, which was in 1904, I was in Alaska, on the shores of the Bering Sea, and the accounts which filtered in there, of course, were not so complete and perhaps not so accurate as they were nearer the scene of the wreck. At any rate this statement of mine has been disputed. There is an article in the Marine Journal, published in New York November 15, to the effect that the statement made by me is an error, and that it is my duty to correct it. It is stated also that I have perhaps been misled by representatives of the seamen's union, in regard to which I wish to say that no member of the seamen's union, nor any representative of that body, nor their friends, nor anyone else gave me the information.

I find that I was in error and that I was not quite accurate in my statement regarding the condition of the life-saving appliances to which I referred at that time. The actual condition was worse than I said it was in many respects. I have been looking over the accounts of the burning of the General Slocum which were published at that time. The accident occurred June 15, 1904, and the New York papers of the following days—the World, the Times, and others—printed pages concerning it during a week or more following the calamity. I have looked over these papers to ascertain what the facts were, and I find no mention is made of the position of the plugs in the only lifeboat examined. It seems that it was not a case of the plug being out of that boat, but that the seams in the bottom of the boat were open, which is worse. It is safe to assume that if her bottom was out, for all practical purposes the plug was out also, but nowhere do I find that fact mentioned.

The boats were not launched for the excellent reason that they were wired down to ring bolts with steel cables and could not be launched. The deck hands tried to launch them and failed. Dying mothers and children no doubt ripped their hands to pieces before they perished trying to loosen these boats from their moorings, as they did also in trying to secure the so-called life preservers, which were stored behind slats, which held them in place—secure from the passengers—by the aid of nails and numerous coats of dry paint.

In regard to the condition of their life-saving devices, it is stated that an examination of the life preservers aboard the Slocum proved that some of them at least had in the middle of each of their sections—which were composed of ground, decayed, and "punk" cork—a piece of bar iron, put there to make weight. Think of that, if you please. Bar iron deliberately placed in life-preservers composed of decayed ground cork.

These so-called life preservers, composed of decayed ground cork and iron bars, were inclosed in canvas covers so very fragile from decay that they as well as the straps with which to tie them around the bodies of the passengers went to pieces in the hands of the people who tried to use them. They were not life preservers; they were sinkers. And I pronounced such life-saving equipment as a fraud and a snare and the cause of loss of life. And I was right, although the actual condition was worse than I had supposed it to be. If there had been no bogus lifeboats with seams open in the bottom, wired down with steel cable, and no iron-filled life preservers on board of the Slocum, to exhibit to people as a means for self-preservation in case of an accident, very few people would have gone upon an excursion on such a craft and many lives would thus have been spared.

Thirteen hundred and fifty-eight passengers intrusted themselves to the Slocum that day, most of them children. Three or four hundred of these children under the age which required their parents to purchase tickets for them aboard of a boat with only six lifeboats, some with open seams in their bottoms and all wired down with steel cable! I will concede that it was better to have them wired down than loose. It was contended by me that such or similar devices were the cause of the loss of life.

In regard to the statement which I make concerning the condition of these life-preservers with an iron bar in each section, there was a report of the United States Commission of Investigation upon the Disaster to the Steamer General Slocum, submitted October 8, 1904, and printed at the Government Printing Office in that year.

At the bottom of page 3, in a letter addressed by President Roosevelt to Hon. V. H. Metcalf, Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting that report, he says that the Department of Justice has secured the indictment of the manager and three employees of the Nonpareil Cork Works, of Camden, N. J., for putting upon the market compressed-cork blocks for use in making life preservers, each of which blocks contained in its center a piece of bar iron weighing several ounces. I am assuming that President Roosevelt referred to the result of the investigation which was made of the condition of the life preservers on the General Slocum, yet I can not prove it; I did not examine any of those life preservers. I only know and repeat that which I find in the record as it came from the lips and pens of people who were witnesses to it or examined into the matter.

The life of a ground-cork life preserver, with or without a piece of bar iron in each of its sections, is stated in one of the newspapers published at that time to be six years. There were 2,500 life preservers in all upon the boat, 2,100 of which were said to be not less than 13 years old. They had been placed aboard the Slocum in 1891. There were others placed aboard that steamer which had formerly been used aboard the old steamer, Edwin Forrest, a boat which was in commission during the Civil War in 1864, 40 years before the accident. In grappling for and bringing up bodies from the bottom of the river after the accident, some were brought up from the bottom of the harbor with those iron-balled life preservers tied about them.

It seems, too, that the crew was an inexperienced one, picked up from along the water front. There had not been a fire drill aboard the boat during that year. The first mate was an ironworker by trade, and was serving as mate of the vessel without a license from the Government to act in that capacity.

Near the place where the fire started one standpipe was found with its valves rusted shut so that they could not be opened without the use of a tapping hammer and a wrench. There was also a blank washer in front of the outlet, screwed in place upon another standpipe, so that no water could possibly flow out of it after the hose had been coupled onto it. This fact was proven during the fire by actual experience.

Nine hundred and fifty-five people, mostly children, died by being either burned or drowned on that boat that day.

It was rather a queer accident in many ways. There was a pretty stiff breeze blowing, and when notice of the fire was given the captain ran the boat 3 miles against the head wind, past docks, and at one place passing an open beach with low banks and shallow water. The fire was in the forward end of the boat. A boat going 18 miles an hour against a head wind creates a forced draft. If you are standing in the bow of a boat going at that rate under such conditions you have to hold your hat on with your hands.

Poor and inefficient hose, inefficient inspection, fraudulent life-saving apparatus, and bad judgment on the part of the captain and pilots in the handling of the boats were what caused the unnecessary loss of a great many lives that day, perhaps the majority of them. It was for the purpose of calling attention to the danger which attends green crews and bogus life-saving apparatus that I made my remarks. I did not intend to do injustice to anyone and, as a matter of fact, I do not think I did, yet I was inaccurate in my statement as to the details. They were much worse than I stated them to be.

Just a short time ago we all read of the burning of the Volturno. During the discussion of that disaster in the newspapers the captain of that steamer was quoted as saying that in lowering one of the lifeboats, full of people, it was lowered at a time when the Volturno "sat down" upon it and caused the loss of life of every person in it. It was a lifeboat loaded presumably with women and children and such like helpless folk, who by right go first into life-saving devices.

By way of parenthesis I want to say right here that when a life-saving device such as a lifeboat is handled by those who are intrusted with the duty in a manner which causes the death of every person who trusts his or her life to it, that it is making a score of what they call in target practice "100 out of a possible 100." You can not beat it. It is more fatal than the bubonic plague.

There was stated to be great difficulty at the time of the burning of the Volturno in launching lifeboats from that steamer, and also from the fleet which went to her assistance. About that time I saw an account of the storm which prevailed and also, as perhaps you all did, a cut in the newspapers which was said to have been reproduced from a photograph of the Volturno, taken at the time when she was burning, which showed a mass of smoke rising from her forward. If you remember, you noticed that that smoke was going straight up into the air above her decks. If you have ever watched the behavior of smoke in a gale such as was said to have been prevailing at that time, you have noticed no doubt that it does not go up into the air—at least the kind of smoke with which I am familiar does not act that way if a gale of wind is blowing—but, on the contrary, it is cut off clean at the mouth of its exit and is carried almost horizontally down the wind. You can not shoot smoke up into the air from a cannon in a gale of wind.

Since seeing that picture of the action of the smoke which arose from the Volturno and the condition of the sea about her, I am more than ever convinced that the reason the Volturno "sat down" upon the lifeboat full of passengers and drowned them and why no lifeboats were lowered from her or from other craft for so many hours was because they did not have enough sailors aboard with the experience necessary to do that kind of work properly. The fact that stokers, cooks, stewards, and others than sailors manned the lifeboats which made the rescue points to the same conclusion. A crew of experienced sailors could easily and speedily have launched a lifeboat in a gale which did not have power enough in its lungs to drive the smoke flat over the rails. They could also, in perfect security, have played "hopscootch" in a good lifeboat in a sea such as was running, as shown in the photograph.

Not one of the attendant vessels which were standing by the Volturno when she was burning was able to pass a line aboard her. Judging from the condition of the sea, as shown in the cut reproduced from the photograph published at that time, it should not have been a hard task to do so.

The good skipper of the Dunbury, who in heavy weather, in the open sea, three times passed a line aboard a helpless derelict with over a hundred passengers aboard, could have "lathered and shaved" the Volturno had he been at the tiller of any one of the craft which were standing by her.

I am quite willing, however, to correct my error about the plugs being out of the lifeboats of the Slocum and that the passengers lost their lives for that reason, and to substitute for it the facts which prove the contention I made at the time—that the life-saving equipment which is usually provided is a delusion and a snare. I would far rather be in a lifeboat with the plug out than in one with its seams open. I might be able to stop the one leak, while I could not the other. To lash that kind of a lifeboat down with a steel cable is the proper way to safeguard the lives of the passengers. To exhibit it, however, to trusting and confiding women and children as a life-saving device is, in my opinion, a crime.

Some hundreds of little children went down to death that day—happy, expectant little folks, out for a day of enjoyment, were caught in a trap aboard a boat covered with gingerbread woodwork and tawdry decorations, placed there to attract their patronage, and were roasted to death or drowned through the cupidity and carelessness of those to whom they intrusted their precious lives. One poor mother, looking over the side of the boat, recognized a struggling and drowning child as her own, and with an agonized cry of "Mein Frieda," that rose above the tumult, sprang overboard, to drown in trying to save her.

When the picture of the horrors of that scene rises before me, and I see hundreds of children and women dying an agonizing death, and at the same time I see them feverishly working in vain to obtain life preservers, which proved afterwards to be filled with ground cork and bar iron and to be covered with rotten canvas and nailed behind slats so securely that they could not be wrenched loose by the hands of the women nor reached by the children; when I dwell on the meaning of the rusted valves of the standpipes and the complement of untested fire hose, which was only guaranteed to stand a pressure of 40 pounds when it was new, whereas from one to two hundred pounds pressure was necessary; when I realize that the lifeboats provided for the safety of those people had their seams open between the bottom plates and were held down with steel cable all too securely for bleeding fingers to tear them loose from their fastenings; and when I see that poor mother and "Frieda," and other mothers and little children, burning or drowning like rats in a trap, I repeat that I consider the exhibition of such life-saving devices to the eyes of trusting folks as a delusion and a snare, and the cause of the death of many who would not have lost their lives if they had known the truth concerning them.

It may be, and I am willing to concede that it is, true that, trusting to my memory, I accused those who were guilty of murdering these children of having done so in a less cowardly and cruel manner than the cold-blooded one which they adopted. If I have failed in doing them justice, and they or anyone else feel aggrieved over my omission in that respect, I cheerfully offer these remarks as a correction, and I apologize for the lack of information respecting the more horrible condition which prevailed on the Slocum in regard to the so-called life-saving appliances than I conceived of when I made the remarks on the seamen's bill.

In what I have stated here at this time I am giving voice to the statements which I have taken from the press reports which were published following that event and from the report of the commission which investigated the affair at the request of President Roosevelt. One of the commissioners who made this report—this the official and only report—was, I am informed, the chief inspector who was responsible for the condition of the appliances aboard the Slocum the day she was burned.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, November 24, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 22, 1913.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

John F. Pugh, of Alaska, to be collector of customs for the District of Alaska in place of John R. Willis, whose term of office expired by limitation January 31, 1913.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

David J. Williams, of Washington, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Washington in place of Millard T. Hartson, superseded.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY ARM.

Lieut. Col. Francis J. Kernan, Infantry, unassigned, to be colonel from November 20, 1913, vice Col. Charles McClure, Thirtieth Infantry, who died November 19, 1913.

Maj. William M. Wright, Infantry, unassigned, to be lieutenant colonel from November 20, 1913, vice Lieut. Col. Francis J. Kernan, unassigned, promoted.

Capt. Edward A. Shuttleworth, Second Infantry, to be major from November 21, 1913, vice Maj. James H. McRae, Fifth Infantry, detailed as adjutant general on that date.

First Lieut. George C. Lewis, Twenty-sixth Infantry, to be captain from November 21, 1913, vice Capt. Edward A. Shuttleworth, Second Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. David G. C. Garrison, Twenty-sixth Infantry, to be first lieutenant from November 21, 1913, vice First Lieut. George C. Lewis, Twenty-sixth Infantry, promoted.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate November 22, 1913.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Seth W. Jones to be collector of internal revenue for the district of New Hampshire.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENT IN NAVY.

Lieut. Commander Alfred W. Hinds to be a commander.

Lieut. Edwin H. Dodd to be a lieutenant commander.

Lieut. Manley H. Simons to be a lieutenant commander.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Alfred W. Brown, jr., to be a lieutenant.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Frank Russell to be a lieutenant.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Garret L. Schuyler to be a lieutenant.

Ensign Edward H. Connor to be a lieutenant (junior grade).

Pay Inspector Thomas S. Jewett to be a pay director.

Asst. Paymaster Frank H. Atkinson to be a passed assistant paymaster.

Gray C. Holladay to be an assistant surgeon in the Medical Reserve Corps.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

S. L. Dorroh, Reform.

J. T. Farmer, Samson.

FLORIDA.

Harry Gray, Palatka.

IDAHO.

Claude V. Biggs, Buhl.

F. E. Cornwall, Moscow.

ILLINOIS.

Frank Allen, Oglesby.

WYOMING.

Louis Schalk, Rawlins.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, November 22, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Spirit, Father of all souls, our hearts go out in praise and gratitude to Thee for the preservation and prolongation of our lives; for Thy loving kindness and tender mercies which pour themselves out in a thousand blessings day by day, without which we should perish from the face of the earth and sink into nothingness forever. May we show our appreciation of Thy care and protection by clean living and an earnest desire to serve Thee by a faithful service in the things which make for the betterment of mankind under the spiritual leadership of Thy son Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, a day or two ago I introduced a resolution to adjourn to-day, and I wish to amend that resolution by inserting Monday, the 24th, instead of Saturday, the 22d. I think that the resolution is privileged, and I wish to call it up now and dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is privileged.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I wish to call it up.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that yesterday by unanimous consent an order was made providing for three speeches following the approval of the Journal, which, I take it, would come up ahead of any other matter.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I think this resolution is privileged and comes before those speeches.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is privileged, there is not any question about that, but the House yesterday by solemn agreement set aside 95 minutes. I think it is, for speech making to-day, a special order, and a special order takes precedence of a privileged question. The Chair would not rule that it takes precedence of a question of personal privilege. There are two distinctions. After these gentlemen have made their speeches the Chair will entertain the motion of the gentleman, and the first one recognized for debate is the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], who is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Chair hold that these speeches which these gentlemen are entitled to make take precedence over this privileged resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does hold that. The House has a right to do as it pleases, and the House set aside this time for speech making. The Chair wishes to differentiate again between a privileged question and a question of privilege. The Chair says that a privileged question is shut out temporarily by the special order which was made yesterday, but if it were a question of personal privilege the Chair does not know how he would rule. He would have to investigate.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not either.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he would rule that a question of personal privilege came in ahead; but he is not ruling.

CONSERVATION AT CLOSE RANGE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be notified when I have consumed 30 minutes of my time.

Inasmuch as the Fifth National Conservation Congress has just concluded its session in the city of Washington, Mr. Speaker, and inasmuch as this great organization has fallen upon rocks which may mean its disruption, I feel that a statement should be made as to how, when, where, and why this congress was organized.

It may surprise some Members of Congress to know that the National Conservation Congress was organized in the city of Seattle five years ago in a sincere effort to develop along rational and great progressive lines plans for the true conservation of the great resources of the Pacific Northwest.

I desire to say at the outset that the Tacoma Daily News, of which I had the honor to succeed as editor the present Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Franklin K. Lane, began in 1898, under my editorship, to warn the people of the West with regard to the waste of the products of the forests. We pointed out over and over again that the time would come when our forests would be exhausted and that western Washington would then consist of unsightly, logged-off lands, unpeopled and unproductive. A year or two later I employed Mr. Joel Shoemaker, an expert on agricultural matters, and our newspaper waged a campaign for conservation and for the improvement of the land laws. A few years later not only the State but the owners of tracts of timber began to agitate better fire protection. A great association was formed and is now carrying on this work.

In 1909 the city of Seattle held its Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. The year before Mr. Joel Shoemaker, who had been a reporter on the Tacoma News, conceived the idea of a conservation congress to be held in connection with that exposition. Assisted by R. W. Douglas, Mr. Shoemaker developed this idea, and the congress was one of the greatest successes of all the features of that far-famed western exposition. The move was launched, made national in character, and the members began at once to outline a great plan of conservation, not only of the resources of the United States, but of the people in the factories and on the farms.

There had, of course, been some sincere efforts along this line in the East. Forest reserves had, as we all know, been created several years before, and the American Forestry Association had made a start at conservation. Mr. Gifford Pinchot had published some important articles and was drawing lessons from forest management abroad; but the movement inaugurated and perfected at Seattle spread like wildfire. In a twelvemonth conservation became the fad of the year. What a pity that the men who developed it and gave heavily of their finances to support it are now the men who are so often denounced whenever a simon-pure, dream-book conservationist finds an audience.

MR. PINCHOT ON THE SCENE.

As the conservation congress grew in numbers the original Seattle secretary was shorn of his power and Mr. Thomas R. Shipp was made executive secretary. Mr. Bernard Baker, of Baltimore, was the first president, and the second meeting was held in St. Paul in 1910; and it was in this meeting that Mr. Gifford Pinchot appeared. Up to this time the congress had been constructive and nonpolitical. Mr. Pinchot, desiring to take control, brought a great number of eastern delegates and gave as an excuse for so doing the fact that the West was in possession of the congress. Inasmuch as western men were endeavoring sincerely and honestly to solve the problems of the West they resented the sudden approach of the army of theorists from east of the Mississippi. Although greatly outnumbered, the westerners made a stand and former Gov. Marion E. Hay, of the State of Washington, undertook to state the position of the westerners. For this he was howled down and given scant courtesy. He returned to his State and told the people what would happen. They declined to believe him. His prophecy has come true.

The next president of the congress was Mr. Wallace, a famous agriculturist editor of Iowa. The congress having been well-nigh disrupted at St. Paul, the Pinchotites now decided to remain in the background. At the third congress, held in Kansas City in 1911, the matter of conservation of the soil was taken up and great progress made, the then Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. James Wilson, putting into practice at once many of the ideas presented there.

J. B. White, of Kansas City, was the next president of the session of the congress, which was held at Indianapolis, where social, human, and bodily welfare were the principal topics. The Pinchotites still kept out of the sessions to a large degree.

Do not understand me to infer that matters of forest conservation, water-power conservation, and other great problems were neglected at these various meetings. All of these subjects were given full attention and special sections were devoted to them, and I believe sincerely that an unprejudiced examination of the progress along any of these lines will show that the work of the four congresses has been of lasting and permanent value.

ILL-PROPORTIONED REPRESENTATION.

We now come to the fifth congress. Charles L. Pack, of New Jersey, was president and the meeting place Washington, D. C., November 18, 19, and 20. We find called for one day ahead of this conservation congress a meeting of the forest association. We find present numbers of the employees of the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture. We find many of them remaining as delegates to the conservation congress, and when the credentials of the delegates entitled to sit in that great congress—called primarily to discuss the welfare of the United States, but devoted principally to discussion of the heavy problems of the West—were presented, we find accredited to the District of Columbia 162 delegates. Opposed to this splendid array from the District of Columbia, which, while having no voice or vote in the affairs of the Nation, knows better how to handle the affairs of all of the people of the 48 States combined—I say, opposing these 162 delegates from the District of Columbia we find 10 accredited delegates from the State of Washington, where the congress was founded, and from New York State we find accredited delegates to the number of 60, and opposing them we find from the State of Oregon 7 delegates, and I am informed that several of these were members of the Forest Service or paid employees of the conservation association.

From New Jersey, where corporations are spewed forth in great numbers and almost without restraint, and permitted to prey upon our Western States, we find 30 or 40 delegates, and opposed to them we find Arizona, with 4 delegates present—some of them field or other representatives of the Forest Service, voting with the conservationists of the East and against the delegates from beyond the Great Divide, and so on.

When a vote was taken without a roll call, the voice of the East sounded like the roar of Niagara, while the voice of the West sounded like the chirp of a canary bird. When a vote was taken by States, every Eastern State found itself entitled to 20 votes, while every Western State had but 10 votes. Oregon and Arizona, controlled by means of their Forest Service delegates or by paid employees of the conservation association, found themselves voting with the great eastern majority. Most of the Southern States had 10 votes along with the West, and no western or southern idea or outline was given the slightest consideration. The men who had founded, financed, and kept alive the conservation congress found themselves neither welcomed nor wanted. If this great organization finds itself upon the rocks, the people of the United States should know that it was wrecked by Mr. Gifford Pinchot, against the final protests of his friends, Walter L. Fisher, Charles L. Pack, James R. Garfield, and others.

WHAT BUREAUCRACY CAN DO.

The whole thing was a sample of what can be expected under increased Federal bureaucracy. Carry the thing out a little further—a Federal express service, a chain of regional banks, Federal control of the practice of medicine, Federal control of our education system, Federal good roads system, and so on ad infinitum, and you will have a centralized form of government the like of which the fathers never dreamed. The array of Federal employees will be imposing and the bureaucratic control appalling.

I desire to criticize no individual of the Forest Service or of the Land Department. I believe that the Chief Forester, Hon. Henry S. Graves, is doing the very best that he can with the very bad legacy which was left to him. It is not fair that he should suffer for a scheme which was inherited by him and which can not be worked out in 30 years. It is, in my opinion, up to Congress to help rather than to hinder him. Congress, too, should appoint a commission to untangle the mess of land laws that are bearing down upon Secretary Lane's great department. Mr. Lane knows the West; he wants to help the West, and Congress should help him.

So much for the fifth session of the conservation congress. What did it amount to, anyway? Principally a two days' sensation in the newspapers, followed by more magazine articles and more books and reports for the shelves of the Congressional Library.

CONSERVATION AT CLOSE RANGE.

Now for a few statements concerning conservation at close range, and particularly forest conservation. I desire first to call attention to the fact that the Bureau of Forestry is in the Department of Agriculture, and that the General Land Office is in the Interior Department. Let us see where this division leads us. Special traveling agents of the Land Office in one great executive department and rangers of the Forest Service in another executive department are permitted to make reports upon applications for land patents. If the forest ranger reports "no protest," the Land Office agent does not make further examination, but if the forest ranger makes a protest then a special agent of the Land Office takes the matter up. Where is the law under which forest rangers of the Agricultural Department and special agents of the Land Office divide their work and keep away from each other's territory? I suspect that there is no such law, but that the plan is carried out under a "gentleman's agreement."

Experience has proved that the forest ranger, who goes about the country, sleeping at the homes of the farmers and sharing their well-cooked meals, chatting with their boys and girls, and instructing the fathers in forestry and agriculture, generally reports "no protest," while it seems to be a fact that the special agent of the land office generally files a protest. It seems also that the special agents make their records by the number of protests that they find. The more often that they can put a would-be homesteader on the defensive the better appears to be their record.

Over in the other department the forest ranger, living with and loving the people whom he meets, is subject to the same sentiments of the heart which make life worth living for all of us, and often tips the scale in behalf of the claimant; and yet, strange as it may appear, whenever a forest ranger finds it necessary to report a protest what a hue and cry goes up.

WHEN SETTLERS FALL OUT WITH RANGERS.

I have seen nailed to the trees invitations to the people to settle on agricultural lands in the forest reserves. I have known settlers who accepted these invitations, and I have known rangers, when the settlers had made the clearings, to take the tract for administrative purposes. I have heard of settlers burning their stacks of hay to keep it from falling into the hands of the rangers. I have known of forest rangers and traveling special agents to go into our great country and take to the trails without the slightest knowledge of the forests or of our agricultural lands. I knew of two young rangers fresh from college who so tethered their horses that the latter choked to death, and only with the greatest difficulty did the young men get out of the woods alive.

But I am digressing. That is in the past, and it is just as unfair for me to harp on these mistakes as it is for the "dream bookers" to harp on the robberies of the public domain in the West many years ago, when not one person in one hundred thousand knew anything about that country and its wonderful resources. Men who took advantage of inadequate laws then really got what then was of little actual value, though of great worth now.

DISTRIBUTION OF FOREST-RESERVE FUNDS.

Now, a word as to the distribution of funds received from the sale of timber in the forest reserves. Of all the moneys received, 25 per cent goes to the county road and school funds, and is distributed to the counties in proportion to their area in the reservation from which the timber has been sold. Then 10 per cent more is set aside and is used for permanent improvements in the national forests—that is, for fences, roads, telephones, trails, and the like. This 10 per cent can be spent where recommended by supervisors, and is often spent in an effort to placate trouble.

Some times it is spent in an effort to bring on trouble, as I shall undertake to demonstrate; but, before doing so, permit me to state that in the second congressional district of the State of Washington there are 13 counties comprising nearly 20,000 square miles, or 10,094,000 acres. In that district are 2 great national parks, 3 forest reserves, and 9 or 10 Indian reservations—one, the Quinault, in my county, of great size. The forest reserves comprise 2,919,995 acres—nearly 3,000,000 acres, or a little less than one-third of the whole congressional district.

This Olympic Forest Reserve is now estimated by the Government to contain 33 thousand million feet of timber. The estimate is far too low.

THE GREAT OLYMPIC MONUMENT.

Also, there is the Olympic Monument, made under the same act which permitted the Gettysburg tract to be called a monument. However, there is this difference: The Gettysburg Monument, of a few thousand acres, is sacred to the dead of the North and South; the Olympic Monument, partially located in my county, consists of almost 700,000 acres, and these acres have been set aside for the preservation of the Cervus Roosevelti, which until a few years ago we plain people of the Northwest were content to call the Olympic elk. That monument comprises the great mountainous center of the vast Olympic Forest Reserve, which consists of nearly 1,300,000 acres, and under the monument act citizens are forbidden to wield a pick—almost forbidden to even strike a match. In that monument, I am satisfied, exists semiprecious minerals of many kinds. I believe that there is enough manganese there to supply the United States for 200 years. I believe that there are great quantities of fluorspar, concerning which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] is so alarmed. That great forest reservation has taken the heart not only out of the Olympic Peninsula, but also has taken the heart out of the prospector and of the sturdy pioneer who settled in there, many of them over 20 years ago, and who are still living far up in the trackless woods, waiting for the counties in which they live and for the State to whose charter they subscribe to build to them roads over which they might haul in the necessities of life at less than 2 cents a pound and haul out the products which grow in such abundance in that, the richest soil in all the United States.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask if the gentleman will yield for one simple question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad if the gentleman will not interrupt at this point; later I will take up any questions which are asked, provided time permits.

COURTHOUSE FALLING INTO DECAY.

One county in particular has so much of its area in the forest reserve—100,000 acres in fact—that nothing is left but a little strip of beach on the Pacific Ocean to the west and another strip on the shores of Puget Sound to the east; and on a high hill overlooking the eastern shore of this great county sits in solemn grandeur the courthouse, slowly falling into decay because no taxes are available for its upkeep and no settlers are coming to that territory upon which the county had based its hopes of prosperity. (See Appendix.)

Here is a report from that county:

PORT TOWNSEND, WASH., June 4, 1913.

Hon. A. JOHNSON:

Jefferson County, with an area of 1,747 square miles, or 1,078,400 acres, has 730,000 acres in the Olympic Forest Reserve, and received from the Forest Service in the year 1912 the sum of $602. Area of assessed lands outside of reserve, but 280,000 acres.

H. L. HANSEN, Assessor.

IN OTHER COUNTIES.

Mr. Speaker, that county has been bankrupted by the forest reserve. Can you blame me for opposing a conservation which is filling up the libraries, the magazines, and the Government reports and giving us such meager returns?

Here is another statement from a great big county, Skamania, with 833,600 acres in the Rainier Reserve and only 212,358 acres outside. The assessor says:

Total amount received, since record was kept, for sale of forest-reserve timber is $4,718.41.

The withdrawal of 700,000 acres from the Olympia Forest in 1901 is still a subject of much discussion. The report of the forestry committee of this year's conservation congress (p. 21) gives that withdrawal a shot and says that the land fell into the hands of the big timber owners. So it did, much of it, but I insist that the money they paid the settlers was the money that kept that part of the country going, and that the wages they pay in camps, mills, and offices is to this day the principal support of the country in question. But for the withdrawal of 1901 another county would have been bankrupted.

WE ARE ALL SPECULATIVE.

We all know that the whole people of the United States are of a speculative turn of mind. When you of the East turn to the stock and bond market, and sometimes to the race courses, our prospectors and pioneers of the West turn to mines and the land and hope to win. They are the descendants of the venturesome and enterprising spirits who secured grants of lands in bulk on the most liberal conditions imaginable and broke ground for the settlement of North America. They proceeded to wipe out the aboriginal forest guards, the native Indians, who opposed them in making good their title, and they speculated in their holdings, from William Penn down to the obscurest settler in the newest colony.

I can see no difference in the principle involved in Marcus Daly selling for millions his great mining claim than in the holder of a timber claim selling his possession for $2,000. Every individual claim holder and every homesteader I have ever met hopes to sell at a handsome profit.

NO NEED OF PUBLICITY BUREAU.

We have accounted for 35 per cent of the money received from sales in the forest reserve, and that would leave 65 per cent for executive and overhead charges, as we say in the business world. And some money of this 65 per cent is spent for the purposes of publicity. How much do you suppose was spent in sending out to the newspapers of the United States the following bulletin:

FIRST TIMBER SALE IN EASTERN NATIONAL FORESTS—NOT RELEASED UNTIL APRIL 5, 1913.

WASHINGTON, April 4.

The United States has made its first timber sale on the newly purchased Appalachian forests, and the voucher that established the fact has been an object of interest in the hands of the officials of the Department of Agriculture who have had occasion to handle it.

The voucher itself does not show what the character of the sale was, but inquiry has drawn forth the information that the material disposed of was $7 worth of logs, bought by a Georgia farmer to use in building a barn. This apparently insignificant transaction is regarded as a foretaste of the future, when the Government will be taking in a tidy revenue from the forest lands which it is now buying in the East.

And so on, runs the bulletin for two pages. [Laughter.] Here and now I want to state I am opposed to a publicity agent in the Forestry Service, he being entirely unnecessary, a luxury, and a useless expense. The Forestry Service will always get enough advertising, good and bad.

EASTERN FOREST CONSERVATION.

We of the West do not object to eastern conservation of forests and watersheds. Not a bit of it. But I hardly need to say, concerning the establishment of forests and sources of water supply in the East by purchase, which results in the distribution of real money—an article which is becoming quite scarce in the West—I can readily see where States which are selling their mountain tops to the United States should be for the greatest conservation and should vote, whenever opportunity affords, to lay it onto the State of Washington and the West, regardless of our feelings. It has been said on this floor this year that it will take 30 years to straighten out the plans of the Forest Service for the conservation of the forests in my district, and in 30 years, my friends, the men who have pioneered and lived in the most primitive fashion out there will all be dead. This is why we are a little squeamish about the extension of Federal conservation. We are for it, Mr. Speaker, out West, but we find that the process is the least bit slow.

ALASKA, THE CINDERELLA OF THE SISTERHOOD.

For instance, Alaska was pretty generally conserved seven full years ago. Everything that could be withdrawn was withdrawn—some of it without warrant of law—and since that time things have been mighty dull in Alaska, and interest has gone on at 8 per cent just the same. Alaska is an orphan; she is the Cinderella of this great sisterhood. Her area is about one-fifth as large as the United States. There is before you, Representatives in Congress, this winter a bill to authorize the stretching of a line of rails somewhere through that vast territory, and when that bill is offered there will be amendments of every kind from those who would still further conserve a country which is starving to death. Seven years has Alaska been in bondage, and she will be in bondage seven years more, for it will take that time to survey and build a Government railroad, if we are so fortunate as to secure the authority to do so and to devise a method by which locked-up Alaska can be unlocked and given back, not to the corporations, but to the plain people. How will you do it? Shall we try on Alaska all of the panaceas which are proposed?

GOVERNMENT PUTS IN TELEPHONE LINE TO RIVAL FARMERS.

Mr. Speaker, I have said that 25 per cent of the sale of the timber goes to county roads and the school funds and that 10 per cent is used in the permanent development of the national forests where thought best. I have said that this 10 per cent was sometimes used to placate trouble and sometimes to make trouble. Let me give one illustration of each. In the celebrated Big Bottom County, where we hope soon to throw 24,000 acres open to settlement, the ranchers built a telephone line along the county road. That road let open the public domain which was not then the forest reserve. When the forest reserve was established the road ran through the corner of it for an eighth of a mile. The farmers built a telephone line between Randle and Lewis. Capital could not be interested, so the farmers themselves organized a company and built 23 miles of telephone line. Each man dug so many holes and furnished so many poles. Each contributed so much of his cash for wire installations and instruments. Each man agreed to pay, I believe, $6 a year for his telephone. The ranchers of the Forest Service stepped in and asked for a certain number of telephones free of charge.

The farmers offered them the instruments at cost, but declined to let them connect up free of charge. Thereupon the forestry officials caused to be constructed, for their own use, at a cost of $1,500, a telephone line paralleling the farmers' line and running from "nowhere to nowhere." In a country where these ranchers settled more than 20 years ago they were then 80 miles from a railroad, in a rich valley, into which their wagons had to be let down with tackle and pulley. With enormous labor they built trails and roads and have created such an interest in their community that a railroad is now within 20 miles.

As the farmers' telephone line, 23 miles long, neared completion the forestry officials ordered that part of it—one-eighth of a mile—running over the forest reserve, on the county road, removed, and not only brought suit, but asked for damages. I think the forestry officials wanted pay for telephone poles covering one-eighth of a mile. We are in a country where telephone poles 20 miles from a railroad are not worth as much as toothpicks in this Chamber.

SENATOR JONES SAVES SITUATION.

Through the employment of lawyers and through much work on the part of the ever-diligent senior Senator from the State of Washington, Hon. WESLEY L. JONES, this difficulty was straightened out. It was announced not long ago that the 24,000-acre tract of home land, with some timber on the benches, which timber would look mighty to a man from Kansas, who, however, would die of heart disease if he tried to cut it down and sell it and then grub out the roots, might be opened for settlement.

See how harmonious (?) is the situation. The forestry supervisor for the district, Mr. Allen, in the Agricultural Department, mind you, recommended it to be thrown open and described it as good agricultural land. Then came along two traveling experts from some other department, and they reported that the land should not be thrown open to agriculture, as the soil was no good. Then the Chief Forester, Hon. Henry S. Graves, made a trip to that far-off country, 3,200 miles away, and he reported that the land was fit for agriculture and should be opened. Then Congress passed a bill providing for the lottery method in such cases, and letters have commenced to flow in by hundreds, asking how men who desire to settle on the land with their families shall proceed.

AND NOW FOR FURTHER DELAYS.

But next comes the Forestry Service with its law concerning that 10 per cent which it may spend here and there, and it put a few hundred dollars on the public road in the hope of placating. I presume, the great outcry of the farmers against the Government going into the telephone business against them; and somebody out there seems to have given it out that the Forest Service proposes to spend $2,000 on this road in 1914, and thereupon, so I am told, a feeling has been created throughout the settlement that the 24,000 acres had better not be thrown open, for if there is one thing farmers in the reserves need it is roads. Some men now say they would rather not have any more of the country opened and settled if they can have Forest Service roads instead. Next we must get reports from the Geological Survey as to minerals in the tract; we must have reports on water-power possibilities of the river which runs by, and I predict it will yet take a long time to get the tract in shape for opening. And, mind you, this consists of but 24,000 acres—a mere dot on the map of the reserve—and yet we dare to talk and preach about putting "people on the land."

HINDSIGHT IS A WONDERFUL THING.

Mr. Speaker, the charge is often made that men have come to Congress from the West to loot the public domain. That charge has been laid against every man who has ever been prominent as a representative of our State, either at the Nation's Capitol or at the State's capitol.

We can look back now to 1862 and see that mistakes were made when Congress gave great land grants to the trans-Pacific railroads, but I am one of those who believe that those grants were made in good faith by the men who then sat on this floor. I believe that if we should undertake to pass similar laws for, say, the Philippines, which are better known to us now than was the Oregon country to the legislators of 1862, we would make similar mistakes. I believe that no matter what kind of an Alaska railroad bill we shall pass, even though it may make that great Territory blossom like a rose and may lift it from wilderness to a cultivated district supporting 10,000,000 souls, there will rise up at some future day demagogues who will denounce those who in the Sixty-third Congress advocated such a measure.

SPEAKER CLARK'S ADDRESS.

I was much impressed on hearing the Speaker of the House, Hon. CHAMP CLARK, in a recent address, say that in his boyhood days his father sang—

"Uncle Sam's got land enough to give us each a farm." Nowadays—

Said the Speaker—

in the United States parents are lying awake nights wondering where their children will secure homes.

And it occurred to me that if that statement be true, no one could dispute the argument that the day the United States found it necessary to conserve its resources was the very day to have put up the bars against an ever-increasing immigration.

CONSERVATION HERE TO STAY.

Mr. Speaker, conservation of natural resources is here and here to stay. It is as useless to rail against conservation as it was after 1865 to rail against the abolition of slavery. But we of the new and growing West and of the flourishing Southwest and of the new and prosperous Southland do object to conservation being forced upon us in larger doses than we can assimilate. Our Western States have some rights given to us in our charters under which we entered the Union. With public-service commissions limiting profits to as low as 10 per cent, with interest prevailing at 8 per cent, with the great demand of the "dream-book conservationists" pressing down for national control of almost everything, with taxes and the cost of living steadily increasing, with debt—private, municipal, county, school, State, and national—climbing like the thermometer on a July day, the effort to keep the wheels going round is a task most prodigious, not only for the greatest of our western industries but for the smallest as well. The people of Washington State have not complained. They do not now complain. Nowhere does a dollar work harder. Each dollar out yonder, my friends, is a guaranty for 90 days' credit in a dozen places at the same time. And that is a kind of conservation that keeps life in the body politic and fuel under the boiler.

MARKET WEAK AND WILL BE WORSE.

I am told by my colleague, page 2057 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this session, and I see that I am addressed in the first person, against the rules and practices of the House, as follows:

You come from a timber district, and you know the big men of your district are timberland owners and that they want this timber eliminated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that statement is not sustained by the facts. The timber in the reserves is keeping up the price of stumpage. I can not find a man of means who wants a stick of it out. In fact, the Forest Service complains that it is having poor sales. These poor sales, no doubt, are responsible for the smallness of the 25 per cent return received by Mason County, which contains 585,200 acres—a county as big as Connecticut—which has received from the Forest Service this year the munificent sum of $24.65. Mason County, which has been fed on the "dream-book" stuff for five years and led to believe that it would receive some forest-reserve money with which to build roads at $12,000 a mile, gets $24.65 and a nice bulletin from the Forest Service to the effect that in the Appalachian range there has been sold a $7 log.

Here are the figures of the Mason County receipts from the Forest Service:

1911	232.42
1912	112.05
1913	24.65

No, Mr. Speaker, the timbermen do not want a stick from the forest reserves. They are kept busy paying taxes on what they own. Men owning a single timber claim can not find buyers, and are working in the mills and camps to get tax money. The banks are loaned up on these small claims.

COST OF CLEARING LAND.

Listen to this, which is an extract from a letter of Thaddeus L. Waters, of Gig Harbor, Wash., of June 16, 1913:

There is another matter I wish to speak about, and that is money at a low rate of interest and on long time. It costs $200 an acre to clear this stumpage land, and if we could borrow of the Government—something like Germany—on long time it would help us out and bring the Government in a revenue that now goes to the money sharks. Can't you introduce a bill at the regular session?

The writer of this letter lives in the locality where the song, "The Old Settler," is the favorite of the people. Let me recite it:

THE OLD SETTLER.

I had wandered all over the country
Prospecting and digging for gold;
I had tunneled, hydraulicked, and cradled,
And I had been frequently sold.
For one who gets riches by mining,
Perceiving that hundreds grow poor,
I made up my mind to try farming,
The only pursuit that is sure.

So rolling my grub in my blankets,
I left all my tools on the ground
And started one morning to shank it
For a country they call Puget Sound.
Arriving flat broke in midwinter,
I found it enveloped in fog
And covered all over with timber
Thick as hair on the back of a dog.
As I looked on the prospect so gloomy
The tears trickled over my face,
For I felt that my travels had brought me
To the edge of the jumping-off place.
I took up a claim in the forest
And sat myself down to hard toil;
For two years I chopped and I niggered,
But I never got down to the soil.
I tried to get out of the country,
But poverty forced me to stay
Until I became an old settler,
Then nothing could drive me away.
And now that I'm used to the climate,
I think that if man ever found
A spot to live easy and happy,
That Eden is on Puget Sound.
No longer the slave of ambition,
I laugh at the world and its shams,
As I think of my pleasant condition,
Surrounded by acres of clams.

WOES OF A WEALTHY INDIAN.

And here is a telegram from an Indian, the owner of 960 acres of the finest timber in the world, a rich man as timber goes, but too poor in cash to send his wife, dying from tuberculosis, to a hospital. Listen:

ABERDEEN, WASH., September 8, 1913.

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Joseph Capoean, an Indian owning 960 acres of the finest timberland in the Quinault Reservation, has wife who is dying with tuberculosis. Although this man and family are wealthy, they can not get a dollar or sell a stick of timber. What can be done?

W. A. RUFF, Editor World.

The Indian Office went to work on presentation of this telegram, and after unwinding red tape for four days authorized me to send the following telegram:

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 12, 1913.

W. A. RUFF, Aberdeen, Wash.:

Indian Office here has just authorized Supt. Johnson to expend $200 for immediate relief of Capoean's wife, if necessary. Also to have some reputable physician examine her and if condition warrants send her to sanatorium at Laguna, N. Mex., for tubercular people. If she does not desire to go there, Johnson is authorized to look to sale of timber on her allotment for future expenses.

ALBERT JOHNSON.

ONCE THERE WERE NO BUYERS AT $1 AN ACRE.

Now, just a word as to the great sale of timberland by the Northern Pacific to the Weyerhaeuser syndicate. I do not know how many times the Northern Pacific Railway went broke trying to hang on to the enormous land grant it got in 1862. When I went west the Northern Pacific was offering sage-bush land in eastern Washington at $1 an acre, and it was not worth it.

Now irrigated acres near North Yakima and Wenatchee are worth, unimproved, $400 to $600.

When I went west land in the fertile Puyallup Valley, between the wonder cities of Tacoma and Seattle, was worth $100 an acre. Now some of it is worth $2,000 an acre. The pure-food law, which provided a market for full ripe berries and their juices, is responsible. Also, that W. H. Paulhamus and others were pioneers in the art of putting brains as well as seeds into the soil.

I know one lumberman who, during the panic of 1892-93, bought timber at as low as 50 cents an acre. He went into the forest with his family and lived there 10 years to earn and save money with which to pay taxes. Is he now, as age comes on, entitled to his holdings or not? No one knows to what lengths—in good times as well as bad—he has been forced for cash to finance his transactions and to pay wages in his lumber camps, the largest in all the world. I refer to Hon. Alexander Polson, of Hoquiam.

HARDSHIPS OF THE PIONEERS.

Mr. Speaker, I am right in defending the people of my State and of the 10 great States of the far West. In spite of much early fraud and much loose management, we are not the vicious, unlawful people that we have been so often portrayed. I dare to defend and do defend the pioneers—good, bad, and indifferent—who went to the boundless West and endured privation, isolation, and danger which in our day we can not begin to comprehend.

NORTHERN PACIFIC SELLS ITS TIMBERLAND AT $6 AN ACRE.

In 1900 the Northern Pacific offered 900,000 acres of timbered lands in Washington at $6 all over the United States and could not get a buyer until F. Weyerhaeuser got his syndicate of upper Mississippi lumbermen together and bought the 900,000 acres for $5,400,000. Two years later the Northern Pacific sold nearly 400,000 acres more on a stumpage basis at a little better rate and thought it had made a great bargain.

At that date C. F. White, one of the most far-sighted men we have, thought $10 an acre was too much for the best timber in Chehalis County, which is the best fir and cedar in all the world. Now the United States Government is paying more than that for mountain tops in the Appalachians. If Mr. White thought $10 an acre in Chehalis County too much in 1900, I wonder what he thought last spring, when the timber alone on 320 acres in Chehalis County sold for $60,000. You see, Mr. White had not figured on the potentialities of the forest reserve.

In my county of Chehalis, in the one-half outside of the forest reserve, stands more timber than will be cut in 130 years at the present rate of cutting. And yet some people say that the big lumbermen want to get still more on their hands. They deny it, and, I think, with justice. In Chehalis County there is on file in the assessor's office the results of an official county cruise made last year, which shows a total of 22,260,000,000 feet of fine timber in the county, outside of the Olympia Reserve, and that county is only one of 13 which I have the honor to represent.

TIMBER OF CHEHALIS COUNTY.

That timber is classified as follows:

	Feet.
Green merchantable timber-----	20,732,394,365
Dead standing timber-----	732,354,200
Dead and down timber-----	795,299,784 making a grand total of more than 22,000,000,000 feet, or in words 22,000 million feet of good timber.

At a conservative figure the green timber alone was worth $41,500,000.

And when our county has cut and marketed all of that timber in, say, 100 years from now, we will not be broke. For under the dense growth in many of our forests lies a land so productive and so fertile that in comparison the far-famed lands of the Nile are as nothing.

We have long wanted a wagon road into the forest reserve in the north half of the county. We have tried every way possible to get it from the Forest Service or from Congress. Marooned away up in our end of that reserve are 100 or more families, who settled there when it was eminent domain. For 20 or more years they have been there waiting. A few years ago the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] came to my town, which is away off of the beaten path. A Congressman is a rare bird out there. Of course, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] comes out there every year or so to replenish his stock of stories, but my friend FORDNEY never pretended to be a great uplifter, and so when it became known that MURDOCK was coming with a lyceum lecture there was great excitement on the forest reserve in the Quinault Indian Reservation, in town, and everywhere else. Here was a man who could do something. We gave Mr. MURDOCK a little dinner, and I have his consent to tell this story.

HIGLEY'S LIFE STORY.

A man, Mr. A. V. Higley, walked down from away up in the Olympia Reserve, 20 miles or more, over the trail, 8 miles along the Pacific Ocean beach, and 10 miles on the stage road to tell his troubles to MURDOCK. You see, Higley was from Kansas originally, and after the grasshoppers had got him there along in the eighties he hitched up his oxen and drove 2,500 miles over plains and mountains until he found the Quinault Valley—in my opinion the most beautiful and the most productive in all the Northwest. There he homesteaded. He gambled with Uncle Sam for a claim and won. Soon he found himself surrounded by a forest reserve and his troubles commenced. At our little dinner in honor of MURDOCK we called on Higley for a speech. Horny-handed, tired of eye and weary of frame, bent with toll, he told his story. He told how he had hauled in a cookstove at $2 a hundred pounds. He told how when his grazing live stock crossed an imaginary line the forest ranger punished him, although neither the live stock nor the grass they ate was worth anything, because it then cost $2 a hundred pounds to haul products to the nearest railroad. In sad vein he told the whole story of his long, dreary life in the reserve. As he talked he got a little mad. He laid all of his troubles to Congress, and he told a little story of a deacon who, after being dressed for church one Sunday morning, was reminded by his wife that he had forgotten to feed the calf that had been weaned. In his best clothes he went to the barn and forced the calf's nose into a pail of bran mash. The calf kicked the milky mixture all over the deacon, who wildly yelled, so Higley declared, looking the distinguished Kansas Congressman straight in the eye, "Blast ye, if you weren't worth so darn much I'd break your blamed neck."

Mr. MURDOCK laughed heartily, but he afterwards told me that Higley's story was the saddest life story he had heard, and that he should have relief.

CAN NOT WAIT; BUILDING OUR OWN ROADS.

Our county has despaired of aid from the Forest Service, or Federal aid, if you will. This year the county decided to spend $80,000 in building to and into the reserve, and the State is helping to the extent of $30,000 more. While we are doing that we get a little more national conservation shot into us by Mr. Pinchot. Will the Nation take up the wagon road where we leave it and carry it on through Government lands to the other settlements and valleys of the Queets and the Clearwater, where thousands of water power race unharnessed and unused to the sea and where both oil and gas are beginning to spout from recently drilled experimental wells? (See Appendix.) If so, bring on your Federal plans and a little more than the 25 per cent. It is a little rough; yea, more—it is unfair to require us to spend $100,000 for 10 miles of road in the Government's forest reserve. Why does not the Forest Service bond some of its holdings and provide the money to cure such rank injustice to the present generation?

PRaise FOR REPRESENTATIVES MANN AND MONDELL.

Several hundred volumes on conservation are in the Library of Congress. The year 1910 seems to have been about high-water mark for conservation from a literary standpoint. And yet in all of the volumes produced at that season I can find but one which gives credit to any westerner. In a paper in the Editorial Review (p. 146) I find the following, and it is with the sincerest pleasure I quote a tribute to the Republican leader, Mr. MANN, and to the intrepid, far-sighted westerner, Mr. MONDELL:

A bill had been introduced in Congress which is designed to give the Government control of streams wherever such streams pass through public lands. Congressman MONDELL showed the House, and more particularly the stepfather of this bill, Mr. MANN, of Illinois, that the legal phase of the subject is still to be worked out. Nonnavigable streams are, under the Constitution, reserved to the sovereignty of the States. Congress and the Federal courts have repeatedly recognized this. It was shown by Mr. MONDELL that the bill related wholly to western States, because only there can public lands still be found. He showed that these States only have accepted the responsibility of administering the diversion and use of water from streams. Eastern States have failed in this particular, and it is possible that a water-power monopoly might have sprung up there. He indicated plainly that the bureau chiefs, if concerned at all, should plead with these Eastern States to brace up and shoulder the responsibility that is theirs. While Congress was trying to arrive at some conclusion as to its powers and duties in this matter, one of the bureau chiefs was traveling about the country trying to arouse public sentiment in favor of his theory. He claims that the opposition to his measures comes from the great trusts and that this opposition grows as his services in behalf of the people increase. How often we see such foolishness in print. How seldom do we find a commendation of work such as Mr. MONDELL is performing for Wyoming and the West.

SOME PROPHECIES WHICH FAILED.

Ah, gentlemen of the Congress, how that paragraph stands out among thousands upon thousands of pages of dream and denunciation.

Peep into these conservation dream books and we find that in 1884 Thomas Donaldson, in his famous volume "The Public Domain" (p. 280), predicted that at the rate the public lands were then being patented for homesteads all the arable public domain would be gone in five years, or by 1885. You see, he never dreamed of a blossom on the Great American Desert. And, Mr. Speaker, in spite of his prophecy, we have 700,000,000 acres of unappropriated land remaining, 365,000,000 of which are in Alaska, which itself is as large as the area of the German Empire in Europe.

In 1889 the then Director of the Geological Survey, Mr. Walcott, predicted that our coal supply would be gone in 150 years. Mr. Walcott's time is going rapidly, and yet in Washington and Alaska is enough coal to last the United States, I presume, for 300 years, or 500 or 1,000 years if we conserve it in the future as we have in the past.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] has 10 minutes' time remaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this year the United States bought in Japan the coal for the use of its Philippine army—a half million dollars' worth, at over $6 a ton. We conserved our coal and spent our money. (See Appendix.) But we have made Alaska pay dearly for coal. Listen to this:

HON. ALBERT JOHNSON, KATALLA, ALASKA, October 30, 1913.
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are using Utah coal in Katalla this winter that costs us laid down in our bins $22 per ton. We have better coal in the Bering River coal fields within 15 miles of this town, but the seal of the United States is upon it and we can not use it. I have lived here for 10 years, and during all that time my coal has cost from $21 to $25 per ton.

Yours, very truly,

In 1902 Gifford Pinchot gave the standing timber of all the United States at two thousand billion feet. A few years later he raised his figures to three thousand billion feet, notwithstanding all that had been cut in the interim. In poker parlance, I see his raise of one thousand billion feet and raise him right back another two thousand billion feet. What is a few thousand billion feet among dreamers?

THE CONSERVATION OF ALMIGHTY GOD.

In closing I desire to repeat the words of the Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, spoken one Sunday morning last July after he had climbed old Mount Tacoma—the mountain that was God; Tacoma, the nourishing breast of Indian legend—on the occasion of his first visit to my beautiful North-west.

I read from the Tacoma Ledger of July 21:

Moved by the beauty of nature as exemplified in Mount Tacoma National Park, Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels eloquently pleaded yesterday for conservation of the Almighty. By those who heard it his talk on Sunday morning was regarded as a most beautiful and expressive tribute to the snow-capped peak that rises in its loftiness above forest and glacier. Through it all ran the Secretary's reverence for the works of the Creator, his acknowledgment of the source of the earth's glories.

In his soft, low voice Secretary Daniels said:

"What is man without the Creator? When I saw yon mighty mountain in its night glory and then again the wonderful sunrise tints this morning it brought to me the solemn thought 'What is man without the Creator?'"

The Secretary's theme on conservation took to new thoughts from that of Gifford Pinchot or any other of the conservationists. He said: "We should turn our thoughts to other conservation from that which has been rung in our ears for some time—the conservation of the Almighty. It might be regarded merely as a great unfolding process, the earth through the Creator unfolding to our needs the things we need. Some day our great coal deposits and our timber will be gone, but when that time comes other substitutes will be found."

"When I was a boy I saw marked out on the map of my geography a vast desert taking in the States of Colorado and Utah. Now that desert is beginning to blossom as the rose."

"In the past the waters of our streams have gone away until they were needed by man. Then he harnessed them. When the country was rent asunder over the fight on free silver the Alaska gold mines were unfolded and our economical needs were met. Some day our gold and silver will be gone. When it is we will use paper currency secured by that with which we have to secure it at that time. These things will be unfolded to us by the all-wise God."

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker and Members, I thank you for your attention.

APPENDIX A.

Mr. Speaker, I desire, as an appendix to my speech, to print part of the address of Hon. E. T. Allen, forester for the Western Forestry and Conservation Association, delivered before the Fifth Conservation Congress here last week. Mr. Allen has been a homesteader, a forest ranger, a United States forestry supervisor, and an association supervisor. He knows the Northwest, and his speech was the only one in all of the Conservation Congress proceedings that proposed anything helpful to the Western States. I am glad to present his remarks in full, as Appendix A of the various statements necessary in connection with my arguments.

PUBLIC KNOWLEDGE OF FOREST ECONOMICS.

[By E. T. Allen, forester for Western Forestry and Conservation Association, before Fifth National Conservation Congress, Washington, D. C.]

Did you ever go into any project requiring your money and effort, together with considerable responsibility, without really understanding it? I suppose every one of us has. Most of us have invested hard-earned money in some enterprise because we couldn't find a single flaw in the argument of the promoter and consequently didn't have strength of mind to resist. We didn't really want to invest, even if it were a good thing. We hadn't the money to spare or, even if we had, we knew some other business better and would feel safer in it. We succumbed to persuasion and logic just because we were off our own ground and couldn't escape decently, but our hearts weren't in it. And however good that project was, it didn't succeed as well as it would have if we had understood it, known it good because we did understand, followed every development with intelligent interest, and put our money and enthusiasm behind it every minute accordingly.

Maybe we never actually distrusted the promoter, but we watched affairs mightily ready to criticize or sell out. We could even fall like martyrs if necessary, but we didn't help as though our own honor and judgment were at stake.

Now, that's just what is wrong with forestry in America. We have propagandists with a perfectly irrefutable assertion that forest preservation is a good investment. The public either says "Too busy to-day," and while not denying does nothing, or it says "Here's your law (or appropriation, or whatever is asked for); now make good and save the forests." But it doesn't know the business factors that govern the enterprise and can not criticize or help intelligently. Sometimes the propagandist doesn't know, either. And forest preservation, unfortunately, can not be conducted wholly by a business manager or board of directors. It is a mutual cooperative enterprise, requiring daily participation and ratification by all concerned. There must be an American forest policy which exists, not because a few of us say it should, but because a majority of citizens understand what is needed and why and proceed to put it into effect.

WHAT IS NEEDED FOR SUCCESS.

True, we are making rapid progress toward such a situation. Twenty years ago we had practically nothing. Now we have a great and efficient national forestry administration. Most States have some forest laws, some have good ones, a few are fairly liberal with funds. We have forestry associations and congresses. Lumbermen, once regarded as the opposition, are now showing the most rapid advance of all, for in less than 10 years their systematic protection of private timber has grown from practically nothing to cover about 100,000,000 acres, with an increase of 3,000 per cent in five years.

But why does the Forest Service still have to fight for existence in every Congress and at best be supplied with funds much less than private owners spend to protect adjoining lands? Why do many States have no forest legislation and few legislation that is adequate? Why are there sections where lumbermen and the public are so mutually suspicious that neither supports any real solution of a mutual problem? Why do we have to have forestry associations and conventions?

Evidently because the average citizen does not know much about the problem himself, in spite of all we have said and done. Every result dependent upon human action depends partly upon the extent of desire for this result but more upon the extent of knowledge how to achieve it. We are trying to do as a minority what in its very nature must be an expression of the majority. We tell the average citizen it is his problem; that we have solved it for him; and that he should support the project. We are wrong. We can not solve it or reduce it to a mere supportable project. We can give him the facts, but he must solve it by studying the relation of his conduct and the community's to his own welfare and then acting accordingly. Then and only then will Congress, legislatures, lumbermen, foresters, and the public be able to work together as they must work together, knowing that their policies are sound and commended, that success will be rewarded, and that failure will be punished.

We talk and write a great deal about methods, as though all that is necessary is to make foresters proficient and lumbermen interested. This is all right enough, but what is most needed is permission to apply what we already know. Knowledge and interest are far ahead of opportunity. Success depends chiefly upon having conditions under which they are encouraged. With such conditions you couldn't stop it if you tried.

Let us return to our average citizen who with his fellows constitute the majority of our population. Suppose that in his home town, where community relations are so closely under his eye that they are familiar and clear to him, a single industry employs a large proportion of the population, produces the chief share of all manufactured products, and pays an essential part of the taxes. Let us say it is fruit growing, or dairying, or furniture making. This citizen would not think twice before conceding its necessity. Anything threatening its continuance would be a menace to be fought vigorously; anything promising to increase it would be encouraged. Town officials, chamber of commerce, citizens, all would work and spend in earnest for its continuance and development, just as you have seen them do often when occasion offered to promote enterprises of community advantage. No one in public life would dare do otherwise.

Moreover, they would know how. If it were a dairy community, its average citizen would know pretty well what production costs, what prices are necessary, what improvements are feasible, what the State can and should do to aid and regulate, what public demands are reasonable, and what are unreasonable.

RELATION OF FOREST INDUSTRY TO STATE AND NATION.

The relation of forest industry to the State or Nation is exactly that of our illustrative industry to our supposititious town, and so is its relation to every citizen. Lumbering is one of the three or four greatest American industries—it is our greatest manufacturing industry—and forest products are used in almost every other, besides being practically life essentials. Certainly it is second in usefulness to none except agriculture, and this would fare ill without its aid in many ways. The only reason the average citizen does not realize this and give it the same active and intelligent interest that he gives home-town problems is that he can not see it so clearly. The very immensity and importance of the industry causes its several processes of growing, manufacturing, and distributing to be conducted separately and thus confuses the public mind. Different communities see different parts of the process and get no thorough grasp of forest economics.

In many a little German village the whole community sees the forest grown, cut, manufactured, and used. Those who do not actually participate, serve or supply those who do. All use the crop or profit by what is sold elsewhere. There forestry needs no propaganda. The people could not understand the need of it any more than of propaganda for raising wheat and making bread. Yet their situation is really no different—it is only more concentrated. Here, too, forest industry is an entity. Man needs wood in various forms. To make the earth supply it, employing such labor as is required to make it suitable and available for his use, is a business. Its permanence and service to the community—supplying the consumer, employing labor, using supplies, and paying taxes—require, like other business, perpetuation of the resource dealt with, economy in every process, and just payment by the consumer for service rendered.

Here is where we, who should be the teachers, are at fault. We talk too much about forests, as though they were an end in themselves. We might just as well talk only of land when trying to improve agricultural conditions, or water when urging the protection and propagation of food fishes. How can the average citizen understand forests? It is the business of producing and making them useful to him that he must understand—its place in the society under which he exists, the economic laws under which it exists. He must be brought to consider all forest production and all forest use as little or no different from the production and use of any other necessary crop obviously to be encouraged and stabilized on a permanent basis profitable to all concerned. Whether he is a private citizen or a lawmaker serving private citizens he must be fairly familiar with the factors which govern lumber prices, logging and manufacturing methods, the cost of growing and protecting the raw material. As long as he thinks an uncut forest is forestry and that such forestry is good and all lumbering bad there will be no real progress. Nor will he have lumber to use sometime when he needs it.

We are moving in the right direction slowly. Once propagandists made forestry an abstract problem of public or private conscience. They dwell on the needs of posterity and urged present sacrifice as a duty. They practically said, "You are partly responsible for lack of forest protection. Forest destruction is bad for somebody's grandchildren. Badness is wicked. Therefore you are wicked. You need a sermon and we'll preach it." Nowadays we realize that abstract ethics do not influence human action as quickly as does fear of immediate personal injury. It does not offend our reforming instinct to add to our preachments of duty more vigorous and skillful appeals to human selfishness. We say, "Do more money? Then stop the other fellow from destroying dollars you would otherwise share. Forest preservation is a bargain-price insurance policy you can't afford to be without. It's cheap for a short time only. Look over our prospectus and invest."

FOREST PRESERVATION IS PROSPERITY INSURANCE.

Now, forest preservation is prosperity insurance, and insurance is good business. But it is a commodity that must be paid for in money and careful conduct. The new way is better than the old, but our prospectus is still so general it only gets a certain confiding class of customers. It needs to give more information about the business, information that will both convince the critical and make every customer another salesman.

Seek local arguments. If for the Atlantic coast, look up the pay-roll total for all lumbering and woodworking industries in your State and the total selling receipts from their manufactured products. The size of the revenue thus kept at home, but which will leave you if these industries have to move nearer some other source of raw material, will probably amaze you as much as it will the public. Learn how much your consumers pay annually for all forest products and figure how much they would save if there were no import freight bills. Then learn the rate of growth of your own species and refute the popular belief that it is too slow to enable saving these sums to those now living. Do you know that Massachusetts is to-day manufacturing its fourth crop of white pine?

Learn your area of waste land and, with the same definite growth figures to give your statements news value and convincing business accuracy, show what it might be earning the community by producing forest commodities. Calculate the tax revenues your existing forests bring and that which forests on now waste land would pay and show the consequent reduction of taxation on other property. On definite promises of area, growth rate, and conservative crop values, show the revenue obtainable by the State from forest reserves of its own. Balance this against the cost of such a project, and prove that you could lower all taxation just as they do in Europe. Study the effect of deforestation on stream flow, use specific familiar examples, and convert the injury into dollars and cents. When you get figures in all these calculations, turn them into popular comparisons that are easily grasped.

If you live on the Pacific coast, forget that white pine grows rapidly in Massachusetts and appeal to local pride by saying that here, undoubtedly, in the Nation's woodlot, where climate and rapid-growing species give an advantage over the East which it is a business crime to leave ungrasped. Show that the area denuded by fire and use will produce an equally valuable crop in, say, 60 years, and that leaving this land idle is costing our five coast forest States about $30,000,000 a year. Add to this the loss by fire and show many millions altogether are being thrown away that might be distributed through every channel of industry. The lumber industry now brings about $140,000,000 a year into the four northwest Pacific States. Show that this is more than they get from wheat, wool, fruit, dairying, and fisheries combined. The Pacific coast had more than half the Nation's timber. Show how many billion dollars this will bring in if saved for manufacture. Show the wreck of industries that would follow its sudden destruction and point out that partial destruction means the same thing in proportion.

WHAT FIRE PROTECTION MEANS.

When a score of American citizens are endangered by an uprising in China or Mexico no price is too great to pay for their protection. When a few hundred sailors went down in the Maine we were aroused to the supremacy of national effort—war. Are the lives of hundreds of men and women who meet fearful death in forest fires through American carelessness any less precious, their sufferings any less cause for national horror? The neglect of our people to observe the same care with fire in the woods that they exercise at home, the refusal of Congress and legislatures to appropriate adequately for fire prevention, and the leniency of our courts with fire-law violators all must be due to failure by those of us who are responsible for American education in these matters to impress a true comparison of values on the public mind.

As a Nation we are engaged in forestry. Our national forests comprise nearly 200,000,000 acres. Here is a stupendous task, involving the protection of existing supply, reforestation denuded areas, and disposing of the product so as best to serve the people and to influence conservative management of private forests. To withhold funds necessary to do the work is letting an immensely profitable manufacturing plant lie almost idle, as well as in danger of destruction, to save the cost of fuel and watchmen. To mismanage it would be as bad or worse, for the one-fifth of our timber supply thus under public control can not but influence profoundly the permanent wise management of the four-fifths under private control, upon which we are still more dependent. Clearly all of us, lumberman and consumer alike, have most to gain from stable conditions for the fullest use and perpetuation of all our forest resources regardless of ownership from making all true forest land capable of earning such an income from forest production as, without being excessive, will insure its best management and consequent fullest service to community and Nation.

WE HAVE NO CLEAR-CUT, DEPENDABLE POLICY.

And yet who can deny that we are without any accepted clear-cut, dependable national policy which supports and finances this immense project with competent consideration of both public and private forests and their influence on permanent industrial development? The Forest Service can neither announce nor execute such a policy so long as there is every extreme of variance in the views not only of the States, whose attitude toward their own forest and forest industries has a profound influence, but also in Congress, where any executive policy to be dependable must find sanction and support. Every congressional session sees the whole subject debated from a dozen viewpoints, chiefly political, with a marked lack of statesmanlike treatment based on any real knowledge of forest economics. Ignorance or a desire for political effect has even urged immediate sacrificial cutting to break a mythical "Lumber Trust," when it should be self-evident that private competition is now at its keenest and that the Government supply should be husbanded against the time when it may have some real effect on prices to the consumer.

Now, all this is by no means chiefly the fault of Senators or Congressmen. There is nothing in it for them, except so far as it can be made to strike a responsive chord in their constituents. With the public half as well informed on the production of the lumber it needs as it is on the getting of its parcels by mail or the price of sugar, there would be an expression on an American forest policy that would leave no statesman uncertain. We can not blame him if there is no such expression, nor can we blame his constituents for not seeing that he gets it. It is because they have not been told the facts in convincing business language.

Come now to our States. Many have done nothing. Few have comprehensive, farseeing policies covering their own opportunity on State-owned lands and adequate encouragement of good private management through efficient fire protection and just taxation. It is not enough for the reformer to present good laws and recognize bad ones. Why is there little trouble in passing laws for protection and advance of agriculture, horticulture, and dairying? Not because these industries are more useful and deserving, but because people understand their governing conditions and see the point of such laws readily. The chief reason they do not so understand forest conditions is that the reformer himself makes forestry a creed and not a business.

MUST BE ALLIED WITH LUMBERING.

In my opinion forestry will never succeed in the United States until it is so closely allied with lumbering that neither forester, lumberman, nor public makes any distinction. This is the case in Europe and everywhere in America where there has been successful progress. So long as the lumberman suspects forestry of being antagonistic, he will not help. So long as he does not help, the forester can not talk intelligently to the public. After all, the private owner controls most of our forest area. His use of it, our use of it, and the effect of our relations upon our joint use of it largely determine our forest destinies.

Were foresters in proper touch with the business end of producing forest products, they would have the support of all lumbermen and jointly they would have an irresistible argument. Were forest economics understood and forest industry given its proper rating compared with other industries, suspicious lumberman and suspicious public would alike see a common object and make mutual cause to further it. A State with a hundred times more revenue to be expected from lumbering than from woolgrowing would not appropriate $500 for forest protection and $20,000 for coyote scalps. A community that applauds its chamber of commerce for getting a shoe factory and gives it a free building site would not carelessly burn up a forest capable of employing a thousand times as many men and then tax the owner so he can not afford to hold and protect the land for a new crop. A State that is glad to see its farmers get a good price for wheat, even if it does use some flour, would not rejoice when its sawmills are forced to accept a low price for lumber. A lumberman who prefers to let his trees stand until Americans need them rather than cut them at a loss for foreign export would not be accused of conspiring to bleed the consumer any more than would a farmer who decides not to raise potatoes when they do not pay for raising. A country that applauds fruit growers for systematizing to assure reliable grades and intelligent marketing and sends publicly paid experts to help improve their orchards and exempts them specifically from the Sherman law would not condemn and seek to prosecute forest growers for attempting similar cooperative improvement of a business still more necessary to the community.

In short, the public would prefer to see all forest industry, public and private, on a sound business footing calculated to preserve it and its benefits to the community and would expect to pay the cost of producing lumber from the tree to the yard plus the same fair profit that the public itself requires from its individual enterprises. And if this is true, the great need to-day is for teaching the principles of the business from start to finish. Every process, its cost, and its relation to other processes and to the final price of the product should be common knowledge.

LUMBERMEN ARE HAVING HARD STRUGGLE.

Nothing can be more inconsistent, so long as most of our forests are privately owned—and even the public forests must be manufactured for us privately—than to antagonize the lumberman, whose help we must have, by continuing such ignorance of his problems that we even treat him as an enemy. On the whole, forest industry probably surpasses any other in smallness of profit. Unusual opportunity has built some large fortunes, but for every one of these are many cases where the public has profited by failure. Nor is stumpage speculation any exception. Times are changed. Taxes, protection, and interest are now compounding more rapidly than prices advance. The tendency is toward competitive overproduction rather than toward monopolistic holding back of material. Few, if any, things are sold at so much less than their value as the trees of which lumber is made.

Whatever may have been in the past, when new supplies were easily available, the lumber producer now sees his industry dependent on forest preservation, and his interest in this is as keen as ours. If he does not practice forestry it is, as Forester Graves says, for one or more of three reasons: First, the risk of fire; second, burdensome taxation; third, low price of lumber. This situation will not be relieved by threats of compulsion, but only by learning what it costs to furnish forest crops and establishing a businesslike policy accordingly.

When forest economics are as well understood as the economics of fruit or wheat growing the suspicion which always confronts mystery will no longer manifest itself in prejudice which works to the consumer's disadvantage. The private as well as public lumber producer, as a class, because he is honest and useful as a class, will be accorded the same respect and helpful sympathy as is accorded the farmer or engineer who develops the possibilities of utilizing our country and supplying its people. And he will be quick to respond.

So we always get back to education—the line in which forestry effort is the weakest. The ingenuity of theatrical, railroad, political, and advertising agencies is proverbial. Activities of this kind are now regarded as business necessity. They are needed and legitimate nowhere more than in forest propaganda, which has nothing to conceal but everything to teach. Education is a matter of publicity, and publicity is a trade. It can not be practiced intuitively. Foresters and lumbermen must learn this trade.

APPENDIX B.

WILL GOVERNMENT HELP BUILD QUEETS ROAD?

HOQUIAM, WASH., July 26, 1913.

A few days ago there came into Hoquiam a bronzed, privation-aged man, who showed plainly he had spent many years in the woods. When one studied the rugged features of the man, it was apparent he had seen hardship and had faced danger, and one who had been a close student of human nature and the effect of varying emotions might have said "Here is a man who has gone hungry, probably that some one else might eat."

This man is Edward Ashenbreuer, one of the oldest residents of the Queets River Valley, that wonderfully rich tract of land 50 miles north and west of Hoquiam where the settlers who went there a quarter century ago are still forced to pack their supplies in to their homes on their backs or tote them up the river in Indian canoes. In fact, they are real pioneers, and though they have spent more than two decades in the country, some of them, they are still no better supplied with transportation than they were when they first went in. Their pioneering days, in place of being over in a comparative few years, have dragged out to a lifetime.

OUR LAST GREAT UNEXPLORED SECTION.

The Olympic Peninsula is without doubt the least known tract of land within the United States proper. In fact it is about the only section of the country which has not been thoroughly explored. Remarkable as it may seem, it is a fact that there are large areas of the Olympic Peninsula which have never seen white man so far as known. Within its borders lies one of the largest and richest, in timber wealth, national forest reserves of the United States. And again, inside that is the Olympic monument, a reservation arbitrarily established by former President Theodore Roosevelt. One of the rich Indian reservations of the country, the Quinault Reservation, is also within its borders, lying in the northern part of Chehalis County and extending back from the Pacific Ocean a distance of about 20 miles.

It is this very reservation which has a large part in shutting the Queets Valley ranchers off from the help of civilization and which has kept them pioneers for more than 20 years.

The Queets and Clearwater River Valleys, the latter stream being a tributary of the former the confluence being about 5 miles back from the ocean, together have about 18,000 acres of bottom land. This land is as rich, it is generally conceded, as there is in southwest Washington. The valleys are wide, comparatively easily cleared, and the surroundings are beautiful. A little land was open for homestead entry. It was taken up by men who sought to make homes for themselves. In all about 150 ranchers have settled at various times in the Queets and Clearwater Valleys. In the two at present there are close to 50 ranchers, several of whom have hung on ever since they began the struggle many years ago. Others of the original number have been driven out of the country where they hoped to live for the rest of their days, where they hoped to carve out nice comfortable homes for themselves, by the fact they could not make a living—they could not market the produce they raised—and so faced starvation, or, at least, very severe hardships, such as no man is willing to see his family suffer.

THE QUINIAULT INDIAN RESERVATION.

The Quinault Reservation is a triangular-shaped tract of land, with a frontage of nearly 30 miles on the ocean. The most of the reservation lies in Chehalis County, but it extends a short distance into Jefferson County, stopping at the Queets. The Queets and Clearwater are in Jefferson County. There are no roads to the north. The west end of the county is effectually cut off from the east end, where Port Townsend, the county seat, is located and where most of the development and settlement has taken place. Two things have combined to thus cut the county in two—the Olympic Mountains and the Olympic National Forest. The ranchers in the west end of the county to reach their county seat must come out by way of Hoquiam and Grays Harbor, take the train in this city, and make a long detour by way of Seattle, where they transfer to steamer, and finally, after traveling more than 200 miles and using almost every kind of mode of conveyance on a trip that has taken three days, they arrive at their destination.

GOVERNMENT IS ONLY POWER THAT CAN BUILD THIS ROAD.

All this comes down to the fact that these people need a road, but they can't get it. Jefferson County can not build a road that will take these hardy pioneers anywhere. Neither is it able to furnish sufficient money to go far toward road building. Chehalis County can do nothing for the ranchers, because the road for its entire distance between Taholah, the Indian village on the seashore at the mouth of the Quinault River, would be through the Indian reservation. The Government is the only power that can build this piece of road; about 15 miles is needed.

The mail is carried once a week each way, and travelers get back and forth to the Queets by way of a trail along the beach and through the timber. Part of the way this trail is as good as a trail through a Washington forest can be, but at certain places it is never good, and in the winter is impassable for a pack horse until the animal is relieved of its pack. At one place in the road, over a hogback, the mail carrier during the winter is forced to unpack his horses, carry the packs over the trail himself to the other side of the bad place, several hundred yards, then lead his horses over. Even this is not easy, for even a horse much used to the trail will be down several times before it is gotten past this spot.

WHAT IT COSTS FOR TRANSPORTATION.

Another way that provisions are gotten to the Queets Valley is by boat. This is the easiest way, but it is not a light task, and the cost of handling freight is remarkable. It costs the Queets ranchers $15 per ton to have supplies delivered at the mouth of the river from Hoquiam by gasoline launch. From that point they are taken up the river in Indian canoes. The cost for this part of the journey varies from 50 cents to $1 per hundred pounds, depending upon the distance the freight is carried up the river. So it is seen that the cost of delivering freight is probably more than the goods cost in the city.

Not only does this condition exist, but last winter saw something like real privation for a number of the families. Most of the families lay in supplies which they consider will last them through the winter months and then also depend on the boat, a gasoline launch which makes irregular trips between Hoquiam and the Queets. Last winter Mr. Ashenbreuer and others brought to their ranches their winter's supplies as usual, but did not have an opportunity to get the amount of flour they expected to need before the rains of the fall set in. But there was the store they could depend upon. It was supplied by the boat. Eventually, however, the flour supply began to run low. At about the same time the storms became severe, and no small boat dare attempt to make the trip to Hoquiam and return. For more than a month the boat could not venture out. For several weeks Mr. and Mrs. Ashenbreuer lived without bread in order that their babies might have what little there was. Other supplies of the staple kind were none too plentiful. The people were not near starvation, but the privations were severe.

WILL THE GOVERNMENT HELP?

Efforts are now under way to have built by the Indian Department a piece of road to strike the Queets River 15 miles from Taholah at Fisher Rapids. There is now a road to Taholah. At Fisher Rapids the settlers can use an old trail they have built. The piece of road will let them in and out. It will let them live. But Jefferson County can't build it; it is not in that county. Chehalis County can't build it, for it is in the Indian reservation. Will the Government build it? The settlers hope so.

APPENDIX D.

CHAPTER 102.

An act (S. 332) relating to lands granted to the State for common schools and for educational, penal, reformatory, charitable, capitol building, and other purposes; providing for the completion of such grants and the relinquishment of certain granted lands; and making an appropriation.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Washington:

SECTION 1. For the purpose of obtaining from the United States indemnity or lieu lands for such lands granted to the State for common schools, educational, penal, reformatory, charitable, capitol building, or other purposes, as have been or may be lost to the State, or the title to or use or possession of which is claimed by the United States or by others claiming it through or under the United States, by reason of any of the causes entitling the State to select other lands in lieu thereof, the inclusion of the same in any reservation by or under authority of the United States, or any other appropriation or disposition of the same by the United States, whether such lands are now surveyed or unsurveyed, the commissioner of public lands, with the advice and approval of the board of State land commissioners and the attorney general, is authorized and empowered to enter into an agreement or agreements on behalf of the State with the proper officer or officers of the United States for the relinquishment of any such lands and the selection in lieu thereof, under the provisions of this act, of lands of the United States of equal area and value.

SEC. 2. Upon the making of any such agreement the board of State land commissioners shall be empowered, and it shall be their duty, to cause such examination and appraisal to be made as will determine the area and value, as nearly as may be, of the lands lost to the State or the title to, use, or possession of which is claimed by the United States by reason of the causes mentioned in section 1 of this act, and proposed to be relinquished to the United States, and shall cause an examination and appraisal to be made of any lands which may be designated by the officers of the United States as subject to selection by the State in lieu of the lands aforesaid, to the end that the State shall obtain lands in lieu thereof of equal area and value.

SEC. 3. Whenever the title to any lands selected under the provisions of this act shall become vested in the State of Washington by the acceptance and approval of the lists of lands so selected or other proper action of the United States, the governor, on behalf of the State of Washington, shall execute and deliver to the United States a deed of conveyance of the lands of the State relinquished under the provisions of this act, which deed shall convey to and vest in the United States all the right, title, and interest of the State of Washington therein.

SEC. 4. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from the general fund, to be disbursed upon vouchers approved by the commissioner of public lands.

Passed the senate February 26, 1913.

Passed the house March 7, 1913.

Approved by the governor March 18, 1913.

APPENDIX E.

[From the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.]

TRYING TO GET STATE LANDS.

The State land commissioner and the attorney general have gone to Washington City for the purpose of trying to effect some arrangement with the Forestry Service and the Department of the Interior through which, as the State is denied the right to take the lands which Congress granted it for school purposes, it may be at least given the privilege of exchanging its school lands for others of equal value.

The case is simple. Congress made this State a direct grant of two sections out of every township of the public lands for school purposes. The grant was specifically of sections 16 and 36. Before the lands were surveyed, however, great forest reserves were created by Executive order, which include within their limits 730,000 acres of the State's school lands. Since the creation of these reservations the State has been denied any right to its granted lands. The Forest Service has, indeed, sold to private individuals, in instances, the timber growing on school lands within the limits of the reservations.

Failing to secure the lands which Congress granted it, owing to the refusal of the executive branch of the Government to recognize the validity of those grants as conveying full title, the alternative has been suggested for the State to abandon its claim and take an equal area of lands in compact form on the edges of the forest reserves. This arrangement was, in fact, made between the State of Idaho and the Forestry Service. It is a similar arrangement which the authorities of this State hope to be able to effect. If not the specific lands which Congress granted, the State will yet be able, should the arrangement go through, to recover property of the value of not less than $7,000,000 belonging to the State schools, of which the Forest Service has successfully deprived it.

The legislature appropriated $30,000 to be used to get the Government to give us our State lands now lost in the forest reserves.

APPENDIX F.

STATEMENT IN EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

By section 10 of the act admitting the States of North and South Dakota, Montana, and Washington into the Union each of those States was granted sections 16 and 36 in every township for common-school purposes (25 Stat., ch. 180). Under that act and under the act of 1891 (56 Stat., 796) the States were authorized to select indemnity lands where those sections were otherwise appropriated or disposed of by the United States.

There is a deficiency of some 730,000 acres in the school-land grant to the State of Washington, due to the following causes:

1. Sections incomplete in area because of natural causes, such as water.
2. Sections mineral in character.
3. Sections included within the boundaries of Indian, military, and other governmental reservations.
4. Sections settled upon prior to survey.
5. Sections within the boundaries of the national forests.
6. Indemnity lands selected by the State and afterwards included within the boundaries of reservations.

The approximate areas of the larger losses are shown by the following table:

Cause of loss.	Area lost.	Areas offered as base for selections made elsewhere, and approved.	Area available as base.
Settlement.....	61,122.39	37,930.34	23,192.05
Natural causes.....	79,641.99	61,912.95	17,729.04
National forests.....	666,040.00	104,747.05	561,292.95
Indian reservations.....	159,721.26	31,328.12	128,393.14
Total.....	966,525.64	235,918.46	730,607.18

The State is unable to select lands in lieu of the lands lost as aforesaid, because there are now no lands in the State outside of the boundaries of the forest reserves that are worth $10 an acre, which is the minimum price for which the lands may be sold under the provisions of the enabling act and the State constitution.

The State of Washington desires to relinquish to the United States or to its grantee the lands unavailable to it by reason of the causes stated and to select in lieu thereof lands to be eliminated from the forest reserves in a block or blocks on the margins of such reserves, the lands selected to be as nearly as may be of equal area and value to the lands lost.

Chapter 102 of the Laws of Washington for 1913 empowers the commissioner of public lands of the State to enter into an agreement with the proper authorities of the Federal Government to the end that an exchange of lands may be effected and appropriate the sum of $30,000 for the purpose of carrying out the agreement.

APPENDIX G.

REPORT AND EXPLANATION OF THE 1901 WITHDRAWALS IN THE OLYMPIC RESERVE.

It is true that lands eliminated from the Olympic National Forest are now in the hands of private persons and corporations, some of these logging corporations. Being so, they are of some use to society. Had they remained in the national forests, according to the showing that has been made by the Forest Service, they would have stagnated; their timber would have rotted. As it is, they are paying part of the tax burdens of the State, are contributing to the settlement and upbuilding of the Commonwealth, and are performing that duty which nature intended them to perform.

Stress is laid on the fact that people living in the State wanted these lands eliminated. The implication is that their desire in this respect was inherently vicious. It is insinuated that there was something wrong in it all.

There was some deceit practiced, it is true, but it was practiced by those forces in control of the Federal Government. Let me tell you about it.

By reason of the enormous Federal reservations created in the State of Washington—they total about 30 per cent of the total area—the State never has been able to fill its grants made to it by Congress in the enabling act by which it became a State. These grants were for sections 16 and 36 in each township and for certain other lands. Before the gift was completed came the reservations, which prevented the State getting all that it had been promised.

When there was talk of lands being eliminated from the Olympia Forest the State thought it saw an opportunity to get some land to satisfy the debt owed it. The State authorities got in behind the movement to secure the elimination.

But when the elimination was secured the State found that it had been deceived. The Department of the Interior ruled that the State must stand back and not attempt to file selection lists on any of these lands until settlers, be they homesteaders or timberland entrymen, had had 30 days to initiate their efforts to secure title. The rule declared that "filings" could be received not before a certain date, but that "entry" might be initiated 30 days prior thereto. The State can not "enter"; it can only "file." The excuse was that this order was in the interest of the legitimate settler. How it worked out is shown in the list of present-day owners. Before the 30 days' handicap on the State had expired there was nothing left for the State to file on.

So, if any deceit was practiced in this matter of the elimination, it was practiced by those in charge of the Federal Government's operations, and the State, rather than the Nation, was the victim.

I may state further that the State never yet has been able to secure the lands promised it in the enabling act of 1889. It is some 800,000 or 900,000 acres short.

The promise of Congress that it should have these grants has been annulled by Executive orders creating reservations.

APPENDIX H.

[From Daily Consular and Trade Reports, July 11, 1913.]

PHILIPPINE COAL CONTRACT.

The Japanese firm, Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, has been awarded the contract for 80,000 tons of coal, aggregating in value over half a million dollars, to be used by the Army of the Philippines during the fiscal year beginning July 1. The Mitsui bid was $6.20 per ton for delivery ex-ship to Manila Bay, of approximately 20,000 tons of Milke washed nut coal, or Tagawa lump coal, and $5.85 per ton for 60,000 tons Mineji best screened lump coal.

For delivering and piling on dock the company will be paid 20 to 88 cents gold per ton in advance of the above figures, the amount differing according to the kind of coal concerned, discharging facilities at various ports, and similar conditions. The company agrees to discharge its vessels at Manila of 500 tons per weather working day, excepting Sundays and holidays. Demurrage will be charged against the Government at the rate of 12 cents gold per day and per the net registered tonnage of the vessel concerned.

For delivery to Iloilo and Cebu the price for Tagawa best screened lump coal will be $6.90, while to the ports at which Pettit Barracks, Augur Barracks, Warwick Barracks, Camp Connell, Ludlow Barracks, Camp Overton, and Camp Downes are situated the price will be $7.60 per ton, ex-ship and duty paid. This is said by Manila journals to be the largest contract for coal ever awarded by the Army in the Philippines, being 20,000 tons in excess of the amount ordered for any previous fiscal year.

Two other firms made bids, one being $7.70 per ton for Australian coal and another $6.45 per ton for Chinese coal.

SUGGESTED LAND-LAW CHANGES.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with the speech on "Conservation at Close Range," which I have delivered this afternoon on the floor, I desire to take advantage of the permission granted to me June 3, page 2130 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to extend my remarks on the subject of the forest reserves by placing in the RECORD, adjoining my address of to-day some statements which will exemplify and verify the statements I have put forth.

I desire first to make some modest suggestions as to changes which many westerners think necessary in the land laws. In the preparation of these suggestions I have been aided by some of the brightest legal minds in western Washington. Particularly do I refer to Hon. Maurice D. Leeb, of Seattle, and to Hon. Loren H. Brewer, of Hoquiam, and I am proud to give credit to them and to thank them.

LET FOREST SERVICE BE A SCIENTIFIC BUREAU.

The Forest Service, we believe, should be relieved from the administration of the national forests. The Forest Service should be a purely scientific bureau, such as the Bureau of Plant Industry and other bureaus in the Department of Agriculture. That department is engaged in scientific work, and the work of the Forest Service can best be done along scientific lines, not limited to publicly owned forests, as it practically is at present. The other departments are administrative. The General Land Office is an administrative bureau, and should have full charge of the administration of public lands. It will never be satisfactory to divide that administration with the Forest Service, as at present. We now have one bureau to sell lands and another to sell the timber off the more valuable portion of those lands, lease grazing, water-power, and other privileges, and so forth. I need not comment upon the confusion resulting constantly from this divided authority and responsibility. It should all be concentrated in the General Land Office.

Mr. Speaker, I have presented a bill, H. R. 6923, to transfer the Bureau of Forestry from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior. I hope the Committee on Public Lands will give this service consideration. The suggestions given above are an improvement on the plan offered in the bill. At any rate, something should be done, not only to give the Chief Forester a chance but to reduce the doubled labor of the two departments involved.

MORE LOCAL LAND OFFICE POWER.

The General Land Office would, in my opinion, be made a more efficient administrative bureau if more power and authority were vested in the local officials in each land district. The divided responsibility of the register and receiver should be vested in the register, as the administrative officer and judge of land contests. The office of receiver should be abolished and his duties transferred to a clerk or cashier. The register should sit as a trial judge in all land contests, including contests upon charges filed in behalf of the Government. His decision should have the same effect, in contests only, as that of the trial judge in our courts. I mean by that he should render final judgment upon such contests, subject to review upon appeal to the department, and the practice in this respect could be similar to that upon appeals from trial to appellate courts. I do not mean that the register should pass upon all the details as to whether patent should issue, but he should sit as the judicial officer, hearing the evidence from witnesses who appear before him, and should enter judgment as to the merits of all contests, whether instituted by other claimants or on behalf of the Government. The clerical details prior to issuance of a patent can well be conducted as at present.

This plan would invest more authority in the register. The office would be made more important and should command a larger salary. This would not increase the expense, as the present salary of the receiver would be saved. Of course it would be necessary to pay a larger salary to the clerk or cashier than is at present paid to such clerks, but the amount at present paid receivers could be divided between them. Then, too, a reduction could be made in the number of land offices by consolidation or a better distribution of territory. For instance, the seven land offices in my State of Washington could be merged into five, and even into four, without injury to the service.

A POSSIBLE REMEDY.

I appreciate the opposition which this suggestion will encounter. Indeed, I fear it will produce such opposition as to indefinitely delay its adoption. This will be especially so as to the suggestion that the Forest Service be relieved from the administration of the national forests. I have given much thought to the whole subject and have satisfied myself that the solution most likely of early adoption is a law permitting a trial in the Federal courts of all contests instituted by the Government upon entries of lands within any Government reservation. This system has worked well for 40 years in the determination of contests arising over adverse claims under the mineral laws. The plan suggested is simply to permit claimants to demand a trial in the Federal courts of any contest filed by any bureau over lands within any Government reservation. The officials of the Government have some interest in retaining such lands within such reservation, and hence they should be disqualified from rendering judicial decision thereon.

There is a very general demand throughout the public-land States and Alaska for reform in the present procedure, which compels officials of the General Land Office to serve in the triple capacity of detective, prosecutor, and judge. Then, too, there is at present no method of obtaining a judicial review of the department decisions, even upon questions of law. It is sometimes done indirectly in contests between private claimants, and actions in our courts are quite common whereby patentees are sought to be declared as trustees. The courts have frequently decreed land grants to be in trust or, in effect, that the patent was issued to the wrong party, by declaring the patented ground to be the property of another. No such action is possible, however, where Government contests have been upheld, and hence there is a lack of uniformity in the decisions.

The suggestion that an appeal be allowed from the decision of the Secretary of the Interior to the courts would not afford the necessary relief. It would be cumbersome, expensive, and ineffectual. It would increase the delay; it would not be practicable; and it could not very well provide for more than a review of departmental decisions upon questions of law. Even such questions are frequently so interwoven with questions of fact that only a trial de novo in the appellate court could afford relief, and this presents difficulties in the matter of obtaining testimony. On the other hand, if such contests were tried in the Federal courts, the Government can be represented by the district attorney, who, in turn, will receive the same assistance from the Field Service, Forest Service, and other Government agencies as is now given the district attorney by the Post Office inspectors in prosecutions for the violation of the postal laws.

It would not increase the expense to claimants, but, on the other hand, would materially reduce the same, saving much in the cost of transcripts of testimony and the employment of counsel in Washington. It would facilitate final action and greatly reduce the expenses of the General Land Office, and, above all, it would afford the claimants a fair trial in court and give them the resulting satisfaction which will be impossible from a distant tribunal, no matter how impartial and efficient.

The suggestion that a court trial be allowed only when the lands involved are within a Government reservation would afford such relief to comparatively few homesteaders. Hence, it might be well to include all contests filed by the Government against homestead claimants. The law should not require all such contests to be referred to the courts, but simply give the claimant permission to transfer the trial of such contests to the courts.

Comparatively few cases would be taken to the courts, but sufficient to establish a more uniform policy, and, above all, to afford claimants an avenue of relief which will leave them without substantial grounds of complaint against the present system.

The result would be fewer contests and quite as general satisfaction with the administration of the public lands as our people now have with the decisions of our courts.

THE SEATTLE RIOTS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is recognized.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, with some of the things which my colleague has just said I heartily agree, and particularly one proposition, namely, the construction of a railroad in Alaska by the Government, to be maintained by the Government, and operated by the Government. I believe that ought to be an accomplished fact in this next session of Congress.

I had handed to me a day or two ago a clipping from the Seattle Times in reference to some incidents that occurred out there, and the editor of that paper wound up his article by saying that "BRYAN had ho'lered 'nuff in his fight with the Times." How he got that idea I do not know. But I do know that there is no truth in the statement.

Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered by some of the gentlemen present that a few weeks ago my colleague, Mr. JOHNSON, objected to my speaking to this House in answer to my colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY, concerning the Seattle riots conducted by enlisted men on the 18th of last July. It will also be remembered that except for Mr. JOHNSON's objection I was accorded the unanimous consent of this body to proceed with my discussion, although what I had to say did not refer to the then pending bill and was, of course, out of order. I left for my home State just after being refused unanimous consent.

I returned a few days ago, and yesterday, when my colleague, Mr. JOHNSON, asked unanimous consent to speak, I thought it a good time to reserve my right to object to his proceeding out of order unless he would grant like consent to me, so I now find myself enjoying the unanimous-consent courtesy of this body which my friend and colleague enjoyed a few minutes ago but which he denied me a few weeks ago.

There lives at Seattle a former resident of Minneapolis, Alden J. Blethen, who owns a big newspaper, which has a large daily and Sunday circulation. The people of Seattle had been outraged by the Seattle riots of July 18, and there was widespread contempt for this man Blethen and his newspaper for encouraging and staging the riots.

Blethen had grossly misrepresented in the Times a speech of Secretary Daniels made at the Rainier Club in Seattle, and his newspaper, the Times, had made the enlisted men think their acts were approved both by the public and by the Navy officers. There was nothing in Secretary Daniels's speech to warrant this.

The mayor of Seattle, after laying the blame for inciting the riots to the editor of the Times, made his unsuccessful attempt to suppress the Times and prevent its publishing any further riot-inciting articles. While the mayor was unsuccessful in his effort to suppress the newspaper, still the people were enraged against the Times. Public feeling ran high.

The mayor published a statement denouncing Blethen and the Times. In order to convince all that Blethen was of an indescribably low type and that his raving and frothing about patriotism and the flag was the cheapest and most intolerable form of advertising, the mayor published over his signature the following, which I had made part of my speech delivered in this House on July 29:

Alden J. Blethen was bitter in his denunciation of Dr. Matthews, Prosecuting Attorney Murphy, and others connected with the grand jury which had indicted him. With singular boldness he forced upon my attention two disgraceful photographs bearing the heads of the two gentlemen above named upon human figures in indescribably loathsome relations. He—Alden J. Blethen—explained in detail how and why he had conceived the idea of these vile photographs, secured foundation pictures by searching out some indecencies from a Paris collection, engaged one of our best Seattle artists to combine them with perfect photographic skill with the heads and faces of Dr. Matthews and of Prosecuting Attorney Murphy. The name of the photographer and the price he paid him for the making of these faked exhibitions of degeneracy was part of the Blethen recital. The memory of that disgusting and criminal conception has been a constant reminder of public danger from a source capable of conjuring and perpetrating such an infamy.

In commenting on this incident, I had said in my speech:

I call special attention to the fact that a congressional committee from this House went to Seattle and investigated Judge Hanford. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCoy] were members of that committee. If any Member of this House desires to verify the diabolical act of Editor Blethen, of the Times, referred to by the mayor in his statement published as part of these remarks, as an incident to show the character of the man, let him go to Congressman GRAHAM, who has in his possession a description of the low, vulgar pictures. Dr. Matthews was a man of piety, courage, and civic faithfulness, who was at the time urging a grand jury which later caused Blethen-supported dives to be put out of business and a Blethen chum, Chief of Police Wapenstein, to be put in the State penitentiary, where he is now serving his term. The dirty, filthy pictures manufactured by this "patriot" exhibits an awful crime against nature. I can not here give even a suggestion of the filthy details.

Well, my colleagues, as strange as it may seem to you when considering a man who would do such an act as this—and he has been forced to admit the truth of the statement—Alden J. Blethen got mad at me for merely referring to and making a permanent record of his own admitted act. He had caused Judge Humphries to expunge from the record of the King County grand jury a portion of a report in which he was referred to in connection with these red-light investigations. But there was no expunging the record here, and he got mad.

When I got to Billings, Mont., on my way home, I bought a copy of the Sunday Times, and I found in that paper the bitterest, most vitriolic, and libelous statement ever published about myself.

I had been invited to deliver a speech at the King County fair at Seattle and had made all arrangements to be in Seattle for that appointment. Of course I did not know what Blethen had published till I got his paper, but as soon as I read his editorial I determined to go after him at my first opportunity.

When I arrived in Seattle on Saturday morning I was informed by the fair officials that Blethen or some one on his behalf had filed a protest against my speaking unless I would agree not to say anything personal or political.

The King County fair officials were right in their request, but I was determined to roast Blethen in my first speech. I knew another opportunity would be afforded, so I declined to amend my remarks, and it was announced in the afternoon papers that I would deliver the speech at the Dreamland Rink the following Monday night. This was a building of about 5,000 seating capacity.

In his editorial, referred to a moment ago, Blethen had demonstrated the fact that he is as expert at faking in word painting as he is in portraiture. His language was full of the vilest epithets. He declared I had delivered my speech in Congress behind my constitutional privilege, which protected me from attack. He told how I would have been punished by indignant citizens if I had delivered that speech in Seattle. I would have contempt for any Member of Congress who would thus take advantage of his protection in debate on this floor, and, of course, I was anxious to get into the open, where I could throw off all such protection.

In the issue of the Times of the day before the Dreamland Rink meeting he published the following:

This fellow has declared in the Halls of Congress that the editor of the Times is immoral, dishonest, and a profligate.

Then he challenged me to offer any evidence that would be accepted in court against him, and said:

This fellow BRYAN is hereby challenged to produce any legal proof that will amount to the shadow of the violation of the criminal laws during the editor's entire residence in this city covering a period of 17 years, and if he can produce a single item of proof that in any way indicates that the editor of the Times ever violated any law, either of God or man, the Times will pay $1,000 in gold for the proof.

Next morning I addressed to him and made public the following letter:

AIDEN J. BLETHEN, Seattle, Wash.

DEAR SIR: In the last issue of the Sunday Times, under the heading "J. W. BRYAN—An assassin of character," you said that I declared in Congress that the editor of the Times is immoral, dishonest, and a profligate.

You further denounced me in the most sweeping terms. You then addressed to me a direct challenge.

I accept your challenge. I will speak at the Dreamland Rink to-night. You are invited to be present. I am willing to divide equally with you a portion of my time before the audience to-night and to agree not to refer to you after that time has expired. After the audience has heard your statements and my statements we will submit the issue to a vote of those present. This decision I am willing to consider final.

You said in your editorial that you have lived in Seattle for 17 years, and that during that time you have not violated any law, either of God or man.

You have the Seattle Times at your disposal and will be able to thoroughly advertise your presence.

If your statement on behalf of yourself is true and what you say I said about you is untrue, you surely will not hesitate to submit your cause to a majority vote of a large assembly of the citizens of the city of Seattle with whom you have lived so long. I will further give you the privilege of setting forth in your remarks on this occasion any facts that warrant your attack upon me as a citizen, a Representative, and a man.

Yours, very truly,

J. W. BRYAN.

The old fellow has average ability as a speaker. He is a hard bitter and is ordinarily well able to take care of himself. But he did not show up.

The meeting was a splendid success. The immense auditorium was crowded with people assembled to give vent to their contempt of Blethen and the Times. I will refer to the three daily newspapers published in Seattle for the report of the meeting.

The Seattle Sun said in part:

A crowd of 5,000 persons, forming the largest mass meeting ever held in Seattle, jammed into Dreamland last evening, heard a scathing attack by Congressman J. W. BRYAN on Alden J. Blethen, the Times, and Blethenism, then rising showed itself openly and squarely an enemy of those forces.

Time and again BRYAN was interrupted in his remarks by cheers and applause; time and again when he started to outline portions of manuscript he had made a part of his speech the crowd called, "read it all"; time and again his auditors shouted their approval as he scored Blethen as a flag-flapper and a mock patriot, and as he charged that Blethen staged the Potlatch riots for the "cheapest of advertising purposes."

At the close of his address resolutions unanimously were adopted which called on the citizens of Seattle to discontinue all support of the Times and Blethen.

They declared the Times, "with its terrorist tactics and criminal methods, is a menace to Seattle, and is an unrelenting creator of civic discord and debauchery," and that "its existence is made possible by the support of its enemies, who, curious to know the latest victim of its vicious attacks and whether or not the limit of audacity had been reached, continue, unwillingly and apologetically, to buy and read the same."

Therefore, the resolution went, "all fair-dealing and liberty-loving citizens should unite to withdraw their support from the Times and the advertisers who make its existence possible."

The Seattle Star said in part:

Dreamland pavilion was crowded to capacity Monday night with an audience of over 5,000 to hear Congressman J. W. BRYAN attack Blethenism.

BRYAN was given a great ovation when he appeared upon the platform. Blethen failed to show up in acceptance of BRYAN's challenge.

BRYAN's speech dealt chiefly with references to his remarks in Congress in which he charged Blethen with staging the Potlatch riots for cheap advertising, the mayor's open letter accusing Blethen with faking immoral photographs of Dr. M. A. Matthews, Blethen's record in Minneapolis, Blethen's "My dear Wap" letter to the ex-chief of police, now in the penitentiary, in which Blethen portrayed a keen interest in the welfare of the notorious Arcade dance hall, and Blethen's continued defense of the wide-open vice régime.

I give below the entire report of the Post-Intelligencer, Seattle's only morning paper, a conservative publication:

BRYAN DECLARES BLETHEN STAGED POTLATCH RIOTS—MASS MEETING OF 4,500 PERSONS PASSES RESOLUTIONS TO WITHDRAW SUPPORT FROM THE TIMES—APPLAUDS SPEECH ATTACKING EDITOR.

Characterizing Alden J. Blethen as an evil and sinister influence, the creator of civic discords, and a menace to the reputations of upright and honest citizens, Congressman J. W. BRYAN addressed an audience of 4,500 persons at Dreamland pavilion last night. The speech was the one which Congressman BRYAN announced in the House of Representatives he would deliver at the King County fair, and which was designed to reply to an attack made upon him by the Seattle Times a little more than a week ago.

The audience indicated its approval of Congressman BRYAN's denunciation of the editor, and frequently encouraged him with cheers and handclapping. When Congressman BRYAN spoke of the faked photographs of Rev. M. A. Matthews, which were prepared upon the order of Col. Blethen and exhibited to Mayor Cotterill and to others, the audience gave expression to its feelings in a roar that shook the building.

ANTI-BLETHEN RESOLUTION ADOPTED.

At the close of the meeting Glenn E. Hoover, who presided, read a resolution calling upon the opponents of Col. Blethen to withdraw their support from his newspaper. The resolution was adopted with a roar of ayes.

Congressman BRYAN spoke under the auspices of the Free Speech Defense League, and a collection was taken in the crowd to defray the expenses of the hall. The pavilion was crowded and circus seats erected in the rear and the balconies seated those who could not find chairs on the dancing floor. A fringe of auditors along the four walls stood to hear the address.

Congressman BRYAN announced that he was speaking in answer to an attack printed in the Times following his speech regarding the Potlatch riots and in answer to a challenge of Congressman HUMPHREY to set forth the facts on which he based his statements made in the House.

SAYS HUMPHREY WAS AFRAID.

He said that Mr. HUMPHREY's speech was made because of pressure brought to bear on him. "HUMPHREY was afraid to go on record in defense of Blethen," Mr. BRYAN said, "and he was afraid to go home unless he did make some kind of a fake attempt at answering my remarks."

"One morning I picked up the morning paper in Washington and I read about anarchy in Seattle, about lawlessness on the public streets so gross and violent that the enlisted men of the United States Army and Navy were compelled, through self-respect for the flag, to take up the cudgel and loot and destroy valuable property. An article was published in the Seattle Times which had been sent out by wire calling the mayor of Seattle, among other things, a loathsome louse, a leader of anarchists."

DISCUSSES JOHNSON INTERVIEW.

"On the next morning an interview appeared from Congressman ALBERT JOHNSON, in one of the papers of the National Capital, in which he likewise censured the city of Seattle and its officers for permitting the red-flag demonstration. Among other things he stated that the American flag had been trampled in the mud in the streets of Seattle by the I. W. W.'s and anarchists. I knew this to be false and that the slanders against the city which had been circulated ought to be met and answered in as public a way as possible."

"After introducing the resolution calling for the facts in the case I delivered a speech on the floor of the House July 29, and inserted in the Record following the speech a statement that had been published by the mayor of Seattle and two or three newspaper articles."

BLAMES BLETHEN FOR RIOTS.

"I stated in this speech and I say now that the riots were not an outburst of patriotic sentiment, but they were staged and brought about by the Seattle Times for the cheapest kind of advertising purposes."

"I denounced Alden J. Blethen and the Times as an enemy to Seattle; and after detailing to Congress some of the features of the terrific struggles that the people of this city and State have had against special interests and the agencies of evil, I said that we had finally won in the city and had dethroned a great many of these interests, and the fight Blethen was now making was to restore these old conditions and cause a return to the wide-open town policies of a bygone day."

BRYAN'S SPEECH IN HOUSE.

Reading from his speech delivered in the House of Representatives, Congressman BRYAN recited the incident of the photographs in the statement of Mayor Cotterill over his own signature following the Potlatch riots, in which the mayor declared that Blethen showed him a loathsome picture of Dr. Matthews, made by a cunning composition of one photograph with another. In his speech Mr. BRYAN said:

"I call special attention to the fact that a congressional committee from this House went to Seattle and investigated Judge Hanford. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McCoy] were members of that committee. If any Member of this House desires to verify the diabolical act of Editor Blethen, of the Times, referred to by the mayor in his statement published as part of these remarks as an incident to show the character of the man—I refer to the photograph episode—let him go to Congressman GRAHAM, who has in his possession a description of the low, vulgar pictures of a naked human base to which this corrupt advertiser, at the expense of the flag and of order, this 'patriot' who foams and froths about socialism, caused the head of Dr. M. A. Matthews, the moderator of the Presbyterian Church in America, to be affixed so as to form a new composite portrait—Dr. Matthews, a man of piety, courage, and civic faithfulness, who was at the time urging a grand jury which later caused Blethen-supported dives to be put out of business and a Blethen chum, Chief of Police Wappenstein, to be put in the State penitentiary, where he is now serving his term. The dirty, filthy picture manufactured by this 'patriot' exhibits an awful crime against nature. I can not here give even a suggestion of the filthy details."

"Is it any wonder that a man who could invent such a scheme to discredit a zealous and faithful pastor of national renown, engaged in a splendid work of reform, would consider the mayor of Seattle 'loathsome'?"

BLETHEN AND THE FAIR SPEECH.

"When Col. Blethen attacked me in connection with my proposed speech at the fair, it was perfectly natural for any board of managers to believe that my speech would involve personalities, and so far as I am concerned I have no criticism for the King County fair refusing to go into that kind of business; but I would criticize local conditions that would permit a man of the Blethen type to be so enthroned in power and so fortified in the privileges which he asserts as to enable him to control a situation of this kind."

"To be sure, his objection to the fair would hurt the fair, but I believe that there will come in the city of Seattle a public sentiment that will change this kind of thing, and make such objection a benefit to the fair."

"The public have read the vicious attacks Blethen has made upon me within the last few days. To-day I addressed a challenge to him to reply to me at this meeting."

"I have received no answer from Blethen and do not expect to receive one. I therefore consider myself at liberty to present some of the reasons why Alden J. Blethen and the Seattle Times constitute a menace to every decent undertaking in the city of Seattle. The editor very properly interprets the photo episodes as involving immorality on his part."

ACCUSES BLETHEN OF BLASPHEMY.

"All I said in my congressional speech was that they had manufactured these awful pictures, which are so low and filthy and corrupt that no reputable speaker could possibly describe them before an audience of this kind. Yet with that superb effrontery that has characterized his operations in this city since he became publisher of his paper he blasphemously asserts that he has never violated a single law of God or man."

"Read, if you will, his Wappy letter. Remember that the officials of the city of Seattle here exposed an awful corrupt situation involving the lowest forms of vice, and that Wappenstein was later convicted and sent to the penitentiary because of his part in these proceedings."

"Why should a man be permitted by the public in a community such as the city of Seattle to own and operate a newspaper on behalf of such interests as this? Consider the Minneapolis activities of Blethen. Consider his association, with that of his paper, with all forms of vice in the city of Seattle, and then answer why he should not be condemned, why any organization should not be encouraged to protest against his continued power."

"In politics his paper has always favored the lowest measures that could be proposed. He hates reform; he despises civic decency."

At the close of the meeting by a tremendous acclamation and without opposition the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas the Seattle Daily and Sunday Times as now conducted with its terroristic tactics and criminal methods is a menace to the liberties and the reputations and even the lives of the residents of Seattle and is an unrelenting creator of civic discord and debauchery; and Whereas its existence is continued and made possible by the support of its enemies, who, curious to know the latest victim of its false and vicious attacks and whether or not the limit of audacity has been reached by the owners and editors of the Times, continue to unwillingly and apologetically buy and read the same: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the citizens of Seattle in mass meeting assembled, That all progressive, fair-dealing, and liberty-loving citizens unite to withdraw their support from the Times and the advertisers who make its existence possible.

It will be seen that I read from the speech I had delivered here and thus reiterated the statements that Blethen said I had made only because I was protected in what I had to say here on the floor.

Blethen did not make good his threat of violence, but reverting to his ability to fake with words as well as with pictures, he published a lot of false and libelous stuff, impugning my honesty and fitness to occupy a seat in this body. His accusation could have no influence with those who knew me, but I believe it a personal privilege, to which I am entitled as a matter of right, to denounce these publications and show to the Members of this House and to such of my constituents as may read this RECORD wherein his publications are false and thus divert the calumny which those who do not know me might attach to my name and reputation on account of the publications. I have been informed that copies of these publications have been circulated here, and I demand the right to show their utter falsity.

The gravest part of his charges were these: He said that the court records show me charged with the crime of perjury and various acts of professional delinquency, which he enumerated. It is true that the record did once show me charged with perjury, but I was fully vindicated by an acquittal that fastened infamy upon the corrupt political judge who ordered the prosecution.

It is also true that I was once charged with professional delinquency by this same corrupt judge and his friends of the bar in the little county where I was engaged in a political life and death struggle in the State of Washington.

The charges of professional delinquency were investigated and tried by a coordinate judge, and I was again fully vindicated by the court's finding.

The judge who ordered the prosecution has lost his place on the bench and left the State. His name is John B. Yakey. He now resides in Los Angeles, Cal.

The judge who vindicated me has been advanced since the trial by popular vote from superior judge of King County to supreme judge of the State of Washington. His name is John F. Main, and he has made a record for impartiality and integrity that ranks him as one of the foremost judges of the Northwest.

In the alleged perjury proceeding I was trying to obtain from this Judge Yakey a change of venue in a murder case where an officer of the Navy, whom I was defending, was accused of murder. He ordered the trial to be proceeded with and said he would again take up the affidavit for change of venue after the trial was over.

My client was convicted of manslaughter, but I reversed the judge in the supreme court, and when the case was tried again I obtained a dismissal from a coordinate judge on account of the defendant's insanity, which had existed all the time. His name is John Stokes. He is out here at the St. Elizabeth Asylum now.

Immediately upon the termination of this first trial of John Stokes, Judge Yakey ordered me prosecuted for perjury. The papers were not to be served till the next day, but the Seattle Times had an enlarged picture of myself and the news of my coming trial, with most prejudicial and false statements, on the street within a few minutes after the judge had made the order. The news had evidently been prepared and held subject to release.

When the case came to trial the judge who was called in to conduct the trial directed the jury, in the usual form, when they had arrived at a verdict, to appoint a foreman, who would sign same and report it into court. When the jury came in a most unusual thing happened. The judge looked at the verdict, and then leaned over toward me and said: "All the members of the jury have signed the verdict. Is there objection to receiving it in this form?"

Of course I had no objection. Every member of the jury had signed the verdict and was proud to have his name on my vindication against the crooked political job they had tried to put up on me.

In about three days I was served with a motion for disbarment by certain Yakey underlings at the bar, who had been taught to obey orders. Three of these have since left the State.

I had whipped the sawmill political organization in my State senatorial district by being elected over their idol to the State senate. I had been in a red-hot fight with the whisky crowd at the navy-yard town. They had determined to eliminate me. Three of the saloons at the county seat were renting their saloon buildings from his honor, Judge Yakey, who had been put on the bench through the political pull of the State senator I had defeated. The judge was to drive me out of court and the rest would speed me on out of the county.

I was without funds and they all knew it. Politics and the fight with the judge had taken from me the major portion of my business. I was really up against it, but I took a second breath and started a newspaper, The Navy Yard American. I had the paper printed each week in Seattle. It was an eight-page paper. We got out the paper at nights.

My disrespect to the court in these publications was the main dependence of the judge and his underlings in their effort at disbarment. They raked my court record thoroughly, and made a cause of action out of every case where either client was mad enough to complain. They accused me of soliciting business—barratry—and renewed their perjury charge. The case was assigned to Judge John F. Main, who was sitting in Seattle, for trial. He was a perfect stranger to me, but he had been a university instructor and was a man of splendid reputation. He was a Presbyterian and hated crooks.

When my disbarment came before the court they opened up with the barratry charges. The evidence consumed the best part of three days, when the judge said: "If you have any substantial testimony or charges to present, you had better get at them."

Then they took up the perjury charge. Judge Main, after a day's testimony and before I had begun to defend, said: "There's no perjury in it. Go to something else."

Then they took up some miscellaneous charges fathered by Judge Yakey, but they made no headway. Nearly six days had been consumed, and they placed in evidence the files of the Navy Yard American, showing my unquestioned and admitted disrespect for the judge. They wanted the court to disbar me for not respecting him. But by this time it seemed apparent that Judge Main had no more respect for Judge Yakey than I had.

I had defended my own case. Judge Main looked to me and asked what would be my defense as to these publications. I told him I had witnesses to prove the truth of every publication. "Well," said the judge, "that would take a long time, and I do not care to go into that. These publications arose from a condition between two factions that is indescribable in the English language."

As to the barratry charges, he said: "The whole array, taken all together, are not worthy of the consideration of the court for one moment."

And thus he gave to me the fullest vindication and dismissed the proceedings, finding that I had committed no act which should subject me to any punishment whatever.

In the meantime I had procured the enactment of a law through my position as State senator, which enabled me to get one change of judge upon filing an affidavit of prejudice. The court had no option about granting it. This put an end to Judge Yakey, for it was seldom that both sides were willing to try a case before him. It amounted to judicial recall.

All through these fights the Seattle Times has aided Judge Yakey and the crowd against me, publishing false stories in an effort to humiliate me. Blethen knows of my vindication. He knows the charges are false. Yet he publishes that they are pending of record against me. I shall be glad of the closest scrutiny of my record.

As soon as these publications were made I filed a libel suit against Blethen, hoping thereby to get him before court at an early date and expose in that way to those not already informed his falsehood and corruption. I tried to get a stipulation to try the case during the month of November, so that it could be presented to a jury before the December session of Congress required my attendance. His attorneys refused to do this.

In his answer to this suit Blethen declared under oath that it was his opinion that I had attacked the Times in Congress merely to get the support, in a political way, of the enemies of the Times, and he further declared that the attacks in the Times on me had not damaged me in any particular whatever.

This declaration in itself is a vindication and a confession of pusillanimity incomprehensible. In other words, the old fellow will go into court and attempt to show that an attack on me by the Times, howsoever vicious, does not injure me, and he will thereby assert and try to prove that his paper, although it enjoys a large circulation, is held in such contempt by the public that its editorial utterances are disregarded and its knocks are boosts.

I thank the Members for their courtesy in listening so kindly to these remarks. I am glad to have answered the charges. I believe it was a duty as well as a privilege. It takes patience, nerve, and a good shot to fight these gangsters in the West as well as in New York City.

Blethen has always fought with them and aided them. They try to destroy any man who gets in their way. But there is a new element asserting itself now. Women figure in the movement, and I tell you we are going to mow this old crowd down like bitter weeds. Their day is past. No man with a clean record need fear them. [Applause.]

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether there is any other special order just now?

The SPEAKER. Yes; there is a special order for the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS] to speak for 40 minutes on corporal punishment, and he is now recognized.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, on November 8 the press of the country carried the following dispatch:

WILMINGTON, DEL., November 8, 1913.

Six prisoners—two white men and four negroes—all convicted of robbery, were whipped on their bare backs with a total of 95 lashes at the Newcastle County workhouse to day. James Bayard and William Reason, negroes, each received 20 lashes for burglary. Next Saturday they will each receive a similar number of lashes. In addition Bayard will serve 14 years in prison and Reason 11 years. The court divided the administration of the lashes for fear the victims could not stand the penalty all at once.

On November 11 I introduced in the House the following resolution:

Whereas it appears from dispatches published in the public prints that six prisoners—two white men and four negroes—all convicted of robbery, were whipped on their bare backs with a total of 95 lashes, at the Newcastle County workhouse, in the State of Delaware, on November 8, 1913; and

Whereas it further appears that two of said prisoners, James Bayard and William Reason, negroes, each received 20 lashes for burglary; and

Whereas it further appears that on Saturday next, November 15, these two men will each receive a similar number of lashes on the bare back, and in addition Bayard is sentenced to serve 14 years in prison and Reason 11 years; and

Whereas it further appears that the court divided the administration of the lashes for fear the victims could not stand the penalty all at once; and

Whereas the eighth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America provides that "cruel and unusual punishments shall not be inflicted"; and

Whereas it is manifest from the fact that the court divided the imposition of the number of lashes for fear of causing the death of the victims that such punishment is cruel; and

Whereas such method of punishment is a relic of medieval barbarism and is not generally practiced in civilized countries and is therefore unusual; Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the Attorney General of the United States are hereby authorized and directed to cause to be brought in the Federal courts an injunction proceeding against the State of Delaware, or the officials and employees of such State who may be responsible for the condition of affairs above set forth, or that the President and Attorney General take such other action as in their judgment may be proper to enforce the provisions of the Federal Constitution and prevent the infliction of this cruel and unusual punishment upon these prisoners on Saturday next, November 15, and to prevent the practice of such cruelties hereafter in said State of Delaware or elsewhere in the United States of America.

It will be observed from the above dispatch that it is alleged that the punishment imposed upon the men in question was by the court divided for fear the victims could not endure the penalty all at once. The resolution was based very largely upon the statements contained in that dispatch. I know it is now denied that the punishment inflicted upon these and other men in the State of Delaware is a cruel punishment, but I submit that any punishment must be cruel if it be necessary in inflicting that punishment that it be divided into two parts because in the opinion of the court the victims could not stand all the punishment inflicted at one time. If it be said that it is not unusual, then I suggest that any punishment is unusual if it be a punishment inflicted by one State only and not inflicted by any other civilized country. It must of necessity be unusual.

Believing, therefore, that this punishment was both cruel and unusual, I introduced the resolution as above set forth. When it was ascertained that no action could be or would be taken by the House on the passage of this resolution because of the absence of a quorum; and believing firmly in the merit of my contention that something should be done to stop and stay the hand that was within four days again to lay stripes upon the backs of two human beings, I appealed to the Attorney General of the United States, calling his attention to the matter of the introduction of the resolution and of its temporary disposition, and asked that he take such steps as in his judgment the matter merited. The Attorney General advised me that it was his understanding that the courts had decided that the eighth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing against the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment, applied to the Federal courts and not the State courts, and that he therefore felt there was no action he could take in the premises. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to abide by the decision of the Attorney General, and I have no doubt he is correct in his views on the subject. Notwithstanding that, I still feel that somewhere, at some time, a remedy will be found which will forever put a stop to the practice of the courts of Delaware, which are so realistically described in an article by Mr. Bond P. Geddes, that I take the liberty of reading it in full:

NEWCASTLE COUNTY WORKHOUSE,
Wilmington, Del., November 15.

(By Bond P. Geddes, staff correspondent of the United Press.)

Pinioned to a "whipping post," with backs bared to freezing winds, two prisoners were publicly flogged here to-day. Each was grilled with 20 lashes. There were 20 last Saturday; 20 more to-day. Thus was the "peace and dignity of the State of Delaware" upheld.

The flagellation was the refinement of "modern medievalism." It was the twentieth century observance of Puritanical punishment. The flogging was "for men only." It was "guaranteed bloodless."

The guaranty was kept by Warden Leonard Crawford, whose hand has flogged a hundred men, according to his own account, within a few years. With scant ceremony—almost in haste—the backs of the two prisoners were beaten until they clung in silent anguish to the "posts" to which they were fastened, with arms upraised and flesh quivering, writhing convulsively.

A feeble moan from one of the victims was the only outward sign of their torture. Their faces were distorted, their fingers clutched convulsively, but they attempted to bear the pain stoically.

A tiny courtyard, with walls of gray stone 15 feet high, was the scene of the scourging. The "stockade" is its official name. Its victims call it the "torture pen." Scarcely 20 feet square, with two iron doors, one for spectators and one for the victims of the "cat," a stone walk to-day divided two dozen spectators and the actors in the grim penance.

The "shrine" of Delaware's penal code was the "whipping post" and a pillory—both heirlooms of a century ago—but both newly built. Both were under a wide roof projecting over one corner. They were painted drab, the post alone showing evidence of use, the pillory having been in disuse for a decade.

Forty seconds of excruciating pain was the toll taken by the "post" to-day. William Reason and James Bayard, colored burglars, were its victims. Each received 20 lashes. Less than seven minutes were required for the floggings. Reason was led into the yard at 10.20. At 10.27 Warden Crawford turned to the morbid group of spectators as Bayard was led away with a half apologetic smile and said, "All over."

Assured that all newspaper men were present, Warden Crawford gave the signal for the public punishment. The two men had been brought to the stockade by two bailiffs from the workhouse, 50 yards away. A silent sign was given. A turnkey walked in with Reason, the first victim. His hands were shackled. His bare back was covered with a rough blanket. With faltering, shuffling steps he was led before the post.

The man's face blanched visibly as he straddled the post. At an unspoken order from the turnkey he raised his hands outstretched above his head to two iron manacles fastened on either side of the wooden pillar. The refinement of cruelty was the placing of two heavy woolen gloves on his knuckles to keep the heavy iron hasps from biting in.

The turnkey whisked the blanket from his shoulders, exposing his nakedness to the waist. Not until then did the man flinch. He bowed his head and leaned heavily for support upon his fettered wrists, while the turnkey stood off and read the sentence of the court that he be flogged. Behind his back Warden Crawford held the "cat." It had nine leather thongs, 2 feet in length, attached to a slim hickory handle as long as the thongs.

"One," the turnkey began counting, and the whip whisked through the air. It landed across the small of the prisoner's shoulders. Livid marks, turning to a filmy, smoky white against the skin, were its records.

"Two," said the turnkey, and with monotonous counting, about one second apart, the warden flayed the quivering, cringing torso. Reason's hand clenched at each blow. He seemed to shrink, with escape impossible, from each stroke.

At the count of "twenty" the prisoner sighed. The blanket, replaced on his shoulders, shut out the grim work of white lashes from the fangs of the "cat," with which he was covered from neck to waist. The warden apparently exercised care to distribute the lashes over the man's back, but the whole back was a net work of whip marks when he concluded.

Bayard was led in immediately. He showed less "gameness," jail attachés said, than Reason. Bayard showed faint traces of the 20 lashes he had received a week ago. He also showed a deeper recollection of his former ordeal. His eyes remained in a spasm of mental fear when he entered the stockade. He leaned heavily upon the turnkey when his eyes turned to the "post." He almost fell when his hands were being shackled to the pillory. After the reading of the flogging sentence by the turnkey, the man frantically hugged the post, awaiting the count of "one."

As the lash fell his shoulders contorted his whole back into a writhing mass of twitching muscles. At each stroke his shoulder blades met, opening when the lash was swishing through the air and meeting, like clockwork, when it fell. The first stroke hit over his kidneys; the second lapped his neck.

At the final count of "twenty" from his lips came a long, low moan—a hissing sigh—his whole body relaxed and he wilted wearily and heavily, suspended by his pinioned wrists.

Neither man made an outcry. But both were half bent when they left the stockade. Reason was able to walk alone. Bayard leaned upon the turnkey's arm. The "straight-arm" stroke was used by Warden Crawford. He said the law prohibited "brutal beating" of men sentenced to the "post." His arm was not flexed. It was outstretched, with the goad applied lightly but firmly. That the warden did not use the force to-day that has often been used before was the statement of several spectators who claimed to be "repeaters" at Delaware floggings.

"It's a farce to-day," one said.

Although the warden denied that his touch was lighter to-day because of the agitation in Congress and elsewhere for abolishment of the whipping post, and because a larger crowd of spectators and newspaper reporters than usual were present, some spectators insisted that the floggings to-day lacked their usual "punch."

Like all floggings, those to-day were public, except that women and cameras were barred. Just 27 men, including a half dozen newspaper men, saw the punishment to-day. Among them were a bunch of actors playing at a local theater.

"It's an old story to the people of Delaware; they don't have any interest in it, and don't turn out any more," said Warden Crawford.

In addition to the flogging for their crimes, Bayard must serve 14 years in prison and Reason 11.

Least it be suggested that I am assuming an air of "holier than thou" or I am attempting to make some invidious comparison between the State of Delaware and some other State, permit me to say that at no time during this discussion has anyone heard me utter one harsh word or one word bearing the slightest spirit of vindictiveness or asperity toward the State of Delaware. The State of Delaware was one of the original thirteen States. She has furnished her quota of men when great problems and crises have arisen in this country. She does not need any defense from me, and she does not need any defense from any other man. Her own deeds are her best defenses. But notwithstanding all the great things the State of Delaware has done, there are millions of people who feel that there is one thing she has left undone which does not add to her credit, and that is her failure to keep abreast of the times and abolish the last relic of cruelty incorporated in her laws before even the adoption of the Constitution of the United States.

In a discussion of this question a few days ago by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BROCKSON] he assumed to discuss the matter, not upon the high plane of whether or not the great State of Delaware was inflicting cruel and unusual punishment in the execution of its penal laws, but rather discussed the question of whether or not the particular victims of that law were guilty of the offense of which they were charged, and even suggested that they were guilty not only of the offense of burglary, of which they were charged, but were guilty of an offense against the womanhood of the State of Delaware. All that appeals to me to be but a begging of the question. It is immaterial whether these individual men were guilty or not, or of what they were guilty. The question is, Does the State violate the fundamental law of the land when it inflicts corporal punishment for any offense committed? I recall that in the discussion of this matter by the gentleman from Delaware he made the statement that corporal punishment is never inflicted upon a woman in that State.

Now, I submit the question, Why is a woman not flogged in Delaware? If the fundamental law of the land is correct, that all men are equal before the law, and using the term "men" in its generic sense, why should not a woman be flogged if a man be flogged? And the answer comes back immediately: To flog a woman would be cruel, so cruel that the good citizens of Delaware would not sit complacently by and permit it. All of which appeals to me to prove that corporal punishment as inflicted in the great State of Delaware is cruel and in direct violation of the best sentiments of the country, whether the eighth amendment to the Constitution applies only to the Federal Government or applies to all the people of the Federal Government.

During the past week I have received scores of letters commenting upon the whipping post, and I beg to quote from one of these letters. It reads:

You are entirely right in protesting against the brutal whipping post in Delaware. It would make your blood boil if I were to tell you of some of the cruel whippings I have witnessed. I have lived in Delaware for 43 years and have seen the brutal lash wielded many times. One time I recall a young negro was manacled to the post. He was whipped with 20 lashes. The first time the sheriff struck him he screamed in agony; the second stroke the poor victim pulled himself up as far as his clasped hands would allow and kicked both feet at the sheriff. That gentleman (?)—the sheriff—jumped to one side, and then getting on his tiptoes struck the helpless creature 18 times more with all the brutal strength he could master. The negro was almost in a state of collapse as he was led from the post. The sheriff who did the whipping was a man who at that time weighed 250 pounds. He died a few years ago.

This is the comment of a man who informs me that he is a business man in the State of Delaware, where he has resided for 43 years; and yet it is suggested that to mention the matter of whipping in that State is to give evidence of the fact that some one is for the time being afflicted with a spasm of virtue.

Since this agitation was begun the press of the country generally has commented upon the whipping post, and most of the papers have characterized this instrument of torture as a relic of barbarism now entirely outgrown by civilized countries. I find, however, some exceptions, the most notable one that has come under my observation being the Philadelphia Inquirer, which, under date of November 13, spoke editorially as follows:

DELAWARE'S WHIPPING POST.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, November 13, 1913.]

It was certainly very kind and humane for a Member of Congress from Montana to show such interest in Delaware as to introduce a bill to abolish the whipping post, the time-honored institution of the three counties below us. His interest in the Constitution is commendable. His idea is that the whipping post comes under the constitutional prohibition of "cruel and unusual punishments." It is much to be regretted that the gentleman from Montana is not better versed in history.

When the Constitution was adopted the whipping post, stocks, and other methods of punishment now forgotten were quite usual, and none of them was considered cruel. What the Constitution aimed at was dismemberment—as of the hand for theft—and other choice methods which were usual but cruel, and it was provided that no unusual methods should be devised to replace them. The whipping post is not cruel or unusual under the Constitution, and its survival in Delaware is due to peculiar geographical circumstances. Many efforts have been made to abolish this form of punishment, and they would have succeeded were it not for the fact that the northern part of Delaware contained first the highways and later the railways which form the trunk line of travel from New York and Philadelphia to Baltimore and Washington. Along this line every year travel thousands of tramps and crooks of various kinds, who occasionally commit crime and "make a getaway," but the truth is most of them give Wilmington and Newark a wide berth, because they fear the whipping post more than any other punishment.

As a fact, the whippings of ordinary offenders are generally innocuous. It is only when a rank offender, especially one from outside the State, bares his back to the sheriff that he feels the rigors of the cat-o-nine-tails, and he rarely gets more than he deserves. The whipping post is simply Delaware's warning to criminals to keep out, and usually they keep out. More whipping posts in the country for certain criminals would be desirable. The gentleman from Montana should rest his soul in peace.

The author of this editorial, speaking for the great city of Philadelphia and for the people of Pennsylvania, tells us that the reason why they do not abolish the whipping post in Delaware is because Wilmington is on the great highway of travel from New York to Washington, and therefore they can not abolish it. Well, I thought that Philadelphia was on the highway, too. I have heard that Philadelphia was very quiet sometimes, but I supposed it was at least on the highway, and if for that reason they needed a whipping post at Wilmington they surely needed it in Philadelphia, where the Inquirer is published. That does not seem to be an argument at all on the whipping post. It is begging the question to say that the whipping post is retained because Delaware is on the line of railway and the line of travel.

In contrast with the utterances of the Inquirer, the Philadelphia Public Ledger, likewise published in the City of Brotherly Love, makes the following comment:

[From the Philadelphia Ledger, Nov. 12, 1913.]

DELAWARE AND THE WHIPPING POST.

If Congressman EVANS, of Montana, shall persist in his attack in the House upon the Delaware whipping post as a punishment for her prisoners, he may force the Diamond State to abolish that relic of a bygone age and civilization.

Mr. EVANS offered a resolution directing Attorney General McReynolds to enjoin the authorities of the Commonwealth from lashing her culprits on the bare back with a knout, on the ground that the whipping post violates the prohibition in the Federal Constitution against "cruel and unusual punishments."

Several hundred years ago flogging was not unusual and was not deemed cruel; in earlier days the use of the thumbscrew and the rack and breaking upon the wheel were not unusual, and there was a time when the untamed instincts of the world tolerated the drawing and quartering of felons and traitors, but the world has moved along. The cat-o-nine-tails has had its day, physical suffering and cruelty are not accepted means of correction or punishment, yet Delaware clings tenaciously to the ancient practices.

The State should abolish its anachronistic device. It does not reform prisoners; it degrades them. It does not uplift the community; it shames and brutalizes it. The whipping post is a relic of barbarism more adapted to the civilization of Russia than to that of the United States.

The question naturally arises, What punishment should be visited upon the petty offender? And I confess that I am not prepared to say. But I do feel confident that progress is not being made by clinging to a system which has been repudiated and abandoned for a hundred years by other States. The great problem of penology is one of the questions now engaging the master minds of the country, and I have no doubt will in time be solved. I give it as my personal conviction that much more progress is being made in the solution of this question by some of the newer States of the West, such as Oregon, California, and Colorado, than is being made in the East.

A man is a human being, whether he be a criminal or an honest, law-abiding citizen, and in the judgment of men who are to-day making a success in the handling of criminals of the country, those criminals must be treated as human beings regardless of what laws they have violated. In the State of Montana four or five guards control 160 prisoners building roads through the mountains of that State. These prisoners consist of men serving terms all the way from a few months to life, and yet comparatively no trouble is encountered with them, not 1 per cent of them attempting to escape. They are treated like human beings. They know the penalty of an effort to escape, and they know that so long as they obey they will be treated like human beings. How long, in the judgment of any Member of this House, do you think five men would have control over 160 criminals if for some offense one of those criminals was manacled to a post and lashed in the presence of his comrades? In my judgment, only long enough for the helpless victim to shriek with pain when the first lash was laid upon his back, when the animal instinct would be aroused in every man within the sound of his voice. That shriek would simply be a "call of the wild."

Mr. Wines, in his excellent work on Punishment and Reformation, says:

The basis of legal punishment may be reduced to a single principle, that of the protection of society. Society is protected, first, by the removal and isolation of the offender, who is thus disarmed and made a prisoner of war, hors de combat; second, by the exemplary and deterrent influence upon others exerted by the spectacle of his disfigurement and suffering; but the third, and most effective, way in which this result can be obtained is his reformation, which converts an enemy into a friend, and a destructive into a constructive social force. The right of society to defend itself is indubitable, yet it is not without limits. Might is not always right, and the will of the majority is not always just. The individual has rights, and his immolation upon the altar of a supposed public exigency may react against the majority in the same way in which disregard for the rights of the community by an individual reacts against the individual. . . . The history of criminal jurisprudence is the reflection in miniature of the history of the human intellect and conscience. With advancing morality, measures indispensable in a former age become repugnant to the popular sense of right, and therefore obsolete. . . . The criminal law is, when it is rational and equitable, and is administered with intelligence and humanity, designed and adapted to effect the amendment of those subjected to its afflictive penalties. The model of human government is found in the divine order, in which we are chastened to our profit. The judgments of God are designed to lead us to repentance.

The whipping post degrades not only its victim but society that exacts such punishment. Humanity never has been reformed by a punishment that tends to degrade the victim of the law. When you manacle a man to a post and beat him across the back you make of him an enemy to society. You have degraded him and you degrade society. Malice and hatred toward all the world are sown in his heart, and sooner or later the seed must bear fruit.

If there is any justification for the whipping post to-day, is there not equal justification for the pillory, the stocks, the rack, and a hundred other devices formerly used as instruments of torture? You will all readily recall that men were punished by branding, mutilating, disemboweling; that they were staked upon the sands of the sea that they might be drowned by the slowly rising tide; and that every means known to the human mind were employed for the purpose of inflicting pain upon the helpless victim who was so unfortunate as to fall within the pale of the law. But as our civilization advanced, all these cruel forms have been discarded, and we find to-day only one of all that host of medieval relics of barbarism remaining, and that is the whipping post in the neighboring State of Delaware.

To resort to the whipping post in this the twentieth century is simply a "call of the wild." It is the brute instinct again taking possession of our people. No crime was ever deterred by the commission of another crime. To take a helpless human being, bind him to a post, and beat him to the extremity of human endurance is revolting to all the finer feelings and passions of humanity and must of necessity degrade both the helpless victim, the man who applies the lash, the mob who look upon the crime, and the State or Nation that sits idly by and does nothing to prevent its commission. [Applause.]

Mr. BROCKSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes in reply to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. DONOVAN. I am going to object, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] objects.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL NEXT WEDNESDAY.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] reserve his motion to adjourn for a moment?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to correct a ruling that he made on Thursday, November 20. On that day the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] offered the following privileged resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 22d day of November, 1913, at 1 o'clock p. m.

In answer to a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair ruled that the resolution was debatable. That ruling was made hurriedly, without opportunity to examine the authorities and without time for reflection, and the question had never been raised before during the 19 years in which the present occupant of the chair has been in the House.

It turns out that on March 23, 1871, Mr. Speaker Blaine held a similar resolution to be not debatable. That is the only decision on the point that the Chair has been able to find after thorough investigation, but that decision of Mr. Speaker Blaine has been accepted by the House for 42 years. But aside from that decision, upon mature reflection and reasoning from analogy, the Chair thinks the resolution is not debatable, because if declared debatable such resolutions might be converted into instruments of troublesome filibustering, just as a motion to recess was used until deprived of its privileged character. Therefore the decision of Mr. Speaker Blaine is affirmed.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, in view of the Speaker's ruling that the resolution is not debatable, whether it is not in order to put the resolution to a vote.

The SPEAKER. Nobody had asked to put it to a vote—

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do now—

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] had moved to adjourn, and withheld his motion for the accommodation of the Chair.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, one further parliamentary inquiry. Does a simple motion to adjourn take precedence of a concurrent resolution to adjourn at a certain day?

The SPEAKER. The concurrent resolution is not pending.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I thought it was unfinished business.

Mr. MANN. It is pending as unfinished business, but the other motion takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. There is no use in discussing whether it is unfinished business. The Chair has been investigating to see if there can not be some substantial fixed limits to unfinished business; but the motion to adjourn was made, and the resolution which the gentleman refers to is not before the House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. If it is unfinished business, it is pending.

The SPEAKER. Not necessarily.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, other business has intervened since that resolution was before the House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman from Kentucky was here this morning to call it up.

The SPEAKER. He could not call it up this morning, under the ruling of the Chair—whether right or wrong—that these gentlemen had the right under the special order to first address the House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I noticed that the Speaker said that as soon as these speeches were finished the resolution would be in order.

The SPEAKER. That is true, but the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] has moved to adjourn, and his motion is pending.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. But is not the resolution in order under the ruling of the Chair this morning, that the House having made the special order for addresses of these gentlemen, as soon as they had finished the Speaker would recognize the concurrent resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair said that he would recognize the gentleman from Kentucky to call it up.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not his attempt to call it up make it unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. No. There are two or three resolutions now pending in exactly the same parliamentary status as the one the gentleman refers to and which have been pending longer.

Mr. MANN. I have one pending which is a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. Yes; and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] has one in the same situation.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the question on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman from Missouri would withhold his motion for a minute.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will withhold it if the gentleman wishes to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding 10 minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I can not consent to that. I thought the gentleman was going to ask unanimous consent to extend his remarks.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman from Missouri withhold his motion for me to ask unanimous consent to insert something in the RECORD?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will.

MATERIAL FOR CONSTRUCTION OF SHIPS OF WAR.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a short article from the Army and Navy Register, dealing with economy in the administration of Army and Navy affairs, a subject of deep interest to the multitude of men who earn their living in the navy yards and in the ship-building plants of the country. The article referred to is instructive as well as illuminating.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House, under its order previously agreed to, adjourned until Wednesday, November 26, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3260) granting an increase of pension to John McMahon, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 9393) to protect the rights of women citizens of the United States to register and vote for Senators of the United States and for Members of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. LEVY: A bill (H. R. 9394) to amend section 6 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and amendments thereto; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 9395) providing for an appropriation for the extermination of jack rabbits, ground squirrels, and prairie dogs; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 9396) granting an increase of pension to Mary Ann Elson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DONOVAN: A bill (H. R. 9397) granting an increase of pension to Harriet C. Price; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENSLEY: A bill (H. R. 9398) granting an increase of pension to James Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 9399) granting an increase of pension to Lucinda Kennedy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANGHAM: A bill (H. R. 9400) granting a pension to Frank M. Frey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9401) granting a pension to Anna E. Hetherington; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9402) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Hamilton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9403) granting an increase of pension to George W. Weaver; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 9404) granting an increase of pension to Emily L. Barnes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 9405) granting a pension to Johanna Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 9406) granting a pension to Winona Hawthorne Buck; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Memorial of Lake Michigan Steamboat Line, protesting against the passage of the La Follette seamen's bill; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CURLEY: Petition of the Boston Central Labor Union, favoring congressional investigation of conditions in the mining district of Colorado; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CURRY: Memorial of the Sacramento Federated Trades Council, favoring the passage of House bill 7207, relative to water rights of the Hetch Hetchy Lake; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DALE: Petitions of Hull, Crippen & Co. and H. F. Hadden, of New York, N. Y., protesting against the passage of the seamen's bill; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE: Memorial of the Spokane Chamber of Commerce, Spokane, Wash., favoring the recommendation of military officials for the strengthening of the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: Petition of the New Haven Political Equality Club, of New Haven, Conn., protesting against the action of the Russian Government in the ritual murder charge; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: Papers in support of House bill 5567, for the relief of the estate of John Snyder; to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

MONDAY, November 24, 1913.

Rev. H. H. Hoss, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn., bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, offered the following prayer:

Oh, gracious God, our heavenly Father, Thou art enthroned in the heavens. Thy sway extends over all things, material and immaterial, in Thy wide universe. Thou art of all men and of all nations. We give Thee sincere and hearty thanks for the providence which Thou hast had over us as a nation and a people, for the fact of Thy intervention in history, for the fact of Thy sustaining power in the great crises which have come and gone in the years that are past.

And now we invoke Thy continued blessing upon us. May Thy great grace rest upon this body of legislators, sent here by sovereign States for the enactment of laws and the framing of policies that shall control and govern our future destiny. Give to them the wisdom that cometh from above, simple minds, a clear vision, the open heart, the patriotic purpose.

And let Thy blessing, we earnestly beseech Thee, abide upon us this day and all the days. As Thou hast been with us in the past be with us in the years that are to come, so that through whatever experience we may be called upon to pass, whatever difficulties we may have to encounter, we shall be sure of Thy providential aid.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

EDWIN C. BURLEIGH, a Senator from the State of Maine, appeared in his seat to-day.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, November 24, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,
President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the memorial of Lucius Waterman, rector of St. Thomas Church, Hanover, N. H., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation granting to the city of San Francisco the use of the waters of Hetch Hetchy Valley, which was ordered to lie on the table.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition from sundry citizens of Hamilton, Ill., opposite Keokuk, Iowa. It relates to granting additional bridge facilities between these two cities and concerns a bill that is pending before the Committee on Commerce. I ask that the telegram be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HAMILTON, ILL., November 20, 1913.

Senator L. Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Senate bill No. 1618 is up for hearing this morning before Senate Committee on Commerce. Will you please attend that meeting and, if possible, secure the attendance of Senator LEWIS and do all you properly can to bring about a favorable report on the bill, because we think our community sorely needs additional bridge facilities. Along in the latter sixties the Keokuk & Hamilton Bridge Co. obtained from Congress a grant to build a bridge across the Mississippi River between Keokuk and Hamilton. They are not contending that their charter gave "the exclusive right, privilege, and power between the city of Warsaw and the city of Nauvoo, in the county of Hancock and State of Illinois, to build, construct, and maintain a bridge or bridges for railroad and other purposes on the Mississippi River to the State of Iowa." That the franchise of this company is exclusive we deny, and as our present and future development will be seriously interfered with unless we have greater bridge facilities, we favor a bridge across the power dam, which dam now extends across the Mississippi River from Hamilton, Ill., to Keokuk, Iowa. The facts are that this bridge was not designed to carry present day railroad equipment, and for about 15 years has refused passage to the heavier locomotives used by the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad Co. The heavy equipment for the power house was not shipped until the dam was completed and the tracks laid from the Hamilton depot up to the Illinois end of the dam and across on the dam. The reason stated was that it was unsafe to ship this heavy tonnage over the old bridge. Even granting that this bridge could carry present equipment, we would still have great need for a second bridge, because this bridge is not designed to carry railroad trains or interurban and wagon traffic at same time; and under the present schedule it is in the service of the railroads and interurbans and closed to wagon traffic a large part of the time. You are at liberty and we will be glad to have you bring this telegram to attention of Senator LEWIS, Senator CUMMINS, and Senator KENTON, and to Congressman TAPPAN and Congressman KENNEDY, and to use it in any way that seems proper to you or them.

HAMILTON BUSINESS CLUB,
By J. A. GORDON, President,
By H. E. RAYBURN, Secretary.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a telegram, in the nature of a petition, from W. T. Fenton, vice president of the National Bank of the Republic, of Chicago, Ill., which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., October 15, 1913.

Hon. L. Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Boston meeting of bankers was not a called convention. It was the annual meeting of the American Bankers' Association, an organization which has had a consecutive existence for nearly 40 years. The date and place of meeting for the year 1913 was fixed by the executive committee before the national presidential election last year. It is a well-known fact, and the names on its executive committee will show, that the association has been controlled and dominated for the last 10 or 15 years by bankers outside of reserve cities. The subject of the currency bill was a natural one, as was the indorsement of the action of the Chicago conference, which conference in its preamble recognized the earnestness of the administration in its efforts to bring about currency reform and offered its cooperation. It is not true that the bankers are opposing legislation. On the contrary, they themselves have brought about the demand for currency reform, and there has been, and is now, a general apathy on the part of the public on this question. The Chicago conference recommended certain amendments by unanimous action and the meeting at Boston simply indorsed the Chicago recommendations unanimously. Where there is so much misunderstanding, I think this explanation due both to the bankers and the Members of Congress, believing that a spirit of fairness on both sides is essential at this time.

W. T. FENTON,
Vice President, National Bank of the Republic, Chicago, Ill.
LANDS, IN IDAHO.

Mr. BRADY. I present resolutions adopted by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of Nez Perce, Lewis, and Clearwater Counties, Idaho, calling attention to the fact that there are large bodies of lieu land unimproved and large bodies of railroad-grant land unsurveyed in the State of Idaho that have escaped taxation for years by reason of the delay of the National Government in clear listing these lands. There are thousands of acres of land in Idaho belonging to the great timber syndicates and the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. that have escaped taxation, for the reason that title has not been conveyed to these corporations by the National Government. This is an injustice to the people of our State, and I am glad to have the farmers' organization call attention to this matter. The resolutions are short and to the point. I ask that they may be printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Resolutions adopted at Lewiston, Idaho, October 22, 1913, by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union.

At a convention of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, including the counties of Nez Perce, Lewis, and Clearwater, held at the city of Lewiston, State of Idaho, on Monday, October 22, 1913, the following resolutions were discussed and adopted:

Whereas in the matter of the taxation we believe in justice being given to all and special favors to none; and

Whereas that large bodies of lieu land unapproved and large bodies of railroad grant land unsurveyed in the State of Idaho by reason of delay of the National Government in determining definite title thereto have never been subject to taxation; and

Whereas the title to all such lands in this State, so far as we can learn, is claimed wholly by the great timber syndicates of the Northwest or by the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.; and

Whereas all such lands have for many years been closed to homestead and every form of individual entry; and

Whereas the evasion of taxation of such lands to the amount of approximately 2,000,000 acres for many years have added greatly to the heavy burden already borne by the farmers and other individual taxpayers of the State of Idaho; and

Whereas we believe in the absolute publicity of the conduct of our public affairs, and that it is the duty of our congressional Representatives and Senators to make known to us conditions that are detrimental to our best interests and financial welfare: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this organization that to longer permit conditions of title to exist which causes land situated within the limits of the State of Idaho to evade taxation is an injustice needlessly permitted by the National Government to be imposed upon the people of this State; that by so doing the development of the whole State in general and of the counties containing such land in particular is being retarded: Therefore be it further

Resolved, That in order to remedy the unsatisfactory conditions existing regarding these lands that an order for the survey of all these lands that are unsurveyed, including railroad grants and lieu lands, should be made, and the selection of all such lieu lands in the State of Idaho should either be approved or rejected at once; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, Senators WILLIAM E. BORAH, JAMES H. BRADY, and Congressmen BURTON L. FRENCH and ADDISON T. SMITH, as an expression of the will of the people of this State directly affected by the present condition of these lands.

C. W. BOOTH,
President of the Tricounty Union of Nez Perce,
Lewis, and Clearwater Counties, Idaho.

Attest.

R. L. ANDERSON, Secretary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona:

A bill (S. 3470) for the relief of the water users under what is known as the Yuma irrigation project, in Yuma County, Ariz.; and

A bill (S. 3471) to authorize payment of damages caused by operations of the Reclamation Service; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

AMENDMENT TO THE CURRENCY BILL.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7837) to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PROPOSED FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The introduction of concurrent or other resolutions is in order.

Mr. MYERS. I call up the concurrent resolution I offered on Saturday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that that resolution comes over in regular order and will be laid before the Senate by the Chair as soon as it is reached.

Mr. MYERS. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there concurrent or other resolutions? If not, the next business in order is the consideration of a concurrent resolution coming over from a previous day. The Chair lays it before the Senate, and the Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read concurrent resolution No. 10, submitted by Mr. MYERS on the 22d instant, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 24th day of November, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me for a moment to prefer a request?

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I find on my desk this morning a print of House bill 7837, being the banking bill, and also a print of what purports to be the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee. I think there should be printed for our use House bill 7837 showing that amendment in italics and the House text. Of course, I understand that this large document has been issued, but we have a great many requests for copies of the bill and proposed amendments. We have the House bill, with the amendments suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] printed in italics, but as representing the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma I do not find a print with the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. OWEN. I advise the Senator that it has been printed and is already on his desk.

Mr. STONE. I understood that on Saturday—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CLAPP. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. On Saturday I understood that a document was to be printed, for the use of the Senate, by to-day containing in three columns the House bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency—

Mr. CLAPP. That is right, and there has been a mistake made there, I think.

Mr. STONE. There was a print ordered in three columns.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; in three columns.

Mr. STONE. This document has but two columns.

Mr. CLAPP. I know, but I should like to complete this request of mine first. It is that there be printed of House bill 7837, with the amendment proposed by the chairman in italics, at least 20,000 copies, or so many copies as can be printed within the requirement of the rule allowing $500 to be expended under the order of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that order has already been made.

Mr. CLAPP. No; an order was made with reference to the bill as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Minnesota is right about that.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no question about it.

Mr. OWEN. The request related to the printing of the report and not to the bill itself.

Mr. CLAPP. The usual number for the Senate will certainly not be sufficient to supply the demand, and it seems to me there ought to be as many copies of the one as of the other. The order was made on Saturday to print as many as $500 would print of the bill as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Nebraska, but the Senator from Oklahoma did not make a similar request with reference to the bill and his amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that he had done so.

Mr. STONE. No.

Mr. OWEN. I made the request to include the views of the chairman and his colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that the Secretary read exactly what has been ordered, and perhaps that will throw some light on the question.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well.

The Secretary read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, proceedings of the Senate, of November 22, 1913, page 5964, as follows:

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that the reported bill be printed, showing the changes proposed by the amendments suggested by myself and those Senators agreeing with me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not hear the request. Let it be again stated.

Mr. OWEN. I simply asked for a print of the bill as proposed to be amended by my section of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask that, within the $500 limit of cost, copies of the report containing the individual views of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the members agreeing with him be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to and reduced to writing, as follows.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it seems to me very clear that that omits the printing of the proposed amendments themselves in italics as a part of House bill 7837 in excess of the ordinary number for the Senate. If the Senate is of the opinion that it does not, that ends this discussion. All I desire is to get more copies if I can.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. STONE. What has been read by the Secretary does not quite clear the situation.

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. STONE. I think subsequent to the part that has been read the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] asked first that 25,000 copies of the bill or substitute or whatever it may be called, reported by the section of the committee on Banking and Currency which he represents, should be printed. The Senator from Utah raised the question as to whether that could be done by the order of the Senate or whether it would have to be done by the order of the joint committee of the two Houses. Then the Senator from Nebraska asked for 20,000 copies, and on the assurance that that would not exceed the $500 limit that was ordered. But as the Senator from Minnesota says there was, as I recall, no order for the printing of a like number of the proposal reported by the other section of the committee headed by the chairman of the committee, and that I understand is what the Senator from Minnesota desires to have done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to say that the request made by the Senator from Oklahoma, that the views of himself and five other members of the committee be printed as a public document up to and including $500 worth, also included the bill itself. If the Senator will look at the RECORD he will see that that is the case.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the trouble now is that we have to send out to our constituents a document that contains the original House bill as proposed to be amended by the Hitchcock bill—to use that term for brevity's sake—in one document in plain print. We have no similar document as representing the House bill with the amendments proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. Instead of requiring our constituents to dig them out of this report, it does seem to me it would simplify the situation to have printed a document with reference to the bill as proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma corresponding to the one in the case of the Senator from Nebraska. I know it is in the report, but a man has to take that report and dig out the proposals contained in that report, when we have already one document that shows the House bill with the proposed amendments of the Hitchcock bill. That ought to be accompanied, it seems to me, to our constituents by a similar document showing in plain type the House bill with the proposed amendments of the Owen bill in italics; and that is the request I make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what is the request? Let it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota will please again state his request for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. The request is that there be printed of House bill 7837, 20,000 copies, or as many as can be printed within the $500 limit of cost, showing in italics the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If not, it will be so ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma for one moment. I desire to call attention to the report, with the appendix, which was printed as a Senate document at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma on Saturday. When the request was made for the printing of that document I for one, at least, understood that the appendix to the report was to include the views of the chairman of the committee and those who agree with him, and in the same document the views of the remaining members of the committee who disagree. That is what I understood to be the purpose. Now, if I have not been careless in my examination, the document includes only as an appendix the views of the chairman of the committee and those who agree with him.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the only cause of confusion is that the copies have not been stitched together in one volume, but the index will show it is the same thing, and they are both on the Senator's desk.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; I know that; but it seems to me they should be stitched together, Mr. President—

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Because they appear, on casual observation, as two documents, one of which—

Mr. OWEN. They are both marked "Calendar No. 107," one part being No. 1 and the other part No. 3.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I know; but one of the documents contains the report of the committee.

Mr. OWEN. I desire to remind the Senator from Wyoming that the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] was that there should be printed a certain number of his report with his bill, and that is the reason why they were not stitched together.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I know; but that was not the unanimous consent to which I gave my assent. The unanimous consent that I supposed I was giving my assent to was that the report should be printed as a Senate document, together with the views of the chairman of the committee and the views of the other branch of the committee—that was what the discussion started on—so that they would be all together in one document, and the views of the two branches of the committee should appear to the same document, stitched together as appendices to the report of the committee.

Mr. OWEN. Anyone asking for "Report 133, Calendar No. 107," will get, of course, both of these documents. It is really the same thing whether they are stitched together or not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is really the same thing, only they do not appear to be the same thing. One is an appendix to a report and the other is not an appendix to a report. To that I was calling attention. The views of the chairman of the committee and those agreeing with him are published as an appendix to the report.

Mr. OWEN. The point made by the Senator from Wyoming may easily be accomplished by simply having the reports stitched together.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is what I think should be done, so that the whole matter can be sent out as one document.

Mr. OWEN. The reason they were printed separately was because the Senator from Nebraska wished to send out his report separately.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understood that his request had nothing whatever to do with the request made by the chairman of the committee. I understood that there were two separate propositions.

Mr. OWEN. Both requests could be complied with by simply having the reports stitched together. If the Senator would like, I see no reason why the document could not be furnished with the parts stitched together.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understood that is what the document was intended to be.

Mr. OWEN. I think nothing was said with regard to their being stitched together; but, of course, they are one document.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no particular object in making a document of that size in two volumes.

Mr. OWEN. They are both Report No. 133.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is perfectly true, but one is marked "Part 1" and the other marked "Part 3." Part 2 is the first appendix, which is printed with the report; part 3 is the second appendix, which is not printed with the report. My proposition now is to have the whole thing complete in one small document.

Mr. OWEN. I ask for an order that they be stitched together as one document.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is what I desire.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I have no objection to their being stitched together if any Senator wishes them stitched together, but I desire to have a large number of them not stitched together.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That has already been provided for.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], but that was interrupted by two motions, which the Chair would first like to have disposed of.

Mr. MYERS. I am perfectly willing for that to be done, if it can be done before 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana yielded to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who made a motion which has not yet been disposed of.

Mr. MYERS. I did not suppose it would take so long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]? Without objection, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, before the motion is agreed to I should like it distinctly understood that the change proposed is to add to the document which has been printed at the request of the chairman of the committee [Mr. OWEN] the document which has been printed at my request, and that this change does not involve impairing or destroying the printing of the 20,000 copies of the document which have been ordered separately at my request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the request does involve just exactly what the Senator from Nebraska objects to. As I understand, the Senator from Nebraska wants to distribute his document without sending with it the other document, so as to make an ex parte showing on his side. If the request of the Senator from Wyoming is agreed to, the two documents, being stitched together, will have to go out together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that the question now before the Senate is not on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], but on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], which the Chair was about to rule had been agreed to when the Senator from Nebraska rose and interposed an objection, as the Chair thought. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota. Without objection, it will be agreed to.

Now the question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rose merely to respond to what had been stated by the Senator from Nebraska. I have no sort of objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota, and it would be more in order to get rid of that first, I think.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is now disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been disposed of, the Chair will advise the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now the question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was addressing myself to that question.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, in order that there may be no misunderstanding in the mind of the Senator from Mississippi or in the mind of the Senator from Nebraska, it might be well just for a moment to review the proceedings on Saturday. The Senator from Oklahoma asked unanimous consent that the report of the committee, together with the views of the two branches of the committee as appendices, be printed as a document. That was one request. Unfortunately, in the discussion there was so much confusion in the Chamber that the request as finally made, according to the Record, included only the report of the committee and, as an appendix, the views of the chairman and his colleagues on that committee. That is what the Record shows; but the intention of the whole proposition, both of the chairman of the committee and of those who took part in the discussion, was that this document should contain the report of the committee with appendices consisting of the views of each branch of the committee. That was the intention.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That was what I thought was done.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is what I thought was done; but that was not done, and the report has not been printed in that way. The purpose of my rising was that the unanimous consent might be made to cover exactly what the chairman of the committee first asked for.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Just a moment. That having been agreed to, unanimous consent was given to the Senator from Nebraska that as many copies as $500 would print should be printed separately of the report of himself and those who agreed with him; but, unfortunately, the Record does not really bear out the understanding of the Senate as it occurred to me, and the consequence is that we have the report of the committee, and attached to that an appendix consisting only of the views of the chairman of the committee and those who agree with him. It occurred to me that there ought to be an appendix containing the views of both sides.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understood what was done just as the Senator from Wyoming did; but I also understand that we have got to go by the Record and that nothing was done which the Record does not show was done.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not intend to consent the other day, and I am not willing to consent to-day, that one of these two diverse statements of opinion, with the amendments accompanying it, should go to the country as an ex parte document. I think the two documents ought to go together, and I think $500 ought to cover the printing of both. I think it would be foolish for virtually the majority side of this Chamber to consent to distribute as an ex parte document $500 worth of the minority report and statement and argument while it did not make the same provision for the report and statement of the Democratic members of the committee. I did not rise for the purpose of objecting to the request of the Senator from Wyoming; on the contrary, I agree with him; but I did rise to object to having it understood that the construction just placed upon the request by the Senator from Nebraska should go into the Record without notice by somebody that it was not the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I have nothing to say in regard to the report of the Senator from Nebraska; neither have I anything to say in regard to the report of the Senator from Oklahoma and those associated with him. I am not entirely agreed with the Senator from Mississippi. I am perfectly willing that the two reports, as the views of certain Senators, should go separately, if the Senate makes an order for that purpose; but when the report of the committee is circulated as showing the reason of that report, to wit, a report that they are unable to come to a conclusion and that they report the bill back without recommendation, I want, with that failure to agree, to give the reasons why there was a failure to agree; and that can only be evidenced by the individual views of those taking different positions on the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And in that I agree perfectly with the Senator from Wyoming. I think that is the only fair way to do it. I think the country ought to see both together.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do, and I go further than the Senator from Mississippi, and think that if those agreeing with the chairman of the committee want to send out their views to the country they should be allowed to do so, and if those agreeing with the Senator from Nebraska want their views sent out they should be allowed to do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But that is not involved in this proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Only as the Senator—

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not involved rather in the construction put upon it by the Senator from Nebraska; but what is involved in his construction is that there shall be $500 appropriated for the free distribution of his side of the matter—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the statement of it, while there is no $500 appropriated for a distribution of the views of the other side.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; the two propositions are not related, because the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska was a separate and distinct unanimous-consent agreement from the one proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Record does not show that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think it does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, of course, if the Record does show it, I am making an objection too late; but I did not think it did; I did not so understand; I had no idea we were standing here and letting one side of this subject be distributed to the country at the public expense to the extent of $500 worth while the other side was not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; but the Senator still misunderstands. There was permission given to each side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask that the Record be read.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will read it to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that is so, then what I thought—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will read it to the Senator. On the second column of page 5964 it was—

Ordered, That there be printed approximately 20,000 copies of Senate Report No. 133, part 3, being the views and report of facts by Senators HITCHCOCK, NELSON, BRISTOW, CRAWFORD, WEEKS, and McLEAN, and following the same, in the same document, the bill as proposed to be amended by the Senators, such printing not to exceed the sum of $500.

That was the request made by the Senator from Nebraska, which was agreed to. Then, farther down on page 5964, about the middle of the first column—

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me just for a moment, I thought from what the Senator said a moment ago that what I thought the Senate had done the Record did not show, but the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has just shown to me that while the two propositions came separately there was a request granted for the publication of $500 worth of the Hitchcock views and $500 worth of the Owen views, so that the two—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Neither of them had anything to do with the proposition which I have made, which was that the report of the committee—

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will allow me to finish the sentence, so that the two differing views should go to the country under the same identical provision of expenditure. That is what I thought was done and that is what I thought I was agreeing to; but a moment ago I either misunderstood the Senator when he said the Record did not show the agreement, or he misunderstood the Record. In any event, I am wrong about it. I have no sort of objection to the views of the minority going to the country separately, provided the views of the majority can have exactly the same advantage on exactly the same footing at the same expenditure; and the Record shows that that is the case.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The only difficulty is that the Senator entirely misapprehended my request. My request did not relate either—

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I did not misunderstand the Senator's request. What I misunderstood was the Senator's statement that the Record did not show—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, the Record does not show what I want it to show.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the request of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROPOSED FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order of business now is the consideration of a concurrent resolution coming over from a previous day, proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the resolution be modified by striking out "24th" and inserting "26th."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks permission to modify the concurrent resolution by striking out "24th" and inserting "26th" in lieu thereof. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is modified as requested.

Mr. MYERS. I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the concurrent resolution as modified.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 10) as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 26th day of November, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I move to lay the concurrent resolution on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that to-morrow at the proper time, when the banking and currency bill is laid before the Senate, I shall address the Senate on the subject of banking and currency legislation.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask that the print in parallel columns of House bill 7837 be printed further so as to show, on the left-hand page, the House bill as it stands without amendment. I make the request at the instance of a number of Senators who are not quite content with this form of the print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the Senator's request; but it occurred to me that while he was making that request he could add to the usefulness of this document if instead of these blank spaces where simply a note is printed he would have printed the section of the bill reported by one of the branches of the committee, the same as is done on the other side.

For instance, turn to page 3. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that one side of the page is blank, with simply a note there. I think that is rather misleading. When you examine this document, it does not give you an idea as to just exactly what the other section of the committee has reported. On these pages why are not both bills printed instead of one side being left blank?

Mr. OWEN. They are both printed. The only thing is that the language in one case is longer than in the other, which obviously makes necessary certain blank spaces.

Mr. NORRIS. I can see how that might occur; but from the notes that are printed in the blank spaces I judge that is not the case here. I have not had time to examine the print in detail.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the next page, which gives him exactly what he wants. On the left-hand side, under the heading "Owen substitute," the Senator will find section 2 as amended by the Owen section of the committee, and on the other side he will find the same section as amended by the Hitchcock section of the committee, if I may use those terms.

Mr. NORRIS. Right on that point, that page calls to our attention another thing.

Mr. OWEN. There is so much conversation going on that it is impossible for me to hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate please preserve order? The Chair does not wish to have the business of the Senate again suspended in order to obtain order; but he will be compelled to do it unless Senators preserve order, as requested.

Mr. NORRIS. This is the suggestion I wish to make to the Senator from Oklahoma: One column is headed "Owen substitute," and the other "Hitchcock amendment." As I understand, the two reports occupy the same position. One is just as much a report as the other. Why are they not named the same? They ought either to be both called amendments or both called substitutes.

Mr. OWEN. The reason of that, Mr. President, is that on Saturday I gave notice that I should offer the amendment as a substitute, and ask that the substitute be printed and lie on the table. It being desired that all three of the proposals should be laid before the Senate, this proposed substitute is printed along with the House bill, showing the interlineations, by which it is made to give both the House bill, the amendments proposed by the section of the committee agreeing with me, and the amendments proposed by the Senator from Nebraska and the members agreeing with him. In order to make it still more obvious what the bill is, I have proposed to have the House bill printed on the opposite page, section by section, in accordance with the request of various Senators on the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. As I have stated, I have no objection to the Senator's request; but I think the Senator did not understand just what I was attempting to do, at least, on the particular point to which I am now calling his attention. One column is headed "Owen substitute." The other parallel column is headed "Hitchcock amendment." Why should they not be both called substitutes or both called amendments?

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to the use of any word the Senator may desire. I intended to move this amendment as a substitute, and gave notice to that effect.

Mr. NORRIS. Will not the Senator include that change in his request? It is immaterial to me what he calls them, but they ought to be designated in the same way.

Mr. OWEN. This use of the terms was not at my instance. I did not have anything to say about it. I simply asked that these provisions should be printed in parallel columns, so that the Senate would have before it all three proposals. I gave notice on Saturday that I should offer to-day my amendment as a substitute; and I suppose because of that notice the printers designated this as a substitute.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not criticizing the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no; I do not so understand the Senator's remarks.

Mr. NORRIS. I simply call his attention to the two headings there. I think he will see at once that they ought to be the same, and I suggest that he include that in his request.

Mr. OWEN. No; I have no request to make on the subject. I do not know whether the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Hitchcock] desires to move to strike out my proposed substitute and insert his own, or not.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it is not a question of what the Senator from Oklahoma wants, nor of what the Senator from Nebraska wants. We shall be sending out these documents at the request of citizens who are interested in the matter, and we want to convey to them the correct idea.

Mr. OWEN. I ask, then, that in the reprint the term "substitute" be struck out of the print, and it be made to read "Owen amendment."

Mr. NORRIS. All right; that is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. OWEN. I think that will meet the proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OWEN. I now ask that within the limit of $500 a sufficient number of these documents (S. Doc. No. 242) be printed for the use of the country, in order to supply the demand for them, which, I am told, will be very considerable.

Mr. STONE. The Senator means containing the three propositions?

Mr. OWEN. The three propositions; yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. Morning business is closed. The consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration House bill 7837, known as the banking and currency bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7837) to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, House bill 7837 has been reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency without recommendation, the committee having divided into two sections—six on one side and six on the other. There has been printed, first, the House bill without amendment; second, the House bill as proposed to be amended by the chairman of the committee and his Democratic associates; and, third, the House bill as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and his Republican associates. The views of each section of the committee have been printed in Report 133 as appendices.

On Saturday last I gave notice that to-day I should move to amend the House bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting the House bill as amended by the Democratic section of the committee.

I have proposed this substitute merely as a matter of parliamentary convenience, the proposed substitute being merely the House bill with numerous unimportant changes in phraseology, with some changes of considerable importance. It will greatly facilitate the consideration of the bill to use the substitute in lieu of considering every one of the changes made in the House bill.

This bill probably is the most important measure that has been presented to the country since the Civil War. The American banking system has had some very serious defects. The principal defect of our system has been that the country has had no adequate protection against panics, so that from time to time the country has been shaken to its foundations by the severest financial panics, throwing into chaos our commerce, our manufactures, and our industries, from which the recovery in some cases has taken as much as four or five years. This bill is intended to correct the chief defects in our system.

The last great panic which shocked this country was that of 1907, in which, beginning in January with some measure of unrest, interest rates began to go through violent fluctuations, running on the New York Stock Exchange from as low as 1½ per cent to as high as 45 per cent in January, 1907; a like fluctuation in March from 2 to 25 per cent; and in October going through such fluctuations so that on the New York Stock Exchange money commanded as high as 125 per cent interest, with the most tremendous fluctuations in the price of stocks, and, indeed, in the price of other forms of property which apparently had no relation whatever to the stock exchange, because of the interruption of the credit system of the country.

These extreme disturbances in the interest rates were attended with the most tremendous changes in the selling price of the principal stocks, a few examples of which I present:

The beneficiaries of this panic were those who could command cash and who had prepared themselves for the cataclysm which engulfed everybody but themselves.

Because of the tremendous national catastrophe of 1907, which Senator Aldrich estimated to have cost us over two thousand millions of dollars, the entire country demanded some prompt relief. A measure was brought in in Congress by Mr. Aldrich which finally culminated in the legislation known as the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, which undertook to give some measure of temporary relief by the organization of credit associations, by which currency to the possible extent of $500,000,000 could be obtained against the combined assets of the associations. While that measure was very defective in numerous particulars, and while it did not at all reach the fundamental defects of our banking system, it at least afforded some measure of protection in abating a panic and in moderating its injurious effects.

The responsibility of the authorities then in charge of the Government for the panic of 1907 I pointed out on the floor of the Senate on Tuesday, February 25, 1908, showing that they had rejected a plan offered as an amendment to the act amending the national-bank act of 1900, known as the Aldrich bill of that date.

Senator James K. Jones, on the 6th of February, 1900 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1534), offered the following proposed amendment, which I had the honor to draft and which would have given the country protection from the panic of 1907 if Mr. Aldrich had had the wisdom to have adopted it:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to have printed and to keep on hand United States Treasury notes under a special account to be called the "emergency circulation fund." Such notes shall be full legal tender. Any citizen of the United States shall have the right to deposit United States bonds under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and to receive from such fund 90 per cent of the face value of such bonds in United States Treasury notes, and shall have the right at any time within 12 months to redeem such bonds by repaying in United States Treasury notes the amount so received by him on account of such bonds, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum on such amount. Failure to redeem such bonds within the limit of 12 months shall operate as a forfeiture of such bonds to the United States, and such bonds shall be sold to the highest bidder in the open market, and the balance, after the payment of the principal of the amount advanced, the interest on the same, and the expenses, shall be paid to the former owner of such bonds. Any moneys received from such sale may be exchanged with other moneys in the Treasury, so that this fund shall consist alone of Treasury notes. The principal of all sums so advanced when repaid shall be returned to the "emergency circulation fund," and all interest upon such sums shall be passed to the credit of the Treasury under miscellaneous receipts.

His refusal to accept it made him and his party associates directly responsible for the panic of 1907, or at least for the sin of omission which permitted this panic to occur.

The Vreeland-Aldrich bill of 1908 took the preliminary steps, however, looking to a thoroughgoing investigation of the banking system of the United States. The National Monetary Commission was authorized to make a searching investigation and inquiry and to make proper report to the Congress of the United States as to suitable remedies. This commission made a careful and searching investigation of the banking systems of the entire civilized world, giving a complete report of the banking systems of the German Empire, of France, of Belgium, of Holland, of England, of the European countries, and also of Japan, Canada, and Mexico, giving a full account of the banking systems of the various States and of the United States.

The report of the National Monetary Commission was published during several years in 33 volumes and a vast amount of literature assembled, making a library of between 2,500 and 3,000 volumes. This work involved a public expenditure of nearly $300,000. At its conclusion the National Monetary Commission recommended a central bank controlled by the banks of the country, a voluntary association, however, with numerous powers, which I will not here recount. See Senate bill 7, present session.

This measure was presented throughout the country in the various States before numerous gatherings of bankers and business men and credit men. It was urged very strongly by a vigorous propaganda, and finally was approved by the American Bankers' Association.

The matter became a question of public concern. It became a question of party division, and the Democratic National Party in Baltimore passed a resolution condemning the proposed central bank plan, condemning it in the following words, which I wish to call to the attention of Senators:

We oppose the so-called Aldrich bill or the establishment of a central bank.

These words appear in the record of the official proceedings of the Democratic national convention. Strangely enough, in the campaign book following the letter "f" was inserted in some way unknown, so as to make the language read, "We oppose the so-called Aldrich bill for the establishment of a central bank," making a complete change of meaning.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President—

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In this connection it may be interesting to the Senator from Oklahoma and others also to know that I caused an examination of the daily papers printed the day following the convention, and that some of them printed the word "for" and others published it "or." Possibly the most accurate paper in the United States, the New York Herald, published it "for."

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the official record said "or," and who was responsible for the insertion of the letter "f," making it read "for" instead of "or," has not been sufficiently disclosed. But there are interests in the country standing strongly for a central bank that might be able to account for this sin of commission, if it be a sin of commission.

At all events, Mr. President, the people of the United States profoundly objected to the Aldrich plan of a central bank because the plan proposed to put into the hands of private persons the control of the credit system of the United States, which already had been so far concentrated in private hands as to have become a national scandal and a national danger of vast importance.

The bill was condemned by public sentiment, so far that although it was presented to the Senate of the United States, with the party in power supposed to be very friendly to those who were advancing the bill, that measure never received any consideration in the last Congress and has not been seriously advanced in this Congress, although it was introduced into the Senate as Senate bill No. 7.

Mr. President, not only has this matter, therefore, been considered during the last five years, but during the summer before last, beginning in May, 1912, there was a very careful examination made by one branch of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, under the management of Mr. Pujo, acting as chairman of that subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, into the so-called Money Trust. It was a very remarkable investigation, covering several thousand pages of printed matter, with a most illuminating report, prepared under the direction of the committee and drafted by one of the ablest and most patriotic men in the United States—Samuel Untermyer, of New York—showing that a fraction over a hundred men exercised dominating control over property amounting to $22,000,000,000, an unthinkable sum, practically a third of the national wealth, excluding the land of the country.

The Pujo examination verified what was generally well understood, that so far had the concentration of financial and commercial power proceeded in this country that a handful of men exercised practically commercial and financial supremacy over the people of the United States; that they could at their will shake the foundations of the country; that they could at their pleasure cause not only stringency, but, what is far more dangerous, could carry those stringencies of credit to a point of absolute and overwhelming panic that could close the doors of the banks of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific in a single day.

I shall not pretend to believe for one moment that the panic of 1907 was an accident. It is a long story. I can not at this time go into that story, but I profoundly believe that the result in October, 1907, was a part of a concerted plan by which a few men did two things, first, enriched themselves on the one hand at the expense of the Nation, and administered what they conceived to be a terrifying political rebuke to the administration then in power.

I have always contended that a drastic congressional investigation of this panic should have been made and its promoters and beneficiaries exposed to full public view.

The Pujo investigation did not end this inquiry into our banking system. The chairman of another branch of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, Mr. GLASS, of Virginia, who is justly entitled to very great credit in preparing and helping to perfect this bill, began the consideration of the question with a view to framing a bill to afford adequate remedy to this country against the exercise of individual unrestrained and irresponsible power over the business men of this country. That committee patiently heard the representatives of the great banking institutions of the country, of the great commercial houses of the country, of financial experts, and their investigations were printed in a volume of over 700 printed pages.

Nor was that the end of the investigation. I refer to these investigations because it has been given out to the country in various ways that the Congress of the United States was dealing with this matter with extreme haste, that Congress was rushing through a measure affecting the interests of the country without suitable inquiry or examination. I remind Senators that when the Aldrich bill was proposed to be submitted to the Senate the very men who recently have said "do not be in haste" were at that time urging haste on a proposal which would have concentrated in private hands the control of the credit system of the United States.

But this was not all. In addition to the investigation of the Monetary Commission, the investigation of the Pujo committee, of the Glass committee, numerous hearings were extended to representatives of the American Bankers' Association by those who were charged with the duty of making a preliminary draft for the consideration of their colleagues, and when these hearings had been much extended finally there was a preliminary draft made of this bill.

But before it was ever submitted it was considered by many thoughtful, careful men, various amendments suggested, various amendments made, and finally it was brought into the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives and there discussed. It was afterwards discussed in the Democratic conference of Members of the House of Representatives, and then discussed on the floor of the House of Representatives, and finally came to this body on the 18th of September last. But before it came here the members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate had been giving this matter attention, had been studying it, had been considering it, and they began their formal hearings on the 2d of September last. Sixteen days before the bill reached the Senate they began to take evidence upon this question, and finally concluded the taking of evidence on the 25th of October, and submitted it to the Senate in three volumes, including something over 3,200 printed pages of matter. We heard at length the representatives of the banks, the representatives of business interests, of credit associations, of clearing houses, of financial experts, and of interested citizens not claiming to be experts. The committee, with great patience and industry, gave a careful consideration to various groups of people, and finally submitted to the Senate as a Senate document these hearings.

So, Mr. President, it is impossible for anyone to contend that the Congress of the United States has not given this matter the most infinite pains and considerate care.

It finally transpired that the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate could not come to an agreement on the amendments which they thought should be made to the bill. But, Mr. President, I think the country is to be congratulated on the extent to which the members of the committee did agree. They did agree upon many questions of fundamental and far-reaching importance.

They agreed upon the necessity for a greater concentration of the banking reserves of the country;

They agreed upon the extent to which the volume of these reserves should be concentrated;

They agreed substantially upon the volume of the capital of the proposed banks;

They agreed upon the mobilization of such reserves;

They agreed upon the promotion of an open discount market;

They agreed upon the provision for elastic currency;

They agreed upon the issuance of Federal reserve notes;

They agreed that the Federal reserve notes should be the obligations of the United States;

They agreed that the system should be the regional Federal reserve bank system, instead of a central bank; and, finally,

They agreed that the control of the system itself should be in the hands of the Government.

The points of disagreement were as to the number of banks. One-half of the committee, I think it may be fairly stated, believed as an economic proposition that it would be better to have a central bank; and their point of view was, of course, necessarily influenced by that opinion, and naturally in drawing a bill they would be influenced in drafting the bill by that consideration.

The points of difference between the two sections of the committee were upon the number of the banks, the method of subscribing for the stock of such banks, the method of electing the directors of such banks, the method of administering the regional reserve banks. These differences arose, as I have said, because there were two schools of thought in the committee, one believing in a central bank, administered by the Government, and the other believing with the House of Representatives and with the President that these banks should be regional banks, controlled by the banks under supervisory control of the Government.

Mr. President, the purposes of this great measure should be kept steadily in mind in considering the bill.

PURPOSES OF THE MEASURE.

The purposes of this measure are:

First. To insure the stability of our commerce, of our manufacturing enterprises, of our industries, and the safety of our merchants and manufacturers and business men generally.

Second. To make available effective commercial credit for individuals engaged in manufacture, in commerce, in finance, and in business to the extent of their just deserts.

Third. To put an end to the pyramiding of the bank reserves of the country and the use of such reserves for gambling purposes on the stock exchange.

Fourth. To keep constantly employed the productive energies of the Nation. And this consideration is of vital importance to the laboring men of the country who are dependent for their daily bread upon constant, regular employment. Our crimes, our vices, our chief social evils come from lack of regular remunerative employment.

In order to accomplish these purposes of the bill, there are certain great fundamentals recognized by the best experts as essential and necessary:

First. The proper concentration and mobilization of the bank reserves of the country under the control of the banks themselves, safeguarded by a strong governmental supervision.

Second. A suitable banking capital, with a double liability as a margin of safety of the reserves of the Nation, as a margin of safety of the Government deposits which are expected to be placed in the Federal reserve banks.

Third. The authorizing of the issuance of elastic currency against liquid commercial bills under proper safeguards.

Fourth. The establishment of an open market for liquid commercial bills by providing through the reserve banks a constant and unfailing market for such bills at a steady rate of interest.

And, finally, for the protection of the gold reserve of the United States by the ability, through the Federal reserve board, to raise the rate of interest through the Federal reserve banks and to require them, if necessary, to provide against the contingency of gold shipments by buying foreign bills in advance (when rates are low and credits expanding), which can be sold to avoid gold shipments, and in that way stabilize the gold reserves of this country and prevent them from being withdrawn. I remind you our great credit system, which has now 25,000 independent banks and approximately twenty thousand million dollars of deposits, rests at last upon certain reserves of actual money; and if that money, which is fundamentally gold or its equivalent, be withdrawn from this country our commercial fabric would crumble, because every dollar of lawful money is the basis of over $12 of credit. Therefore it is of supreme importance that we should be able to protect the gold of this country against being drawn away from the banks, where it now operates as a reserve upon which credits are built up. The withdrawal of reserve money means compulsory contraction of twelve times as much credit, loans, and deposits.

This consideration is of supreme importance in dealing with our national banking system and in affording it adequate protection.

MECHANISM OF THE SYSTEM.

Mr. President, the mechanism of this system by which we propose to accomplish these beneficent results is a system of 8 regional banks. The House of Representatives provided for not less than 12 regional banks. Some have believed that the smaller number would be better; it is a matter upon which men divide; but I call to your attention that England is only a very small geographical area, and yet they have one of these great public utility banks—the Bank of England. Scotland has its own system; Ireland has its own system; the Netherlands has its own system, its own public utility bank.

The Bank of Belgium serves as a public utility bank for Belgium. France has its own public utility bank; the German Empire has its own great public utility bank, serving the functions which we expect to be served for this country by these Federal reserve banks. But I call to your attention that the area of France is less than that of Texas; that the German Empire is smaller in area than Texas; that England and Belgium and Holland, which have three of these great public utility banks, has a smaller area than Oklahoma. So in this country of ours, which is 3,000 miles from east to west, and which is 1,500 miles from north to south, if it shall have 8 of these regional banks, or if it shall have 12 of these regional banks, it will still have a less number many times over, considering the distances to be traveled, than has Europe. Eight banks in the United States would give an area of about 700,000 square miles to each on an average, an area about 20 times the size of the great State of Indiana.

These proposed Federal banks are intended to be controlled by a board of nine directors of three classes—class A, class B, and class C. It is proposed that class A shall be chosen by the bankers, to consist of bankers in touch with the banking business, experts in their line. It is proposed that class B shall be chosen also by the bankers, but they shall be business men and not bankers, representative of the commercial and industrial interests of the section from which they are chosen; and class C, consisting of three members to be chosen by the Federal reserve board, representing the interests of the United States, one of the members of class C to be the chairman of the board and to be Federal reserve agent in charge of the interests of the Government, thus assuring complete publicity to the action of the banks, insuring fairness of dealing on the part of the directors of the banks, protecting the Government in its interests in furnishing Federal reserve notes to the Federal reserve banks, safeguarding the collateral upon which these notes will be based, and retiring the notes when they come back, having served their purpose. Another member of class C would be a deputy chairman and a deputy Federal reserve agent, so as to have at all times at hand a proper representative of the Government of the United States in dealing with these regional reserve banks.

Moreover, in order that the members of class A and class B directors should be judiciously chosen, to avoid any attempt on the part of any particular set of banks to control the whole six directors, it is proposed to classify these banks into the banks of the largest size, the banks of medium size, and the banks of the smallest size, allowing the small banks to choose one of class A and one of class B, the medium-sized banks to choose one of class A and one of class B, and the larger banks to choose one of class A and one of class B. In that way each one of the classes of the banks will have their proper representation upon the board. Each bank has one vote.

The entire board and all the officers may be removed by the Federal reserve board for cause. The supervisory and examining power by the Government is complete. The bank rate may be fixed by the Government board and Government deposits may be made or withdrawn. Federal reserve notes may be loaned or refused, and at such rates as the Government may fix. The public interests are completely and most abundantly protected.

The point has been raised—and that is in issue between the two sections of the committee—that we ought not to allow the banks to have a majority of directors, but that the Government ought to name a majority of the directors. The reason why those agreeing with me and with the House of Representatives believed it was wiser to have the banks name a majority of these directors was this: We are requiring of the banks to put their reserves into these reserve banks; we are requiring the national banks to put approximately $400,000,000 into these great reserve banks and inviting the State banks and trust companies to contribute in proportion, for their own safeguarding. It is true, but also for the safeguarding of the national financial system and our national commerce; but we are requiring them to put in $400,000,000. When we do that, it is going too far to say to the men from whom we require these reserves to be so placed that they shall not be permitted to safeguard those funds. It is our duty to them, it is our duty to the country, to put upon them the responsibility of safeguarding their own funds by giving them a majority of the board of directors in those banks. Moreover, we must rely upon the friendly cooperation of these banks in order to induce them to put these reserves in the hands of the Federal reserve banks.

I remind the Senate that there are now over 18,000 State banks and trust companies and only a little over 7,000 national banks. If we impose conditions too harsh and too unjust we will be met in all human likelihood with the wholesale withdrawal from the national-bank system of the national banks from whom we are asking $400,000,000 of reserves. Shall we permit this system to become a failure by imposing conditions so harsh and so ungenerous as to alienate those whose cooperation and friendly sympathy is necessary to the best development of this system?

Moreover, we are proposing to put approximately $200,000,000 of Government funds in the Federal reserve banks, and if the banks are not stockholders, if they have no double liability as stockholders, we go before the country as placing the Government funds in the hands of the Federal reserve banks without a sufficient safeguard of capital and double liability of responsible stockholders. It is a serious consideration.

That is the reason, again, why the division occurred in the committee, those agreeing with the chairman of the committee and with the House of Representatives believing that the banks should be the stockholders, that the banks should have a double liability, and that the banks should be charged with the safeguarding of this system and with its success as stockholders, while, on the other hand, those disagreeing with us have believed that it was better to let this stock be sold to the miscellaneous public in order, as they would say, to popularize the stock. The value of the double liability of stockholders belonging to the miscellaneous public is a questionable matter. Some of them would be good and some of them would not, perhaps. Furthermore, it would be difficult in the extreme to enforce a liability of that character because of the multiplicity of stockholders and because of the possibilities of evasion.

The plan and purpose of this bill to give stability, to prevent panics, to make credit available, to end pyramiding of reserves, to abate stock gambling—all of those considerations urge that the Federal reserve banks should be banks for banks; bankers' banks; and not a public bank competing with the banks for business.

Our system in this country is entirely different from that of Europe. We have pursued in this country the system of developing independent banks. We have 25,000 individual independent competitive banks, while in Europe they have joint-stock company banks, gigantic in size, with thousands of branches. In this country each bank stands upon its own foundation. In that way we have developed in this country a wonderful banking system, which now, in the light of time, is shown to be far outstripping the European system. We have built up in this country the most gigantic banking capital and resources of any country in the world, and that is because of the independence and of the liberty of the little bank which springs up in a country village, which there safeguards the savings of the citizens at the crossroads and there takes the savings and invests them in local enterprises.

If the 25,000 banks were merely branches of some gigantic institution, it would abstract the earnings from the country village, from the small town, and from the cities and concentrate them in the great centers. The American system is to develop the immediate locality, to build up every section of the country; and our American banking system is better than the European system for that reason; but it carries with it the frailty of having made each bank dependent upon itself and upon its own reserve, and that has proven to be the dangerous weakness of the American banking system, because whenever any exigency threatens every one of the 25,000 banks begins to protect itself as well as it can by increasing its own reserves at the expense of others and by bringing its reserves home and concentrating them where they really have no need for them, but where they concentrate cash as reserves because they are afraid of panics, afraid of stringency—and they may well have fears if there be no place under the Government patronage and safeguard where they can get accommodation when they need it. They thus accentuate and bring about the very danger they fear. It must be remembered that under the credit system the banks owe about twelve times as much money as there is money in the banks.

They are credit merchants; they take credit from their depositors; they lend it on negotiable notes; they lend it on securities; and they are both debtors and creditors on a gigantic scale, and their welfare is inextricably interwoven with the welfare of the commerce and industry of this Nation. They deserve well of the country; they deserve the safeguards of their own Government; and nothing should be done, in my judgment, that would in any degree be unfair to the banks of the country; but, at the same time, the representatives of the great American people should frame a system by which it will be impossible for men intrusted with the credits of the country using their power injuriously, wrongfully, tyrannically, and with unseemly selfishness. Banks can kill any enterprise they choose if they deny credit. No man can build a railroad without bank credit; no man can build a manufacturing enterprise for any of the great necessities of life without relying upon the banks. We had brought before our committee some very striking evidence bearing upon this subject; but no evidence is necessary, because it is perfectly obvious that where there is a concerted denial of credit the banks can destroy any enterprise.

CONCENTRATION AND MOBILIZATION.

Mr. President, we are proposing to concentrate these funds; and there will be concentrated in the hands of these eight regional banks, or reserve banks, approximately $400,000,000 of reserves. We propose a capital of $106,000,000, amounting to 6 per cent of the capital and surplus of the national banks of the country, of which we propose that one-half shall be paid in during a period of six months after the system is established, making a total payment of $53,000,000 on capital stock. We propose that the Government funds shall be concentrated in these banks to a certain extent, amounting probably to one hundred and fifty or two hundred million dollars. Then we propose by this system to mobilize these reserves.

I call the attention of the Senate to the important difference between mobilization and concentration. The terms are sometimes in error used synonymously. They are not synonymous at all. In reality you may have complete concentration without any mobility whatever. You may have these reserves concentrated and put in investment bonds, where they will have no mobility. The mobility of the great public-utility banks of Europe consists in their holding their resources in liquid form, as gold, as legal-tender money, as short-time liquid commercial bills, self-liquidating because drawn against commercial goods which have found a purchaser and which will be paid in cash upon short maturities. In that way they have made mobile the reserves of Europe.

More than that, as a part of this mobility of reserves they have built up a great, open discount market, which we have not in the United States—an open discount market in which there are many dealers, private bankers as well as joint-stock companies and banks of all classes, handling acceptances drawn against actual shipments of goods, so that they carry in their portfolios, as if they were cash, these bills of short maturities. They are not accommodation bills. They are not investment securities. They are liquid commercial bills, acceptances, drawn against the shipment of actual products which have found a purchaser and which absolutely will be paid on the day when they fall due. In these bills the great public-utility banks of Europe deal by wholesale.

The president of the Crédit Lyonnais, for instance, said that he could liquidate his entire bank as fast as the physical work could be performed because of the liquid character of its assets and because the Bank of France stood ready to take those liquid bills off its hands.

The value of keeping these reserves in a mobile form and the value of this open discount market is that it will always—not sometimes, not in good times only, but always and without fail—afford to a business man entitled to credit the opportunity to get credit according to his just deserts.

It is unnecessary for me to point out how in the United States this has so far failed that in times of stringency, much more in times of panic, men go trembling, with hat in hand, seeking credit to which they are entitled and which they ought to have merely for the asking upon the class of securities which they can offer.

But we have gone further in proposing this plan of mobilization in the present bill. We have provided for the issuance of elastic currency, by which the Government of the United States places its strong hand behind the banking system of the United States in the support of our commerce and industry. These elastic Federal reserve notes are the best-secured notes that ever have been devised in any banking system in the world. I call attention to the character of the safeguards of these notes.

The first safeguard behind these notes is a commercial bill—a commercial bill of short maturity; a commercial bill drawn against an actual commercial transaction, against an actual shipment of goods which have found a purchaser. I remind you that in the case of such a commercial bill approved by a solvent bank, extending credit to a citizen whose credit is deemed good by that bank, on a note maturing within 90 days, the chance of the failure of such a man or such a note is not one in ten thousand. But the second security is that the commercial bill put up as collateral for these Federal reserve notes has the indorsement of the member bank. In view of the fact that under this bill the member bank is subjected to frequent examinations of a thoroughgoing kind, the chance of the member bank so indorsing such a commercial bill failing within the same 90 days is not one chance in twenty-five thousand; and the chance of the individual who signed the bill and the member bank both failing within 90 days is as ten thousand multiplied by twenty-five thousand, or about one chance in two hundred and fifty millions.

But in addition to that there is the fourth safeguard—the member bank's stock in the Federal reserve bank. There is a fifth safeguard—the amount of the reserve of the member bank in the Federal reserve bank. There is a sixth safeguard—the double liability of the stockholders of the member bank, if the member bank itself be deficient in meeting its obligation. There is a seventh safeguard—the 33½ per cent gold reserve required to be kept against the Federal reserve notes put in circulation by a Federal reserve bank. There is an eighth safeguard—the earning power upon the stock of the Federal reserve bank. There is a ninth safeguard—the Federal reserve note is a first lien upon all the assets of the Federal reserve bank. It has a tenth safeguard—the surplus of the Federal reserve bank. It has an eleventh safeguard—the double liability of all the member banks belonging to a Federal reserve bank. It has a twelfth safeguard—the double liability of the stockholders of the member banks belonging to a Federal reserve bank. And, finally, if that were not enough, it has behind it the taxing power of the United States and it is made receivable for public dues.

There never has been a note so safeguarded by any Government in the world. Yet these safeguards are thrown around these notes without any complicated machinery whatever. It is perfectly simple and perfectly plain. If a member bank wants to get these notes, it comes to the Federal reserve bank and brings its qualified bills, and gets against those bills Federal reserve notes to meet the seasonal demand.

I do not believe there will be any urgent demand for these notes for some time; but if there should be any demand by our national commerce, this bill provides, to meet the exigency, money of the highest class, an obligation of the United States safeguarded in the 12 ways I have described.

The banks very urgently contended that these notes should not be the notes of the Government; that they should be the notes of the Federal reserve bank only. I do not think it expedient to take the time of the Senate to discuss that feature now. Probably there will be abundant opportunity to bring up that matter at a later time. Democrats and most Republicans believe in the Government issuing the money of the country. The Democratic national platform has three times declared the doctrine in the last dozen years or so.

INTEREST RATE.

Another very important feature of the bill is that it places in the hands of the Federal reserve board the power to fix the rate of interest. This power primarily is placed in the hands of the Federal reserve bank directors; but the final determination of the rate is put in the hands of the Federal reserve board, in order to obtain the power which is necessary to protect the country as to the gold reserve by raising the rate where necessary; to protect the country against undue inflation; against undue expansion; against a speculative fever, by raising the rate, and, by forecasting the future, to protect the country in advance against any dangerous improvidence that might be brought about, by whatever cause.

Another very important feature is that allowing the Federal reserve board to fix the interest rate enables a standard to be set by which the business men of the country can hope to ascertain and know reasonably in advance what money will cost them in their enterprises, and, by knowing that they will have a stable rate of interest, to forecast the future with some degree of certainty.

One of the great injuries to this country has been that business men have been deterred from going into enterprises of various kinds because they could not foresee the future. They could not foretell what violent fluctuations of interest rates might occur. They could not tell when some tremendous stringency of credit might take place. I have placed before the Senate, in the Record and in these appendices, the astonishing record of the violent fluctuation of interest rates in the United States as compared with the stability, the uniformity, the steadfastness of rates in Europe. These tables I have laid before you. I placed them in the Record a month ago. I repeat them now in the appendices to my report on this bill; and I solicit from Senators their careful and conscientious attention to these interest rates. Let it be understood that in the American Republic we are going to have, in the future, the same stability of interest rates that prevails in Europe.

I call your attention, for example, to the fact that for 75 per cent of the time the rate of the Bank of France has not exceeded 3 per cent, and over 85 per cent of the time has not exceeded 4 per cent; that the Bank of Belgium has not exceeded 6 per cent in 50 years, even with a panic affecting the interest rates in England or in Germany; but that the interest rates in Germany and in England have been of wonderful stability.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the bill he proposes provides that the interest rate must be the same all over the country, or will it be different in different reserve regions?

Mr. OWEN. No, Mr. President; it is left primarily to the local board, and then to the final determination of the Federal reserve board. The reason for that is that it was believed that the conditions in one section of the country might be sufficiently different from those in another to justify at times a different rate of interest.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that out on the frontier what purports to be the interest rate is something more than the interest rate. It also involves the element of insurance, because in some classes of loans on the frontier there is greater jeopardy than in the portions of the country where conditions are more settled.

It was thought that occasions might arise in some particular section when there might grow up, for some reason not now foreseen, a spirit of speculation which it might be desirable to control to some extent by the rate of interest; or an occasion might arise where a section was languishing for want of proper support, which would justify a lower rate of interest.

Mr. NORRIS rose.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator further whether this is one of the points of difference or agreement between his section of the committee and the other section. In other words, does the other section propose that the rate of discount shall be the same in all Federal reserve banks?

Mr. OWEN. At this moment I do not recall as to that. I remind the Senator that the print has come out only during the last day or two, and I have not had an opportunity to inspect it sufficiently to be thoroughly advised as to its contents.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The question raised by my colleague from Nebraska is hardly a practical question as it relates to the bill I have reported, for the reason that we divide the country into only four districts—one headed in New York, one in Chicago, one in St. Louis, and one in San Francisco. The remote regions of the country which might fall in one of the eight districts proposed by the bill reported by the Senator from Oklahoma will be included in our bill in either New York, St. Louis, Chicago, or San Francisco, and just as low rates as prevail in New York, Chicago, St. Louis, or San Francisco will prevail throughout the whole region covered by the reserve banks in those cities. So it is not a very important question in the bill which I had the honor to report whether any provision of that sort is made or not. We think the rate in Chicago will probably be as low as in New York, and in St. Louis it will probably be as low as in Chicago.

Mr. OWEN. I take it that under either proposal there would be substantially a uniform rate; but in the proposal which I had the honor to submit to the Senate there was the power, if the exigency should justify it, to make a different rate in a different district.

EARNINGS.

Now, Mr. President, we propose in this measure also that in the matter of the division of earnings the earnings for the bank stockholders should be 6 per cent and no more, and that all the remaining portion of the earnings should be used for building up the surplus and should belong to the Government. The reason of that policy is that we believe these great public-utility banks should not have as their motive or as their moving policy money-making for the stockholders; and, indeed, that is the policy which is pursued by the Bank of England, the Bank of France, and the Bank of Germany. They do not pursue the policy of taxing the commerce of the country "as much as the traffic will bear," to use the old phrase, in order to earn dividends and pay dividends to their stockholders, but they regard themselves as great public-utility banks. They do earn a satisfactory interest for the stockholders, but they do not pursue the policy of merely earning money for the stockholders. They regard themselves as the guardian of the public interest, the public welfare, the general welfare.

STATE BANKS AND TRUST COMPANIES.

We have provided in this measure that the State banks and trust companies desiring to avail themselves of the privileges of this act should have the right to come into the system upon the same terms, substantially, as the national banks, requiring them, however, to submit to a proper examination, to be assured that they were solvent, requiring them to comply with certain reasonable rules that now rest upon the national banks and which are set forth in some detail in the report which I have had the honor to submit.

I will call the attention of the Members of the Senate to the probable readjustments of cash under the reserve requirements of this bill, which have been worked out in some detail and submitted in the report. I will not trouble the Senate with going into the details of that mathematical calculation, although it is a very important one, and it is of the highest importance to the banks of the country that the questions involved should be intimately and analytically considered. I will call attention only to the final result.

If the national banks going into this system should avail themselves of one-third of the funds of the Federal reserve banks by rediscount, there would be a cash margin of $18,000,000. If they avail themselves of one-half of the resources of the Federal reserve banks, there would be $114,000,000 of cash surplus. If there should be two-thirds of the fund of the central reserve banks borrowed, there would be $219,000,000 of cash surplus.

But I call the attention of the Senate to the very important fact that the State banks, which have not in their vaults anything like so large a proportion of cash as the national banks, would have a possible deficit of $239,000,000 in cash, if every one of them should come in and if they should only avail themselves of the right of rediscount to the extent of one-half of the reserves which they themselves put into the system. But this, of course, could be offset by the Federal reserve notes—if they might be emitted and if they might be used as reserves—could be offset by a somewhat larger supply of Government funds which are available, because the Government has, in fact, more than $150,000,000 that could be placed with these banks. I have only made the estimate upon the basis of $150,000,000 of United States deposits. The Government, in fact, has over $250,000,000 it could use, not to mention $175,000,000 of Panama bonds due the general fund.

The cash could be further supplemented by the national-bank notes which are now not used as reserves by the national banks, but which are used as reserves by the State banks, the State banks having about $60,000,000 of the national-bank notes as reserves, while the national banks have about $40,000,000 which are not used as reserves, and there is about $45,000,000 in transit through the Treasury of the United States. So taking the whole amount outside of the pockets of the people of the issue of $722,000,000 of national-bank notes, there is outstanding in the hands of the banks and in the hands of the Treasury only about $145,000,000, and I see no reason why they might not be made reserves under that state of facts, remembering that those notes are in reality not mere asset notes against the credit of the banks emitting them, but that they are secured in every instance by the bonds of the United States, dollar for dollar.

Now, the power to permit the banks to count as reserves the national-bank notes and the Federal reserve notes, we propose to put into the hands of the Federal reserve board, so if it is found that there is need for additional cash when these banks come into the system there may be available sufficient cash. There is no question in this bill of more vital consequence than that subject.

Some of the banks have urged that we should lower the reserves in the reserve cities from 18 per cent, as proposed in this bill, to 15 per cent. Mr. Reynolds, of the Commercial Bank of Chicago, who is a representative banker of a very high class, has insisted upon that. I received a telegram this morning from the national banks of Kansas City urging that that should be done. I think it should be done, thus releasing a somewhat larger amount of actual cash, nearly sixty millions, which otherwise would be locked up in the vaults of the banks or in the Federal reserve banks.

The powers of the central reserve board are general supervisory powers.

POWERS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

To readjust districts created by the organization committee and create new ones.

To regulate the establishment of branches of Federal reserve banks within Federal reserve district in which bank is located.

To designate three (class C) of the nine members of the board of directors of each Federal reserve bank, one of these to be chairman of the board with the title of "Federal reserve agent," and one "deputy Federal reserve agent."

The Federal reserve agent to maintain a local office of the Federal reserve board on the premises of the Federal reserve bank. He shall make regular reports to Federal reserve board and be its official representative.

To remove any director or officer of a Federal reserve bank for cause stated.

To remove chairman of Federal reserve bank without notice.

To establish by-laws governing applications from State banks and trust companies.

"Of the six persons * * * appointed (by the President), one shall be designated governor and one vice governor of the Federal reserve board." The governor, subject to supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury and board, shall be the acting managing officer of the Federal reserve board.

To levy a semiannual assessment upon the Federal reserve banks for estimated expenses for succeeding six months, together with deficit carried forward.

To examine at its discretion the accounts, books, and affairs of each Federal reserve bank or member bank and to require such statements and reports as it may deem necessary.

To permit or require a Federal reserve bank to rediscount the paper of any other Federal reserve bank.

To suspend for a period not exceeding 30 days (and to renew such suspension for periods not to exceed 15 days) any and every reserve requirement specified in this act.

To supervise and regulate the issue and retirement of Treasury notes to Federal reserve banks.

To add to the number of cities classified as reserve and central reserve cities under existing law in which national banking associations are subject to the reserve requirements set forth in section 21 of this act, or to reclassify existing reserve or central reserve cities and to designate the banks therein situated as country banks, at its discretion.

To require the removal of officials of Federal reserve banks.

To require the writing off of doubtful or worthless assets upon the books and balance sheets of Federal reserve banks.

To suspend the further operations of any Federal reserve bank and appoint a receiver therefor.

To perform the duties, functions, or services specified or implied in this act.

To determine or define (subject to stipulations) the character of paper eligible for discount for member banks.

To prescribe regulations for purchase and sale by Federal reserve banks of bankers' bills, etc.

To review and determine the minimum rate of discount for member banks established by Federal reserve banks and fix weekly the discount rate reserve banks may discount for each other.

To authorize establishment of correspondents and agencies of Federal reserve banks in foreign countries.

To authorize the issue of Federal reserve Treasury notes.

To receive, through the local Federal reserve agent, applications from Federal reserve banks for notes, such applications to be accompanied by rediscounted notes for deposit as collateral security.

To require Federal reserve banks to maintain deposits in Treasury of United States in gold of 5 per cent or more of notes issued.

To grant in whole or in part or to reject entirely the application from Federal reserve banks for notes.

To establish rate of interest on notes issued.

To prescribe regulations for substitution of collateral.

To make and promulgate regulations governing the transfer of funds among Federal reserve banks.

To act, if desired, as clearing house for Federal reserve banks.

To require, in its discretion, Federal reserve banks to act as clearing houses for shareholding banks.

To require extra examinations of national banks when deemed necessary.

To determine and report annually to Congress fixed salaries of all bank examiners.

To assess upon banks in proportion to assets or resources the expenses of examinations.

To fix a date for such assessment.

To arrange for special or periodical examinations of member banks for account of Federal reserve banks.

To receive from Federal reserve banks information concerning the condition of any national bank in its district.

To order examinations of national banks in reserve cities as often as necessary.

To add to the list of cities in which national banks shall not be permitted to loan on real estate as described.

To receive applications from national banks having $1,000,000 or more capital for the establishment of branches in foreign countries, to reject or accept such applications, and to prescribe conditions under which such branches may be opened.

To require examinations of foreign branches as it may deem best.

I do not think that it is necessary to take the time of the Senate at this general presentation of the bill to discuss in detail those powers, except to say in a broad way that the powers are intended to cover the complete supervisory control of this system. It is perfectly obvious that these powers make it entirely unnecessary to deprive the banks of six directors on the Federal reserve bank board on any theory that the banks could use such powers injuriously. The Federal reserve board even has the power to remove the directors of the Federal reserve banks or any of their officers for cause, so that the supervisory control of the United States will be complete. But we have not believed it wise to charge the United States with the technical detailed administration of the banking business by making the Government entirely itself responsible by giving the United States a majority of the directors and charging the United States with the duty directly of extending credits to member banks through these directors and administering this gigantic system by purely public functionaries.

The sympathetic cooperation of the banks, the membership of the banks, is essential and should not be jeopardized.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRADY. I understand the bill provides that the directors elected by the different banks of the association elect the main director and that he is designated as the agent of the Government.

Mr. OWEN. The Federal reserve board names three of class C, one of them being the chairman of the board.

Mr. BRADY. And it is one of the three named by the Federal reserve board who is named as the agent of the Government?

Mr. OWEN. Yes. In order to bring the Federal reserve board into intimate touch with the conditions of the country we have provided for a Federal advisory counsel, each Federal reserve bank electing a man to represent them and to confer with the Federal reserve board, to obtain information from the Federal reserve board, and in that way to give complete publicity to the actions of the Federal reserve board, but more, to give the Federal reserve board the intimate knowledge of the conditions of business in each and every section of the country where there is established a Federal reserve bank. In that way it is hoped to make the Federal reserve board more efficient.

I need not say, Mr. President, that no one can have any doubt that the members of the Federal reserve board should be men of the most distinguished attainments, men who should rank favorably in comparison with members of the Supreme Court of the United States, because in reality this Federal reserve board will be a supreme court of American finance, safeguarding the commercial interests of this Nation, protecting our gold reserve, protecting our banking system, protecting our commercial system, protecting the individual credit of the private citizen, and giving him a fair deal in the struggle of commercial and business life, and seeing to it that every citizen shall receive the just amount of credit to which he is entitled by character and by resources.

ABATEMENT OF STOCK GAMBLING.

Mr. President, one of the most far-reaching results which will follow will be the abatement of the nuisance of the national menace of the stock-gambling operations in this country, because this measure proposes to gradually withdraw these reserves, which have heretofore been pyramided in the three great central reserve cities. I call the attention of the Senate to the peculiar situation in which a banker in a Federal reserve city finds himself. These reserves are pyramided there; under the custom 2 per cent is paid for the use of the funds; and he finds himself in an attitude where he is compelled to keep liquid, at whatever expense, a considerable volume of his resources over and above his 25 per cent reserve. He has no great public utility bank in this country to which he can go for credit. He has no open discount market in this country. He can not convert quickly into cash his liquid commercial bills. The only place that he can get his resources quickly in cash is upon the stock market. Therefore these men have been forced by the conditions surrounding them to lend money by hundreds of millions upon the stock exchange. When the time comes and they need the funds, under the hard rule which prevails on the New York Stock Exchange, that stock held on call can be sold on the stock market for cash. It may ruin the borrower; it may wipe out his margin; it may reduce him to bankruptcy; it may cause the most violent fluctuations of the interest rate; it may upset the interest rate, affecting the commercial life of the Nation; it may bring on a wholesale stringency of credit; it may involve the whole country in a disastrous panic; but it does bring the money; it does give the relief to the man who needs the money against that collateral.

So I think it is of great value to the great banks of the central reserve cities that they may have these Federal reserve banks established, and that they may get cash on their commercial bills in a quantity sufficient to meet whatever exigencies may arise.

We have been assured by some of the bankers of New York that they would be glad of the opportunity to withdraw their funds from the call market and place their funds at the service of the commerce and industry of our great Nation, and they will do that gladly and safely now, when these Federal reserve banks are established, where they can get the accommodation against their commercial bills.

Indeed, this bill goes further. It provides that a member bank, with the consent of the reserve board, may get accommodation against other classes of securities. That is an emergency measure, but it is an emergency measure of the highest importance. A bank may be subjected to some sudden demand. I remind you that the passing of a rumor around the country that a bank is not in a good condition may cause a run to be made upon the bank. I call your attention to the extraordinary spectacle at Kansas City a few years ago, when the National Bank of Commerce, one of the strongest and most powerful and solvent banks in the country, was compelled to stand up and be bled to death by a circular sent out by the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. to its agents throughout the country not to take any exchange on the National Bank of Commerce. It was a simple little circular; but they had thousands of agents, and every single corner of the country trembled immediately with the suggestion that the Bank of Commerce was in a failing condition.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator what excuse or pretense was given by the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. for sending out such a circular? It is a most remarkable statement. If I had ever heard it before, I had forgotten it.

Mr. OWEN. It is a fact.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt of it on the Senator's statement.

Mr. OWEN. I called the attention of the Senate to it five years ago.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I can answer the question.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. If my recollection serves me correctly, the only explanation ever made was that the company had the right to direct its agents to accept or refuse paper drawn upon any bank, and that it was within its constitutional rights. That, I think, is the only excuse that was ever offered.

Mr. THOMAS. If my statement is incorrect, I hope I will be corrected; but I assume that this is the same Waters-Pierce Oil Co. which has an enormous oil concession in the Republic of Mexico and which is said to be behind one or the other of the parties engaged in revolution there.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is difficult to ascertain the motives of men, but the motive which seemed to be behind this remarkable performance would suggest the ancient story of Naboth's vineyard. At all events, that circular led to the National Bank of Commerce, with $35,000,000 of deposits, standing there and paying out between $17,000,000 and $18,000,000 of cash before it finally failed and went into the hands of a receiver. Under such circumstances the Federal reserve bank system would make impossible the ruin of a great institution of that kind, and I pause to say that the institution afterwards proved to be solvent and is now a going concern in good condition.

But this bill provides, and it rightly provides, that in case of an emergency the Federal reserve bank, with the approval of the Federal reserve board, may extend the accommodation to a bank against its assets of whatever character, provided they are a good security. The central reserve city banks have little or no use for their present legal 25 per cent reserve, but work around a margin of 1 or 2 per cent reserve. This bill makes the whole reserve available.

REFUNDING 2 PER CENT BONDS.

Mr. President, the bill as passed by the House provided a method of refunding the bonds, providing that the Secretary of the Treasury might issue 3 per cent bonds, without the circulation privilege, in lieu of the 2 per cent bonds held by the national banks with the circulation privilege. The theory of that was that the Government would gain as much out of the interest on the Federal reserve notes issued through the Federal reserve banks as would compensate the Government for the payment of the 3 per cent interest on such bonds.

I think that calculation is properly made. But we have made a proposed change in this bill, allowing the Federal reserve banks to buy these 2 per cent bonds—that might be offered on the market by national banks not desiring to continue their circulation—and allowing the Federal reserve banks to issue Federal reserve bank notes against those bonds in lieu of the national bank notes retired.

There is no additional security, because the security is practically the same as now. At present the national bank that issues its notes against 2 per cent bonds does so against its own credit and bonds of the United States, the credit of the banks making amends for any supposed deficit of value in the 2 per cent bonds, if there be conceived to be any lack of value in the 2 per cent bonds. But in this case the Federal reserve bank, having probably an average of 2,000 member banks, and all those banks being good for such notes if emitted, the security is even better than under the old national bank system, without requiring any additional security.

Of course there would be in all human probability considerable gold reserve always available in addition. We expect by this system to have drift into these Federal reserve banks a very large part of the gold supply of the country. It will drift in by gravity, not only because the people are satisfied with the national bank notes as pocket money, but would be satisfied with the Federal reserve bank notes as pocket money; and naturally as these gold certificates flow through these Federal reserve banks, since it is a condition upon which they may emit Federal reserve notes that they have a gold reserve, they will probably retain those gold certificates and gold, and in that way the Federal reserve banks will steadily acquire a very large gold holding.

CLEARING CHECKS.

Mr. President, there is one other item that I think the attention of the Senate should be called to, and that is the clearing and collecting of checks. The House bill provided that the Federal reserve banks might clear checks at par for member banks. We have changed that so as to provide that the cost shall be ascertained and fixed by the Federal reserve board. We believe that it will serve a very great and useful purpose to provide for the clearing of checks to the extent that the member banks desire to send checks through the Federal reserve banks. Take one reserve bank, for instance, at St. Louis, with 2,500 member banks, each bank keeping its reserve there, each bank remitting to that center its checks, due from other banks, belonging to the same system, and all that will be necessary will be to make a cross entry upon the books of the Federal reserve bank, and a most economical adjustment of credits could be arranged in that way without loss of time. It would greatly increase the velocity of the check system. It would make a check more valuable. It would enable the banks to increase their deposits, because their checking deposits would be more valuable, and at the same time the complaint of the country banks that these banks would be in competition with them would be abated, because if the reserve bank could not make its exchanges of credit less than the actual cost and a small profit which ought to be allowed, it would not be in competition with the country banks.

Moreover, the amendment which we propose provides that the country banks shall not be interfered with in their present method of selling exchanges against collection, from which some of them make a considerable profit.

SAVINGS BANK SECTION.

We have struck out section 27, providing for savings banks, because the banks of the country are unanimously against it. The national banks at present have a system of time deposits, upon which they conduct practically a savings-bank business very economically, and they use the funds collected in the banks in that way for local enterprises. They get a good rate of interest out of the savings deposits, which they collect in that way; and they all desire that they be left undisturbed in their present method.

So both sections of the committee have struck out the savings-bank section, and, indeed, I understand there is no great support of that section, even on the House side. It was put in as a last thought, thinking perhaps it might be useful.

There are, of course, other important improvements in our banking system which may be expected to be worked out, particularly the question of agricultural credits.

There is another system which I think will prove useful, and it will be discussed at the proper time, but this great measure for the Federal reserve bank system is of such urgent importance that it was not thought wise to bring into this bill questions relating to agricultural credits, nor the question of character banks, which have been worked out in Italy to a very high degree, or other considerations that might impede the discussion of this matter. So we have brought nothing into it that is not germane.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Right on that point I wish to inquire of the Senator whether the bill he has proposed as a substitute makes any change in the House bill in relation to farm loans?

Mr. OWEN. It does. We have extended the time from nine months to five years, so as to enable some of the country banks that would like to handle these farm mortgages as merchants to buy them and turn them over and sell them.

Mr. NORRIS. Out of what fund does the bill permit the banks to make farm loans?

Mr. OWEN. It would be up to a certain limit; one-quarter of its capital and surplus is the provision, not to exceed one-half of the value of the property against which the mortgage is placed; 25 per cent of the capital and surplus would make a total of $400,000,000, possibly, although the city banks are not likely to invest in farm mortgages, unless there should be built up a system by which these mortgages would be safeguarded.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand it, the other branch of the Banking and Currency Committee has provided for a loan of some portions of the time deposits?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; and I thought that suggestion was an advisable one. I will say that in the proposals made by the other section of the committee—I have read them through somewhat hurriedly—I have seen several things that I thought were meritorious and which at the proper time could be accepted. The differences between the two sections of the committee, I think, can be reconciled by the Senate without any great difficulty. I only want to conclude my remarks in presenting this bill, made now for the purpose of opening the discussion, by saying that I think it is of very great importance to the business interests of the country that as soon as we can dispose of these differences between the two sections of the committee, as soon as we can get this matter passed, it is of the most urgent importance to do it, because the whole country is waiting; the business men are waiting, and the banks are waiting. The banks are piling up their reserves, because they do not know exactly what this bill is going to be, and they are doing the thing which would be natural for men to do to protect themselves against some exigency that they can not fully foresee. For that reason the banks are hesitating, and the business men of the country are finding it difficult to get the accommodations they ought to have. That aspect of it, of course, reaches Democratic business men, Republican business men, and business men who have no politics. It reaches everybody alike. It is a matter of the most urgent importance, and I do hope that the Senate will give, and I appeal to the Senate to give, the most urgent and immediate attention to the bill. I ask the Members of the Senate to read these bills presented to them, to read these reports as quickly as possible, and to give the time necessary to thoroughly comprehend this matter. I do not think it is a difficult matter. There are only a few elements in these bills—the concentration of these reserves, making them mobile, providing an elastic currency through the simple mechanism of these banks. That is not difficult. There is no particular difficulty about the bill. It is easily understood by any thoughtful mind. Members of the committee have already heard so much of the discussion that I see no reason why the bill should take any very great time. The whole country has been waiting with a great degree of impatience upon us.

I thought it necessary to explain some of the history of the examination of this matter in opening my remarks, because there are some who have contended that we ought not to be unduly in haste about this matter; but we have spent all the time necessary, and I think it is of the most urgent importance to the country now that we should waste no more time with regard to it.

I hope also that Members of the Senate will take the pains to look through the tables which have been printed as a part of this report, because they will find them bearing directly upon the problem involved.

I wish now to express my appreciation of the patience of the Senate in waiting for this report. I will say that, as chairman of the committee, I have done what I could to bring it before the Senate as quickly as possible; but there were many men who wanted to be heard, and there were many interests of very great importance that had a right to be heard. If the committee has seemed to have been somewhat longer than was absolutely necessary, at the same time the question was of such great importance, it was of such vast import to the country, that the committee has felt that it was best to give as thorough an examination into the matter as possible. You have before you now the views of both sections of the committee and the full record.

I will now move the amendment which I proposed on Saturday. The subject is now before the Senate; Senators desiring to speak upon it may do so, though I do not suppose we shall arrive at immediate action upon the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rose to ask a little further explanation of one part of this bill.

Mr. OWEN. I shall be very glad to answer any questions the Senator may ask.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to learn from the Senator from Oklahoma whether he attaches great importance to section 10. That section deals with the admission of State banks to membership in the Federal reserve bank. That is a mere prelude to asking whether the Senator has examined the laws of the several States and whether he knows the situation sufficiently to be able to advise the Senate as to the practicability of the admission of State banks as stockholders in the Federal reserve banks or the Federal reserve bank. I do not believe there is a State in the Union under whose laws a State bank could become a stockholder in a Federal reserve bank. I do not believe there is a State in the Union under whose laws a State bank could agree to conform to provisions of the law creating and regulating national banking associations. I apprehend that if that section is to become of great importance it will be necessary that the laws of all the States be revised. I have therefore asked the Senator from Oklahoma whether the cooperation of the State banks in this manner is a vital thing in the administration of the system which is here proposed.

Mr. OWEN. I should say that it was a very desirable thing, and, so far as we could open the door we did so, assuming that the States which had laws which would preclude the State banks of that State from entering the system would within the three years change such laws so as to make it permissible.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from Oklahoma, I assume, believes that the system would be operative and helpful even though the State banks were not admitted as stockholders of the Federal bank?

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. A very curious relationship is here proposed between the State institutions and a Federal institution. I shall have occasion later on to consider that relation. I have had grave doubts whether it could be made practicable or helpful.

Mr. OWEN. I will state that I have not put the microscope upon the point which the Senator raises, and I assume that there might be a number of States where it could not be done, and that they would then, if they approved the system, modify the State law so as to enable their banks to come in under this provision; so we open the door for them to come in when they can under the permission of the State laws.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not opposed to it if it can be done practically; but it not only involves the authority on the part of a State corporation—that is, a State bank—to become a stockholder in a Federal corporation, with all the liabilities that the law imposes upon a stockholder, but it involves the joint operation upon the same institution of laws that are radically different and must remain different so long as we have as great varieties of views upon great public questions as we now have.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; that is true, of course.

Mr. CUMMINS. And I merely wanted to begin my inquiry into it with the assurance of the Senator from Oklahoma that the system proposed would be operative and would be efficient even though no State bank entered it.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, yes; we have simply opened the door to invite the State banks in that could come in; and I will say that I have had assurances from Chicago and Kansas City and St. Louis that many of the State banks and trust companies expect to come in. I think that almost every State bank and trust company in the country will come into the system and that they expect to do so; but the system is, of course, for the national banks and not necessarily for the State banks, but it was thought desirable to have the State banks provided for if they wished to enter the system.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is perfectly evident that they could not come in until they had further legislation, not only because they have no power to subscribe for stock in this new system, but the bill provides that—

Any bank becoming a member of a Federal reserve bank under the provisions of this section shall, in addition to the regulations and restrictions hereinbefore provided, be required to conform to the provisions of law imposed on the national banks.

Mr. OWEN. As to examinations and special points only.

Mr. CUMMINS. We all know—or, at least I assume—that the laws of Illinois with regard to her trust companies and her banks are very different from the laws of the United States relating to national banks. I know they are in my State. It would be impossible for a State bank in Iowa—I think it would be impossible—to conform to both the national law governing national banks and the State law governing State banks at the same time.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I direct the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that he did not read the next few words of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Perhaps I have omitted something that ought to have been read. The bill further provides:

And to such rules and regulations as the Federal reserve board may, in pursuance thereof, prescribe respecting the limitation of liability which may be incurred by any person, firm, or corporation to such banks, the prohibition against making purchase of or loans on stock of such banks, and the withdrawal or impairment of capital or the payment of unearned dividends.

I see nothing there that would modify what I have stated.

Mr. OWEN. I suggest that they could comply with it if they would, just by their own agreement. They could do that by contract.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to inquire, Mr. President, of the Senator from Oklahoma if it is not true that under the laws of all the States—it certainly is of all the Eastern States—that a savings bank or a trust company is limited in its investments to certain specified lines, and that all other lines are excluded?

Mr. OWEN. I think that is true in most of the States; but we do not expect savings banks to enter the system, as they do not need to do so.

Mr. PAGE. And is it not true that under this bill the State inspectors of banks would come in conflict with the national inspectors of banks?

Mr. OWEN. No; I think not, because this bill provides that the reports of the State banks may be accepted if they are carefully made, and the banks can readily agree to have an examination made that is not required by the State law, just as they do agree to have themselves examined by the clearing-house examiners.

Mr. PAGE. Is it not true that under the State laws it is expected that nearly all of the State banks and trust companies will loan their money on real estate, while under the provisions of this bill it is expected that only a limited sum shall be so loaned?

Mr. OWEN. Of course, that is true; but that inhibition does not run against the savings banks nor trust companies, either, under this system.

Mr. PAGE. But, for all that, the National Government, through Congress or the managers of the Federal reserve banks, will have the power to dictate, it seems to me, as to what investments the State banks may make.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, no; the purpose of this bill is only to impose a few very limited provisions upon the State banks; that is to say, that they shall not extend credits unduly to single individuals; that is, not over 10 per cent of their capital and surplus, just as in the case of the national banks. No further provision is proposed to be imposed upon State banks entering into the system than will merely safeguard their credit and make their credit as good as that of a national bank.

Mr. PAGE. To do that will it not be supposed that the National Government will ask for an inspection and examination of State banks?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; and very properly.

Mr. PAGE. But the regulations of the Federal Government or of the Federal reserve board may come in conflict with the State regulations, may they not?

Mr. OWEN. I should not think so. I think that if the bank was willing to have itself examined by a chartered accountant the bank would have a perfect right to do so. I have had my own bank examined by a chartered accountant, regardless of the examination of the comptroller's office; and I did so because I wanted to know, independently of the comptroller's report, exactly what the condition of the bank was. There is no reason why a State bank should not have itself examined by a chartered accountant, so far as I can see.

Mr. PAGE. So far as I know, no State bank—certainly not in my State—would be inclined to object to the examination of a national-bank examiner. Indeed, it is provided in the laws of Vermont that when two banks are intimately associated or are in the same building, one a national bank and the other a savings bank or a trust company, the national-bank examiner and the State-bank examiner shall meet and examine them together; but it seems to me that you would have to draw this bill with a great deal of care in order to prevent a conflict between the National and State examinations.

Mr. OWEN. Since the matter is entirely optional with the State bank whether it wants to come in or not, of course the State bank would exercise its own pleasure with regard to that. It is not at all compulsory; it is just a matter of grace on their part, if they desire to enter the system, to give assurance to the Federal reserve bank or the authorities of the United States that their examination is properly made. We have provided in the bill that if the examination of the State authorities is carefully made it may be accepted as sufficient.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRADY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma whether or not both branches of the committee have agreed upon this section of the bill, or is there a difference of opinion between the two branches of the committee?

Mr. OWEN. I think there is no difference of opinion as to the propriety of inviting the State banks to come in and offering them an open door.

Mr. BRADY. I will inquire of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] if that is his understanding?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is a considerable practical difference by reason of other sections of the bill. The objection raised by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] that a State bank must become a stockholder in the system under the draft of the bill presented by the Senator from Oklahoma does not apply so strongly to the draft which I had the honor to present, for the reason that in the draft presented by the Senator from Oklahoma each bank is required to take a certain amount of stock in order to become a member of the association, and, once taken, that stock can not be sold; it is not a liquid asset of the bank and, no matter how great the needs of the bank to pay depositors or to meet other obligations, it can not sell that stock; it is impounded. Under the draft, however, which I had the honor to present, if the bank takes any stock at all, it is simply because some has not been taken by the public and the bank takes it and holds it like any other investment, having the power to part with it at any time, to realize cash upon it, and to use that cash for its needs.

Mr. BRADY. That, Mr. President, answers that question fully. While the Senator from Oklahoma is on his feet, I should like to ask him a question relative to the fixing of the rate of interest by the reserve board and whether the same will be controlled by the board of control?

Mr. OWEN. The method provided—

Mr. BRADY. As an illustration, let us assume that the reserve board of a district fixes a rate of interest different from the rate of interest in some other district. Is that subject to review by the board of control?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

Mr. BRADY. Now, does your bill give the board of control power to require the district or regional reserve bank board to accept the rate of interest fixed by the board of control?

Mr. OWEN. It has the power finally to determine the rate and fix it.

Mr. BRADY. And a bank in that district will be compelled to accept that rate?

Mr. OWEN. It will be compelled to accept it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to direct the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma to a feature of his bill which he has not discussed at all, and that is the feature of redemption. I think we will all agree that both of the bills which have been presented to the Senate are very simple in the method provided for inflating the currency of the country, but I do not understand that either of them is quite as efficient in deflating it after it has once been inflated. With the present increase in the volume of currency, due mostly to the increase in the volume of gold and the necessary depreciation of the purchasing value of every dollar, I assume that the Senator agrees with me that we ought not further to exaggerate this injustice to the savings of our industrious people by further depreciating the value of our dollars; and that, if we necessarily inflate the currency one single dollar by the issue of a dollar that is not based upon gold itself, we ought to deflate it just as soon as possible. We ought not to have any system of what might be called an elastic currency which will pull out 3 feet and will come back only 1 foot.

The $300,000,000 or $500,000,000 that may be issued by the reserve banks as an independent currency will add that much to the currency of the country, and will in a very short time be scattered among 95,000,000 people. Now, I should like to see some system—I confess that I have not read over the bills since they have been reported and amended, but only the original House bill—I should like to see some system that would be just as efficient under the law in bringing this money out of circulation as it is in putting it into circulation for the purpose of meeting any contingency of the country.

I should like to know further from the Senator himself what his bill provides in this respect, and how he is going to get these dollars, scattered among all of the people, out of circulation when the needs of the country no longer demand it?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, in answer to the observations of the Senator I very freely concur as to the importance of having the notes retired which are called "elastic currency." If they were merely to become a part of the permanent currency, that would be one thing, but having them as a temporary expedient is a different thing. I will answer the Senator directly by saying that the Federal reserve notes, when drawn out by the Federal reserve banks, are drawn from the hands of the Federal reserve agent who has an office on the premises of the Federal reserve bank and has his own safe. He keeps the Federal reserve notes available. When he lets out $100,000 of those notes, he does so on commercial bills due within 90 days. When those bills are paid they must be withdrawn from his hands for payment, and they can not be withdrawn from his hands unless Federal reserve notes of like volume or other forms of money in the same volume used by the United States are replaced in his hands and in his safe, where they go out of circulation.

I agree that the Federal reserve notes as individual notes passing into the hands of the citizens of the country and passing current outside of the bank will not return immediately to the banks, so that the individual notes can be returned; but what is equal to the same thing is that a volume of notes or money or gold, as the case may be, must be returned into the vault of the Federal reserve agent to take the place of the $100,000 which was drawn out of that safe; and, therefore, the contraction would be identical in amount, although not identical in the notes.

The notes themselves, however, are required to be returned to the bank through which they were emitted by any other Federal reserve bank which may receive them or by the Federal Government if it receives them, and in that contingency, when the individual notes are returned—and they are earmarked, with the number of the district plainly marked on the notes—then those notes would come into the hands of the reserve agent and he would return the lawful money which had been put into his hands in lieu of the notes when the commercial bills were taken down.

Mr. McCUMBER. But with 8 of these reserve banks, and there being 25,000 banks in the United States, the chance of the identical bills getting back into the hands of the reserve bank would be the equivalent of about eight to twenty-five thousand, which is not a very important matter to consider at all in the method of getting this money back.

Mr. OWEN. I call the attention of the Senator, however, to the fact that it does not make any difference whether these particular notes come back or not if a like volume is retired.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true if a like volume is returned and can not be used for any purpose.

Mr. OWEN. They can not be, because they are retired.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is that the provision of the bill?

Mr. OWEN. It is.

Mr. McCUMBER. Or can they be issued again and again?

Mr. OWEN. They can not, except upon like conditions or in exchange for the Federal reserve notes emitted by such bank. They go back into the hands of the Federal reserve agent, to be held by him.

Mr. McCUMBER. Are they destroyed?

Mr. OWEN. No; they are not destroyed; there is no need to destroy them unless they are mutilated.

Mr. McCUMBER. They are simply held for any subsequent issue?

Mr. OWEN. They can be used in like manner again.

Mr. McCUMBER. I say for a subsequent issue?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

I will be very glad to answer any other questions any Senator would like to ask me.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator to say that there will be no inflation of the currency? All of the currency that is issued upon commercial paper will not be redeemed at the same time, either by reserve currency or lawful money of the United States, so that whatever the volume of business done in the country under this plan amounts to there will be that much of an inflation from the present circulation.

Mr. OWEN. If you choose to use the term "inflation." There would be a temporary expansion of currency against these commercial bills; but the important feature which I wanted to call the attention of the Senator to was that it is measured and absolutely controlled by the volume of the commercial demand. The commercial demand must exist; the member bank must need currency for its constituency, and the member bank needing currency comes with its bills and asks for currency and can get currency. As soon as the seasonal demand is over then, of course, it would return them, because it is paying interest on them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think there is one point, which, if I understand correctly, the Senator did not state, that would make the position clearer. Suppose that instead of returning these particular asset currency notes the bank which had deposited the commercial bills were to bring in $100,000 of greenbacks, let us say. Then the question was asked the Senator as to whether that $100,000 of greenbacks should be destroyed. The Senator properly replied "no," and there was no use in destroying them. Now, when a man came in and wanted to borrow another $100,000, let us say, on more commercial bills of some other bank, then, as I understand, the $100,000 in greenbacks could be put out against the $100,000 of commercial bills instead of $100,000 of commercial-asset circulation?

Mr. OWEN. Yes. In either contingency, however, there is a further very important control provided in the bill, and that is that the Federal reserve board can raise the rate of interest if they find that abuse is extending to the use of these Federal reserve notes. It is of great importance that the Federal reserve board should have that power in order to prevent inflation.

In fact, there are several checks: First, the demand of citizens for cash—actual cash; second, the demand of a member bank for cash—actual cash; third, the demand of the reserve bank; fourth, the putting up of commercial bills of the qualified class; fifth, the minimum gold reserve of 33 per cent; sixth, the interest rate imposed by the Federal reserve bank; seventh, the interest rate that can be raised by the Federal reserve board.

If there is no further question that any Senator would like to ask me, I yield the floor.

APPENDIX.

The report submitted by Mr. OWEN on November 22, 1913, is as follows:

[Senate Report 133, part 1, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 7837:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7837) to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, for furnishing an elastic currency, affording means of rediscounting commercial paper, and to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes, having considered the measure, report the same to the Senate without recommendation.

[Senate Report 133, part 2, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. OWEN (for himself, Messrs. O'GORMAN, REED, POMERENE, SHAFROTH, and HOLLIS), from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following views (to accompany H. R. 7837):

The chairman (Mr. OWEN), on behalf of himself and his colleagues, Messrs. O'GORMAN, REED, POMERENE, SHAFROTH, and HOLLIS, submit the following memorandum:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7837) to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, etc., received the bill on September 18, 1913, and the members thereof, having been unable after two months to agree upon a report, the committee having divided into two sections, were compelled, finally, to agree to report the bill back to the Senate without recommendation from the committee acting as a committee, but submitting separately the respective views of the two sections of the committee.

The views of the Democratic section of the committee are embraced in the House bill, with certain interlined amendments submitted herewith (Exhibit A), and the following observations are made to explain the origin and principles of the measure, give a general outline of the changes which have been proposed in the House bill, the reasons therefor, etc.

AN OUTLINE OF THE INVESTIGATION MADE AFFECTING THE PRINCIPLES AND CONSTRUCTION OF THE PENDING MEASURE.

So many persons have been under the impression that Congress was inclined to act without sufficient consideration of the pending measure and the principles involved in it, that attention is called to the work which has been done preliminary to the drafting of the present bill.

It has been long understood that the American banking system was seriously defective in having no adequate safeguard against financial panic, against financial stringencies and violent fluctuations of interest rates, so that immediately after the panic of 1907 a temporary measure providing against panic was passed by Congress in the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, approved May 30, 1908. This bill established the National Monetary Commission. The act gave authority and instruction to the commission as follows:

"It shall be the duty of this commission to inquire into and report to Congress, at the earliest date practicable, what changes are necessary or desirable in the monetary system of the United States or in the laws relating to banking and currency, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the session or recess of Congress at such times and places as they may deem desirable; to send for persons and papers; to administer oaths; to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses. * * * The commission shall have the power, through subcommittee or otherwise, to examine witnesses, and to make such investigations and examinations, in this or other countries, of the subjects committed to their charge as they shall deem necessary."

Under this instruction the National Monetary Commission conducted the most extensive and far-reaching investigation of the banking systems of the entire world, and published a series of reports including over 30 volumes and a vast compilation of literature involving over 2,500 volumes, and finally resulting in the recommendation of a central bank, privately controlled, which was submitted to the Senate of the United States under the title of "A bill to incorporate the National Reserve Association of the United States, and for other purposes." (Vol. I, p. 43.) This bill was introduced during the preceding Congress and was not considered. It was, however, reintroduced in the present Congress (63d Cong., 1st sess., S. 7), on April 13, 1913, and has been commonly referred to as "the Aldrich bill."

This bill provided substantially that the national reserve association should be established for 50 years with an authorized capital equal to 20 per cent of the capital of all banks eligible for membership, with one-half paid in. It was provided that the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Comptroller of the Currency should be a committee to organize the national reserve association. It was to have a capital of $200,000,000 and 15 branches in 15 districts of the United States. Each branch was to be controlled by a board of directors chosen by the member banks, with power to make by-laws, etc., and the central national reserve association was to have 39 directors, elected by the directors of the 15 branches, and 7 additional ex officio members of the board of directors, to wit, a governor of the national reserve association, 2 deputy directors, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Comptroller of the Currency, so that the Government had 4 representatives out of 46 members of the board of directors of the national reserve association. An executive committee of 9 members was provided, with 1 representative of the Government, the Comptroller of the Currency, ex officio a member. Each branch bank was to have a manager and a deputy manager, appointed by the governor of the association.

The earnings of the association were to be 4 per cent annual dividend, cumulative, a 20 per cent surplus provided, and a division of the remainder between the United States and the shareholders.

The reserve association was made the principal fiscal agent of the United States. Provision was made for rediscounting notes and bills of exchange drawn for agricultural, industrial, and commercial purposes, having a maturity of not more than 28 days. The reserve association was given various powers to deal in gold coin or bullion, to purchase from subscribing banks bills of exchange, open foreign banking accounts, transfer deposit balances from one bank to another, etc.

It was required to keep 50 per cent reserve against demand liabilities, including deposit and circulating notes, with a tax upon any reserve deficiency.

It was authorized to purchase for a limited time the 2 per cent bonds of national banks, assume the redemption of the notes of such banks, and issue its own notes in lieu of such national-bank notes. It was authorized to have a cover for such note issues, either of 50 per cent of gold or other money of the United States, or bills of exchange arising out of commercial transactions, as defined by the act. These notes could be issued up to nine hundred millions without a gold cover under a special tax of 1½ per cent, and any notes in excess of $1,200,000,000 not covered by gold or lawful money could be taxed at 5 per cent, provided that the outstanding national-bank notes should be computed as a part of such issue. Its circulating notes were to be redeemed in lawful money and maintained at a parity.

The circulating notes of this association were to be received at par in payment of all taxes, excises, and other dues to the United States, and of all salaries and other debts and demands due by the United States, except obligations specifically payable in gold, and for all debts due from or by one bank or trust company to another, and for all obligations due to any bank or trust company.

The 2 per cent bonds purchased were to be exchanged for 3 per cent bonds payable in 50 years, and the association was to hold such bonds during its corporate existence, with the right, at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury to sell fifty millions of such bonds annually after five years. It provided for the establishment of branches of banks to do a foreign banking business.

The Government of the United States was required absolutely to deposit all of its general funds with the national reserve association and its branches, after the organization of the association, and thereafter all receipts of the Government except its trust funds.

This bill was made a matter of general debate throughout the United States, was vigorously pressed by the friends of the measure, and discussed in all of the large cities of the Nation. It was endorsed by the American Banking Association, but, after abundant discussion, was condemned by the Democratic national convention at Baltimore on July 3, 1912, in the following language:

"We oppose the so-called Aldrich bill or the establishment of a central bank; and we believe the people of the country will be largely freed from panic and subsequent unemployment and business depression by such a systematic revision of our banking laws as will render temporary relief in localities where such relief is needed with protection from control or domination by what is known as the Money Trust."

The obvious reason for public disapproval of this bill was that the comparative independence of the various districts of the country was ignored, the concentration of banking power was very extreme, and finally it placed the national credit system in the control of private persons, without any adequate supervision or control by the Government of the United States, and proposed to allow these banks to issue the currency of the country as private corporations.

THE PUJO INVESTIGATION.

Under House resolutions 439 and 504, Sixty-second Congress, second session, the so-called "Money Trust investigation" was conducted by the House of Representatives, beginning May 16, 1912. These hearings were published in 29 parts, consisting of thousands of pages, and with a most illuminating report showing the existence, substantially, of a vast concentration of power in the hands of a few men over the credit system of the United States.

THE GLASS INVESTIGATION.

These investigations were further continued by a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, beginning on Tuesday, January 7, 1913, and directed by Hon. CARTER GLASS, chairman, according to the leading bankers and financial experts of the country extended hearings, comprising a volume of 745 pages of printed testimony.

In addition to these extensive examinations by the National Monetary Commission, the Pujo investigation, and the Glass investigation various representatives of the American Banking Association were in frequent consultation with Chairman GLASS of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, with the chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, with the Secretary of the Treasury, and others who were concerned in the primary framing of the pending measure, so that the plea of some of the interests opposing the bill that the matter had not been properly investigated had no just foundation of fact. But in addition to these investigations and discussions the bill, when finally introduced in the House of Representatives, was discussed for many weeks in the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House, in the Democratic conference, and for many days in the House of Representatives, finally passing September 17, 1913.

THE SENATE INVESTIGATION.

Anticipating the action of the House of Representatives upon this bill, the Committee on Banking and Currency of the United States Senate began hearings on the bill September 2, 1913, holding their sessions from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 and 6 in the evening and listening to various representatives of the American Banking Association, of credit associations, of business men, and of financial experts. These hearings when concluded and presented to the Senate in Senate Document No. 232, Sixty-third Congress, first session, on November 6, 1913, in three volumes, with index, making 3,259 pages. It is therefore obvious that great pains have been taken by the authorities of the United States and by the committees in Congress to proceed with the greatest caution and upon the fullest information in the adjustment of this very important measure.

When the hearings before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency were concluded, the members of the committee discussed the bill for over two weeks, finally agreeing to submit their separate views in the form of the House bill, H. R. 7837, with certain amendments thereto, representing the respective views of the two sections of the committee.

Both sections of the committee, however, agreed on the great fundamentals of the bill—that is:

First. On the necessity for greater concentration of the banking reserves of the country.

Second. The volume of such reserves.

Third. The volume of the capital of the proposed banks.

Fourth. The mobilization of such reserves.

Fifth. The promotion of an open discount market.

Sixth. The provision for elastic currency; the issuance of Federal reserve notes.

Seventh. That the Federal reserve notes should be the obligations of the United States.

Eighth. That the system should be the regional Federal reserve bank system instead of a central bank.

Ninth. The control of the system itself by the Government.

The two sections of the committee disagree upon the number of the Federal reserve banks, the method of subscribing for the stock of such banks, the method of electing the directors of such banks, the method of administering the regional reserve banks, and these differences arise, in the main, because of two schools of thought, one part of the committee believing in a central bank administered by a central board and the other part of the committee proposing to establish a number of comparatively independent district banks administered by boards of directors chosen from and representing the several districts, but under the strict supervisory control of the Government. The interests of the public are thus protected by Government supervision, the vast and intricate technical detail of bank administration being placed in the hands of the bankers whose funds and whose business is involved.

THE PURPOSES OF THE BANKING AND CURRENCY BILL.

The chief purposes of the banking and currency bill are to give stability to the commerce and industry of the United States; prevent financial panics or financial stringencies; make available effective commercial credit for individuals engaged in manufacturing, in commerce, in finance, and in business to the extent of their just deserts; put an end to the pyramiding of the bank reserves of the country and the use of such reserves for gambling purposes on the stock exchange.

In order to accomplish these results there are certain great fundamentals recognized by all experts as essential and necessary, to wit:

First. The proper concentration of the bank reserves of the country under the control of the banks themselves, safeguarded by governmental supervision.

Second. A suitable banking capital as a margin of safety.

Third. Placing the larger part of the Government funds with such banks, where they may be used in the service of the national commerce.

Fourth. Authorizing the issuance of elastic currency against liquid commercial bills under proper safeguards.

Fifth. Establishing an open market for liquid commercial bills, by providing through the reserve banks a constant and unfailing market for such bills at a steady rate of interest.

Sixth. Finally, protecting the gold reserve of the United States by the same methods adopted in Europe, to wit, raising the rate of interest through the Federal reserve banks and authorizing such banks to acquire foreign bills when gold shipments are anticipated and taking other precautionary measures.

THE MECHANISM OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANK SYSTEM.

These important national ends are proposed to be obtained by the mechanism of eight Federal reserve banks organized with a capital equal to 6 per cent of the capital and surplus of the National and State banks in the several districts.

The eight districts are proposed to be laid off by an organization committee, who shall organize a Federal reserve bank with headquarters in a central city of each district, each bank to establish as many branches in its district as may be found expedient.

It is proposed that each Federal reserve bank shall have nine directors, six elected by the banks and three chosen by the Federal reserve board.

The entire system is proposed to be under the supervisory control of the Federal reserve board, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury and six other members of such board appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

The Federal reserve board is given very broad powers of supervision and is assisted by a Federal advisory council, consisting of one representative from each of the Federal reserve banks.

The details of the organization and the principles of the bill will be hereinafter more fully set forth.

FEDERAL RESERVE DISTRICTS.

The Federal reserve districts are proposed to be organized by the Secretary of the Treasury and not less than two members of the Federal reserve board (sec. 2), who shall summon expert aid and take testimony and lay out such Federal reserve districts, eight in number, according to the convenience and customary course of business, designating the city in which the district Federal reserve bank shall be located (p. 2).

When the districts shall have been laid out and the city determined in which such Federal reserve banks shall be located, five of the subscribing banks in such district are authorized to take out a charter in the same manner and with similar powers as a national bank (pp. 11 to 14), except that the business of the Federal reserve bank is confined to member banks and other Federal reserve banks and to the United States, except its open-market operations, which may be with any responsible concern.

These banks are given, as a part of the charter rights, the right to issue Federal reserve bank notes against United States bonds in the same manner as a national bank, the purpose being to permit said banks to absorb as much of the 2 per cent bonds as the national banks may care to dispose of.

STOCK SUBSCRIPTION.

The amount of possible stock is placed at a sum equal to 6 per cent of the capital and surplus of national banks and State banks and trust companies, exclusive of savings banks, a possible total of about $150,000,000, one-half of which will be required to be paid in during a period of six months after the organization of said banks and one-half subject to call, with a double liability resting upon the subscribers against the amount subscribed.

The reasons for requiring the banks to subscribe to this stock with a double liability are—

First. To protect the large deposits of general funds which the United States will probably place with such banks.

Second. To protect the United States against the extension of credit through the Federal reserve notes, the obligations of the United States loaned to the Federal reserve banks against commercial bills.

Third. To safeguard the system itself, to protect the large volume of reserves placed with such banks, and give to such banks the confidence of the world.

Fourth. To justify the Government in putting on the banks the prime responsibility of administering these banks and safeguarding their own reserves and their own capital stock, and making them responsible to the country for safeguarding the welfare of the national banking system, protecting the national gold supply under the safeguard of governmental supervision.

Every national bank located in a given district is required within 60 days after the passage of the act to signify its acceptance of the terms of the act, and every State bank eligible for membership is permitted to signify its assent in like manner.

Any national bank within such district failing to signify its assent may be discontinued as a reserve agent upon 30 days' notice by the organization committee or the Federal reserve board. And should any national bank within one year after the passage of the act fail to become a member bank of the system, it is required to cease to act as a national bank.

In the contingency that the capital stock is not fully subscribed by the banks of a given district, provision is made (p. 7) to offer such stock to public subscription, and on the contingency that such stock is not subscribed by the public the balance of the necessary capital may be allotted to the United States and sold by the Government at proper times and places.

All stock held by the public or by the Government will be voted by the directors of the Federal reserve bank of class C, representing the Government.

CONTROL OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

Each Federal reserve bank will be controlled by a board of nine directors—three of class A, elected by the banks; three of class B—business men—elected by the banks; and three of class C, appointed by the Federal reserve board to represent the United States.

One director of class C will be a Federal reserve agent and chairman of the board, and one a deputy Federal reserve agent and deputy chairman, representing expressly the interests of the United States at such bank and issuing Federal reserve notes to the reserve bank, holding the security therefor, and receiving such notes for safe-keeping when returned by the bank.

PROBABLE RESOURCES OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

The capital stock of 25,195 banks in the United States, including savings banks, amounts to $2,010,000,000; surplus, $1,585,000,000. Six per cent of this sum would be something over $200,000,000, and the total liability would make over $400,000,000. Assuming that one-half of these concerns enter the system, it would give a capital of $100,000,000, with over $50,000,000 paid in.

The total reserves which would be paid into the Federal reserve banks by 7,120 national banks, outside of reserve or central reserve cities, would be $168,000,000 (Exhibit B, p. 1); from 315 reserve city banks, $110,000,000; and from 52 central reserve city banks, $96,000,000, which, including an estimated deposit of $150,000,000 from the Government, would make an amount equal to $672,000,000.

If the State banks and trust companies come in, omitting the savings banks, it would add $279,000,000 of reserves and $21,000,000 of capital stock (Exhibit B, p. 6), making a total of $972,000,000.

These funds would not include any optional deposits that might be voluntarily placed with the Federal reserve bank by member banks.

DIVISION OF EARNINGS.

It is proposed in the pending bill to give the stockholders 6 per cent dividends, lay up a surplus of 20 per cent, and give the United States the additional earnings. The policy of limiting the dividends to 6 per cent is based upon the theory that these great public utility banks are not intended to be merely money-making banks, but that they are guardians of the public welfare, primarily safeguarding the member banks, protecting their reserves, safeguarding their credit, protecting them from panic or financial stringency, and being always prepared to furnish them with accommodation at a reasonable rate of interest. But these Federal reserve banks will also be charged with the duty of protecting the national gold reserve, protecting the national commerce, and in this way give stability to the manufacturing, industrial, commercial, and transportation enterprises of the United States. For this reason these banks ought to have no other motive than the public welfare, and the moving policy of the banks should not be to earn as much dividends as the commerce of the country could endure but to protect our national commerce and our national-banking system at a fair profit.

STATE BANKS AND TRUST COMPANIES.

The bill (pp. 5 and 27) invites the State banks to become members where the capital stock, sound condition, subscription, and compliance with the rules of the system justify. The State banks and trust companies, however, will be subjected to the same rules governing the national banks in regard to the limitation of liability which may be incurred by any one person to such banks, the prohibition of making purchase of or loans upon the stock of such banks, or withdrawal or impairment of capital, the payment of unearned dividends, the making of reports to the comptroller, and the right of examination of such banks, as if they were national banks, with the right, however, to accept the State examinations in lieu of the comptroller's examination where such examinations are satisfactorily made.

BANK EXAMINATIONS.

Under the proposed system the bank examinations are made much more carefully, the bank examiners put on salaries (p. 66). Loans, gratuities, or commissions are forbidden to either bank examiners or to officers or directors of member banks.

BANK RESERVES.

Very important changes are made in the matter of bank reserves (p. 59) by requiring the withdrawal of the legal reserves from other national banks after a period of three years, making the change that the country banks are required to keep 12 per cent of their demand liabilities and 5 per cent of their time deposits as reserves—two-twelfths in the Federal reserve bank for 14 months, and thereafter five-twelfths—leaving seven-twelfths after three years to be optionally kept either in the bank's own vaults or in the Federal reserve bank (p. 62). The reserve city banks are required to keep 18 per cent of their demand liabilities and 5 per cent of time deposits; three-eighths of such reserve for the first 14 months being kept in the Federal reserve banks, and thereafter six-eighths of said reserve, leaving twelve-eighths of such reserve to be kept after three years either in the bank's own vaults or in the Federal reserve bank, at its option (p. 63).

The central reserve city banks are required to maintain a reserve equal to 18 per cent of their demand liabilities and 5 per cent of their time deposits; for 14 months three-eighths of such reserves and thereafter six-eighths of such reserves with the Federal reserve bank, leaving twelve-eighths optional to be kept in the bank's own vaults or with the Federal reserve bank.

The State banks are permitted to keep their surplus legal reserves for three years with other State banks if the State law requires.

It is proposed that the reserves of the Federal reserve banks shall be not less than 35 per cent of gold or lawful money against their demand liabilities or Federal reserve notes in circulation (pp. 48 and 65).

Some of the banks have objected that they would lose 2 per cent interest on so much of the deposits as they keep with the Federal reserve bank, and they seem to think they would not be sufficiently compensated by the obvious benefits of the Federal reserve banking system.

The answer to such objections is that the compensations in a financial way will far more than outweigh the loss of the 2 per cent interest, while the stability of the business of the bank, and the peace of mind it will give to the bankers in having freedom from constant anxiety, would more than compensate them, even if the financial advantages did not do so. The financial advantages are obvious—

First. The capital stock put into the system will be merely a transfer of funds obtained by taking a certain portion of the present deposits (however invested) into the form of this capital stock, earning 6 per cent net, free from tax, making the earning on such stock between 7 and 8 per cent, which is a higher return than any bank can possibly average upon its deposits.

Second. The reserves placed with the Federal reserve banks would not bear interest under the present bill (although this may possibly be found expedient at some future time when the system is established), but an average bank with a hundred thousand dollars ($100,000) capital and $550,000 average individual deposits, if it carried 5 per cent of its deposits as reserves with the Federal reserve bank, would carry only $27,500 with the Federal reserve bank, which it might use, if it saw fit, as a checking account for exchange purposes if it kept the account up to the required standard.

The earning power on $27,500 at 2 per cent would only be $550, and since the bank could borrow back an equal sum, at probably 4 per cent and lend it at 6 or 8 per cent, it could earn as much or more out of such rediscount as the interest at 2 per cent amounts to.

But it has a far larger earning power, because, under the old system, where every bank had to protect itself by keeping a high individual reserve, the country banks have carried on an average of over 21 per cent, and under this system they would have available the difference between 12 per cent legal reserves and 21 per cent actual reserves, which on the deposits of an average bank of $550,000, would amount to $49,000, and which they could lend at 6 per cent instead of 2 per cent, as at present, giving such bank an additional earning power of $1,980 above its present earning power, if it saw fit to use these surplus reserves which they now carry, because of the fear of panic and financial stringency.

A very important consideration, however, would result from this improved system in giving an increased public confidence in the banks and which would attract a considerable amount of money which is not now deposited in banks at all and would thus enlarge the deposits of the bank and enlarge substantially their money-earning power.

Another important financial advantage to the bank would be that the larger use of their reserves would also result in an enlargement of deposits, entirely justified and on a safe basis, which would give them increased earning power. It is extremely short-sighted for a bank to imagine that its financial earnings would be in any wise harmed by the proposals of this measure. A very great psychological advantage is in giving peace of mind to the entire banking world, so long as business is conducted upon an honest, sensible basis.

PROBABLE READJUSTMENT OF CASH UNDER REQUIREMENT OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

If all national banks enter the system and subscribe at the rate of 6 per cent of their capital ($1,056,345,786) and surplus ($725,333,629), or $1,069,000,764.90, paying one-sixth in cash, one-sixth in three months, and one-sixth in six months, the Federal reserve banks will have in six months a paid-up capital of $53,450,382, to which should be added about $150,000,000 of Government funds which will be deposited with the Federal reserve banks, making a total of $203,450,382 cash, of which two-thirds could be used for discounting.

The relative proportion of subscription to the Federal reserve bank is as follows: Country banks, 55 per cent; reserve city banks, 26 per cent; and central reserve cities, 19 per cent.

Assuming that the banks will immediately avail themselves of the discounting privilege to the extent of one-third of this fund in the Federal reserve banks, the country banks will be entitled to 55 per cent of (one-third of $203,450,382) $37,816,794=$37,299,236; the reserve city banks 26 per cent, or $17,632,366; and the central reserve cities 19 per cent, or $12,885,190.

Should the banks avail themselves of this privilege to the extent of one-half of this fund, the country banks will be entitled to 55 per cent of (one-half of $203,450,382) $101,725,191=$55,948,855; the reserve city banks 26 per cent, or $26,448,549; and the central reserve city banks 19 per cent, or $19,327,787.

In the event the banks should avail themselves of the discount privilege to the extent of two-thirds of the fund in the Federal reserve banks, the country banks would be entitled to 55 per cent of (two-thirds of $203,450,382) $135,633,588=$74,598,472; the reserve city banks 26 per cent, or $35,264,732; and the central reserve city banks 19 per cent or $25,770,380.

The reserve requirement and the probable readjustment of cash in the several classes, respectively, under the Federal reserve act are as follows:

PROBABLE READJUSTMENT OF CASH.

(First 14 months.)

Cash on hand (Aug. 9, 1913) specie and legal tender — $407,519,389

Cash available by discount of commercial paper (one-third basis) ————— 12,885,190

420,404,579

Cash required for stock subscription in Federal reserve banks —————

10,155,572

Cash reserve required in own vaults (six-eighteenths) — 96,564,053

Cash reserve required in Federal reserve banks (three-eighteenths) ————— 48,282,026

Cash reserve required in own vault or Federal reserve banks (nine-eighteenths) — 144,846,080

Cash surplus ————— 120,556,848

420,404,579

Although the percentages of cash reserve required in the banks' own vaults and in the Federal reserve banks change after 14 months and after 36 months, inasmuch as at all times the full reserve requirement must be either in the banks' own vaults or in the Federal reserve banks, the surplus cash remains the same.

One-half basis: Should the banks discount to the extent of one-half of the available fund in the Federal reserve banks, this surplus would be increased by the difference between $12,885,190 (one-third basis) and $19,327,787 (one-half basis), or $6,442,597, making a surplus of $126,999,445.

Two-thirds basis: If the banks discount to the extent of two-thirds of the funds in the Federal reserve banks, the surplus will be increased by the difference between $12,885,190 (one-third basis) and $25,770,380 (two-thirds basis), or $12,885,190, making a surplus of $133,442,038.

In addition to the paid-up capital of the Federal reserve banks ($53,450,382) and the deposit of Government funds ($150,000,000) the Federal reserve banks will have available for discount purposes the funds held by them as reserves of the member banks to within 33½ per cent, viz:

If one-third of this fund is used for rediscounting purposes, the additional cash would amount to $56,660,376; if one-half is used, $84,940,564; and if two-thirds, $113,320,752.

The capital stock of State banks and trust companies excluding savings banks equals $459,000,000, with a surplus fund of $271,000,000, making a total of $730,000,000, which, upon a 6 per cent basis, would give an addition to the capital stock of the Federal reserve banks, if the State banks and trust companies entered it, of $43,000,000, which, if one-half were paid in cash, would add to the initial capital stock in cash $21,000,000 above the capital stock heretofore considered, and would therefore add a further deficit of $21,000,000 to the total net deficit of $239,000,000, making a total deficit of $260,000,000, as far as the State banks and trust companies are concerned.

It is insisted, however, that this contingency is not likely to arise, as many of the small State banks will not enter the system, and if it did arise, it could be taken care of—

First, by the discounting of the funds of the Federal reserve banks,

Second, by an additional deposit of United States funds above the $150,000,000 heretofore estimated.

Third, or finally, by the issuance of Federal reserve notes, which should be counted as reserves for member banks if the Federal reserve board find it necessary.

Moreover, it might further be provided for by making the national bank notes available for reserve money, since they are based on Government bonds and are already used by State banks under the present State laws as reserves. This contingency has been provided for by a proposed amendment giving the Federal reserve board (p. 38, line 15) the right to authorize the use as reserves of member banks Federal reserve notes or bank notes based on United States bonds.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD—ITS POWERS.

The Federal reserve board, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury and six members appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate for terms of six years (p. 31), are given the following powers:

To readjust districts created by the organization committee and create new ones.

To regulate the establishment of branches of Federal reserve banks within Federal reserve district in which bank is located.

To designate three (class C) of the nine members of the board of directors of each Federal reserve bank, one of these to be chairman of the board with the title of "Federal reserve agent," and one "deputy Federal reserve agent."

The Federal reserve agent to maintain a local office of the Federal reserve board on the premises of the Federal reserve bank. He shall make regular reports to Federal reserve board and be its official representative.

To remove any director or officer of a Federal reserve bank for cause stated.

To remove chairman of Federal reserve bank without notice.

To establish by-laws governing applications from State banks and trust companies.

"Of the six persons * * * appointed (by the President), one shall be designated governor and one vice governor of the Federal reserve board." The governor, subject to supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury and board, shall be the acting managing officer of the Federal reserve board.

To levy a semiannual assessment upon the Federal reserve banks for estimated expenses for succeeding six months, together with deficit carried forward.

To examine at its discretion the accounts, books, and affairs of each Federal reserve bank or member bank and to require such statements and reports as it may deem necessary.

To require, or on application to permit, a Federal reserve bank to rediscount the paper of any other Federal reserve bank.

To suspend for a period not exceeding 30 days (and to renew such suspension for periods not to exceed 15 days) any and every reserve requirement specified in this act.

To supervise and regulate the issue and retirement of Treasury notes to Federal reserve banks.

To add to the number of cities classified as reserve and central reserve cities under existing law in which national banking associations are subject to the reserve requirements set forth in section 21 of this act, or to reclassify existing reserve or central reserve cities and to designate the banks therein situated as country banks, at its discretion.

To require the removal of officials of Federal reserve banks.

To require the writing off of doubtful or worthless assets upon the books and balance sheets of Federal reserve banks.

To suspend the further operations of any Federal reserve bank and appoint a receiver therefor.

To perform the duties, functions, or services specified or implied in this act.

To determine or define (subject to stipulations) the character of paper eligible for discount for member banks.

To prescribe regulations for purchase and sale by Federal reserve banks of bankers' bills, etc.

To review and determine the minimum rate of discount for member banks established by Federal reserve banks and fix weekly the discount rate reserve banks may discount for each other.

To authorize establishment of correspondents and agencies of Federal reserve banks in foreign countries.

To authorize the issue of Federal reserve Treasury notes.

To receive, through the local Federal reserve agent, applications from Federal reserve banks for notes, such applications to be accompanied by rediscounted notes for deposit as collateral security.

To require Federal reserve banks to maintain deposits in Treasury of United States in gold of 5 per cent of notes issued.

To grant in whole or in part or to reject entirely the application from Federal reserve banks for notes.

To establish rate of interest on notes issued.

To prescribe regulations for substitution of collateral.

To make and promulgate regulations governing the transfer of funds among Federal reserve banks.

To act, if desired, as clearing house for Federal reserve banks.

To require, in its discretion, Federal reserve banks to act as clearing houses for shareholding banks.

To require extra examinations of national banks when deemed necessary.

To determine and report annually to Congress fixed salaries of all bank examiners.

To assess upon banks in proportion to assets or resources the expenses of examinations.

To fix a date for such assessment.

To arrange for special or periodical examinations of member banks for account of Federal reserve banks.

To receive from Federal reserve banks information concerning the condition of any national bank in its district.

To order examinations of national banks in reserve cities as often as necessary.

To add to the list of cities in which national banks shall not be permitted to loan on real estate as described.

To receive applications from national banks having $1,000,000 or more capital for the establishment of branches in foreign countries, to reject or accept such applications, and to prescribe conditions under which such branches may be opened.

To require examinations of foreign branches as it may deem best.

FEDERAL ADVISORY COUNCIL.

In order to keep the Federal reserve board in intimate touch with the banking business of the country, the Federal advisory council is established, consisting of one representative from each Federal reserve bank with power to confer directly with the Federal reserve board, make proper representations and recommendations, call for information, etc. (p. 39). Many of the big banks quite urgently insisted that the bankers should have representation upon the Federal reserve board. This was denied for the obvious reason that the function of the Federal reserve board in supervising the banking system is a governmental function in which private persons or private interests have no right to representation except through the Government itself. The precedents of all civilized governments is against such a contention. It was believed that the Federal reserve board itself, consisting entirely of officers of the Government, might be made more efficient if it had the advice freely available of the Federal advisory council. Moreover, the operations of the Federal reserve board would in this way be subject to greater publicity and enable the banks of the country to have a greater measure of confidence in all of the operations of the Federal reserve board.

It was further believed that the banks of the country, which are invited or required to contribute a very large sum to the Federal reserve banks, would be more content by having an easy and convenient means provided by law of frequent conferences with the Federal reserve board and the opportunity to advise the board with regard to the financial, commercial, and industrial needs of the country.

CONCENTRATION OF RESERVES.

The reserves of the banks of the United States are now scattered without any system among over 25,000 individual banks. The present law permits the national banks in the country to keep nine-fifteenths of their reserves in the banks of reserve cities and permits banks of the reserve cities to keep one-half of their reserves in the central reserve cities, and permits the banks in the central reserve cities to keep only one-fourth of these reserves of the reserves of the reserves in cash. The effect of this system—the necessary effect of this system—is to concentrate in the hands of a few banks in the central reserve cities (who have diligently sought the reserves of other banks) to such an extent that the Nation's bank reserves are pyramided in a dangerous fashion in the hands of a few banks in the three central reserve cities and chiefly in certain banks in New York City. These central reserve city banks have been accustomed to pay 2 per cent on the deposit of these bank reserves placed with them, and having no place to which they themselves might go for rediscount they have fallen into the habit of placing very large sums out of these reserves, amounting to hundreds of millions, upon call on the New York Stock Exchange, for the simple reason that under the law of the stock exchange they can sell the stock collateral immediately on any day when money is actually needed. It may be ruinous to the borrower—it may wipe out his margin—it may cause him a disastrous loss; it may upset the interest rates of the country, excite alarm, and result in final panic; but it does furnish the money when needed.

We are advised by representative bankers in New York that the great banks there would be glad to improve the system by the establishment of Federal reserve banks strong enough to furnish money quickly on demand against good commercial bills, and thus enable the New York banks to withdraw their funds from the stock exchange (which has become the most gigantic gambling establishment in the world) and place such funds in the service of legitimate industry and commerce. This will be one of the great benefits of the pending measure—that is, that it will withdraw from gambling enterprises on the stock exchange the bank reserves of the country and enable such reserves to be used for the commerce of the Nation.

Attention is respectfully called to the fact that while in 1896 the shares sold on the New York Stock Exchange amounted to only a little over $3,000,000,000, in 1905 it was $21,000,000,000, in 1906 it was $23,000,000,000, in 1907—the year of the panic—the amount fell to $14,000,000,000, increasing in 1908 to $15,000,000,000, and in 1909 to $19,000,000,000. (National Monetary Commission Reports, vol. 21, p. 9.)

MAKING STABLE THE INTEREST RATES.

The extremely injurious character of this gambling on the stock market with the reserves of the country is shown by Table 20, National Monetary Commission Reports (vol. 21, p. 136), where during the year 1907 the range of interest for money was from 2 to 45 per cent in January, from 3 to 25 per cent for March, from 5 to 125 per cent in October, from 3 to 75 per cent in November, and from 2 to 25 per cent in December, with currency bringing a premium from 1 to 4 per cent during November and December. The blighting effect of these violent fluctuations of the interest rates is demonstrated by the rate charged for 90-day time loans, which during November and December, 1907, were running as high as 12 to 16 per cent, with no business done in time loans of a longer period during the entire month of November and no business being done at times on prime commercial bills during the same months. (Ibid.)

These violent fluctuations are the more astounding when compared with the extremely stable rates of interest which have long prevailed in Europe, as shown by the rates of discount for 50 years in England, France, Germany, Holland, and Belgium, where the rate has been steadily around 3 to 4 per cent. (See Senate hearings before Banking and Currency Committee, pp. 538-542, an abstract of which is submitted.)

Moreover, in Europe manufacturers, merchants, and business men could always get money, while in the United States they have been absolutely ruined by thousands because of the denial of merited credit. This act will put an end to this deadly peril to American business.

"It will thus be seen that these great banks holding the national reserves have been able to furnish commerce with a very low rate of discount for nearly all the time and only occasionally have been compelled to raise the rate to a high point.

"These low rates illustrate the enormous value of these great banks to European commerce and the urgent necessity for action by the United States along similar lines."

The stabilizing of the rate of interest in the United States will be one of the very important functions of the proposed Federal reserve system. The right of the Federal reserve board to fix the rate of interest which may be charged member banks by the Federal reserve banks and which the Federal reserve banks may charge each other would have a steady effect upon the interest rate throughout the United States, and will enable the banks of the country to extend accommodation at a comparatively stable rate of interest upon a lower basis than heretofore, because the element of hazard of panic and of financial stringency will be removed by the proposed system.

MOBILIZATION OF RESERVES.

In addition to concentrating in the Federal reserve banks a substantial part of the reserves of the National and State banks and trust companies of the country and placing in such banks a respectable capital by stock subscriptions and a considerable volume of Government funds—approximately a total of about $700,000,000—it is proposed to make them perfectly mobile. In order to have these funds meet the purpose for which they were intended they must be kept in a liquid condition and made instantly mobile by keeping the investments of such banks either in actual gold and lawful money or in short-time commercial bills drawn against actual commercial transactions, which are readily converted into money on short notice. (Sec. 14, p. 40, and sec. 15, p. 44.)

In pursuing this policy we have followed the experience of the great public-utility banks of Europe. The European systems confine in large measure the holdings of the public-utility banks to cash and liquid bills of very short maturities, the average length of time of the bills of the Bank of France not exceeding 28 days and the Reichsbank of Germany having no paper of longer maturity than 90 days, and a large part of its paper very short-time paper. The Bank of England handles quite a large volume of paper running 7 to 14 days. These public-utility banks carefully avoid putting the funds in their custody in the form of investments which are not instantly convertible into money. This consideration is of the highest importance, because the Federal reserve banks holding the reserves of the reserves must be in a position to extend instant accommodation to any member bank requiring cash.

With a view to enlarging the volume of liquid paper based on actual shipments of goods, the reserve bank is authorized to discount acceptances and the member banks are authorized to accept bills of exchange against actual shipments of goods.

ELASTIC CURRENCY—FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES.

In order to render still more mobile and liquid the reserves held by the Federal reserve banks, elastic currency has been provided (sec. 17, p. 47) in the form of Federal reserve notes issued as obligations of the United States, redeemable in gold at the Treasury, or in gold or lawful money at the reserve banks, and receivable for all taxes and public dues, except customs. The exception of customs was intended to enable the Federal Government to command a supply of gold through the customhouses, if it should prove to be necessary, by compelling the customs to be paid in gold by foreign shippers.

These Federal reserve notes, while the obligations of the United States and made redeemable in gold or lawful money at the Federal reserve banks and in gold only at the Treasury of the United States, are carefully surrounded by very numerous safeguards to make assurance doubly sure that they shall not at any time in reality tax the credit of the United States itself. The securities behind these notes are:

First, Commercial bills drawn against actual commercial transactions which have goods and merchandise behind the notes.

Second, Such notes have the credit of the maker of the commercial bill deemed good by the member banks.

Third, The indorsement by the member bank of such commercial bills.

Fourth, The double liability of the stockholders of the member bank so indorsing.

Fifth, Thirty-three and a third per cent of gold reserves in the Federal reserve bank.

Sixth. A first lien on all the assets of the Federal reserve bank.
 Seventh. The stock of the indorsing member bank in the Federal reserve bank.

Eighth. The reserve balance of the indorsing member bank in the Federal reserve bank.

Ninth. A double liability of the member banks of the Federal reserve bank.

Tenth. The double liability of the stockholders of the member banks of the Federal reserve bank.

Eleventh. The surplus of the Federal reserve bank.

Twelfth. The earning power of such reserve bank, and finally the United States. There has never been issued a note with such safeguards surrounding it by any banking system of the world.

The commercial bills alone would never fail, because of their liquid character and short maturity. No apprehension whatever need be felt with regard to these notes ever taxing the Federal Treasury.

Since each bank is required to keep a gold reserve with the Treasury of the United States against such note issues, it is necessary to keep a record of the outstanding circulation emitted through each Federal reserve bank, and for this reason a descriptive number is placed upon the notes emitted through any Federal reserve bank so as to keep the record of notes outstanding issued through such banks. The effect of issuing Federal reserve notes against commercial bills is to make intensely mobile the assets of the Federal reserve bank and enable such bank at all times to respond instantly to the needs of national commerce. The emission of these notes is controlled by the Federal reserve board, which is authorized to control the volume of these notes and the terms upon which they shall be advanced to the Federal reserve bank and the conditions of retirement.

The Federal reserve board is authorized to tax the issue of the notes and also to fix the rate of interest on the discounts of the Federal reserve banks, and in this way keep a double check on the issuance of the Federal reserve notes.

While the Federal reserve notes are extremely well secured, it is made easy for member banks needing currency for reasonable demands or for any extraordinary emergency to obtain Federal reserve notes from the Federal reserve banks. The Federal reserve bank has only to deposit liquid commercial bills of a qualified class with the Federal reserve agent and obtain from him such Federal reserve notes, keeping, however, a minimum deposit of 33 per cent of gold against such Federal reserve notes as may be put in actual circulation. It is believed that in actual practice the gold reserves against such notes in circulation will be very large, much larger than the minimum requirement, especially if our proposed amendment is placed in the House bill, permitting the reserves against deposits and against the notes to be kept as a common fund. It is obvious that if a minimum requirement of 33 per cent against deposits and 33 per cent against notes in circulation is held as a common fund, anyone observing the statement merely from the standpoint of a depositor, if the deposits and the notes in circulation happened to be equal, would perceive that the reserves against deposits would appear as 66 per cent, and anyone looking at the reserves against the notes from that point of view would observe a reserve equal to 66 per cent of the notes in circulation.

It also is obvious that when there is a surplus reserve against the deposits far above 33 per cent there is no reason why the bank should not have the credit of this surplus appearing also in its favor as a reserve against notes in circulation, and it was upon the best advice obtainable that an amendment was proposed to section 17 permitting these reserves to be carried as a common fund, but in no contingency less than a 33 per cent gold reserve against the notes, as required in the House bill.

The retirement of these Federal reserve notes would, of course, be accomplished whenever the commercial bills were withdrawn by the member bank or by the Federal reserve bank from the hands of the Federal reserve agent, the Federal reserve agent in such contingency either receiving the notes back or a like volume of lawful money.

OPEN-MARKET OPERATIONS.

One of the most important features of this bill is the establishment of what is called an open market for bills of exchange and bankers' acceptances such as has long prevailed in Europe, but which has not existed to any great extent in the United States. In Europe the various banks and private bankers carry on a very large scale commercial bills of exchange and acceptances based on actual commercial transactions of short maturities and which are regarded as self-liquidating. Such bills have behind them actual merchandise for which a purchaser has been found, and these bills are held in their portfolios as almost the exact equivalent of cash, for the reason that the security of such bills is regarded as substantially perfect, their uniform and certain payment constant, and therefore there is an "open market" for such bills maintained by the great public banks, such as the Bank of France, the Reichsbank, the Bank of Belgium, the Bank of Netherlands, the Bank of England, etc., at a very low rate of interest.

It is now proposed that a constant market at a fairly uniform rate of interest be established in this country by establishing the Federal reserve bank with a large capital and large reserves and with the express power to discount for member banks commercial bills and acceptances of the qualified liquid class, and also to buy and sell in the open market such bills and bankers' acceptances as have been found merchantable and liquid by the experience of European banking systems. It is anticipated that the effect of this method will be to encourage banking houses to buy commercial bills of the qualified class, and in this way that we may greatly enlarge the market for the bills of manufacturers, merchants, and business men who are handling the actual commerce of the country. (Secs. 14 and 15, pp. 40-44.)

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITS WITH FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

It has been deemed of the highest importance to maintain the independent Treasury of the United States and not compel the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit every dollar of the public funds in the Federal reserve banks, but to provide that he may do so. The argument in favor of maintaining the independence of the Federal Treasury is overwhelmingly in favor of an independent Treasury and need not be recounted here.

The Government of the United States can advantageously to the banks and to itself place with the Federal reserve banks $150,000,000, or even a larger sum, but the process of collecting the revenue through revenue collectors scattered throughout the Nation, making local deposits, and the right of the Treasury Department to make disbursements in every part of the country through its numerous disbursing officers, makes it highly necessary to maintain the independence of the Treasury. We have therefore thought it proper to change the provision of section 16 in such a way as to accomplish this object (p. 46).

REFUNDING BONDS.

The House measure (sec. 19, p. 56) provided for retiring 5 per cent of the outstanding 2 per cent bonds held for national-bank circulation by the exchange of 3 per cent bonds without circulation privilege for such 2 per cent bonds, justly assumes that the Government will be compensated by the interest earned upon a like amount of Federal reserve notes.

We have preferred to absorb such of these bonds as would be offered on the market by permitting the Federal reserve banks to buy such 2 per cent bonds and issue Federal reserve bank notes against them just as the national banks do (p. 14), and have further permitted such Federal reserve banks, in section 19, to assume the redemption of not exceeding $36,000,000 of national-bank notes issued against such bonds and to take over such bonds and issue Federal reserve notes against such bonds, leaving the bonds with the Treasurer of the United States in trust in the form of 3 per cent bonds or 3 per cent annual notes, in this way assuring to the Government the earning power upon the circulation taking the place of the retired national-bank circulation (p. 58).

CLEARING CHECKS AND DRAFTS.

The House bill proposed to clear checks and drafts at par, but we propose an amendment providing that checks and drafts sent to the Federal reserve banks by member banks may be cleared, allowing the Federal reserve board to fix the charge which may be imposed for the service of clearing or collection rendered either by the Federal reserve bank or by the member banks, and with a provision that the act should not be construed to prohibit member banks from making reasonable charges for checks and drafts debited to their account, or for collecting and remitting drafts, or for exchange sold to its patrons. In this way the reserve banks are not put in competition with the country banks, but can serve them and their customers at a fair price. This amendment should remove the very serious objection of many of the country banks to the House provision, which they thought would interfere with their right to charge for exchange in making remittances (p. 55).

SAVINGS-BANK SECTION.

Your committee has struck out entirely the savings-bank section No. 27, for the reason that the national banks now, through the system of time deposits, carry on a savings-bank business very economically and at the same time use the funds in promoting the local enterprises. It was the practical judgment of all the small banks of the country that this section should not remain in the bill.

CHANGES IN THE NATIONAL-BANK ACT.

Several changes of importance in the national-bank act have been made, to which attention should be called:

First. Section 21 (p. 65) provides that the 5 per cent fund placed with the Secretary of the Treasury for the redemption of national-bank notes shall no longer be construed to be a part of the bank's reserves. This is justified because the reserves of the national banks have been made decidedly lower than they have been in the past.

Second. The law requiring bonds of national banks to be deposited before any national bank association shall be authorized to commence the banking business, as provided in section 5159 of the Revised Statutes, etc., is repealed by section 18 (p. 53). The obvious purpose of this section is to ultimately do away with the bond-secured circulation, which is inflexible and unscientific. The way to establish an improved system is thus made open.

Third. The bank examinations are more thoroughly provided for in section 23 (p. 66).

Fourth. The loans, gratuities, and commissions to bank officers or bank examiners are penalized by section 24 (p. 69).

Fifth. The stockholders' liabilities of national banks and of member banks is modified to establish the double liability and to prevent its evasion. (Sec. 25, p. 71.)

Sixth. Loans on farm lands are permitted to the extent of 25 per cent of the capital and surplus of a national bank and for a period of five years. This would make available possibly $400,000,000, but in actual practice it would not be likely to exceed a hundred million dollars under the terms of the bill, for the reason that the city banks do not make such loans, and where the banks have the authority they will probably not exercise it with any uniformity.

Seventh. The change of the reserves in the national banking law is a very important change, heretofore described, and which will be found set forth in section 20 (p. 59).

The House provision was changed so as to make the language more compact and to simplify it.

Eighth. Foreign branches were also provided for national banks having a capital and surplus of a million dollars or more, with the approval of the Federal reserve board. (Sec. 28, p. 77.)

This is a very important amendment and one of far-reaching importance to the foreign commerce of the United States, the purpose of which is so obvious as to need no explanation.

Many other amendments are needed in the national-bank act which this bill does not undertake to deal with, for the reason that it was of great importance that this bill should not be embarrassed by the consideration of questions which were not necessarily germane to the bill itself in establishing the Federal reserve system.

The National Monetary Commission did a very large amount of work looking toward the codification of the national-bank act, and this work has so far progressed that it may be easily submitted to the Senate during the next regular session, in such a form as to enable the matter to be disposed of and to make any other amendments which are necessary to the national-bank act, without embarrassing the present measure by considerations which are not necessarily a part of the Federal reserve system.

The proposed changes recommended by the undersigned are best set forth by submitting a print of the House bill with the parts struck out being placed in brackets and the amendments proposed being inserted in italics. (See Exhibit A.) The other exhibits are necessary to justify the amendments recommended.

Very respectfully submitted.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, November 25, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, November 25, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,
President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented resolutions adopted by the Kapahulu Improvement Club, of Honolulu, Hawaii, favoring the enactment of legislation for the extension of the franchise of the Honolulu Rapid Transit & Land Co., which were referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Michigan Patent Law Association, praying for the repeal of the copyright law, which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Kalamazoo, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WEEKS presented a memorial of the Social Science Club of Newton, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation authorizing the city of San Francisco to use the waters of Hetch Hetchy Valley, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WEEKS (for Mr. LODGE) presented the memorial of L. B. R. Briggs, president of Radcliffe College, and of William Z. Ripley and sundry other professors of Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., and the memorial of William D. Parkinson, superintendent of schools, and other sundry citizens of Waltham, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation authorizing the city of San Francisco to use the waters of Hetch Hetchy Valley, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a petition from citizens of the State of Oregon relative to the passage of a pension bill for the membership of the United States Military Telegraph Corps, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, together with the signatures, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, together with the signatures, as follows:

NOVEMBER 11, 1913.

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned citizens of Portland, in the State of Oregon, believing that the members of the United States Military Telegraph Corps, who rendered exceptional military service in the Civil War, 1861-1865, have heretofore been overlooked in the distribution of the rewards meted out to the soldiers of that war, do most earnestly petition the Congress to pass remedial legislation in the form of the pension bills now before it.

Sweet, Grandesta Apartments; C. A. Leppere, 1900 East Taylor Street; G. B. Flood, 231 East Seventy-second N.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the memorial of R. M. Shurtleff, of New York, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation authorizing the city of San Francisco to use the waters of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which was ordered to lie on the table.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a memorial signed by Mrs. George S. Edgell, of Newport, N. H., daughter of the late Austin Corbin, and 204 other women of the State of New Hampshire, protesting against granting the suffrage to women.

In transmitting the memorial Mrs. Edgell very modestly suggests that she would be pleased to have it appear in the RECORD. I will therefore ask that the heading of the memorial be read, and that the names be not inserted in the RECORD, as that is contrary to our custom. As the joint resolution on the subject has been reported to the Senate, I ask that the memorial lie on the table.

There being no objection, the memorial was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Federal Congress of the United States of America in Washington assembled:

We, the undersigned citizens of Newport, in the county of Sullivan, and State of New Hampshire, representing women of every station in life, trusting in God and vitally interested in the preservation of the traditional American home, are opposed to the extension of suffrage to our sex.

With the demands of society, the calls of charity, the church, and philanthropy constantly increasing, we feel that to add the distracting forces of political campaigns would wreck our constitutions and destroy our homes.

At all times we are ready to give our full portion of love and sacrifice for the life of the Nation and the good of mankind, but we look upon the attempt now being made by some to crowd the obligations of suffrage upon us as a move to change our natures and destroy us for that wider field of influence and usefulness which in America has always belonged to woman.

Therefore we respectfully petition your honorable body, and ask that you will vote against all measures which may come before you looking to the extension of the franchise to women.

Dated at Newport, N. H., this 7th day of July, 1913.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have here a resolution of the California Camera Club, of California, in regard to the bill commonly known as the Hetch Hetchy water bill, referring to the San Francisco water system. In presenting the resolution to the Senate and asking that it may be read by the Secretary I wish to make a preliminary statement. This club is composed of members from the whole State of California. It has a very large membership and nearly every member of the club has been in the Hetch Hetchy Valley. They made a trip there as a club about a year and a half or two years ago. I should like to have the resolution read.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

No organization in California has as keen an appreciation of natural beauties as the California Camera Club. This organization has always been identified with the movement to preserve natural beauties, and its members, more numerous than any other group of people, have visited the Sierras. At a special meeting of the board of directors held November 10 to discuss the Hetch Hetchy project the following was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas it is the policy of the California Camera Club to take an interest in everything that is for the benefit of the community; and
"Whereas at a recent lecture given under the auspices of this club the speaker directed criticism at the effort of San Francisco to secure a water supply from Hetch Hetchy for municipal consumption; and
"Whereas the views expressed by this lecturer were his own personal views and not those of the California Camera Club; and

"Whereas the members of the California Camera Club are primarily true lovers of nature, and as such believe that the addition of a lake in Hetch Hetchy Valley will enhance its scenic beauties, will cause the development of a system of roads, and will permit visitors a more ready access to the natural beauties of this now almost inaccessible region; and

"Whereas the California Camera Club recognizes that even now the water supply of San Francisco is inadequate and with the growth of the city will become more inadequate; and

"Whereas the water of the Hetch Hetchy is well known to be of the very purest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the California Camera Club, recognizing that a sufficient and perfectly pure water supply is one of the most valuable assets of any large and growing municipality, desires to express its approval of any action taken toward the securing of the Hetch Hetchy watershed as a permanent source of a municipality-owned water supply."

Mr. PITTMAN. I have another resolution here addressed to the Senate by the California Club of California, which is, I believe, the largest woman's club in California. It is composed of members from all over the State. I should like to have the Secretary also read this resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas San Francisco has been for 12 years appealing to the Federal Government for such rights in the high Sierras as will enable it to provide the people of the bay counties with a pure and adequate supply of water; and

Whereas the Hetch Hetchy region offers the only source to which San Francisco can look for such an uncontaminated supply as will provide for not only the immediate but the future needs of its people; and

Whereas San Francisco already owns outright more than half the land in the floor of the Hetch Hetchy Valley which will be flooded by the proposed reservoir, and has in good faith spent one and one-half million dollars in the development of its proposed municipal water system; and

Whereas all that San Francisco asks of the Federal Government is the right to construct a dam and the grant of the use as a reservoir of part of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which will in no wise be impaired in its natural beauty by the creation of a lake; and

Whereas the natural beauties of the Hetch Hetchy region will be made more easily accessible to thousands of nature lovers by the building of roads and trains, which San Francisco will construct into this entire region; and

Whereas human consumption is the highest use to which the Hetch Hetchy water can be put, in that it will safeguard the health and supply the present needs of a community of 800,000 people and the future needs of many times that number: Therefore be it

Resolved by the California Club of California (450 members). That we most earnestly go on record as approving of San Francisco's petition to Congress for the grant of certain rights in the Hetch Hetchy region; and be it further

Resolved, That we declare our firm conviction that human needs are paramount to sentimental objection of so-called "nature lovers," who profess to see in San Francisco's project a desecration of nature, although the work of San Francisco in the high Sierras will in reality bring this wonder region closer to the real lovers of nature and will in no wise impair the grandeur of the scenery there to be found; and be it further

Resolved, That we regret the campaign of misrepresentation that has been made in the effort to prevent San Francisco from obtaining that pure and adequate supply of water to which every community should be entitled; and be it further

Resolved, That we petition the Senate of the United States to grant to San Francisco the rights for which it has so long appealed and which are embodied in the Raker bill, heretofore passed by the House of Representatives of the United States.

Mrs. A. P. BLACK, President.

Mrs. J. S. A. MACDONALD, Secretary.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have here a list of clubs throughout the country that have indorsed the last resolution read. I ask leave to have it printed in the RECORD, without reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following have also adopted the resolution:

The Rhode Island Woman Suffrage Association; Elizabeth Upham Gates, president; Sara L. G. Fittz, secretary, 197 Longfellow Street, Providence, R. I.

The Pacific Coast Women's Press Association, San Francisco; Mrs. I. Lowenberg, president; Mrs. W. C. Morrow, corresponding secretary; Mrs. A. J. Stowell, recording secretary.

The North Carolina Society; R. G. Lewis, president; William P. Hubbard, secretary.

The Waitresses' Union, Local No. 48, San Francisco; Gerlie Benton, president; Laura Molleda, secretary.

The South Park Mothers' Club, San Francisco; M. McFarlane, secretary.

The Woman's Club of Redondo Beach; Mrs. John Steward, president; Mrs. Perry Long, secretary.

The Richmond Women's Club; Mrs. E. H. O'Donnell, secretary; Mrs. J. W. Felt, president; Mrs. E. G. Ely and Mrs. F. Menz, executive committee.

The Lois Art Club, of Grass Valley; Edna D. Sampson, president; Mignotte Grant, secretary.

The Thursday Reading Club, of Oakland; Helen L. Courteau, president; Helen H. Barnes, secretary.

The Mountain View Woman's Club; Mrs. Eliza J. Farrell, president; Miss E. J. Stevens, secretary.

To Kalon Club, San Francisco; Maybelle Worth Stevens, corresponding secretary.

The Alta Mira Club, of San Leandro; Gaior G. Aitken, president; Alma Pauline Spurr, secretary.

The Tamalpais Center Woman's Club; Mrs. Margaret Hamilton, president.

The Sonoma Valley Woman's Club; Carrie A. Burlingame, president; Alice Wagon, secretary.

The Woman's Civic Club, San Luis Obispo, Cal.; Mrs. Eliza Miller, president; Grace A. Van Scoy, secretary.
The Laurel Hall Club; Christine Hart, president; Grace Guild Palmer, secretary.

The San Francisco Colony of New England Women; Mrs. G. B. Miller, president; Mrs. Martin C. Walton, secretary.

The Improvement Club of Auburn, Cal.; Mrs. Cora E. Tabor, president; Harriet J. Lewis, secretary.

The Vittoria Colonna Club; Mariana Bertola, president; Irise D. Martini, secretary.

The Monticola Club, Susanville, Cal.; Mrs. Atawa McKinsey, president; Mrs. Ada L. Hart, secretary.

The Western Development Co.; W. S. Gray, president; A. M. Enowold, secretary.

The Texas Club; Dr. R. E. Bering, president; A. J. Hockwald, secretary.

Mr. PITTMAN. I also have here a letter from the State engineer of the State of California as to the legal rights of San Francisco to this water. I ask leave to have it printed also in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING,
Sacramento, November 12, 1913.

To whom it may concern:

Concerning San Francisco, and San Francisco Bay district and an adequate water supply, the writer believes that the Hetch Hetchy project is the best and also believes that this district is entitled to the best source of supply available.

I am quite familiar with the whole State of California, and have a very full knowledge of the Bay district, having resided there during the past 13 years. As commissioner of public works of the city of Berkeley, it was my duty, in connection with the governing bodies of neighboring cities, to give the matter of water supply considerable study three or four years ago.

Have given a careful reading to the report of a hearing of the Committee on Public Lands of the Sixty-third Congress, first session, H. R. 6281, and had there been any lingering doubt in my mind as to the legitimate claim of San Francisco to this source of water supply it would have been entirely dissipated by the testimony and speeches made at that hearing.

W. F. MCCLURE, State Engineer.

Mr. PITTMAN. I also have here resolutions adopted by the League of California Municipalities, favoring the passage of the Raker bill. I ask leave to have the resolutions printed also in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States a bill known as the Raker Act, which measure has already passed the House of Representatives; and

Whereas the Raker Act is a grant from the United States to the city and county of San Francisco and the other cities on San Francisco Bay, wherein the subject of the grant is reservoir sites in the Hetch Hetchy Valley, Cherry River Valley, and Lake Eleanor Basin, said sites to be used for the purpose of supplying water to the communities around San Francisco Bay; and

Whereas the needs of San Francisco and adjoining cities are such that immediate relief is necessary to insure adequate supplies of water for domestic purposes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the League of California Municipalities, representing 185 cities and towns, in its sixteenth annual convention assembled in the city of Venice, does hereby approve the said Raker bill, and respectfully urges its passage in the Senate of the United States.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of a resolution adopted by the League of California Municipalities October 10, 1913.

H. A. MASOX, Secretary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in connection with the Hetch Hetchy water bill, so called, I wish to give notice to the Senate that I have received many, many thousands of protests against it. I have not felt it proper or right to encumber the RECORD with all these protests, but I am frank to say that I believe I have in my office at least 5,000 letters from different parts of the country protesting against the passage of the bill.

I merely wish to make this statement, Mr. President, because parties protesting to me and noticing that other communications on the subject are put in the RECORD may think that I have neglected a duty. I simply call the attention of the Senate to the fact without asking that the RECORD be encumbered with them.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, while we are on this subject I desire to give notice that on Thursday, the 4th of December, I will submit some remarks on the Hetch Hetchy bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in connection with the observations of the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] I desire to put in the RECORD a statement of the fact that I am also in receipt of almost innumerable letters on the subject. This morning a lengthy article from the pen of Frederick Law Olmsted, Jr., one of the most celebrated landscape gardeners of the world, came to me with a letter asking that I should have it inserted in the RECORD. It is a very long communication. Mr. Olmsted is opposed to the project. I have not felt like asking to have it printed in the RECORD, as I have not asked to have any of the letters on this subject printed.

The matter is to come up for debate very soon, and I will venture to express the hope that letters and resolutions on one or the other side or on both sides of this important question, inasmuch as we individually receive them through the mail, ought not to encumber the RECORD to a greater extent than is absolutely necessary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 3472) granting an honorable discharge to Franklin Martin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3473) granting a pension to Helen M. Gleed (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 3474) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Almon L. McNich (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3475) granting an increase of pension to Charles M. Walker (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3476) granting a pension to Fidelia M. Waffles (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3477) granting an increase of pension to Henry Eaton (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3478) granting an increase of pension to James K. Brooks (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 3479) granting a pension to Ambrose A. Link (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 3480) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Tice (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3481) granting a pension to Henry F. Baldwin (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 3482) relating to the sale of bichloride of mercury in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MILITARY HIGHWAY, EL PASO, TEX.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 81) authorizing the survey and estimate of cost for the construction of a military road from El Paso, Tex., to the mouth of the Rio Grande, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Whereas conditions along the Rio Grande border of the United States have demonstrated beyond question the necessity of a military highway from El Paso to the mouth of the Rio Grande; and

Whereas the difficulty of reaching many sections of this border with troops and munitions of war makes that portion of our country comparatively easy of invasion, exposes many thousands of our people to untold dangers in time of war, prevents the proper policing of the border against smugglers and other lawless classes, and imperils the security both of life and property: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause to be made a survey for such highway at the earliest possible date, together with an estimate of cost.

That for the purpose of defraying the cost of said survey and estimate the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

BUZZARDS BAY BUOY.

Mr. ROOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 219), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be directed to inform the Senate what steps have been taken or are contemplated to buoy and mark that part of the public navigable waters of the United States in Buzzards Bay which will become a much-frequented trade route upon the opening of the Cape Cod Canal.

HOOR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. KERN. I desire to inquire of Members on both sides of the Chamber whether any Senator is ready to proceed or will be ready to proceed with the discussion of the currency bill on to-morrow?

Mr. GALLINGER. No Senator is ready to proceed on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. NELSON. In reply to the Senator from Indiana, I beg leave to state that with the exception of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Hitchcock], who intends to discuss the bill to-day, I am aware of no Senator on this side of the Chamber who desires to go on with the debate.

Mr. KERN. Then, Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 2 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK obtained the floor.

Mr. OWEN. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska just for a moment of time? I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the condition of the calendar and to the unanimous-consent agreements which are on the calendar. One is for December 1, 1913, providing for the disposition of the Hetch Hetchy bill, and the other is for December 8, relating to the Alaska railroad bill. I should like to have it understood that, in so far as those unanimous-consent agreements do not require the time of the Senate, I shall feel it my duty to ask the Senate to consider the banking and currency bill. I suppose there will not be very much time taken up on the Hetch Hetchy bill, and I should be very glad to know from the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], in charge of that bill, what time he anticipates will be consumed by debate upon that measure.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, at present there are only two addresses noted to be made on that subject. One is by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] for the 3d of December, and the other is by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] for the 4th of December. I do not know how many Senators desire to discuss that matter. It is set, however, for the 1st of December, and it may be considered from that time until the 6th, with a unanimous-consent agreement that it shall be voted upon on or before the 6th day of December. Of course it could not be voted on prior to the 4th day of December, because the Senator from California has announced that on that day he will address himself to the subject; but I suggest that it may serve convenience if Senators who desire to discuss the matter will make some announcement as to the time when they desire to discuss it. Then we shall be able to confer with those in charge of the currency bill, so as to notify them of the time between the 1st and 6th proximo that can be allotted to that measure. I simply make this as a suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to state to the Senator from Nevada that there will be other Senators than those mentioned by him who will desire to discuss the bill to which he refers.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no doubt of that at all.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to give notice that, in so far as the time of the Senate may not be required for the discussion of the Hetch Hetchy bill, I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the banking and currency bill until 6 o'clock in the evening of each day. It is a matter of the most urgent importance.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator from Oklahoma mean by that to set aside the unanimous-consent agreement for the purpose of considering the currency bill?

Mr. OWEN. No; not at all.

Mr. GRONNA. That is not the Senator's request?

Mr. OWEN. Not at all. The unanimous-consent agreement, I take it, will consume so much of the time as the Senate desires to consume, even if it consumes it all; but, to the extent that it is not used, I wish to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to continue with the consideration of the banking and currency bill. That is all.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Oklahoma will permit me, I wish to say that my impression is that the six days allowed for the consideration of the Hetch Hetchy bill will be taken up. I do not know how much time I shall take in discussing the bill, but I desire to give notice that I shall wish at least some time to discuss it before it is placed upon its final passage.

Mr. OWEN. I assume that the Senator will speak upon the Hetch Hetchy bill. I only desire to give this notice and also to call attention to the unanimous-consent agreement with reference to the Alaska railroad bill, which involves taking that measure up for consideration; but, having taken it up for consideration, even the unanimous-consent agreement may be laid aside. I understand those in charge of that bill will make no objection to its being laid aside. It is costing the country, in my judgment, in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 a day to delay the banking and currency bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have no desire, of course, to in any way delay the currency bill, but I do not wish it to be regarded that the Alaska railroad bill is to be taken up simply pro forma. I think that bill is just as important legislation as is the currency bill. It is one of the great measures that this Congress ought to pass, and it ought to have been passed before this time. I do not wish anything to interfere with it, and I do not think anything should interfere with it. The needs of Alaska and of the people who live there are more pressing in regard to the development of that Territory and the construction of railroads than any other measure that is before the American Congress to-day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. With reference to the Alaska railroad bill I have not heard as yet that there will be any very general discussion of it. I may be misinformed as to that, but I do not think that there will be any disposition to press it against the consideration of the currency bill—that is, there will not be very much discussion of it, I think, and there will be times during the discussion of the currency bill when no Senator will be prepared to discuss it—so that I think there will be ample opportunity to submit the Alaska railroad bill at the time fixed on the calendar. I hope so, at any rate.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I merely wish to give notice to the Senate that, in so far as it lay within the power of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency to press the banking and currency bill, it is the intention to do so, and I wish to ask Senators who desire to speak upon the banking and currency measure to be ready to address the Senate upon that bill at the earliest possible date. That is the only purpose I had in rising.

PLAN FOR A FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that to-morrow I will, if the opportunity presents itself, address the Senate regarding a Federal reserve system, which it is my purpose to present as a modification of the pending bill.

There are three systems that have been considered—first, the central-bank system suggested by Mr. Aldrich; second, the regional-bank system presented by both sections of the Committee on Banking and Currency; and third, a Federal system, which I presented some years ago in opposition to the Aldrich plan, and which I desire to urge now.

I wish to state briefly that I realize the great importance of speedy action upon the subject of banking and currency, but the system which I propose does not involve very material changes in the regional system proposed by the Banking and Currency Committee. It simply means a regional reserve association in every State and the federation of the various State reserve associations in one Federal reserve association at Washington. My view is that we ought to act decisively upon the basic plan that is to control this bill, and that before the discussion closes it will be necessary for the party that is in power to determine through a party conference what that basic plan shall be. When that determination is reached, the details can be easily adjusted. I believe that any of the plans proposed are superior to the existing system, and that the commercial and industrial conditions of the country require very speedy action.

I do not propose the modification suggested as a means of delaying consideration or action. I am ready at any time to acquiesce in any basic plan which has the assent of the majority of this body, but I should like to present the plan which I have advocated before and which I advocate now, and have it fully considered. It embraces simply the following suggestions, namely: First, the strengthening of the individual banks of the country engaged in interstate commerce, whether State or National banks, by adequate provisions regarding the relation which their capital shall bear to their deposit obligations and the relation which their reserves shall bear to their deposit obligations; secondly, the unionizing of all banks within the boundaries of a State, whether National or State, that are engaged in interstate commerce in a State reserve association through which one-third of their reserves can be unionized under the control of this association and so mobilized as to enable them to be used with advantage and with purpose at any point of attack within the State where a panic or a stringency threatens; third, to provide for a Federal reserve association at Washington, the members of which shall be the State reserve associations, with which shall be deposited one-third of the reserves that are deposited with the State reserve associations, and which shall have the deposit of Government funds and the power to issue Federal reserve notes.

Under this system about one-third of the entire reserves of the country, aggregating in all one billion and a half of dollars, namely $500,000,000, would go into the various State reserve associations and would be held there in a mobilized form. Of this $500,000,000 one-third would go to the Federal reserve association at Washington, giving it $166,000,000 of concentrated reserves, which it could use provided the local difficulty reached proportions beyond the control of a State reserve association and assumed interstate or national proportions. That $168,000,000 would be supplemented by nearly $300,000,000 of Government deposits and the power also to issue Federal reserve notes. Under this system the power of rediscount would be given to the State reserve associations with reference to their member banks, and the power of rediscount would be given to the Federal association with reference to its member State associations. That power could be extended, if thought advisable, to individual banks.

A SYSTEM IN HARMONY WITH OUR SCHEME OF GOVERNMENT.

Under such a system, absolutely in harmony with our scheme of government and our political system, we would have the federated powers of the banks in every State in local associations for the purpose of meeting local difficulties and the federated powers of all the local associations exercised in one Federal association for the purpose of meeting difficulties which are likely to become of interstate and national extent and character.

I wish to call attention to the fact that this plan would also embrace no requirement of capital whatever from any of the member banks of the country, but would simply apportion between the State reserve associations and the Federal reserve association the reserves which the local banks both National and State are required to keep under the law. I offer the following resolution embracing the modification suggested, and which I request shall be read. I also request that it be printed and lie on the table. I will address the Senate upon this resolution at to-morrow's session.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 220) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the pending banking and currency bill should be modified by providing—

First. That within five years the capital of every commercial bank, National and State, engaged in interstate commerce shall be required to be equal to at least 12 per cent of its deposits, and that acceptance of deposits beyond this proportion shall be forbidden, except upon a proportionate increase of capital.

Second. That within five years the reserve of such banks shall be required to be equal to at least 12 per cent of the deposits, except in reserve cities, where it shall equal 15 per cent.

Third. That of such reserve held by county banks one-third may be deposited in reserve city banks and in central reserve city banks.

Fourth. That of such reserve one-third shall be deposited in the State reserve associations hereafter referred to.

Fifth. That there shall be organized in every State a State reserve association, in which the membership of all commercial banks, both National and State, shall be compulsory, as a condition of the continued existence of the national banks and of the privilege of continuing in interstate commerce as to the State banks.

Sixth. That each member bank shall deposit and forever maintain in such State reserve association at least one-third of its cash reserve. Such State reserve association shall have powers of supervision and regulation of its member banks, and also the power of rediscount of commercial paper, guaranteed by the member bank; the reserve of such member bank to stand as additional security for its guaranty.

Seventh. That a Federal reserve association at Washington shall be organized, whose members shall be the State reserve associations; that each of such member association shall deposit and forever maintain in the Federal reserve association one-third of the reserves deposited with it by the member banks; that such system shall also provide for the deposit in such Federal reserve association of Government funds, and also for the issue to it of Federal reserve notes.

Eighth. That power be given to such Federal reserve association to rediscount indorsed commercial paper held by any State reserve association and indorsed by it, and to use therefor the cash deposited by the member associations, the Government funds deposited with it, and the Federal reserve notes.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 7837 be now laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7837) to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, for furnishing an elastic currency, affording means of rediscounting commercial paper, and to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to H. R. 7837 has not been printed in bill form. I have had a number of requests for it, and have been unable to obtain a copy.

Therefore I ask, if the Senator does not object, that the usual number of copies of the bill H. R. 7837 be printed in bill form, showing the changes suggested by the amendments intended to be proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

There being no objection, the order was agreed to, and it was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the usual number of H. R. 7837, "An act to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes," be printed in bill form, showing the changes suggested by the amendments intended to be proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and as shown in Senate Document 242, Sixty-third Congress, first session.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, we have now begun the consideration of what is likely to prove the most important legislation that has been before Congress for many years. It would be hard to overestimate the great changes in banking circles and in the business world which may be produced by the bill now before us. It affects primarily, of course, and directly the 25,000 banks of the United States, large and small. It affects their tens of thousands of stockholders; and it affects, also, their vast number of borrowers and their unnumbered depositors. It would be hard, indeed, to find any class of society, whether employers or employed, whether rich or poor, not affected by this bill. It affects also the credit of the United States. It affects our international relations through the channels of commerce, and it is likely to affect to a large degree our position in the finance of the civilized world.

I have felt, Mr. President, from the very start, that the possibilities of this legislation are too vast to justify hasty action; and I rejoice that after two months of thorough discussion and consideration in committee the pending bill is to be subjected to the acid test of a public debate in the Senate of the United States.

First, Mr. President, let me draw attention to the genesis of this bill, its evolution, and its present condition. Banking and currency reform has been the subject of agitation in the United States for many years. There has been a growing realization that our banking and currency system was lacking in certain respects. This sentiment has been in part academic, being led by political economists and publicists, but in part it has also been practical, having the anxious support of banking interests which have been pinched by several currency stringencies and shaken by several bank panics.

Possibly this condition of agitation and discussion might have continued for some time had it not been for the action of President Wilson in bringing the matter before Congress, thus making banking and currency reform an administration measure. In so doing, the President has merited and received the praise of the whole country. His wisdom and his courage in bringing this needed reform to a practical issue is to be highly commended. Nothing less than presidential influence would have made banking and currency reform possible for some time.

I yield this tribute to the President of the United States the more readily because I have frankly opposed and criticized him when he urged hasty action, which I deemed dangerous.

The bill before us reached the Senate on the 18th of September, having passed the other House after several months of discussion in committee, caucus, and in the full House. As I look upon it now, Mr. President, I am disposed to think it somewhat remarkable that the House succeeded in sending to the Senate so good a bill, considering the difficulties of the situation. In the first place, it was formative and original legislation. It dealt with a difficult problem which to some extent has puzzled the civilized world for many years. It was pushed through the House in a hurry. It is but fair to its authors to say that it represented much hard work, great study, and original thought. To some extent, of course, it was an adaptation of the European system of a central bank, with such modifications as political exigencies and American institutions made necessary.

But, Mr. President, excellent as the bill was, it contained some very serious defects and some fundamental errors. Had these been enacted as they came from the House most serious consequences might and probably would have followed. The best proof that the House bill needed revision is found in the fact that every member of the Banking and Currency Committee, which has examined the bill and considered it for two months, voted for changes which amount in the aggregate to more than one-half of the original measure.

I have caused an examination to be made of the bill as Senator OWEN and his section of the committee proposed to amend it. I find that 60 per cent of the bill as he now recommends it to the Senate is new or rewritten matter, while only 40 per cent of his bill appears as it originally passed the House. In other words, the bill he presents is 40 per cent old and 60 per cent amended. In the case of the report which I have had the honor to make on behalf of six members of the committee, 64 per cent is the new or revised matter, and 36 per cent is the original matter of the bill. Thus, Mr. President, do both wings of the committee concur quite closely as to the proportion of the bill which should be changed.

I say this with no spirit of criticism of the bill, for I have already stated my belief that considering the circumstances and the difficulties the bill which was passed by the House showed great constructive genius.

It is perhaps fortunate, Mr. President, that Senator OWEN's section of the committee and the section of the committee which I have the honor to represent have to a considerable extent proposed amendments to the same sections. If it had chanced that we had selected different sections to amend, I fear there would be no part at all of the original House bill here for consideration. It then would have presented somewhat the spectacle that was presented by the farmer boy's trousers when he awoke in the morning to try them on. Upon going to bed at night he had asked his mother if she would not please cut off an inch of his new trousers, as they were too long. She had pleaded that she had too much to do. He had then asked his sister to do so, and she had some excuse. Then he had asked an aunt to do so, and she had an excuse. So finally the poor boy went to bed feeling that his trousers would still be too long in the morning. But one after another these members of the family relented, and out of sympathy they each cut off an inch of the boy's trousers; so that when he awoke to try them on in the morning they were very much shorter than they really ought to be. [Laughter.]

Such, I think, possibly would have been the condition of the House bill if it had not happened that Senator OWEN's section of the committee and the section which I represent applied our amendments largely to the same portions of the bill.

Now, Mr. President, we come naturally to the points of difference between the section of the committee which I represent and the section represented by the chairman, Mr. OWEN. I shall not go into the circumstances or the causes which led up to a split of our committee. At the present time I shall content myself by testifying my esteem for and good feeling toward the chairman of the committee. I have not hesitated to differ with him in the consideration of the pending bill; but I desire in this public way to testify my appreciation of his great industry, his remarkable patience under irritating conditions, and his equally marked ability.

Mr. President, I do not think it a misfortune that this measure is brought to the Senate by an equally divided and equally balanced committee, presenting sharply defined issues. On the other hand, I think it a highly favorable start to make. I think the Senate will be in a position to consider the bill with better results in prospect than if we presented to you a unanimous and compromise report, because the Senate can now judge, after the two sides have been duly and properly presented, which of the differing views is the one most likely to lead to favorable results.

The first matter of difference between the two sections of the committee is in the number of reserve banks. The House bill proposed to divide the country into 12 districts, and to establish in each a regional reserve bank. The hearings had not progressed far when every member of the committee realized that to cut up the country into 12 districts and to establish 12 regional banks meant to defeat the very purpose of the legislation, which is to mobilize the banking reserves of the United States for the common use of all the land. So instead of 12 regional banks, as proposed by the House, Senator OWEN's section of the committee has presented to you 8 regional banks, and the section of the committee which I represent presents to you for your consideration an amendment to establish 4 regional banks, and 4 only.

The agitation for banking and currency reform in the United States has always led us to look upon the countries of Europe, where bank panics are practically unknown, where the rate of interest has few fluctuations, where the discount of commercial paper is easy, and where the currency has an elastic character, expanding at the seasons of the year when business requires it and contracting as credits are reduced. Looking at those countries and taking, for instance, Great Britain, France, and Germany we find that each has a central bank, and we find that in each the deposits of all the banks are mobilized and concentrated into the central bank. We find a central reservoir in each of those countries, drawn upon at all times by all the banks in case of necessity. So if there is any lesson at all to be learned from the experience of European countries it is that the mobilization of reserves is perhaps the one greatest need above all others.

In Great Britain the Bank of England performs the function of a central bank. In that case it is mobilization and nothing else which enables the Bank of England to control the gold supply, to regulate the rate of interest, to supply the great joint-stock banks with necessary funds, and to perform generally the functions of a central bank. It has no note-issuing power except against gold.

We go to France, and we find a central bank, the Bank of France, under Government control; and in the Bank of France we find mobilized all the reserves of all the banks of France. We find the Bank of France endowed with the power to issue currency in case of need to banks that discount their paper with it.

We go to Germany, and we find a similar condition. The great Reichsbank of Germany, established almost within our own recollection, performs for Germany the functions which the Bank of France performs for France. It holds the reserves of the great banks of Germany, discounts their paper, supplies them with currency, hoards the gold in a central reservoir, controls the rate of interest, and influences the gold supply.

Now, I say if we are to profit by the experience of Europe we must in adopting a system adopt a system that will accomplish some of the things that are accomplished by those central banks.

Mr. President, I do not believe, and I doubt whether it can be shown, that it will be safe to attempt to mobilize the reserves of the banks of the United States with any number of reserve banks greater than 4. There is no more logical argument for 8 banks than for 10 or for 12, and there is an argument and a reason for 4.

In the first place, we have three great central reserve cities of the United States to-day—New York, Chicago, and St. Louis. In those cities are concentrated a large portion of the reserves of the American banks. Gradually there has grown up a banking custom and a commercial habit which have fixed those three great cities as the reserve centers. They have their tributary territory, and it is natural to establish in each of them a great reserve bank. The great distance of the Pacific coast cities renders it highly desirable, if not necessary, that a reserve bank should be established on the Pacific coast. San Francisco is the natural point.

Mr. President, no one claims that the aggregate capital of the reserve banks of the United States, however many we establish, can be or ought to be more than about $100,000,000. There is substantial agreement upon that point. Divide the $100,000,000 among four great reserve banks, and in the natural proportions of capital and surplus you will have a great reserve bank in the city of New York with about $50,000,000 capital and $350,000,000 of deposits, a bank so large and so powerful that it will compare favorably with any of the great banks of Europe, and large enough in international transactions to hold its own with any of the great institutions of the Old World.

Coming to Chicago, the natural division of the territory will make it possible to organize in Chicago a reserve bank with $29,000,000 of capital and $200,000,000 of deposits to serve a territory that is naturally tributary to Chicago.

Coming to St. Louis, and taking also again the banks organized in the St. Louis territory, we find that a bank can be organized there with about $16,000,000 capital and something like $100,000,000 of deposits.

Going farther, to the Pacific coast, it will be possible in San Francisco to organize a bank of $10,000,000 capital and about $65,000,000 deposits.

Now, can anyone tell what is to be gained by cutting up that territory into smaller units, demobilizing the reserves, when our purpose is to mobilize them?

Moreover, my friends in the South and the West and in the central part of the United States should remember this. New York constitutes an irreducible minimum. No matter how many reserve banks are organized in the United States, the reserve bank of New York City will not be less than $40,000,000 of capital and about $300,000,000 of deposits. The subdivision of the country into a larger number of reserve banks will simply result in magnifying New York and reducing to insignificance the rest of the reserve banks of the country.

I want to draw attention to a comparison of the practical operations of a large reserve bank, covering a great area of territory, and a small reserve bank in a limited region. Suppose, for instance, we should have a regional reserve system of eight banks, with one established at the city of New Orleans, in the heart of the cotton country. The time comes to move the cotton. An enormous sum of money is required. Every bank in that district would be affected by the same cause. Every bank in that district would want money at the same time, and almost immediately the balances in the reserve bank of New Orleans would be drawn down to the very minimum and still be unable to accommodate their customers, and that reserve bank would be compelled to apply to the Federal board for asset currency. What is true of New Orleans would be true of a bank in the corn country and a bank in the wheat country and a bank in the manufacturing center of New England.

On the other hand, if you have a great reserve bank at New York, having the territory extending down the Atlantic coast and possibly reaching New Orleans, or if you have a bank in St. Louis extending down through the great Mississippi Valley and reaching New Orleans, whichever way the Federal board might arrange it, when the banks of the cotton country at the proper season desired currency, desired a discount of their paper in order to serve their customers, they would procure it from the great reserves of the great bank in St. Louis or New York, at a season when the other customers were not demanding money, when there was an accumulation of reserves from the manufacturing regions or from the mining regions, which reserve bank would be able to discount the paper of the cotton-country banks simply by the use of money actually on hand.

So I say that the result of dividing this country into eight reserve districts instead of four would be to magnify the demand for currency, and any number of small reserve banks would be calling for currency of the Federal board here at Washington when there would be idle funds in other parts of the country. It is a matter of mobilization, the very thing we are attempting to escape by passing this legislation.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the next item of difference, which is the control of these reserve banks. The section of the committee to which I belong proposes that the Government of the United States, through its Federal board, shall select five of the directors of each reserve bank, and the bank of the district shall select four. We defend that upon the ground that this reserve bank is established as a public utility. It is not to make money; it is to protect the depositors against loss; and it is to give the borrowing public a stable and uniform low rate of interest.

We realize that the banking interests should be represented upon each board, because the banks have their reserves in these reserve banks, and by giving them the power to elect four members they will have sufficient representation of their own selection there to cooperate with five men chosen by the Federal board.

We think, Mr. President, that it is an unwise experiment to create a banking trust in the United States, and therefore we come to another point of difference with the section of the committee represented by Senator OWEN. He proposes, as the House proposed, although in a slightly modified form, that the reserve banks shall be owned by the individual banks. We think that would be a mistake for several reasons. We think it would tend to build up a banking trust in this country. We think, moreover, it would tend to endanger the success of this system, because there are many thousands of banks in the United States whose capital is now earning 10, 12, and 15 per cent, and they do not want to take one-tenth of their capital out of their own community and put it into a reserve bank where it is limited to earn 5 or 6 per cent and where it is beyond their control.

So we say that public ownership is desirable not only because it is a poor investment for the banks but because it is a good investment for the people of the United States. We propose that each bank shall be required to underwrite its proper share of the stock in the regional bank and for 60 days offer it to the public. We believe the public will take it. A 5 per cent investment in a Government institution of this sort, particularly if there are only four regional banks, will in all human probability prove a good one. Five per cent dividends can be earned with four regional reserve banks, and people who are receiving only 3 and 4 per cent, or possibly 5 per cent, on investments now will gladly take this stock, using sometimes also funds which they have hidden away. They will take this stock because it carries a 5 per cent cumulative dividend and also because it is made free from all taxes, National, State, and municipal. And so, Mr. President, we propose public ownership of these banks, which are public utilities, and Government control for the same reason.

I realize that if we are to have eight regional banks public ownership is almost impossible, because the puny and weak banks which would inevitably be organized if we had as many as eight would in all human probability not pay a dividend. They might not pay operating expenses.

The next point of difference to which I come is not so great, although I think it is important, and that is the matter of reserves. The section of the committee which I represent recommends that the reserves required of the individual banks of the country shall be 12 per cent for country banks and 15 per cent for city banks. We suggest that four-twelfths of the country-bank reserves shall be required to be placed in the reserve banks, four-twelfths kept in their own vaults, and the remaining four-twelfths of the reserves kept in either place, at the country bank's option. With city banks we recommend that the 15 per cent reserve shall be kept, six-fifteenths in the regional banks and the remainder in their vaults or in the regional banks, as they prefer.

The chief change, however, which we have recommended in this section relates to the transfer of reserves. It should be remembered that the reserves at the present time are deposited in 350 national banks, in 47 reserve, and 3 central reserve cities. This bill will require the transfer of those reserves into new banks. When the order of transfer comes it would be a serious matter for this country, and likely to produce a shock which might result in a panic, if the transfer is made so sudden or so rapid as to compel the banks to call their loans in order to get the money to make the transfer with, because these banks in central reserve cities have not kept the funds idle. They have loaned them out, and if they are to turn them over to the reserve banks they must call in their paper in order to get the money to turn over. So we have provided that the transfer from the country banks to the reserve banks shall cover a period of 24 months, one-fourth each 6 months, and we have provided for city banks a similar gradual transfer of 1 per cent each 6 months.

We believe that this will avoid the awful shock that would have been produced had the provisions of the House bill been carried out, a shock which the banks of the country have evidently dreaded, because they have been accumulating cash and calling loans for the purpose of meeting it, and have therefore produced a stringency which is already felt all over the United States.

The next item of difference to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate is in the discounting of paper for member banks. As the bill came from the House, everything was left optional with the regional bank. A bank might offer paper for discount, and the directors of the regional bank might say, "No; we will not take it." Another bank might present paper for discount, and the directors of the regional bank might take the whole portfolio. There was danger of gross discrimination on one side and great favoritism on the other. So, to guard against that, we have provided that every individual bank, as a matter of right, shall have the privilege of discounting eligible paper to the amount of its capital stock. That is a moderate discount. That is a discount which is common under the present practice to-day, an amount of discount paper equal to the amount of its capital stock. We have provided that no bank shall be permitted to discount paper at any one time in excess of twice its capital stock. Thus we have guarded against favoritism on one side and discrimination on the other, and we have left a period for the discretion of the board of directors. But in order to check undue discount we have provided that whenever a bank discounts more than the amount of its own capital stock it shall pay a higher rate of interest, which of itself is an automatic brake on excessive discounts.

There is, then, another difference, in the character of paper as provided in the House bill, which limited the maturity of paper to 90 days.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator will remember that there is a provision also that where a bank desires to discount to an amount more than twice its capital stock by obtaining permission from the Federal board the regional bank can increase the discount beyond double the amount.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; that is an omission I made which I am glad the Senator from Kansas has called to my attention. It is possible that there might be an emergency—a run upon a bank might produce an emergency and cause a need for a great supply of funds. In that case the Federal board has power to order the reserve bank to discount additional amounts of paper for that bank so that it can meet the emergency.

Mr. SMOOT. Without a penalty?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is left discretionary with the board, and, I think, properly so. As the bill came from the other House the discount privileges for banks were practically so restricted and limited that they could be used only by the city banks; that is to say, they were limited to paper which had a maturity of 90 days. We found, by taking testimony, that there were thousands of banks in the South and in the far West that take paper for six months, and that they are just as much in need of discounts, and they are contributing as large a portion of their resources to this system as are the city banks. So we have provided that a limited amount of paper having a maturity of six months may be taken.

The six months' paper is just as legitimately a commercial paper as is the 90-day paper of the East, where the processes of manufacturing and mercantile business are perfected in 90 days, and the man who gives his note for 90 days is able to pay it out of the proceeds which come from the sale of his property, his stock. In the West the man who buys cattle to feed during the winter months and borrows money for the purpose of buying them is not able to meet his paper in 90 days, but at the end of six months his paper is liquidated just as naturally, just as fully, and just as freely as is the mercantile and manufacturing paper of the East. The same conditions exist in the South. So we have provided in our bill that a limited amount of six months' paper may be taken, and that of the paper which a bank discounts not more than one-half of it may have a maturity exceeding 90 days.

On the rate of discount there is a considerable difference between the two wings of the committee. It is not a difference which appears in the bill, but it is a difference which will appear in operation. Each regional reserve bank may have a different rate of discount. If you have eight regional reserve banks it is inevitable that the regional reserve banks in the South, in the West, and in the Central West will have a higher rate of discount, because that section of country naturally commands a higher rate of discount. If you have only four regional reserve banks, you have only four rates of discount.

It is natural to suppose that the rate of discount in New York for the whole New York area, the rate of discount in Chicago for her whole area, and the rate of discount in St. Louis for her vast area will be very nearly the same rate of discount. San Francisco, by reason of entirely different surroundings, might have a higher rate of discount, but the bill as we propose it with only four regional banks will almost inevitably result in making a flat rate of discount for the whole country. The rate of discount in Chicago will not be higher to any degree than that in New York, and the rate of discount in St. Louis will not be higher than that in Chicago. So I say that, so far as the borrowing world is concerned, it is much better to have four regional banks with a practically flat rate of discount than to have the larger number with a higher rate of discount by reason of local conditions.

Now I come to a difference which is quite radical in the two bills.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. BACON. I am not familiar with the bill and am asking for information not only as to the bill presented by the wing of the committee represented by the Senator from Nebraska, but generally as to the bill. Does this bill provide a rate of interest at which banks shall be required to loan to private borrowers?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

Mr. BACON. I did not suppose the bill did so provide, of course, but I asked that question, having reference to the last statement made by the Senator as to the advantage to the people of my section of the larger regional banks. How would the rate of interest be to the advantage of the private borrower if it did not affect him?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will illustrate that to the Senator. I am hurrying along and condensing a good deal, so that I have not elaborated. With a great regional bank, with enormous deposits and great reserves, it will be in the same position as is a central bank in Europe, able to buy paper on the very closest margin, to allow the bank which discounts the paper to do so at the least possible loss, and the bank, being able to practically turn its commercial paper into money at almost no sacrifice, will be able to extend its borrowing to its customers at a lower rate of interest in consequence, and always able to get additional funds to loan to its customers. It will not be compelled to say to John Smith when he comes, "We can not lend you this money because we are down to our reserves." It will be able to say, "Yes, we will take your paper if it is good." So the establishment of great reserve banks with enormous resources will mean in this country, as it has meant in Europe, not only a very low rate of interest, but a rate of interest which will have very few changes from season to season.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the matter of the division of the profits of these reserve banks. We feel confident in our section of the committee that, with four regional banks, they will not only pay operating expenses, earn 5 per cent dividends for stockholders, and accumulate the 20 per cent surplus which the bill requires, but that they will have profits over and above those requirements. Then we propose that one-half of those excess profits shall go into the Treasury of the United States as Uncle Sam's share for the use of his deposits. The other half we propose shall constitute a trust fund for the insurance of the depositors of the member banks which fail.

Mr. President, we are establishing this system for the purpose of preventing bank failures. We believe that it will largely accomplish that purpose; but occasionally there will be a bank which, either through mismanagement or misfortune, will go down. When it goes down, its depositors will be reimbursed out of this accumulated fund, a fund not raised by the taxation of other banks, but a fund produced by the use of the depositor's money in the reserve banks; and we believe that the establishment of this fund will add another note of confidence to this new system which we propose to establish and that it will render bank runs absolutely impossible.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I consider that feature of this bill—I mean the one which is recommended by the Senator's section of the committee—as one of its most admirable and necessary features, but I should like to ask, in that connection, whether the bill makes proper provision, or any provision, for giving the reserve banks a lien upon the assets of the failed bank, the bank which suspends, for the purpose of reimbursing its guaranty fund? If not, it seems to me that that is a subject which should be treated by way of amendment to the bill before it is finally determined upon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Colorado I will say that no such provision is made. Although the evidence may seem to be against us, we have really endeavored, so far as possible, to make as few changes in the House bill as might be. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, however, is worthy of consideration. I should like to see him elaborate it with some amendment for further consideration of the Senate when that section is reached. We merely endeavored to put into the bill the principle, to make use of a fund which was there, and any elaboration or perfection of the idea will be very welcome, I assure the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. In hurriedly reading the bill last night my attention was called to this particular subject. As I remember, there was to be no limit to the amount set aside for guaranteeing deposits, or, in other words, if the bank proceeds to run for 20 years and proves profitable—and I believe it will be profitable—one-half of all the actual gains made, after paying 5 per cent to the stockholders and after providing a 20 per cent reserve, may amount to an exceedingly large sum. Has the Senator thought of any limitation as to the amount collected for that purpose, or does he think it best to accumulate that vast sum of money and let it grow continually?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No. Mr. President, the section of the committee cooperating with me considered that, as the Senator from Utah has stated, in the course of time this fund might grow to excessive proportions; and I think the Senator will find in the bill a provision that, if it becomes excessive, the reserve board may discontinue it until such time as its replenishment becomes necessary.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, if it will not interfere with the Senator's discussion, I will be glad to read the provision in the bill on that very point. On page 37 of the print which I have, in line 10, the amendment provides:

When, in the judgment of the board, there has been accumulated in such depositors' insurance fund a sufficient sum fully to insure the payment of the depositors of insolvent member banks, the board shall have power to suspend the setting aside and accumulation of the said 37½ per cent of such earnings, and thereafter such 37½ per cent of such earnings shall be paid to the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. That covers the exact point. I missed it last night in reading the bill. I was trying to read all three bills by way of comparison and get all the provisions of the bills in my mind at once, as I thought we had little time to prepare for the discussion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the next matter of difference relates to the issue of currency. We have proceeded naturally in the consideration of this matter up to a point where the reserve bank has loaned out of its cash reserve all that it can safely advance to the bank and there is still a demand of member banks for the discount of paper. Then the House bill provided that the Federal reserve bank might apply to the Federal reserve board for currency, and it left it in the power of the Federal reserve board to grant or to refuse the application. Our bill makes a radical departure from that. We provide that when a Federal reserve bank in all respects complies with the law by maintaining a 45 per cent gold reserve against note issues, by maintaining a 35 per cent reserve against deposits, and by obeying the regulations of the Federal board and other provisions of the act, then when it presents eligible paper to the agent of the Government, the Federal reserve board shall issue the currency which the needs of the business require. That is necessary, because we have given the right to each bank to secure a discount of paper to a certain extent. It is necessary to carry out the purpose of this legislation. It is unheard of in France, for instance, that the Bank of France will refuse to discount eligible paper, and it is practically unheard of in Germany under the system of the Reichsbank. So, we have provided that the reserve board shall issue currency when it is required by the reserve banks.

It should be remembered that this is in entire harmony with the genius of this legislation. Each reserve bank is a part of the Government; each reserve bank is controlled by the Government; each reserve bank is a public utility and responding to the natural demands of business; and, so, when the time comes that it needs currency, we feel that it should secure it from the Federal reserve board, providing it deposits 100 per cent of good commercial paper and maintains the 45 per cent reserve of gold against the currency.

There is, however, a restraining power which the Federal reserve board in Washington holds. At any time it can order a Federal reserve bank to raise its rate of discount. That power enables it to put a restraining hand upon the reserve banks, which will then raise their rate of discount to member banks, and the member banks will raise it to their customers, and that will check the excessive inflation of bank credit.

Mr. President, there is another quite important change which we have made in this bill, to which I desire to call attention. As the bill came from the House it provided for a reserve against currency of 33½ per cent. In my opinion that is inadequate. It is inadequate if we judge by the great reserves kept by the banks of Europe; it is inadequate if we judge by the great gold reserve which we have been compelled to accumulate in the Treasury against our own greenbacks—42½ per cent. So we have provided that the reserve against currency shall be 45 per cent.

Mr. President, we have changed the provision regarding the redemption of the Federal reserve notes. As provided in the House bill, the new bank currency might be redeemed in gold or lawful money. We think that unsound; we think that this new currency should not be paid in anything but gold. We do not think that the Government of the United States in issuing its obligations, its promises to pay, should reserve the right to pay those obligations in other obligations. We do not think it should permit banks to reserve the right to pay their obligations in other obligations. So we have stricken "lawful money" from the section of the bill relating to the redemption of the new currency and have provided that it shall be paid in gold or gold certificates.

Senator OWEN's bill is, in a measure, a compromise between the two. It provides that the new currency shall be redeemed in gold at the Treasury of the United States when presented, but that it may be redeemed in gold or lawful money at a reserve bank, a distinction which I am not able to understand, but which, it seems to me, might throw a great burden upon the Treasury of the United States.

We have also provided that the reserve banks must keep in the Treasury in gold at least 5 per cent of their note issues, to be used in redeeming notes that are presented there. We have also provided that the Secretary of the Treasury may compel them to increase this amount to 10 per cent if the needs of redemption require it.

In the matter of reserves against deposits we have made a change. The House bill provided for a reserve of 33½ per cent against deposits. We have raised that reserve to 35 per cent, but have taken away its rigid character by providing that reserve banks may permit their reserves to fall below 35 per cent down as low as 25 per cent in cases of emergency to give relief to member banks; but for each 2½ per cent deficiency the reserve banks are required to pay a tax or penalty of 1 per cent, which is to be in turn charged to the banks borrowing the money, which will be a check upon those banks.

In the matter of the refunding of bonds quite a radical change has been made in the House bill. We have outstanding at the present time some $750,000,000 of 2 per cent bonds, largely owned by the national banks of the country and by them deposited in the Treasury as security for the notes which the banks issue. It seems to be desired to retire this currency. At times it is considered redundant. It can not be retired under the present system. So Senator OWEN's section of the committee and the one I represent have united in proposing a scheme different from that of the House bill. The one which my section of the committee has proposed provides that after the reserve banks are organized each reserve bank shall begin the purchase of 2 per cent bonds at par, with accrued interest. This is not done for the benefit of the banks. It is done to maintain the credit of the United States, for the reason that the 2 per cent bonds are now selling below par. Each bank is required to purchase each year an amount of the 2 per cent bonds not exceeding one-half of its capital stock. When it has purchased them it may present them to the Treasury of the United States and secure from the Treasury 3 per cent one-year gold notes. Those notes it may keep in its treasury as an investment. The 3 per cent interest will make the notes a fair investment for some of the surplus funds of the reserve banks. It is designed particularly, however, to give the reserve banks this great quantity of 3 per cent one-year gold notes so as to equip the reserve banks with a means of securing gold. It is an adaptation of the experience of European countries in the use of exchequer bills or treasury notes.

A reserve bank holding, say, fifty or seventy-five million dollars of these one-year 3 per cent gold Treasury notes finds that the gold supply of the country is becoming depleted. It finds that by reason of some great foreign war or some great emergency gold is being withdrawn from this country and that possibly some impairment may come to the banking interests of this country on that account. It can then sell those 3 per cent gold notes abroad or in this country and procure gold for them, which it will hold in its vaults or use in its business as a necessary basis of credit.

In one year those notes, of course, come due; but we provide in our bill that the reserve banks shall be under a contract with the Treasury to renew them year by year for 20 years if the Treasury desires. The Treasury may retire them from time to time, but if the Treasury desires to have them renewed the banks are under compulsion to renew them. They will constantly have use for them, for the purpose of selling them abroad to procure gold from time to time.

It may be said that this is substituting a 3 per cent note for a 2 per cent bond, and therefore may subject Congress to criticism. I have been a little slow to come to any action of that sort, but I have been reconciled to it not only by the fact that it is useful to control the gold supply of the country, but also by the fact that the Government of the United States gets a large part of the net profits which these banks are to make, and those profits act as an offset to the 1 per cent additional interest on the notes.

Mr. President, I have covered this subject somewhat hastily—

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to say that the bond matter, about which he has just spoken, is one upon which both wings of the committee agree. Is that true?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is agreement in the purpose, but in carrying out that purpose there is considerable difference between the two wings of the committee. I shall not undertake at this time to explain the plan proposed by the other wing of the committee. I am not entirely familiar with it, and hardly feel competent to do so. We think, however, that our plan of proceeding through the reserve banks has the approval of all the better practice. Great Britain encountered some difficulties after the Boer War through selling directly her one-year treasury or exchequer notes. We think it would be a mistake for the Treasury of the United States to undertake to discount its own paper. A bank can do it, and can suffer the loss of one-half of 1 per cent or 1 per cent at times in order to get gold; but it would not be proper for the Treasury of the United States to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator says these notes would run for one year?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. One year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would the effect of that be, as rapidly as the bonds are purchased by the regional banks, to require the Government to redeem them in 12 months?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the regional banks first buy the 2 per cent bonds, and the national-bank currency is proportionately retired. The regional banks then can use these 2 per cent bonds and issue currency against them, or it can present them at the Treasury and secure one-year 3 per cent notes. The 2 per cent bonds in that event are canceled, and the one-year 3 per cent Treasury notes then are in the hands of the reserve bank. It will hold them there as an investment, except at such times as it needs to procure gold to strengthen its reserves. At each maturity each year the bank is under compulsion to renew the note for another year with the Treasury or to accept a new note for 20 years. So the Treasury of the United States has a contract with the reserve banks to renew the notes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was the necessity for such a provision as the one which the Senator has just mentioned, and which he had not mentioned before, that caused my question. Under your provision the 2 per cent bonds can be used by the regional bank as a basis for the issuance of regional or reserve notes?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. For the issuance of reserve notes; yes.

Mr. President. I have gone over this matter rather hastily, and in so doing I have necessarily omitted a good deal. I think the Senate very deeply for the attention it has given me.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is the Senator tired, so that he does not feel like answering a question or two?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. If not, I wish to propound one or two questions.

I should like to know any good reason for compelling a bank, or even the public, to invest in one of these regional banks, where the assurance of profit is never greater than 5 or 6 per cent, and to take all the risk, while the Government, which does not put one penny into the institution, is to get everything there is in the way of profit above 5 or 6 per cent. In addition to giving to those who are intrusted with the direction of one of these banks the inducement to make it a good, paying institution, why should not those who are compelled to invest in it under one bill, or invited to invest in it under the other bill, if they take all of the risk, at least have some of the benefits of getting a profit greater than 5 or 6 per cent?

I appreciate that in the bill the Senator has presented a provision is inserted whereby a certain portion of these notes will be set aside for the guaranty of the deposits in the particular bank investing, and I think certainly that is a very good provision. If that is done for safety, however, what reason can the Senator give for not allowing the bank at least to have the benefit, above that which is reserved for its own protection, of any profits in excess of 5 per cent, if the bank should earn more than 5 per cent?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a rather long and somewhat complicated question. I can assure the Senator that it is far from my purpose to compel anybody to buy this stock. In fact, one of my chief objections to the bill as it came from the House was that it practically seized 20 per cent of the capital of every national bank in the United States, requiring one-half of it to be paid in cash, and compelling that bank to give up its charter and lose a large share of its bonds unless it did so. For that reason we have removed the compulsory feature. We do require the national banks to underwrite this stock and require and permit them to take such as the public fails to take, but we are confident the public will take it all.

Mr. McCUMBER. But if the public does not take it the bank is compelled to take it; is it not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; it is required to take it, but it is not required to impound it. It is permitted to sell it, which is not possible under either the House bill or the bill presented by Senator OWEN. That is a defect which I think is very obvious, for a bank having this stock among its assets might, by reason of the demands of business, desire to sell it and realize on it; but under the House bill and under Senator OWEN's bill it is impounded and is not a liquid asset of the bank.

As far as the voluntary subscribers to the stock are concerned, they are merely the small investors, who are glad to have a 5 per cent dividend. I think if a higher rate of dividend were permitted the stock would go to a premium, and no good could be attained by that. It would become a speculative proposition. I am satisfied the stock will be oversubscribed if issued on a 5 per cent cumulative basis. We have provided for public ownership of the stock and Government control of the banks, and in that way have freed the thousands of banks in the South and West who do not want to be compelled to invest their capital in this way.

I may say, furthermore, that there is another matter which I omitted to mention. One of the great defects of our national banking system to-day is that it has an inadequate capital. Every bank is trying to do as large an amount of business as possible on a small amount of capital, so as to have as high dividends as possible. The result of that process over a period of years has been a constantly growing disparity between capital and deposits. To take 10 per cent of the capital, or 6 per cent of the surplus and capital, away from those banks and put it into the reserve banks is to increase the evil; whereas if we sell this stock to the public we bring into the banking world $106,000,000 of new capital, which of itself will serve to strengthen the system and render the margin of safety for depositors greater than ever.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question in connection with the question propounded by my colleague relative to section 7. As I understand, the provisions of section 7 in no way guarantee the deposits. They simply provide that when surplus and profits go above a certain rate the excess shall be set aside for the purpose of paying depositors, but in no way does the bill guarantee deposits. Am I correct?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is correct.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Nebraska fully answered the question I asked. I assume that the one I asked him was rather long, but the particular feature of the question was this: What justification is there for the Government, which puts in no capital, which invests nothing, sharing in the profits, as against the public, which does put its money into the enterprise and takes all of the chances, having the benefits of such profits as may arise?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did overlook that branch of the Senator's question. The justification of it is that Government deposits, running from $150,000,000 to possibly $250,000,000, will be placed in these banks and given to the business world for use, just as the reserves of the banks are used.

Mr. McCUMBER. Without any interest being paid?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Without any interest being paid.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in proposing a banking and currency measure such as is presented to the Senate the natural inquiry arises. What is the necessity for this legislation?

While our banking system has many admirable features, there are yet certain defects which call for speedy and positive action. We have at the present time 7,500 national banks and about 18,000 State banks and trust companies. In the ordinary transactions of banking business they are independent, competing with each other in making loans and in fixing the rates of interest. This independent competitive banking system is one result of the liberal provisions of the law under which a bank can be organized and incorporated by five or more persons, without any restrictions or qualifications whatever upon the incorporators. These 25,000 banks constitute the people's banks and afford splendid competition in supplying accommodations for merchants, farmers, manufacturers, and others engaged in commerce.

Any number of persons dissatisfied with banking conditions in any community have a perfect right to organize a competing bank either under the national-bank act or under the State laws. Thus they form the people's banks, both State and National, of this country.

While independent banks such as now exist are ample to meet the demands of commerce in ordinary times, yet there come periods in the history of every nation when panics occur and depositors, without reason, withdraw their moneys from these institutions. The inability of banks at such times to meet strains upon their cash reserves arises from the fact that each is then standing on its own bottom; that is, there is no place to which the bank in trouble can go to demand and secure cash for its commercial paper. The law's requirements as to reserves are totally inadequate and cause what is termed the pyramiding of reserves.

RESERVES OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Under the national-bank act the country bank must keep 15 per cent of its deposits as reserves, of which 6 per cent must be in its own vaults and 9 per cent in a bank or banks of the 47 reserve cities of the Union. Each of the 315 national banks in the 47 reserve cities is required by law to keep a reserve of 25 per cent of its deposits, one-half of which is to be in cash in its own vaults and one-half to be kept in the vaults of a bank or banks among the 52 national banks of the three central reserve cities of New York, Chicago, and St. Louis. Each of the national banks of the central reserve cities is required to keep in cash in its own vaults 25 per cent of its deposits. The reserves deposited in the reserve city banks and central reserve city banks are treated under the law as simply deposits and not as reserves. It can be readily seen that the 9 per cent of the deposits of the country bank deposited in a reserve city bank has behind it in the reserve city bank only a reserve in cash of 12½ per cent of the same, or, in other words, only one-eighth of the amount, and the credit portion of that same reserve when transferred to the central reserve city bank is only one-fourth of the one-eighth, namely, one thirty-second, of the same. Upon these reserves, of course, is built an enormous amount of credits.

Mr. John B. Forgan, president of the First National Bank of Chicago, Ill., in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, stated that his bank built credits to the extent of 8 to 1 upon capital and surplus; that is, that it loaned out eight times as much money of its deposits as its capital and surplus. In many banks the credits created are 10 to 1 and 12 to 1.

These reserves in ordinary times are amply sufficient to maintain a good banking system, but in times of panic they become totally inadequate, a condition which is accelerated by the policy which has been pursued of discouraging the use of the reserves, except to a very small per cent, in meeting demands of depositors and in prohibiting the making of any new loans when the reserves are to any extent below the percentage required. This policy and prohibition when money becomes tight increases the stringency and helps to precipitate the panic. These banks being independent, knowing that each must stand on its own bottom, begin to withdraw their credits in order to meet the threatening storm, and that compels every other bank to do the same. Thus the banks, in order to prevent their own suspension, withdraw their loans and make credits so tight that people owing money sacrifice their collateral and property in order to pay their debts. This, of course, produces an enormous depreciation in the value of all property, especially of stocks and bonds hypothecated as collateral to secure the loans. This condition is due to a very serious defect in our national banking system and is remedied in my judgment by the provisions of the pending bill.

LOSSES FROM PANICS.

The panic of 1893 was one of the most disastrous that ever occurred in the history of the world. Thousands of banks that were perfectly solvent and able in time to meet all of their liabilities closed their doors, but they did not have and could not get the money with which to meet the checks of their depositors.

When money becomes tight and there is a strain upon the banks that knowledge is acquired immediately by the people, and unreasoning fear that they may lose the money they have on deposit seizes them. Consequently, any little rumor, though totally unfounded, may precipitate a run upon a bank.

A story of the panic of 1893 well illustrates the hair-trigger tension of the public mind at that time. In a little town out West a tinner was fixing the roof of a one-story building in which the First National Bank of that town was doing business. A gust of wind blew his hat from his head, and in endeavoring to recover it before it went off the roof he pursued it rapidly. The wag of the town happened to be standing on an opposite corner and, seeing the incident, said in a very loud voice: "There is a run on the First National Bank." There were many people on the street who heard his words, but when they looked at the bank the tinner had caught his hat and was standing still, and hence the humorous significance of the remark was not appreciated. The word was spread from one to the other, and in less than two hours' time there was a line of depositors extending for more than a block making demands for their money at the bank.

The losses to depositors from bank failures have been very light, not exceeding one-fortieth of 1 per cent per annum, and that shows the unreasonableness of people in making runs upon banks, but the losses otherwise from panics have been tremendous.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator if the amount of one-fortieth of 1 per cent is based upon the estimate of deposits or the capital?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think on deposits. It represents a loss on the average to the depositors of one-fortieth of 1 per cent. When banks fail absolutely the loss is sometimes great, but taking the entire amount of deposits in the United States and esti-imating the losses that have occurred for a series of years, the losses, not of the State banks but the National banks, have been only one-fortieth of 1 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. The losses from State banks have been no higher.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Utah says the losses from State-bank failures have been no higher, and I presume that is correct.

It is stated that there resulted from the panic of 1907 a destruction of values in stocks, bonds, securities, and other property that would measure greater than a loss resulting from the burning and destroying of every particle of property and crops upon a strip of land 100 miles wide extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.

UNIVERSAL DEMAND FOR REFORM.

No solvent bank can meet the demands of all of its depositors if presented within a few days, because the very life of banking is the lending out by the bank at interest of most of its deposits. Any bank which keeps in cash in its own vaults all of its deposits would soon become insolvent by reason of having no profits with which to meet its running expenses, and it would be of very little, if any, benefit to the community in facilitating its commerce and accommodating its people.

It is for these reasons that there has been a universal demand that our banking system be reformed and these defects therein remedied.

The Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. Franklin MacVeagh, in his annual report, December 2, 1912, used this language:

One of the most important facts in connection with banking and currency legislation is its urgency. As long as our banking and currency system remains as it is the immeasurable disaster of a panic will remain a possibility. The system under which we are living not only will not prevent a panic, but after a certain point in the generation of panic conditions is reached will make it inevitable. So that as long as the financial system created by our Federal laws remains unchanged and unreformed the Government will be exclusively responsible for the commercial, industrial, and social disasters which flow from panics. This responsibility is a fixed one. It is unavoidable, and ought to be frankly recognized and acknowledged. The people are helpless. The character of this responsibility is better understood when it is realized that the effects of financial panics are not at all confined to the banks and the larger business world. A panic such as that of 1907, or a lesser panic, reaches, directly or indirectly, every town and hamlet of the country and every family and individual. It nationalizes itself long before it has gone far, and its interruption of the business movements, large and small, its fracture of the organization under which commercial and industrial life go on, and the resulting social suffering are prolonged into years. These facts intensify the significance of the delays and postponements of the Government.

DEFECTS IN OUR CURRENCY SYSTEM.

The defects in our present currency system are also very plain and clear. While at times we have sufficient money to meet the demands of commerce and of the banks, yet at other times, and particularly in times of panic, there is total inadequacy of the quantity of money legitimately demanded. That arises from the fact that our currency is all fixed in amount and has no quality of elasticity in it whatever. The circulating medium is practically the same amount each year, whether it is during a dull season or the active season when crops are being moved. During the seasons of each year there is a difference in the demand for money amounting to several hundred millions of dollars.

Our national-bank currency is especially defective, because it can not serve as reserve money of national banks, and in my judgment it should be supplanted by currency that could be used as reserve money. This defect is manifested in the redemptions of national-bank currency in lawful money, which are continually being made at the Treasury at Washington. There was expressed by the national banks during the year ending October 31, 1913, $683,431,000 of national-bank notes to the Treasury and redemption thereof made in lawful money. The obligation of each national bank to redeem its own notes at its counter consequently caused the United States Treasurer to separate these national-bank notes into piles against each national bank and to send them to the national bank that issued them for repayment of the amount in lawful money to the Federal Treasury. The total amount of national-bank notes outstanding October 31, 1913, was $758,825,471.

When we realize that the sum of $2,000,000 in national-bank notes each day is expressed into the City of Washington for redemption and nearly $2,000,000 of legal-tender money is shipped back to the banks each day you can readily see that there is being suffered an enormous loss in express charges and in interest upon the money during transmission, besides the hazard of loss from wrecks, fires, and train robberies.

For these reasons there should be substituted for our national-bank notes a currency which can be used as bank reserves, and there should be added an elastic currency which will expand or contract in compliance with the demands of commerce. As remedies for these defects in our banking and currency system the bill before the Senate is presented.

EIGHT FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

The pending measure provides for the establishment of eight Federal reserve banks in eight districts, each to be located at a city convenient to the banks of its district.

Many witnesses before the Banking and Currency Committee have objected to the number of such banks, many preferring one central bank. The Democratic platform upon which the present administration was elected declared against a central bank. The following language was used:

We oppose the so-called Aldrich bill or the establishment of a central bank.

It is therefore useless to argue for a central bank during this administration.

The Democratic Party is opposed to a central bank, and well it should be, because of the fact that it would concentrate in one place such a combination of wealth as could be used to the disadvantage of the entire people of the United States.

We find that, as the result of combinations, great injury has been done to gigantic enterprises in the United States, which have been thereby permanently halted in their growth. The Pujo committee, as the chairman of this committee has said, investigated the matter, and found that there was a combination among the great banks of New York City interested in railway and industrial corporations that prevented competing corporations from undertaking most excellent enterprises in the United States.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado if he did not have in his own State, in the Moffat road, a very striking example of that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do know that, as far as the Moffat road was concerned, there was a continual effort in New York for five or six years to get a loan upon which the road could be financed, and that Mr. Moffat put some $9,000,000 of his own money in the enterprise, and he was not able to accomplish the end desired.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to state, if my colleague will permit me, that the promoters of the Moffat road, so called, not only made efforts in the city of New York to finance that enterprise, but also made them in the older countries of the world, and in several instances were successful up to the point of the formal execution of a contract, when some mysterious and invisible influence always intercepted the arrangement about the time it was to be consummated. The Union Pacific Co. on the north and the Rio Grande and Gould interests on the south, through their banking connections all over the world, were the upper and nether millstones that ground the promoters of that enterprise to powder between them, in consequence of which the original promoter of the road, whose name it bears, beginning with an amount of wealth that would easily make him the wealthiest man in the State of Colorado, ended in virtual bankruptcy.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That statement of what occurred was current in Colorado. Of course I know nothing about the exact facts, but the general impression there is as my colleague has stated.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to inquire of the Senator if there is anything in either one of the bills now before the Senate that would meet that kind of a situation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so. I will discuss that as I proceed.

SINISTER EFFECT OF COMBINATION.

Now, what are the difficulties under those circumstances? As my colleague has suggested, on account of this great combination of banks, with their interlocking directors controlling great industrial and commercial corporations, they can easily turn down an application that is made for funds to inaugurate a new enterprise that would come in competition with theirs; and the difficulty is not only that it is turned down, but whenever one appears who is willing to finance an enterprise of that kind he uses the argument that it has been turned down by the big bankers as a reason for extorting an enormous commission for his services in financing the same. Upon an application for, say $30,000,000, necessary to construct the enterprise the answer of the financiers is, in substance: "We will make you a loan of the $30,000,000 to be used in the construction of the enterprise, take bonds secured by mortgage upon the same, but we will ask you to issue $60,000,000 of stock, and we will divide the stock between you and us." The result is that most of these companies having the feature of a utility corporation, such as a railroad, extract from the people dividends to be paid on the full $60,000,000 of capital, when the total construction cost very little more than $30,000,000, on which the people also pay the interest.

That is the great injury to the people that the concentration of wealth in one place produces. The people of New York are no worse than the people anywhere else would be where such an enormous amount of money might be concentrated.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator believe that if we had one great central bank, whose stock was subscribed by the people of the United States, whose affairs were governed by a board appointed by the President of the United States, such a thing could happen through the organization of such a bank as he has just been describing?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, safeguards may be thrown around it, but where you have concentrated in one place enormous amounts of money you must accept the fact that influences will naturally be sought for the use of that money, and this in all likelihood will to some extent be accomplished.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand the whole theory of this proposed law is to provide means to relieve the business interests of this country in times of distress—

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. And to prevent panics; but in order to do that there has got to be a mobilization of the resources of this Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. It does seem to me, Mr. President, the proper way to do that would be to have one great, strong central institution, the same as all foreign countries have to-day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have tried that twice, and each time the people of the United States have condemned it.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; we did not try that kind of a bank. I am fully aware of the kind of Government banks that we have had in the past and the way that they were controlled and managed; but they were not organized the way that I would have a great central institution organized, managed, or controlled by the Government of the United States to-day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But aside from that, a number of Federal reserve banks will be vastly more convenient than one such bank.

One of the objects of this bill is to require the banks of the different sections of the country to keep their reserves in a Federal reserve bank, located in an easily accessible city of the district.

ACCESSIBILITY A PRIME REQUISITE.

As one witness stated, the Federal reserve bank should be at a distance of not to exceed one night's run from each of the banks of that district, the purpose being such that at the closing hour of the bank its president could determine whether there would likely be a run upon its deposits next day. He could then gather the 30, 60, and 90 day commercial paper he wanted cashed, take the train for the city where the Federal reserve bank is situate, and be able to wire by the time of the opening of his bank that he had cashed sufficient securities to meet the demands of all depositors. That would be a great advantage over attempting to cash securities at one central bank located several days' run from many of the interior banks. Nor could branch banks answer that purpose as well. Branch banks are always subservient to the will and policy of the central bank, and there are always communications and hesitations as to transactions of the branch bank which produce delays. Such delays in times of emergency might be fatal to the member bank. The policy of a central bank might be against lending money in some section of the country, but the policy of a reserve bank will always be loyal to its district.

Accommodations are more certainly and speedily given on account of personal acquaintance. Such personal acquaintance would likely exist among the presidents of banks of a district and the directors of the Federal reserve bank of that district. There is not one chance in a hundred that a country banker would know a director of a central reserve bank, located in New York City or Washington, in one of which places in all likelihood it would be established. It seems to me country bankers everywhere would prefer that the concentration of their reserves should be near them instead of far from them.

Another reason why there should be eight or more Federal reserve banks instead of one central institution, as advocated by the Senator from Utah, is to prevent the money belonging to the 25,000 banks throughout the country being transferred to and concentrated in New York City, as it is at present.

The concentration of reserves in that city produces, as I have stated, a surplus of many hundreds of millions of dollars of deposits there, which can not be used in making ordinary loans, as such loans can not be realized upon immediately to meet drafts by country banks upon their deposits. Hence these hundreds of millions are loaned to stock brokers for gambling upon the exchange. The money so loaned by the New York banks is secured by the stock purchased by the broker and is designated a "call loan," because it can be called by the bank any day, and if not paid the collateral may be sold immediately. The rate of interest is usually very low, 2 or 3 per cent per annum, but being influenced by gambling transactions it sometimes rises to 20 per cent and 100 per cent, and at the time of the attempted corner on Northern Pacific stock it rose on one day to 1,000 per cent per annum.

The gambling which results from the ability of brokers to get call loans at low rates of interest is most tempting and demoralizing to our people. The ticker works not only in New York City, but in every city of 50,000 population in the United States. Fortunes are made or swept away in a few days. If made, the sudden success unfits the winner for his ordinary business and leads to extravagance in living, which produces dissatisfaction if it can not be maintained. Loss of fortune, of course, leads to embezzlement, forgery, and suicide.

The New York bankers realize this and want to abandon that line of business, but they contend they can not, because call loans are the only liquid assets they have, and that, being the custodians of so much reserve money of other banks, which may be demanded at any moment, they must have call loans, which they can collect on short notice. They welcome the establishment of a reserve bank or banks which will discount their 30, 60, and 90 day paper on presentation and thus dispense with the necessity of making call loans. They generally prefer one central reserve bank, or as few a number as can be obtained, but they desire the opportunity of getting out of the call-loan business.

Mr. Vanderlip, president of the National City Bank of New York, the greatest institution of that kind in the world, stated before the Banking and Currency Committee that his bank would lose in deposits by the Owen-Glass bill $50,000,000, but that, nevertheless, he would welcome its passage, with modifications, if thereby it could get out of the call-loan business; that on account of the Federal reserve bank cashing its commercial paper it would enable his bank, with fewer deposits, to lend money in commercial transactions, which pay a larger rate of interest, and thus permit a recoup, to a large extent, of losses of deposits.

PERSONAL CONTACT DESIRABLE FACTOR.

While no one can say that eight Federal reserve banks is the exact number which should be established, yet it is safe to say that such a number would cause the directors of each to come in personal contact with the officers of country banks and thereby serve their needs very satisfactorily. It would keep the reserve money that belongs to the banks of each district at home and thus be more responsive to the demands of the people of such district.

Of course New York City is and always will be the great financial center of this country, and banks all over the United States will keep some money with their correspondents there in order to meet their drafts, but New York should not complain if the country banks should keep part of their money in reserve banks near home. It unquestionably is to the best interest of the entire country.

As to whether we should have one or four reserve banks, while four would be much better, in my judgment, than one, eight would be far superior to four. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has said the four would be likely to be located at New York, at Chicago, at St. Louis, and at San Francisco. That broad stretch of territory extending from St. Louis to San Francisco, covering 2,000 miles, would not be accorded such facilities that the banks in that region would be able to secure relief within the time when it might be needed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. REED. I do not rise for the purpose of engaging in any debate or of opposing what the Senator is saying, but I should like to ask him, in view of his last statement, under a system of eight regional banks where he expects any bank to be located west of St. Louis except at San Francisco?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In answer to the Senator I will say—

Mr. REED. And what reason he has to expect a bank to be located west of St. Louis, except at San Francisco?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In answer to the Senator, I will say that he has the right to guess where these banks will be located just as well as I. Under the bill of the Senator from Oklahoma the matter is left to a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury and the two members of the Federal reserve board, and what they will determine nobody can foresee. Consequently, it is nothing but mere speculation as to what cities will get the reserve banks. It is better that they should not be determined in this bill, because an incessant wrangle would arise among us as to whether one section or another should get one. It is left to an independent body, and they will establish them according to where they think the needs of commerce demand.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. REED. I do not want for a moment to be misunderstood in my object. Nevertheless, I do not think that the Senator appreciated my thought, at least in asking the question. He states now that they would be located where the board saw fit to locate them, and that he can not, of course, look into the future; but the Senator does know the number of banks, where they are located, the amount of banking capital, the centers of commerce and trade, and the course of the streams of trade, and I wanted to ask him if he could tell us any city west of St. Louis, excluding San Francisco, that would by reason of these conditions be entitled to receive, or likely to receive, the location of a regional bank?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know. I must say, however, that if there are to be only four reserve banks, I think that St. Louis would be too close to Chicago, and I would prefer that the fourth bank should be in Kansas City instead of St. Louis; but if there are to be eight banks I can not tell where they will be located; and on that account the Senator from Missouri is just as much entitled to guess at it as I am; and as I am not going to make a guess, he can.

Under this system, if we were to have only four Federal reserve banks, the great South would not have one and a bank in Florida would have to get its discounts in Washington or in New York City. That would also be true, of course, if there were only one Federal reserve bank. That being the case, the Florida banker would have to go a distance of 1,500 or 1,800 miles in order to get discounts, and the banker from Texas would obviously have to go to St. Louis, a distance from some parts of Texas of more than 1,500 miles.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not recognize the fact that it would be possible to establish branches of the reserve banks and that very much of the business done at a distance will be done through the branches; so that his statement that it will be necessary to go 1,500 or 2,000 miles is not strictly correct?

BRANCH BANKS INADEQUATE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, I have said that you can have branch banks. It is true that you can obviate the inconvenience to some extent, but I have said the greatest asset in the way of procuring a loan is personal acquaintance with the directors of the reserve bank, and consequently when you go to one of the reserve banks and happen to know personally men on the directorate you are apt to get your discounts without question; but if you go to a branch bank, which is always subservient to the policy of the central bank, the president of that central bank might say to the agent in charge of the branch bank: "Oh, we need reserves here, and we need discounts over in this end of the country most; be careful about it; discount just as little as you can." And then there would follow the red tape that is necessary in communications between the agent and the principal. Such a system of branch banks does not answer the purpose as does a Federal reserve bank with a directorate that is independent, working upon its own footing in the interest of the very community where the stringency occurs. Under those circumstances a system of branch banks is not to be compared with a system establishing a number of Federal reserve banks.

It has been said that the European banks are central banks. Yes; but there are in Europe, which is no larger than the United States, fully 25 central banks instead of merely eight, and consequently in considering the illustration which is given of having a central bank for each nation you must take into account the territory and the area that would be supplied by central reserve banks. On that account it seems to me the fact that Germany has a central reserve bank, that Belgium has a central reserve bank, that Holland has a reserve bank, is simply illustrative of the fact that it is wise to have a number of reserve banks, because those banks are only within a few hours' ride of every part and portion of their territory, and every one of those banks is responsive to local conditions. When you have a bank that is independent, a Federal reserve bank, knowing and watching the interest of every portion of the district over which it has jurisdiction, you can readily see that it will extend its power of discount and will aid the banks under circumstances when a central reserve bank, whose officers perhaps are not known or likely to be known by any of the presidents of the local banks, would refuse such assistance. No one would think of suggesting one central bank for all Europe, although its territory is no greater than that of the United States.

We have in this country 40 per cent of the banking capital of the world, and when you compare the balance of the European banks and divide it among their 25 or 30 banks you will readily see that we are not asking for enough banks in the United States in order to do the business of this country well and in order to furnish accommodations to the country banks whenever needed.

It seems to me, therefore, that the position taken by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that this great mobilization should take place in one bank or in a few banks is not well taken. The Senator from Nebraska states that if New Orleans needed money at a certain season of the year its limited bank, if it were to have a Federal reserve bank in any one of six or eight districts, would be subjected to such a demand that it would exhaust the amount of reserves which that bank had, and the result would be that it would have to apply to the Federal reserve board for currency; that is, new currency to be issued.

Our bill does not provide that it should necessarily be an application for currency, because the Federal reserve board, if it finds that there is a surplus of funds in one Federal reserve bank and a small quantity in another, has a right to order that that Federal reserve bank, where it has a surplus of funds, shall rediscount the paper of the Federal reserve bank of the weak district, and it is perfectly safe to do so. When the districts are smaller it must be remembered the demands for rediscounts will be less. The New Orleans Federal reserve bank, while possessing less capital and reserves than that of New York City, will be just as strong, because the demands upon it will be proportionately smaller.

CONTROL OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has said that the second great difference between the two sections of the Committee on Banking and Currency is as to the control of these Federal reserve banks. That is true.

The Owen bill provides that the bankers shall have representation on each of the boards of directors of the several Federal reserve banks. Three of the nine directors shall be selected by and represent the stock-holding banks, three members shall be representative of the agricultural, commercial, and industrial interests, the latter three being subject to removal by the Federal reserve board, and the remaining three members are to be chosen by the Federal reserve board. Thus the banks elect six out of the nine directors of each Federal reserve bank. These Federal reserve banks are the ones that deal with the individual banks, pass upon the securities presented, direct what paper shall be discounted, and attend to all matters involving the care and investment of the enormous sums of money which will be held by them. It is upon the boards of directors of these Federal reserve banks that bankers should be placed, as is provided in the bill.

The amendment of the section of the committee represented by the Senator from Nebraska provides that there shall be five directors appointed by the Government of the Federal reserve bank and that four shall be elected by the member banks. That very amendment, if adopted, would destroy the entire character of this bill; it would make an entirely different kind of a bill, upon an entirely different theory. The theory of the bill as it came from the House and as it is preserved by our section of the committee is that there should be a bank of banks; that the banks should be required to take the stock in the Federal reserve bank. It can not be possible that banks would come into a system which creates a Federal reserve bank and provides that member banks shall deposit their reserves, aggregating $400,000,000, and not have a majority of the board of directors. It is absurd to think that any bank on earth would come into a system of that kind. Does anyone imagine that if the present national banking law had prescribed that of its board of directors five should be appointed by the Government and four should be appointed by the bank, that there ever would have been organized a national bank? Certainly not; and yet there is more reason for the Government insisting upon that than there is for insisting that a majority of the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank should be Government appointees. Why? Because the national bank deals with other people's money. The national bank has the people's money to the extent of 10 to 1 of its own, and the Government might well determine that as so much money of the people of the United States is in their custody that a majority of the board of directors should be appointed by the Government to determine where loans should be placed and how much money should be loaned. No one who has any knowledge of banking or of human nature would ever think that bankers would go into and organize a national bank under those circumstances. So member banks say as to representation upon the board of directors of the Federal reserve bank, and they have a right to say, "It is our money; it is our capital; it is our reserve; and we should have a right to control the Federal reserve bank by a majority of the board of directors." But the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska puts this control into the hands of the Government by a majority of one, without giving the banks that own and control the assets upon which the reserve bank operates a majority representation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will admit, however, that the object of the Hitchcock amendment is to make the regional banks Government banks; and if they are Government banks the Government ought to have a majority of the directors, whereas the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma provides that they shall be banks of banks.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. Not being Government banks, the Senator from Colorado argues that being banks for banks or a bank of banks, the banks ought to have a majority of the directors.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly. That is my contention exactly; and it seems to me that it is proper.

Mr. POMERENE. I rose for the purpose of asking the Senator from Utah whether or not he favored a Government-controlled bank.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is a Government bank, I certainly believe the Government ought to control the bank, or control it through its directors.

Mr. POMERENE. Did not the Senator favor the Aldrich plan, which was for an entirely bank-controlled bank?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, no man ever heard me say that I was in favor of the Aldrich bill in its entirety. I favor a central bank, but I would require that bank to be owned by the people. The Government should have absolute control of its management. It should be one great bank, with the power of the Government back of it to put in any part of the country money sufficient to help in case of stress or in case of panic.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will pardon me, with all due respect, I do not think the Senator has yet answered my question. The question was, or at least was intended to be, directed to one particular feature of the Aldrich bill, namely, the bankers' control of the bank. I asked the Senator whether he favored that feature of it.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I will say frankly that I did not, and that is one of the amendments I would have offered to the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it sounds awfully well to say that we should establish a great people's bank. It seems to appeal to some. When we consider the matter closely, however, we realize the fact that we have now 7,509 people's banks, and hence that there is no occasion for a people's bank in which to keep reserves of banks. The name Federal reserve bank implies that it is a bank for reserves of banks and not for deposits of the money of the people.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is now referring simply to the number of national banks?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. POMERENE. There are more than 25,000 of these banks throughout the country.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That includes the State banks. I was speaking of the national-bank system. Every one of the national banks is a people's bank; and why? Because any five persons in the United States can incorporate a bank. If the inhabitants of a city, town, or hamlet think there is a combination to raise the rate of interest and oppress the people, any five men can organize a bank, and it therefore constitutes a people's bank.

What would be the result of having a great people's bank? If this stock is issued and taken by the people, do you suppose they will not say, "We want our paper discounted"? Should they not and would they not have a right to say, "I am a stockholder of this bank. Why can not I have a right of discount in it?" You have not the safeguards against an individual's discount that you have against a bank's discount, and it is the bank's money you are dealing with.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I dislike to interrupt the Senator from Colorado; but if he will permit me, I should like to suggest that the shareholders of no bank that ever existed in the world were the people.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They were some of the people.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And generally some of the rich people, because, as a usual rule, the others are not the ones that invest in the stock of any corporation.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] the stockholders of the Government bank provided for in the amendment would not be the rich people. Provision is made that no person shall own more than $10,000 of the stock.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but we think $10,000 is a pretty big sum of money out our way.

Mr. SMOOT. And provision is made that if the stock is oversubscribed, it shall be given to those subscribing for the lowest amounts.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to remind the Senator that not more than 5 per cent of the people of the United States are worth $10,000. That being the case, it seems to me the theory that this is a people's bank must of necessity cause at least an agitation to this effect: "If we are stockholders of this concern, we should have the right of discount at the concern."

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator did not think I intimated or thought that no one could take stock unless it was $10,000 in amount.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I recognize that; but, as a usual rule, it is men of means who invest in the capital stock of a corporation, or even of a Government bank.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator further.

REASON FOR BANK PARTICIPATION.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to call attention now to the fact that even under the Hitchcock amendment this Federal reserve bank will not have any funds from individuals. Nothing is permitted to be deposited there except reserves of member banks and money in the Treasury of the United States which the Secretary of the Treasury may deem it proper to deposit there. So the Hitchcock amendment imposes the condition that a private stockholder in a Federal reserve bank is not even to be permitted to deposit with the bank any sum of money whatever. Upon the other hand, what do we find with relation to the interest of the member banks? We find that they are required to put into the Federal reserve banks $400,000,000 from their reserves, and that they are required to subscribe for $100,000,000 of the capital stock of the Federal reserve banks. To further require that the Government shall appoint five directors to their four would mean that there would not be a single National or State bank come into the system, and that would produce a failure of the entire scheme.

Is it possible that we are going to defeat this bill simply by making an impossible condition? Is it possible that anybody would want to force such an amendment, when in all likelihood the banks would not come into the system?

It simply means, Mr. President, that if we adopt the amendments proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] we will have no system at all, and there will be no effective legislation whatever in relation to either eight reserve banks or four reserve banks.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he has heard any banker say that his bank would not go into the system if the stock would be owned by the people instead of by the banks?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have heard banker after banker, as representing conventions of bankers, say that they are most bitterly opposed to the bill because they have no representation on the Federal reserve board and that the bankers wanted a bill that gave them representation in the Federal reserve banks. I have heard them object on that ground. They appeared before our committee, and in the first few days of the hearings they asserted and claimed that by reason of the fact that their moneys were to be placed in these banks and the capital was to be composed of their moneys they should not only have representation upon the board of directors of the Federal reserve banks, but they should also have representation upon the Federal reserve board which meets in Washington. When we examined the matter we found that they were wrong. We found that they should not have any representation on the Federal reserve board; that it would place them in an incompatible position. It was a matter which was discussed before the committee during the hearings. I wish to call attention to the reasons why they should have no representation upon the Federal reserve board.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, if I am not interrupting him, another question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator please state what bankers have said to him that they will not come into the system if the public is permitted to own the stock?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, I think every man who said he would not come into the system unless he had representation upon the Federal reserve board would say with ten times the vehemence that he would not consider the proposition of coming in where the banks were denied a majority directorship in the Federal reserve bank.

Mr. BRISTOW. But the Senator can not give me the name of a single man who has made such a statement or point to a single letter to that effect?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I have not read all the letters I have received; but it is my judgment that they would not do so, because men will not turn over funds that belong to them to the control of people who have no interest in those funds.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

The Federal reserve board is the governmental part of this system, and no person directly or indirectly interested in banks should be a member of that board, because the duties of such a man would be incompatible with his private interests.

The Bank of England, the Bank of France, and the Imperial Bank of Germany do not permit a man who is connected with a bank which receives deposits and pays checks to become a member of their boards of directors.

The reason bankers engaged in the active business should not be upon the Federal reserve board is because of the conflict of interest which they would have as bankers and as members of the Federal reserve board. This board is vested with the power to raise or lower the rate of discount. Every time the rate of interest is increased or decreased it means the contracting or accelerating of credits, which means the fall or rise in the price of securities, which means that there will follow a bear or bull movement on the exchanges. As banks deal in bonds, stocks, and other securities, it is presumed that the knowledge upon the part of a banker on the Federal reserve board that the rate of discount will be raised or lowered would be taken advantage of by the interests which he represents, and thereby stocks and bonds would be either bought or sold by them with almost absolute certainty of a profit being realized.

The check-paying banks of the European countries would object most strenuously to a banker having such advantage over them, and so they are thoroughly satisfied that no banker is permitted to become a director of any of the European central banks.

The bankers, in their Chicago convention in August last, passed resolutions claiming they should have representation on the Federal reserve board. In the discussion they made the argument that as it was their reserves and capital that created the concern they should have such representation. In the hearings before the committee Mr. Festus J. Wade, of St. Louis, a good banker and most excellent gentleman, contended for the same right, and had the other impression as to the practice of the Bank of England. I happened to have the authorities near at hand and read into the record the following from Mr. Walter Bagehot in his book on Lombard Street:

In London no banker has a chance of being bank (of England) director, or would ever think of attempting to be one. I am here speaking of bankers in an English sense (of those who accept deposits subject to check). * * * Not only no private banker is a director of the Bank of England, but no director of any joint-stock bank would be allowed to become such. The two situations would be taken to be incompatible. * * * The mass of the bank directors are merchants of experience, employing a considerable capital in trade in which they have been brought up and with which they are well acquainted. * * * The direction of the Bank of England has for many generations been composed of such men. (Senate Banking and Currency Hearings, p. 130.)

I also called attention to the fact that Mr. Hartley Withers, an English writer, in his book on The Meaning of Money, explains the matter very satisfactorily, as follows:

When we come to consider the bank's organization, its most striking features are the constitution of its court of directors and its system of government by rotation, and these are points on which the bank's critics have fastened with the keenest energy and determination.

The bank court is a committee recruited chiefly from the ranks of the accepting houses and merchant firms, and its members are nominated by itself, subject to the purely formal confirmation of the shareholders; and it is an unwritten law that no banker in the ordinary sense of the word—that is, no one connected with what we call the check-paying banks—can be a member of it.

At first sight, this is one of those anomalous absurdities so common in England, and so puzzling to the intelligent foreigner, who can not understand why we suffer them. A court of directors ruling the Bank of England, and so performing most important banking functions, and yet disqualifying for membership any one with an expert knowledge of banking, is a tempting subject for an epigrammatically minded satirist. But, in fact, this anomaly, like many of our others, not only works excellently well in practice, but is, when calmly considered, clearly based on sound common sense. For in the first place it would obviously be undesirable that a member of one of the outer ring of banks should have the insight into the position of his rivals which membership of the Bank of England court could give him, unless all the others were similarly privileged. But if all the outer banks were represented on the bank court, it would become a committee of unwieldy dimensions, perhaps reproducing or reflecting in the bank parlor the rivalries and jealousies that stimulate the outer banks to work against one another, but are not conducive to their working together.

And the question of proportionate representation would be difficult to settle. As it is, the bank court, being free from connection with the outer banks except by keeping their balances, is able to watch their proceedings with a wholly impartial eye, and, on occasion, to make suggestions with salutary effect. (Senate Banking and Currency Hearings, p. 133.)

I also call attention to the fact that the governor of the Bank of England, in his answers to the questions of the Monetary Commission in 1908, used the following language:

CUSTOM EXCLUDES BANKERS FROM BOARD.

Q. Is there any custom restricting the class from which the directors may be selected?—A. There is no legal restriction as to the class from which directors may be selected, except that they must be "natural-born subjects of England or naturalized," but in actual practice the selection is confined to those who are or have been members of mercantile or financial houses, excluding bankers, brokers, bill discounters, or directors of other banks operating in the United Kingdom. (Senate Banking and Currency Hearings, p. 135.)

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THORNTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my colleague has given a great deal of time and study to this question, and to practically all its details. I should like to inquire at this juncture whether the directors of these banks in European countries are permitted to serve as directors upon the boards of industrial corporations and transportation companies. I ask the question largely, perhaps, for my own information; but it may become of some importance with reference to an amendment that may be offered by me to one of the sections of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that the qualification for a member of the court of directors of the Bank of England—it is called "court of directors"—is that he shall have £500 worth of stock in the Bank of England and that he shall be the owner of an establishment having at least £20,000 invested in mercantile business. I do not know whether there are any other qualifications or not. I have read one or two books on the subject of the Bank of England, one of which is by Mr. Hartley Withers, in which he treats of it exclusively. It is a fine volume, giving details of the operation of the bank; but I remember no requirement prescribed in that book excluding merchants who are directors of other corporations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon the suggestion, there is another reason why the great public banks in Europe do not permit the directorate to be composed of bankers, and that is because they intrust those banks, all of them, with the power of issuing currency.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that connection it seems to me that one of the beauties of your plan here, so far as the banking part of the scheme is concerned, is that you give a majority to bankers who are shareholders in the venture, and then you give ultimately to the public board, the reserve board, the board of control, which is the official body, control of the currency and of the rate of interest.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that it is a public body which makes the rate of discount or interest, controlling the fluctuations of gold to the extent that it will do it, and it is this public body that holds its hand upon the throttle so far as the issuance of currency is concerned, while the private business of the bank for the benefit of the stockholders who are banks is conducted by a directorate with a majority of bank-chosen people. Then you go further than that and make one of the directors in each regional bank, who is the chairman of the board of directors of the regional bank, the man who takes care of the portfolio of commercial assets, and determines whether or not they are good.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir. I will state to the Senator that I intended to cover that very suggestion in another part of my speech.

So the bankers who came before the committee from Chicago and who adopted a resolution at their convention insisting that they should have representation upon the Federal reserve board have ceased their agitation, because they have found from the practice of the European banks that not one banker is upon the board of directors of any of those banks.

Of course, men who have been bankers, possessed of all the knowledge of banking in this country, are eligible, and some should be selected upon the Federal reserve board, provided they have severed all connection, directly and indirectly, with banks and trust companies. I have no doubt the President in naming the members of the board will consider the qualifications of such applicants and appoint at least some of them on the boards of directors of the Federal reserve banks.

STRENGTH OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANK.

The third point touched upon by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] was in relation to the reserves. He said there was a difference between the two bills as to the amount of the reserves. That is true. Their section of the committee has reduced the reserves of city and central reserve city banks to 15 per cent, whereas in our bill it is 18 per cent in reserve city banks.

The Senator from Nebraska says there will be considerable difficulty in conforming to the new system, and that there is considerable difference between the two bills in that respect. If he examines the bills, however, he will find that each of them carefully preserves the right of depositing in the Federal reserve banks only limited amounts for a long period. Our bill gives a period of 36 months in which to make this transmission of currency to the Federal reserve banks, while their bill gives only 24 months.

The amount of money which these Federal reserve banks will have will be sufficient, without the issuance of any new money, to serve the ends of commerce at almost all times, except when there is a great panic sweeping the country. These banks will have in their control $400,000,000 of the reserves of the national banks, the capital of the Federal reserve banks, amounting to $106,000,000, and the cash balance of the Federal Government, amounting on November 24, 1913, to $289,799,160.81. Thus nearly $800,000,000 will be in the control of the Federal reserve banks to lend to the member banks when the demands of the country in crop-moving time require it.

If all of the State banks and trust companies come into the system, there will be much more at the disposal of the Federal reserve banks to meet the same conditions throughout the country.

The provisions with respect to the lending of this money to the member banks are very conservative, and it is difficult to conceive how any loss can occur to the Federal reserve banks. The measure provides that any bank desiring to procure a loan from the Federal reserve bank must present 30, 60, or 90 day paper, usually in the form of drafts which represent a transaction in commerce. Such drafts, according to the experience of the world, constitute the best security, whether a bill of lading is attached or not. Notes representing a loan by a national bank to an individual to go into permanent improvements, though made payable in 90 days, are seldom intended to be paid at that time, and hence such notes are not considered liquid—that is, certain of payment at the time of maturity—and therefore can not, under the provisions of the bill, be taken by the Federal reserve bank.

The paper prescribed by the bill which is eligible for rediscount by the Federal reserve bank usually represents a shipment of wheat, cotton, or merchandise by a dealer; it is a draft drawn by the seller upon the purchaser, who may be a manufacturer, or larger dealer. This is accepted by the purchaser in writing upon the draft, under arrangement with his bank, that on presentation by the seller it will be paid immediately. The bill of lading can be attached and perhaps in many instances will be attached. It is presumed that when the draft falls due the purchaser will have converted his purchase into cash by resale or by manufacture and thus have the money to pay the same.

It is stated that inasmuch as these drafts may be in the hands of persons whom the acceptor does not even know there is never an effort to extend the same, but the purchaser, with the receipts from resale, always is ready to pay at maturity.

When the member bank desires to get more money it guarantees the payment of this gilt-edge paper and presents the same to the Federal reserve bank for rediscount.

The Senator from Nebraska says, further, as the fourth great reason why his system is better than the one recommended by the section of the committee represented by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], that there should be a compulsory discount system, and that his bill contains it. In other words, there is a clause in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the effect that when commercial paper is presented it shall be recognized as a matter of right to the full amount of its capital stock.

RIGHT OF APPEAL TO FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

The provision of the bill reported by Senator OWEN is to the effect that all of this is subject to the control of the Federal reserve board, and that if any discriminations are made the banks have a right to appeal and have a review of everything that is done there. It is impossible to foresee what conditions will arise in the operation of this bill. We do not know whether it will be a success at all. We do know that we passed the Aldrich-Vreeland bill four or five years ago, and expected that it would give relief; but not a single dollar of the currency authorized by that bill has been taken out of the Treasury. Something intervened to prevent its operation, just in the same way that this bill will become inoperative if you say that the bankers shall not have control of the directorates of the Federal reserve banks.

So we find, as to the compulsory-discount feature, that there may be many reasons why the banks should stop discounting in a certain district. There may be a condition that we can not foresee. Of course the object of the Senator from Nebraska is good. He is afraid there will be discrimination against some person or some bank, and therefore that equal justice will not be administered. But we must consider the fact that in the administration of this bill many unlooked-for conditions may arise. It may be that we will have too much currency, and that it should be restricted, no matter who asks for it. It may be that the reserves will be depleted, and that the bank prefers to keep a little larger reserve than 33½ per cent, and therefore should make no more discounts. Various conditions may arise. But it seems to me that to put upon the statute books an act which provides that the paper presented by any member bank shall be discounted might work a great hardship and militate against the successful operation of the system.

THE CHANCE OF LOSS ON NEW CURRENCY IS INFINITESIMAL.

The chances of a reputable dealer in merchandise failing within 90 days are very remote, not being more than 1 in 1,000. The chances of the purchaser who is a larger dealer or manufacturer failing within the same 90 days are not more than 1 in 1,000. The chances of both failing within that time therefore are not more than 1 in 1,000,000. If a bill of lading is attached to the draft, the chances of loss in course of shipment without insurance are not more than 1 in 1,000.

Thus the member bank is fortified with paper in which there is a chance of all three failing within the same 90 days of not exceeding 1 in 1,000,000,000. The member bank before it can get any money from the Federal reserve bank must guarantee that paper, and there is not 1 chance in 1,000 that the member bank will fail within the same 90 days, so that the paper, duly indorsed by the member bank, represents a security that will not fail more than 1 time out of 1,000,000,000,000. Thus the chance of loss by the Federal reserve bank being limited to this kind of paper and requiring all the indorsements makes it as safe a transaction as it is possible to conceive.

Federal reserve banks, therefore, will have no hesitancy in supplying the member banks with money when the demands are greater than in ordinary times. Of course, in ordinary times the member bank will prefer to keep the paper and gain all of the interest thereon instead of rediscounting it at the Federal reserve bank and letting the latter make the interest, and that very motive will tend to regulate the discounting and payment of drafts.

The remedy proposed in this measure as to our currency provides that in times of emergency, even if all of the reserves, capital, and deposits of the Federal reserve bank have been loaned to the member banks, they can still procure new currency with which to prevent runs upon the member banks. The same character of paper must be presented to the agent of the Federal reserve board by the Federal reserve bank, which, as I have shown before, is liable to a loss within 90 days of only 1 chance in 1,000,000,000,000.

The Federal reserve bank must then guarantee that paper to the Government, and then the agent of the Federal reserve board delivers new currency to the Federal reserve bank, which, in turn, delivers it to the member bank which presented the security.

There is not 1 chance in 1,000,000 that the Federal reserve bank, with the enormous reserves and capital above mentioned, all of which are subject to a first lien to the Federal reserve board, will fail within the same 90 days; so, taking the case of a particular draft, by the time it reaches the agent of the Federal reserve board, with the liability of the maker, the acceptor, the bill of lading attached, the member bank with its capital and double liability of its stockholders, and the Federal reserve bank with its capital and reserves and double liability of its stockholders—the member banks—the chance of loss to the Government for issuing the currency would not be more than 1 in 1,000,000,000,000,000.

Such combination of coincident failures by all of the signers and indorsers of this paper within the same 90 days would be almost impossible, and thus the new currency, which must retire within 90 days, becomes absolutely safe.

Another objection made by the Senator from Nebraska is to the clauses of our bill which provide that the Federal reserve notes shall be redeemable at the reserve banks in gold or lawful money, and as to the quantity of the gold reserve provided in our bill.

REDEMPTION OF FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES.

The bill under consideration, as it came from the House, provided that the Federal reserve notes issued should be redeemable at the United States Treasury in gold or lawful money or at the Federal reserve banks in gold or lawful money. The Aldrich bill, which was approved by the bankers generally, provided for the redemption of the circulating notes of its central bank in gold or lawful money. The pending bill, as it passed the House, provided that there should be a gold or lawful-money reserve to the extent of 33½ per cent against the Federal reserve notes, and that the Federal reserve banks should maintain as a redemption fund at the United States Treasury 5 per cent of such notes in gold or lawful money, and the balance they should keep in their own vaults. The present national-bank notes are redeemable only in lawful money.

The bill as amended by Senator OWEN strikes out the words "lawful money" when the notes are presented for redemption at the Treasury, strikes out the 5 per cent clause as to the amount of gold or lawful money the bank shall keep in the redemption fund at the Treasury, and provides that they shall keep such an amount of gold in the redemption fund at the Treasury as the Federal reserve board may from time to time direct, and leaves the redemptions at Federal reserve banks as passed by the House, namely, in gold or lawful money. The Hitchcock bill provides for the redemption of the Federal reserve notes both at the Treasury and at the Federal reserve bank in gold alone.

The object of striking out the 5 per cent clause was because a similar provision is contained in the statutes of the United States with respect to the redemption of the national-bank notes in lawful money, and it has been found to be not quite adequate to meet the redemptions that are presented.

While I do not believe that the Federal reserve notes will be presented at the Treasury in any such number as the national-bank notes have been for redemption in lawful money, yet, in order to avoid the possibility that 5 per cent may not be adequate, it was deemed proper to let the Federal reserve board call for gold from the Federal reserve banks in any quantity that may be required.

Senator HITCHCOCK's amendment to the bill provides that no less than 35 per cent of gold shall be kept as a reserve and that the amount ordinarily to be kept shall be 45 per cent, with a permit to let the reserve be depleted to 35 per cent upon there being paid an interest charge of 1 per cent on each 2½ per cent exhaustion of the gold reserve. In other words, under normal conditions the reserve required under the Hitchcock amendment will be 45 per cent in gold, and the amount required according to the House bill and the Owen amendment will be 33½ per cent.

In most of the issue banks of Europe there is no minimum reserve required. The Bank of France, while it usually holds a very large reserve in gold, has no minimum fixed by law. The Reichsbank of Germany prescribes that a reserve of 33½ per cent shall be maintained in gold. The Bank of Belgium maintains a gold reserve of 19 per cent.

STRAIN ON GOLD.

The result of requiring the maintenance of a very large gold reserve will be to produce increased demands for gold; and as gold is the international money of the world, any increase by one nation necessarily makes the struggle for gold which is now going on a little more severe.

The flow of gold to or from a country is regulated by the banks of issue of the various countries raising or lowering the rate of discount. In order to attract gold the bank of issue of a European country will raise the rate of discount; that is, raise the rate of interest which the banks charge. That tempts money from other countries to make investments at the higher rate of interest, and therefore brings the money with which to pay for such securities; and as international balances must be paid in gold, the transaction therefore brings gold to the country that raises the rate of discount.

The other nations that have lost gold by that process must, in order to get it back, raise their rate of discount a little higher. Thus this seesaw in raising the interest rates with the object of attracting gold continues until interest rates become very high. This competition and raising the rate of discount among the various nations of the world to get more gold is counteracted only when enterprises that are contemplated are confronted with a rate of interest too high to make such enterprises profitable, and thus a less demand sets in for money, which, according to the principle of supply and demand, effects the lowering of the rate of interest.

HIGH DISCOUNT RATE PRODUCES STAGNATION.

When the rate of discount gets high throughout the world it generally produces stagnation in business, commerce, and enterprise. Consequently, the least strain upon gold that can safely be made and yet maintain the gold standard comes nearest permitting business and enterprises to continue in a prosperous way.

It is said that at the present time there is less gold in circulation in proportion to the credits outstanding than ever existed at any other period in the history of the world. That means that there is more of a strain upon gold for reserve and redemption purposes in proportion to the business conducted than at any other time in the world's history. In the general policy, therefore, of relieving the strain on gold there is a tendency to let commerce thrive, while requiring large reserves increases the strain on gold and thereby makes a depressing effect on business and commerce.

At the end of the first six months of the present year the aggregate gold reserves of all the principal banks and treasuries of the world amounted to $4,693,104,000.

At the end of the first six months of the year 1911 the gold holdings of the various institutions were $468,867,000 less than in 1913. Notwithstanding this increase within the last two years in the gold holdings of the treasuries and banks of the gold-standard nations, the great banks of issue assert that they have not gold enough and vie with each other in raising their discount rates, so that they may jealously protect their holdings.

This struggle for gold among the nations of the earth in the last 15 years has produced great increases in the rates of interest.

At the close of the nineteenth century the discount rate of the Bank of England remained normally in the vicinity of 2 to 2½ per cent per annum, but has since been gradually climbing to 4 per cent, which it reached in 1912; and recently the rate has gone still higher to 4½ per cent, and later still to 5 per cent per annum.

According to Mr. Paul Leroy-Beaulieu, an eminent French economist, the following advances in the rates of discount charged by the banks of issue of various countries have been made from June 30, 1911, to June 30, 1913:

In the Banking Law Journal, of New York, for September, 1913, there is stated the following important information:

Europe needs gold and buys it at a premium. Imports of gold to Europe are necessary to recoup the waste of capital from the Balkan wars and the devastation of the agricultural countries which furnish so much food to continental countries. Egyptian reserves have been depleted by demands for capital in the Far East and must have more gold. India, favored by great balances of trade, has within two years purchased over $250,000,000 of gold, besides silver, and as much more within the next two years will have to go into the "sink hole" of precious metals.

The Washington Post of November 16, 1913, contained a very able editorial, in which the following language was used:

The facts are that for nearly two years now every country in Europe has been in financial straits, and if European banking systems have withstood financial strain, they have not been sufficient in any way to meet the demands of Europe, of Africa, of Asia, or of the Americas for funds to carry out profitable and legitimate business enterprises.

Great Britain to-day confesses its inability to finance India with gold. France places estoppel upon all foreign loans until its own governmental needs are financed.

Germany was only saved from bankruptcy 18 months ago through the gold furnished by American bankers.

Where are the funds necessary to carry on the increasing business of the world coming from when these highly lauded systems of European finance fail to provide them for their own continent or the needs of others?

The ablest railway manager in the world has told the people of the United States repeatedly during the last two years that our railways require $5,000,000,000 for proper development.

No one doubts the correctness of that statement.

Every business man in the United States wishes that development to proceed.

The most active and powerful of New York financial managers has told the Congress, the bankers, and the people of this country that the electrical development of the United States will during the next few years call for the expenditure of $2,000,000,000.

The populace and the business interests of the country earnestly approve of this development at the earliest possible time.

In an editorial of the Washington Post of November 19, 1913, the following information is given:

It was not our tariff legislation which caused the Bank of England to hoist its bank rate of discount to extremely high figures for the past year to keep its gold at home.

It was not our antitrust talk that forced the German banks to issue millions of dollars' worth of notes of small denominations that they might gather in and retain gold to strengthen their reserves of primary money.

Sound as are our own financial conditions, the insufficiency of gold, the primary money, is to-day a veto upon the ability of the bankers to aid the business men; it is a ban upon enterprise in every form; it is a bar to general prosperity, a fearful handicap upon safe finance and legitimate business.

It can be readily seen from these extracts that the higher the gold reserves are fixed the greater the strain upon gold will become, and that the way to retain gold will be by increasing the rate of discount. This may be very satisfactory to the bankers, because they reap more profits when they lend out their money at a higher rate of interest, but it is not to the interest of the people who are compelled to pay the higher rate of interest fixed by banks of issue under the claim that they are trying to get more gold.

"LAWFUL MONEY" REDEMPTION RELIEVES STRAIN ON GOLD.

In this bill we have retained the House provision that the Federal reserve notes may be redeemed by the bank in either gold or lawful money. It takes the strain off gold at the eight reserve banks and does not impair the redemption feature of the note in gold, because it provides that the Federal reserve note may be redeemed at the Treasury in gold. In other words, it obviates the necessity of each of these reserve banks competing with each other and with the United States Treasury for gold and thereby permits a smaller quantity of gold to make the redemptions, which, of course, relieves the strain on gold to that extent.

Mr. THOMAS. I think it is pertinent to the discussion of the Senator to state here that the drain upon the world's supply of gold which India has been constantly making for some 10 years past has caused the Parliament to provide for the appointment of an Indian currency commission charged with the duty of ascertaining its definite causes, and whether the Government can safely persist in its effort to force a gold standard upon India. The attempt is about 12 years old now, and its principal result has been to educate the East Indian in the hoarding of gold instead of silver, since he is no longer able to take his hoarded silver to the mint and exchange it for rupees at the rupee legal value. Eighty-eight million pounds sterling in gold have been diverted from the channels of international trade into India during the last three years, equivalent, of course, to $440,000,000 of our currency.

That gold is no longer available, nor is any part of it for monetary needs, and the total of withdrawals, I think, amounts to £175,000,000 during the last 10 years. It is no longer available for the uses of commerce, because gold which goes to India, like silver which formerly went to India, absolutely disappears and is hoarded by the natives in various ways. Some of it is hidden away as coins, but most of it is melted and is changed into articles of personal adornment. But the startling fact is that it disappears as completely as though it were sunk in the middle of the sea, and the drain is constantly increasing.

This presents to my mind one of the most serious menaces to international trade and to international currency conditions that at present exists. It is one reason, which I will endeavor to elaborate before this discussion ends, why I believe it is dangerous for any nation to pivot all its currency and credit conditions upon a single metal.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does not the Hitchcock amendment provide that the reserves shall be in gold or gold certificates, and have we not $1,100,000,000 of gold certificates in addition to the free gold?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; and the very fact that the national-bank notes are sent down here to Washington by express,

$600,000,000 each year, or at the rate of $2,000,000 every day, running the risk of train wreck, fire, and robbery that might occur, shows that—

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand; but that has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It shows that there are not enough of these gold certificates to act as reserves for the banks. That is what it means. It means that they are short of currency which will answer that purpose.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does not the Senator know that the reason why the national banks send the national-bank notes for redemption is because they can not be used as reserves?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; and when gold is reserve money, and gold certificates are reserve money, and greenbacks are reserve money, of course it shows that still there is a shortage in that, or else this redemption would not take place to the extent of over $600,000,000 a year.

Mr. BRISTOW. I can not see the line of reasoning which the Senator presents, for it is not because of a shortage in gold that these certificates are sent, but it is because the law does not permit them to be used as reserves.

SHORTAGE OF RESERVE MONEY FORCES BANK-NOTE REDEMPTION.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But if there was a sufficient quantity of gold certificates and a sufficient quantity of those other moneys that are used for reserves, they would pay out this bank currency just as they would in ordinary transactions, and they would not ask redemption for it. It is because of the shortage in that money—that is, the reserve money—that the national-bank notes come to Washington for reserve money. When you cite to me that there is a quantity of gold represented by certificates, I say, yes; but where is it? I saw a statement the other day that there are $114,000,000 of American gold certificates in Canada. I have been told that there are many millions of our gold certificates scattered all over Europe, acting as warehouse receipts, which shows they have confidence that gold will be at their demand whenever they want it. How much there is one can not tell. We can not tell how much of the $346,000,000 of United States notes there are, because we know that the retirement of them was stopped in 1878, and there were $346,000,000 then. There has been no way of determining how many of those notes have been burned or destroyed or taken out of the country.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I ask the Senator, is it not because the national-bank note is an inferior note that it is sent for redemption, the banks retaining that which is the best?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; except that it can not be used as reserve money.

Mr. BRISTOW. Because it can not be used as a reserve, and it is not as useful as a gold certificate and a greenback.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; that is true. Of course they are kept at a par with gold, and nobody has ever attempted to force one to a discount.

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly. It is kept at par because of the credit of the United States Government, the United States bonds, behind it, and the pledge of the Government to redeem it in gold.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The 33½ per cent which the Owen section of the committee has recommended to be held as a gold reserve for the redemption of these notes at the Treasury is amply sufficient to make it a perfect currency. Did you ever notice that whenever it came to providing for the issuance of bank bills the bankers never ask to make their notes redeemable in gold? Did you ever hear a banker suggest that national-bank notes should be made payable in gold at the bank counter? Oh, no.

We find that the Aldrich bill, which was presented and which met the approval of all the bankers of this country as represented in their conventions, expressly provided that the redemption should be made in gold or lawful money, at the option of the bank. Here in the compromise that has been made with relation to this matter by the Owen side of the committee we have provided that these notes shall be redeemable in gold at the Treasury, or in gold or lawful money at the Federal reserve bank. I want to state why. It is because it saves the strain upon the gold. That is the reason. If you have it redeemable in gold at every one of the Federal reserve banks, you simply establish eight competing points for gold, all bidding against the Government for the purpose of getting gold into their vaults.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will yield in a moment.

We find that these gold reserves proposed may be more than 33½ per cent. That is the minimum, and the chances are that when there is an easy market in gold it may accumulate and go much higher, just as it does in European banks. But to compare the conditions in this country and the necessity for a gold reserve with the conditions in Europe is something that is ridiculous. All European nations are upon a war footing. Every one of them has to grab gold and keep it. We being upon a peace footing, having no enemies and having no fears of war, we have a right to presume that the strain upon our gold will not be great.

I now yield to my colleague.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of that provision of the House bill which makes this money redeemable in lawful money, but there is one feature of the Owen bill about which I should like some information. My understanding of it is that it provides that these notes shall be redeemed at the United States Treasury in gold, but if presented to the Federal reserve banks they shall be redeemed either in gold or lawful money. What I want to inquire is, if it will not cause the holder of the note who wants redemption in gold to go to the Treasury instead of going to the bank, which has the alternative of redeeming in the two classes of money, and whether it will not, as a consequence, create a demand upon the gold in the Federal Treasury.

WILL BE NO CONSPIRACY TO WITHDRAW GOLD.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will answer that, Mr. President. We provide in our bill that the Federal reserve banks shall keep a fund in gold in the Treasury of the United States, and consequently there will be no conspiracy, upon their part at least, to draw gold out of the Treasury of the United States. This fund of 33½ per cent is to be kept in their own vaults and in the vaults of the Treasury of the United States. All the Federal reserve notes redeemed at the Treasury are from the gold fund furnished and maintained by the Federal reserve banks that procured the issuance of the Federal reserve notes.

The House bill as it came to us provided that the Federal reserve banks should create and maintain a gold redemption fund in the Treasury of 5 per cent of notes issued. By law at the present time the national banks maintain at the Treasury for the redemption of their notes a 5 per cent fund in lawful money. By reason of the redemption of these national-bank notes in such large numbers, as I have said, it has been found that 5 per cent is inadequate. I believe 5 per cent would be sufficient as to these notes, but for fear that it would not be sufficient we have provided that they should deposit with the United States Treasury for this redemption fund such an amount as the Federal reserve board should determine. That, of course, may be 5, 6, 10, or even 20 per cent if it is necessary. So the United States Treasury is amply protected by this proposition.

As to the good policy of requiring redemption of Federal reserve notes at the Federal reserve banks in gold or lawful money, there is no better illustration than our present system of supporting our currency upon a gold reserve of $150,000,000. That quantity of gold has been found amply sufficient to maintain all redemptions of the United States notes amounting to $346,000,000 and indirectly to maintain the redemptions of national-bank notes amounting to $758,000,000. The fact that the national-bank notes are not redeemable at the national banks in gold, but are redeemable at the banks in lawful money, relieves the strain on gold, and yet every holder of a national-bank note can get his gold after obtaining for his national-bank note the United States note; and thus this $150,000,000 of gold supports a superstructure of $346,000,000 of United States notes redeemable in gold and the $758,000,000 of national-bank notes redeemable in the United States notes.

Under this system there has never been a deviation of a fraction of a cent between the national-bank notes and gold since the establishment of the gold reserve on March 14, 1900. It is therefore of the highest importance that the provisions of the House bill as to redemption of Federal reserve notes at the Treasury be made in gold, but at the Federal reserve banks in gold or lawful money.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think if this 33½ per cent was required to be held in gold—and that would have to be the case if the banks were required to redeem in gold—the practical modus operandi would be that the banks would at once, in order to procure their 33½ per cent of gold reserve, proceed to tender greenbacks at the Treasury of the United States and get it out of a fund which we are now holding to protect the greenbacks?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; they might do that, and thereby deplete the gold reserve of our Treasury.

It can be readily seen from this illustration that 33½ per cent in gold is amply sufficient to maintain at a parity with gold all the Federal reserve notes presented at the Treasury for redemption in gold or at the Federal reserve banks for redemption in gold or lawful money. The provision in Senator Hitchcock's amendment requiring 45 per cent in gold would simply make that much greater strain on gold than is necessary and requiring redemption in gold at Federal reserve banks would cause those banks to maintain a higher gold reserve than the law requires, just as banks now maintain higher reserves to meet checks on deposit than required by law.

The bankers with their limited strength are continually pleading for a law which requires smaller reserves for themselves. They have urged and obtained in this bill a reduction of reserves for country banks from 15 per cent to 12 per cent and for reserve city banks from 25 per cent to 18 per cent, and the Hitchcock amendment reduces the latter to 15 per cent.

ADVANTAGEOUS TO NATIONAL BANKS.

Many of the bankers who appeared before the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency felt that the bill was not sufficiently favorable to the national banks to justify their going into the system. An examination of the provisions of the bill will dispel any such contention to the mind of a disinterested person. It is distinctly to the advantage of every national bank to go into the system. The law now provides that each country national bank, of which there are 7,142 in existence, must keep in its own vaults and in banks of a reserve city 15 per cent of its deposits. The present bill reduces that percentage to 12 per cent, which gives a great advantage to the country bank.

At the present time a country bank with $100,000 capital and surplus ordinarily has, say, $1,000,000 of deposits. Under the present law it must keep as reserves in its own vaults and in other banks in reserve cities $150,000. Under the proposed measure it would have to keep in its own vaults and in the vaults of the Federal reserve bank only $120,000. That would be a distinct saving in cash of $30,000. As it is conceded that with capital, credits can be built up to the extent of eight or ten times, the country bank could thereby build up credits upon this $30,000 of cash to the amount of $240,000, all of which could be loaned at 6 per cent, and thus the country bank would be benefited to the extent of $14,400 per annum, while its cost of going into this system would be only 6 per cent of its capital and surplus, which would amount to only $6,000, upon which it will draw a dividend of 6 per cent per annum, which is no loss. It would lose the 2 per cent per annum that it now receives from banks in reserve cities, where, according to the present law, is held 9 per cent of its deposits, which would be $90,000, 2 per cent of that amount being $1,800 per year. Thus the country bank would be better off by coming into the system by $12,600 a year. Similar advantages exist in favor of the reserve city banks.

It is difficult to conceive that a bank which is given such privileges by this bill, together with the privilege in times of runs to seek shelter under the power of these great reserves, should hesitate one moment in subscribing to the capital stock of the Federal reserve bank.

The only banks that will lose deposits by this bill are those of New York City, where the reserves of nearly all of the banks in the United States are concentrated and used in gambling upon the stock exchanges. These reserves belong to the banks throughout the country and do not belong to the New York banks, and they can not justly complain when these reserves are kept at home instead of being concentrated there.

There is a great difference between the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska and that proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma relative to the retirement of the national bank notes. The Senator from Nebraska proposes to retire the 2 per cent bonds to an extent not exceeding one-half of the capital stock of the reserve banks each year. Of course that would make a retirement of a very large amount each year. He proposes to issue in place of the bonds securing such circulation 3 per cent bonds; but he does not provide for any permanent money to take the place of the national-bank notes, and consequently the plan involves simply a contraction of the currency to that extent.

EFFECT OF RETIRING UNITED STATES NOTES.

Some of the Senators here remember the great agitation that occurred when it was discovered in the 70's that power had been given to the Secretary of the Treasury to retire United States notes, and that over $100,000,000 of such notes had been retired. Congress in 1878, at the almost unanimous demand of the people, took away this power from the Secretary of the Treasury. You may talk about expansion, but when it comes to contracting the currency you are going to produce disturbances that will shake to the very foundation this Government. Consequently, I think one of the great defects of the bill reported by the Senator from Nebraska lies in the provision which proposes a retirement of this currency without the substitution of a permanent circulating medium. His theory is that there will be such a demand for this currency based on 90-day paper that sufficient will be issued and remain as a substitute for the retired national-bank notes. Several of the witnesses before the Committee on Banking and Currency testified that they did not believe there would be enough of the commercial paper that is required to make a demand for money sufficient to take the place of the national-bank notes. So the Owen section of the committee made a change, and provided that there shall be issued in lieu of the national-bank notes, which shall be retired at the rate of $3,000,000 a month, Federal reserve notes, based upon the same bonds now securing national-bank circulation, or based upon substitute bonds, with the backing of the Federal reserve banks instead of the backing of the individual banks, as now—a better security, a safer security, and one of a permanent nature. The substitute bonds bear 3 per cent interest, but the interest goes to the Federal reserve banks. A currency based upon 90-day paper is supposed to be issued only in emergencies to supply a temporary demand for more money to meet the necessities in crop-moving seasons and in times of panic.

Some people think that there will be great difficulty in the Federal reserve banks getting gold. They seem to think that it is necessary to sell bonds for the purpose of obtaining gold to redeem the currency. The gold-redemption fund is furnished by the member banks; it only has to be maintained by the Federal reserve banks. It takes an insignificant amount of money to procure gold for redemption purposes. All a Federal reserve bank would have to do would be to take its receipts of the day before and buy an equal amount of gold. It can get gold for one-tenth of 1 per cent, and out of their general fund or their profits they can add one-tenth of 1 per cent, and that pays for the gold. One thousand dollars used in that manner would get gold enough to redeem a million dollars of Federal reserve notes, because the gold is not consumed; it is exchanged.

If after they bought the gold it was consumed, of course it would take a million dollars of money or a million dollars of notes or a million dollars of bonds to buy the million dollars of gold bullion or gold coin. You can readily see that it only takes a thousand dollars added to the receipts of the day before, if the receipts were a million dollars, to buy a million dollars in gold and put it in the reserve in place of the paper money in the reserve which was used the day before in drawing gold from the reserve. So this necessity of issuing one-year paper or issuing bonds for the purchase of gold is not real. The Government buys gold bullion to an enormous extent every year at its mints, paying therefor $20.67 per ounce. The idea of the necessity for bond issues to buy gold came to us from the Cleveland administration bond issues. But what became of the money from those bonds? It went to pay the general expenses of the Government and was consumed. Of course you have to issue bonds to the extent of $100,000,000 to get $100,000,000 in gold when you are going to use it for expenditure purposes; but when you are going to keep it simply for the purpose of redemption, I repeat, all you have to pay is the little premium which the European banks now pay—simply one-tenth of 1 per cent added to the paper money you already have with which to buy gold. That is all it costs to keep a reserve. The theory of providing bonds instead of the $758,000,000 of national-bank notes to buy gold and to keep that gold is an absolute absurdity to any person who understands the system of buying gold in the market.

This measure will make panics unknown, unless it be a world panic, and even then it will mitigate and relieve the severity of the disturbance to a marked degree and will save from disaster every bank except the insolvent banks of the country.

With rigid inspections, as provided in this bill, there will be no such thing as the closing of the doors of a solvent bank, and thus a degree of prosperity will be established and maintained in our country that will bring peace, security, and happiness to our people.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. If there is no Senator who desires to speak on this subject, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 30 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 26, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 25, 1913.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate November 25, 1913.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Edgar H. James to be United States marshal, western district of Kentucky.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, November 26, 1913.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

The Rev. Arthur Little, D. D., of Boston, Mass., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, we acknowledge Thee as the source of all life, of all light, of all power. Into Thy presence we come that we may be vitalized, illumined, and empowered for Thy service. We thank Thee for all the ways of goodness and loving-kindness along which Thou art leading us from day to day. We supplicate Thy presence and Thy blessing upon these Thy servants, summoned of God and the people to this tremendous task of legislation for a great Nation. Give them guidance and wisdom and insight and foresight and all needed help, that they may enact such laws as shall be for the well-being of the Republic and for the honor of Thy name.

Make us grateful for all the mercies that enrich our lives. Help us to share with the people of the Nation on the morrow in returning hearty and sincere thanks and acknowledgments to Almighty God for the goodness with which He has crowned the year. Peace, plenty, and prosperity abound, thanks to His bountiful hand.

Command Thy blessing upon the President of the United States and all his advisers. Endow him and those sharing his counsels with wisdom from on high to guide them in all their deliberations. All hearts unite in offering this prayer: "The Lord bless and keep us. The Lord make His face to shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up His countenance upon us and give us peace." Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, November 26, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,
President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.
SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a lengthy telegram from the Modesto Water Users' Association, of Modesto, Cal., of which I presume every Senator has had a copy, protesting against the passage of the so-called Hetch Hetchy bill. I have also an earnest letter from the Right Rev. Bishop W. W. Niles, of Concord, N. H., on the same subject, entering a protest.

I will not ask that these papers be printed in the RECORD, contenting myself with the statement I have made concerning them.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WEEKS presented resolutions adopted by the Central Labor Union of Fitchburg, Mass., favoring an investigation into the mining conditions in the copper district in the State of Michigan, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of the congregation of the Asbury First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Springfield; of the congregation of the Highlands Methodist Episcopal Church, of Holyoke; of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of East Longmeadow; and of the Woman's Association of the First Congregational Church of Springfield, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the so-called antipolygamy bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEEKS (for Mr. LODGE) presented a memorial of the Social Science Club of Newton, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation granting to the city of San Francisco the use of the waters of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ROOT presented a memorial of the faculty of Adelphi College, Brooklyn, N. Y., remonstrating against granting to the city of San Francisco the use of the waters of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 3483) for the relief of Alex. H. Smith; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3484) to amend paragraph 8, section 24, chapter 2, of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 3485) granting a pension to Edward H. Dalton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3486) providing for the retirement and rank of general service clerks and messengers in the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRADY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 82) authorizing a survey of the Snake River from Lewiston, Idaho, to the mouth; to the Committee on Commerce.

CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES (S. DOC. NO. 243).

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that there be published as a public document a very able and instructive thesis by W. V. N. Powelson upon the waste of our natural resources due to the nondevelopment of our water power. It is a very able article, and I should like to have it made a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered, in the absence of objection.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND SITES (S. DOC. NO. 244).

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Treasury Department has prepared at my request a statement showing the status of public buildings and sites in the United States arranged according to congressional districts, embracing all projects up to and including the public-buildings act of March 4, 1913.

The statement shows the places in the congressional districts where buildings have been completed, with dates of completion; the places where buildings and extensions are in course of construction, with the dates of the beginning of construction; the places where buildings and extensions are to be constructed on sites or additional land already purchased; the places where buildings and extensions are to be constructed on sites or on additional land not yet purchased; and the places where new sites for buildings are to be acquired.

Senators and Members of the House are constantly receiving requests for this information. I believe this statement will be of great value as a public document, and I ask that it may be printed as such.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on the eighth day of September last I gave notice that I would at a later day offer an amendment to Rule XIX of the Senate. I now offer a resolution and ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Rules.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 221) was referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following paragraph to the nineteenth standing rule, to be numbered and known as paragraph 6 of said rule, to wit:

"Par. 6. Whenever confusion arises in the Chamber or the galleries, or demonstrations of approval or disapproval are indulged in by the occupants of the galleries, it shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce order on his own initiative, and without any point of order being made by a Senator."

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on next Monday, at the convenience of the Senate, I shall address the Senate upon the banking and currency bill.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Friday, December 5, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall address the Senate on the subject of banking and currency legislation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it is my purpose to address the Senate this morning upon the resolution offered by me on yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Nevada, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 220, providing for the modification of the pending banking and currency bill by the adoption of a Federal reserve system.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the resolution which I offered yesterday may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. NEWLANDS, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the pending banking and currency bill should be modified by providing—

First. That within five years the capital of every commercial bank, national and State, engaged in interstate commerce shall be required to be equal to at least 12 per cent of its deposits, and that acceptance of deposits beyond this proportion shall be forbidden except upon a proportionate increase of capital.

Second. That within five years the reserve of such banks shall be required to be equal to at least 12 per cent of the deposits, except in reserve cities, where it shall equal 15 per cent.

Third. That of such reserve held by country banks, one-third may be deposited in reserve city banks and in central reserve city banks.

Fourth. That of such reserve one-third shall be deposited in the State reserve associations hereafter referred to.

Fifth. That there shall be organized in every State a State reserve association, in which the membership of all commercial banks, both national and State, shall be compulsory, as a condition of the continued existence of the national banks and of the privilege of continuing in interstate commerce as to the State banks.

Sixth. That each member bank shall deposit and forever maintain in such State reserve association at least one-third of its cash reserve. Such State reserve association shall have powers of supervision and regulation of its member banks, and also the power of rediscount of commercial paper guaranteed by the member bank, the reserve of such member bank to stand as additional security for its guaranty.

Seventh. That a Federal reserve association at Washington shall be organized, whose members shall be the State reserve associations; that each of such member associations shall deposit and forever maintain in the Federal reserve association one-third of the reserves deposited with it by the member banks; that such system shall also provide for the deposit in such Federal reserve association of Government funds and also for the issue to it of Federal reserve notes.

Eighth. That power be given to such Federal reserve association to rediscount indorsed commercial paper held by any State reserve association and indorsed by it, and to use therefor the cash deposited by the member associations, the Government funds deposited with it, and the Federal reserve notes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum. There are very few Senators here, and I think they ought to be present before the Senator proceeds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Owen	Smoot
Bacon	Hollis	Page	Sterling
Bankhead	Hughes	Pittman	Stone
Bradley	James	Poin Dexter	Sutherland
Brady	Johnson	Reed	Thomas
Bristow	Kenyon	Root	Thompson
Bryan	Kern	Saulsbury	Thornton
Burleigh	Lane	Shafroth	Tillman
Burton	Lewis	Sheppard	Townsend
Chamberlain	Lippitt	Shields	Vardaman
Chilton	McCumber	Shively	Walsh
Clark, Wyo.	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Warren
Cummins	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Dillingham	Newlands	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Md.	Works
Goff	Overman	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on account of public business. I also desire to announce that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is unavoidably absent from the city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Nevada will proceed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I regard it as a matter of congratulation that the banking and currency measure is in its present situation before the Congress of the United States, for I believe that as a result of the work done by the other House and by the two sections of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, and as the result of the thorough deliberation which will be had in the Senate of the United States, we shall have a splendid law, which will meet the economic, industrial, and financial requirements of the country. I deem it also a matter of congratulation that the minority party in the Senate, which, as we all know, has been an adherent of the central-bank system, realizing that contention for that system is useless, has determined not to insist upon its contention here, but to collaborate with the majority party in the perfection of a regional system of banking, which seems to be the only practicable method of banking reform.

NO INTENTION TO OPPOSE PENDING BILL.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, my purpose is not to oppose, but simply to modify, the pending bill, to extend the regional system therein provided so as to secure a regional reserve association in every State, and to unite these State reserve associations in a Federal association at Washington, with a view to strengthening them all in the bonds of union and securing to the weaker associations the supporting strength of the stronger associations through this federation. The plan which I urge involves all the advantages of the regional system and enlarges them. It also involves in this beneficent work the concentration of the banking power of the Nation itself, which is one good feature of the central system.

Mr. President, we find that in this country we have a larger banking capital per capita than has any other country in the world; that we have a larger per capita circulation than any civilized country except France; and that the banking power of the Nation as such is greater proportionately than is that of any other country. We are not deficient in banking capital; we are not deficient in surplus; we are not deficient in reserves; but we are deficient in the methods that keep money, which is the lifeblood of commerce, in circulation, so running as to avoid at any point the congestion that leads to stagnation. The purpose of this legislation is to promote and accelerate that circulation, not to inflate the existing volume of capital employed in banks or the existing volume of money, but to make the existing money current through the arteries of commerce.

In order to make the money current in the arteries of commerce, it is essential that we should avoid these constantly recurring panics and stringencies, either local or State wide or interstate and national, the effect of which is to lock up trade, to arrest commercial transactions, to injure the debtor, and to gradually turn over the accumulations of enterprise to the lenders of money. In order to make money current, it is essential that our banking system should be as evenly proportioned as possible. The difficulty with us is that we have two banking systems, one National and the other State, the capital and surplus employed in the national banking system being about equal to that employed in the State banking system—nearly $2,000,000,000 in each. We find that in the national banking system there are only about 7,000 commercial banks, and in the State banking system there are nearly 20,000 commercial banks.

Why is it that the majority of people bent upon bank organization go to the State laws for their charters? The reason is that there is less restriction in those laws. Every man engaging in business desires to do so with as free a hand as possible, and the very restrictions and restraints in the national banking act intended to protect the people against bank panics and stringencies and inflations and contractions tend to make that system less resorted to than is the State bank system, which has not these restraints and retractions. So we find the majority of commercial banks organized under State laws, varying as to efficient control and regulation, and the minority only, though equal to the State banks in capitalization and surplus, organized under national law.

HARMONY BETWEEN STATE AND NATIONAL BANKS.

Our very first effort, it seems to me, should bring about some harmony of proportion between the State and the National banks and to strengthen the individual banks of both systems by the same cautionary requirements if we can accomplish the latter under the exercise of any grant of national power. I take it that the power of the Nation is ample; that the power of the Nation over interstate commerce enables it to take hold of a State bank engaged in interstate exchange, just as it takes hold of a State railroad engaged in interstate transportation, and to regulate it and control it with reference to safety and the protection of the business world; and that just as we apply safety devices under national law to purely State corporations engaged in interstate transportation, we can apply safety devices to purely State banks engaged in interstate commerce.

Here let me say that interstate exchange is just as essentially a part of interstate commerce as are interstate transportation and interstate trade; that in every transaction of national importance either interstate trade or interstate transportation or interstate exchange is resorted to, and that the State bank engaged in interstate exchange is just as much a national instrumentality for the purpose of engaging in interstate commerce as a purely State railroad that is engaged in interstate transportation is an instrumentality of the Nation for interstate commerce. So that the power exists.

Now, how shall we exercise that power, and what is the fact? The fact is that the national banks are compelled by law to keep on an average 17 per cent of their deposits in cash, the country banks keeping 15 per cent, and the reserve city banks keeping 25 per cent, an average of 17 per cent, while the statistics show that the State banks, under the varying laws of the States, keep on an average only 7½ per cent of reserves. Why this difference? Which is the correct standard? Is the national requirement too high or is the State requirement too low?

In the consideration of the question of reserves our Committee on Banking and Currency has seen fit to report in favor of a reduction of the reserve provided for by the national banking act, requiring only 12 per cent in the place of the 15 per cent required of the country banks and 15 per cent in place of the 25 per cent required of the reserve city banks. They have doubtless recommended this because of the superior perfection of the reserve system created by the proposed law; and realizing that the reserves can be made more effective by unionizing them and consolidating them under the proposals of the pending bill, they have concluded that it would be wise not to exact so great a percentage as heretofore. The percentage which they do exact in the pending measure is an average of about 13½ per cent, whilst the average per cent of reserves in the State banks to-day, according to the statistics, is only 7½ per cent.

It seems to me perfectly obvious that if we are to act on this subject in a proper and comprehensive way, regarding all banks, whether National or State, as national instrumentalities so far as interstate commerce is concerned, we should require the same reserve of the State banks as is required of the national banks; and, with that view, the resolution which I have offered provides:

That within five years the reserve of such banks—

That is, the State banks—

shall be required to be equal to at least 12 per cent of the deposits, except in reserve cities, where it shall equal 15 per cent.

What is another element of strength to the banks? It is the capital and the surplus, the latter, of course, constituting capital. The capital is the protection which the depositor has. The depositors' money is mainly invested in commercial paper, with the exception of the percentage which the bank is compelled to keep on hand to meet the current checks of the depositors under the reserve system. Obviously, if a bank had no capital, the only security for the depositors would be the investments made by the bank of the depositors' money. The larger the capital, therefore, the larger the margin of protection to the depositors.

RELATION OF CAPITAL TO DEPOSITS.

Singularly enough, in our national banking act we have prescribed no relation whatever between the capital of a bank and its obligations to its depositors. Under the national-bank system a bank with only $50,000 capital can accept $5,000,000 in deposits, and, obviously, $50,000 of capital would not be a margin of protection such as the law should contemplate. There ought to be a proportion between the capital and the deposit obligations, and no bank should be permitted to accept deposits in excess of eight times its capital, so that there would be $1 of capital on hand for every $8 of deposits.

With reference to this, I have suggested in the first paragraph of my resolution that the pending bill should be modified in the following words:

That within five years the capital of every commercial bank, National and State, engaged in interstate commerce shall be required to be equal to at least 12 per cent of its deposits, and that acceptance of deposits beyond this proportion shall be forbidden except upon a proportionate increase of capital.

It will be observed that I have given five years within which to make these readjustments, because I think time is required. Radical readjustments in any part of our system, whether they involve the tariff, our industrial system, or our financial system, should be avoided. Time always should be given for progressive reform. I should expect this reform to be accomplished under the direction of the reserve board called for by the bill, and I should expect the power to be exercised with great wisdom and discretion, both as to the capital and as to the reserve.

We all know that the Interstate Commerce Commission was given that power with reference to safety devices; and it has been its custom to accommodate the requirement to the condition of the various transportation companies, requiring the adoption of such devices immediately in some cases, in others requiring it within a certain period, and oftentimes giving an extension of time, where any good reason was shown.

I believe that these are the only two changes necessary with reference to State banks, and that when we accomplish them we shall put the State banks upon a par with the national banks so far as security to business and to depositors is concerned.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. Referring to the matter of proportion between capital and deposits, I want to say to the Senator that I had occasion yesterday to look up the report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1903, and I found that of the 48 national banks in Vermont 30 had more than half as much capital as they had deposits.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That, let me say, is a very extraordinary proportion, and it arises from the character of their business. Most banks make money out of their deposits. The banks in the section where the Senator lives make most of their money, or a large portion of it, out of their capital. They resort to that because of the insufficient volume of their deposits to make the business a paying one. Then, besides, the capital of the banks in the section which the Senator represents is largely invested in the commercial paper of other States, so that the banks in the Senator's section not only finance the region immediately around them, but help in financing other States. They have that fortunate position because of large accumulations of capital, created during many years of effort; whilst in the western regions the banks have not this accumulation of capital, and there the effort is to do business on as small a proportion of capital to deposits as it is possible to maintain.

UNIONIZING OF BANKS FOR MUTUAL PROTECTION.

Having perfected the State bank system under national law so as to put it on a par with the national bank system, the next question is, How shall all these banks be unionized with a view to preventing bank panics and bank stringencies? The disastrous effects of such conditions upon general commerce we all realize, creating as they do not only breaks in local exchange, but breaks in interstate and international exchange, both of products and of money.

It seems to me our political system is the most perfect that could be devised for this vast continent, embracing so wide an area, because it secures to us all the advantages of local self-government and also the advantages of union. We have here a Government of 48 sovereign States, each one of the States being limited in area, of course, as compared with the area of the United States, though they vary in their proportions to each other, many of them of very small population, many of them of very large population, many of them bound in the future to rival the great countries of Europe, both in population and in wealth. Under our dual system, with the local sovereignty of the State, we create a local public opinion effective in government, in industry, in commerce, and in social life. Then we unionize these sovereignties through the creation of the Government of the United States, which acts for all under the granted powers in matters in which it is important that we should act nationally or with a view to interstate or foreign relations.

The political unit is the State. The United States is an aggregation of such political units. I do not see why in our business and in our commerce and in our laws we should not recognize the boundaries of a State just as we do in government. Every one of these States has its laws relating to industry, to commerce, to banking, and to social organization. Therefore, the natural unit is the State, and not the regions contemplated by this bill, any one of which may embrace not only many States but parts of many States.

The people of the United States have become accustomed to think by States and to think nationally. It seems to me a great mistake to divert them from that line of thought by the creation of regions unknown to our system of government, newly created, and varying from time to time in their boundaries according to the judgment of the reserve board.

We find that the States have been acting as units not only in government but in every form of organization. There is hardly any form of organization—charitable, beneficial, commercial, manufacturing, benevolent—that does not contemplate first the organization of a State unit and then the union of the State units in a national organization. That is true of the various professional organizations, the bar associations, the medical societies, the architectural associations, the art associations, the musical associations, and it is true of the boards of trade. They first unite within a State and then unite nationally by the union of the State boards of trade.

The suggestion which I make, that we should regard as the basic unit the State rather than a newly created region, simply follows the accustomed lines of thought and of organization throughout the United States. I believe it is well to encourage that idea. I believe that every State should have a robust individuality; that it should have its own bank system and its own commercial system; and that every State should have what may be termed a financial center. It is essential to the completion of any civic organization.

OBJECTIONS TO REGIONAL RESERVE ASSOCIATIONS.

One of the complaints I have to make of the system of regional organization called for by the pending bill is that it draws the attention of the people away from the problems of the individual State and draws their attention to the affairs of a region of indeterminate area, changing in its boundaries from time to time. The danger will be that they will not think in terms of regions at all; that they will become inert regarding the important problems that relate to the very life of the community; and that the regional organization will practically escape the observation of the people who live in the region, and, above all, will escape the effect of public opinion, which, in my judgment, is best organized by States and then nationalized by a union of the States.

Mr. President, the plan which I have suggested involves the organization in every State of a State reserve association, of which the member banks shall be not only the national banks in that State, but the State banks that are engaged in interstate commerce. As a matter of fact, all State commercial banks, all so engaged, for no bank could prosper that did not engage in interstate exchange. It would have little patronage, because it could not meet the requirements of commercial communities.

In that respect the plan I present differs from that presented by the committee. They make membership in the regional organization compulsory upon the part of the national banks. They make it permissive regarding the State banks. The plan I suggest makes it compulsory with both; for it is impossible to have a system of banking when one half is good and one half is bad, one half is strong and the other half weak, for the weakness of the weaker half will detract from the strength of the stronger half. You may make the national-bank system of this country perfect itself; yet if the State-bank system continues weak, the national system itself will be weakened by that fact. A panic which starts in a weak State bank to-morrow may involve not only State but national banks. Panics are unreasoning.

Therefore it is important that all the banks of the country that are engaged in interstate commerce shall be compelled to come inside of and be members of these reserve associations. That power can be exercised under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution; for so far as a State bank engages in interstate commerce it is an instrumentality of interstate commerce, and as such is subject to regulation by the National Government.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. What would the Senator do with the mutual savings banks which have no capital? By far the largest banks in my State are what we term mutual savings banks, which have no capital whatever. Would the Senator compel them to subscribe to stock in this organization?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The plan which I present does not involve stock subscription or capital requirements. The Senator has lost sight of the fact that my remarks apply only to commercial banks and not to savings banks or purely investment banks. We are engaged in a regulation of commerce between the States. There are two classes of banks which engage in such commerce—one State banks and the other national banks. My belief is that if it is wise and just that all the national banks should be unionized for the protection of the community and the banks themselves against bank panics and stringencies, that it is just as important that the State banks should be similarly unionized; and I believe we have the power to accomplish this under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution.

We provide in this bill that where a national bank refuses to come into such a union it shall within some fixed period lose its charter and go out of business. Yet we say to the 17,000 or more State banks, doing half the commercial business of the country, both local and interstate, and having a capitalization as large as that of the national banks, "This is permissive; you are permitted to come in; but there is no compulsion." Of course we may make the features of this bill so attractive that it will coax the State banks in; and if we do not resort to the compulsory process, I favor making the provisions of the bill so attractive as to coax them in, simply because I do not believe the system can be effective unless it embraces the union of all the banks engaged in commerce in the country.

FUNCTIONS OF STATE RESERVE ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. President, what ought a State reserve association to do? To make money? No; I do not think so. Its function is to unionize the member banks in such a way as to make them efficient instrumentalities of commerce and to protect the country from panics and stringencies. There is no need of such an organization having any capital. How will it operate? My answer is that you can require by law the member banks, as is compelled under the system of the pending bill, to deposit with the reserve association in each State one-third of the cash reserves required by law to be kept by them. That will constitute the banking capital of the State reserve association. What will it amount to? We find by the statistics that the reserves of all the banks, national and State, amount to a billion and a half of dollars. One-third of a billion and a half dollars would be $500,000,000. That would go into the treasury of these State associations, and divided equally among all the 48 States it would make over $10,000,000 to each. Of course, it would only go proportionately, but the aggregate would be $500,000,000 gathered into these State reserve associations. Another third of the reserves required of the banks could be kept within their own vaults, to respond to the checks of their creditors, and the remaining third of the reserves of the country banks could be kept, as is now the fact, by the individual banks in the great reserve cities, to be used there for purposes of exchange and as a basis of credit. So under this system of reserves required of these banks, whether 12 or 15 per cent, we would have one billion dollars of cash in the vaults of the banks themselves, both country and reserve city banks, and $500,000,000 in the various State reserve associations.

But the objection is made that with reference to the smaller States the amount of reserves would be very inconsiderable in the State reserve association. My answer to that is that the amount of the reserves deposited in the State reserve association in a small State would bear the same proportion to the banking capital and reserves and to the commerce of that State that the amount of the reserves deposited in the State reserve association of a large State does to the banking capital and the deposits and the commerce generally of such State, and that proportionately the deposit in a small State in a reserve association would be as large as in the larger States.

Now, what will this money be used for, you will ask, that is in the hands of the reserve associations organized under this bill, with a board of directors selected as provided for in the bill, one-third from the stockholders, one-third from the commercial community at large, and one-third appointed by the Government? What use would you make of that money? Whenever in a single community in that State there is a panic or a stringency this State reserve association organization could rediscount the commercial paper held by an endangered bank upon its indorsement, and it would hold as security for its advances not only the rediscounted paper indorsed by the individual bank, but also the cash reserve deposited by that bank with the State reserve association. So it would be impossible for it in the exercise of ordinary caution to lose anything. It would have not only the rediscounted paper and the cash reserve deposited with it as security, but it would also have the guaranty of the individual bank and the capital and surplus of that bank backing that guaranty.

The effect of this would be that in every State there would hardly be a single stringency or panic that would assume even State-wide proportions, and the system would have the advantage of a municipal system of fire protection, which keeps fire apparatus near to the point of conflagration and puts out the fire before it has had a chance to spread.

I believe, Mr. President, that under this method few local panics or stringencies would get beyond local bounds. But as it is possible that that might be the case, the plan which I present provides also for the organization of a Federal reserve board at Washington, the membership of which is to be composed not of individual banks but of these various State reserve associations, 48 in number, with the obligation upon the part of each State reserve association to deposit in this Federal reserve association one-third of the reserves that have been deposited with it by the member banks.

The effect of this would be that inasmuch as all the State reserve associations under this system would have one-third of the total cash reserves of all the banks held by them, which one-third would aggregate $500,000,000, they would be compelled to turn over to the Federal reserve association one-third of that, or $166,000,000; so we would have one gigantic Federal organization at Washington, with reserves in its vaults aggregating $166,000,000. That fund would enable such reserve association to take hold of any panic or stringency that assumed large proportions in any individual State or in any section, or that assumed interstate or national proportions, and through a system of rediscount of the commercial paper held by the State reserve association as the result of a previous rediscount of commercial paper held by the individual banks could furnish it with the additional money necessary to check the panic or stringency.

The Federal organization at Washington would mainly deal with the State reserve associations of the several States, taking over the rediscounted paper that had been taken up by those organizations from the member banks and giving them cash with which to furnish the money necessary for additional loans to guard against a stringency, or with the additional money necessary to pay the depositors and relieve their fears and arrest the panic.

This Federal reserve association at Washington would not only have the $166,000,000, but under the provisions of the plan which I suggest it would have the deposit of Government funds, aggregating $300,000,000, and it would have also the power to receive these Federal reserve notes, which it could use in rediscounting commercial paper anywhere throughout the country. The resources, therefore, of this Federal reserve system at Washington would be enormous, and yet all of it acquired, recollect, without the contribution of capital by any member State association or bank.

CAPITAL FOR REGIONAL BANKS.

One of the things that the banks object to in this bill is the fact that they are called upon to furnish the capital of these various regional banks. The country banks look upon it as a diversion of capital which can be employed locally to a banking organization five or six hundred, perhaps a thousand, miles away. They regard it as a hardship, and they protest against it. I would not have a moment's hesitation in insisting upon that capital being provided if it were at all necessary, but I insist that it is not necessary. The banking capital of this country surpasses that of any other country in the world in volume and in proportion to population. The difficulty has not been one of banking capital. The difficulty has always been one of the fluidity of our circulating medium. There is no reason why this State reserve association or the Federal reserve association at Washington should call for any increase of banking capital. On the contrary, they will be put to it to find ways in which to invest it, and we are likely to turn them into organizations for investment and speculation and inflation instead of keeping them to their legitimate function, which is that of preventing panics and stringencies by furnishing the actual cash that is required at the point of attack, and so mobilizing the cash reserves of the country as to make them effective at the point of attack.

The sections of the resolution to which I have referred are the following:

Sixth. That each member bank shall deposit and forever maintain in such State reserve association at least one-third of its cash reserve. Such State reserve association shall have powers of supervision and regulation of its member banks, and also the power of rediscount of commercial paper guaranteed by the member bank, the reserve of such member bank to stand as additional security for its guaranty.

Seventh. That a Federal reserve association at Washington shall be organized, whose members shall be the State reserve associations; that each of such member associations shall deposit and forever maintain in the Federal reserve association one-third of the reserves deposited with it by the member banks; that such system shall also provide for the deposit in such Federal reserve association of Government funds and also for the issue to it of Federal reserve notes.

Eighth. That power be given to such Federal reserve association to rediscount indorsed commercial paper held by any State reserve association and indorsed by it, and to use therefor the cash deposited by the member associations, the Government funds deposited with it, and the Federal reserve notes.

The Federal reserve association for its advances, recollect, will have the security of the notes which have been rediscounted by the State reserve associations, which notes have also been indorsed by the member banks, so that its security will be the indorsement of the member banks, the indorsement of the State reserve association, the capital of the member banks of the State associations, and the cash reserves deposited by the State reserve associations with the Federal reserve association.

It is hardly possible to conceive how under such a system there could be any risk whatever. Now, suppose we should conclude that, with a view to further security, it is necessary for these associations, both the State associations and the Federal associations, to have capital, what would they do with that capital? The only way that it could be employed would be by competition with the member banks in the ordinary commercial transactions of discounting domestic commercial paper and of foreign exchange.

I think all that business belongs to the member banks, and I believe that they can better attend to it than the national organizations which it is proposed to create by this bill, and that we will only involve those associations in confusion and annoyance by turning over to them a large capital to administer.

IMPORTANCE OF EARLY ACTION.

Mr. President, it is of the highest importance, in my judgment, that we should act quickly upon this matter. We are passing through a readjustment under the tariff legislation that has been passed. That readjustment involves an average reduction in our duties of from 43 per cent to 25 per cent, a reduction of over 15 per cent. The theory of the Democratic Party has been that our domestic producers of protected articles have uniformly added to their price the duty, thus making the price of a protected article whose normal price would be $1, $1 plus the duty of 43 cents, or $1.43. That has been the contention of the Democratic Party. If that is true, then, when we reduce that 43 cents to 25 cents it means that every domestic producer of dutiable articles has to charge on an average $1.25 for the article for which he formerly received $1.43. If that is true, it is a very enormous reduction. It is such an amount as would fairly constitute the entire profit of a manufacturer and more than the entire profit, for I imagine the average profit of the manufacturer is not more than 10 or 12 per cent.

Our manufacturers have shared that increased price caused by the duty with their laborers. Hence we find labor at a higher standard in this country than in any other country. The manufacturers now must either take that entire loss, that entire reduction from $1.43 to $1.25, or share it with their laborers. If they attempt the latter it means strikes and lockouts and economic readjustments. If they seek to impose none of it upon labor, it means the entire loss of this reduction by themselves and, of course, makes them eager to establish such efficient methods as will cheapen the cost of production. Doubtless the effect of our protective system has been to make our production wasteful instead of economical, and it is highly desirable that our manufacturers and producers throughout the country should be encouraged in every effort that leads to efficiency.

In order to accomplish this, a perfect banking system is essential; and it is most unfortunate, just at the time when these great producers and manufacturers are called upon to apply all their intellect and all their energies to more efficient methods of production with a view to diminishing its cost, that the financial facilities of the country should be so tied up as to deny them the credit that is essential to that operation.

We know that the financial system of the country is tied up in a greater or lesser degree, not because the banks lack capital, not because the banks lack cash, but simply because they are uncertain, and some people either too timid or too designing have created a sentiment, not of alarm but of caution throughout the entire country, which is gradually contracting the credit facilities of the banks. So far as I am concerned I do not believe that there is any deeply designed purpose to tie up the finances of the country with a view to impressing legislation. I believe that the action of the banks is due to caution bred of experience. The banks which passed through the panic of 1907 have realized that a psychological condition can produce a run upon the banks, and inasmuch as, under the present system, they have no method of unionizing banks for protection and defense, each bank is endeavoring to raise its own fortifications and to strengthen its defenses, and it deems it wise for that reason to hold within its vaults as large a reserve as possible.

The banks of the country have never been in a stronger position than they are to-day so far as their cash reserves are concerned, but they are cautious and timid and are not letting out the money as freely as they have been accustomed to doing, either to those engaged in production or in commerce. It is of the highest importance, therefore, intent as we are upon producing a system that will unionize these banks for mutual protection and defense, that we should do it now. The time which has thus far been expended has not been lost. It has produced what I regard as a patriotic surrender on the part of the minority party of their theory regarding the central-bank system, and that party, instead of organizing itself in strong and protracted opposition to a system which they believe will not be as efficacious as a central-bank system, recognizing the ultimate futility of such a struggle, has patriotically surrendered, we may say, practically its conviction upon that subject and is now joining with us under the regional system with a view to perfecting it. The only differences now that exist are as to the number of regional banks, one section of the committee insisting upon four, the other section insisting upon eight, and the President insisting upon not less than twelve, with power of expansion.

So far as I am concerned, I stand for 48 regional banks, each one bounded by State lines, and I stand for a system, not covered by this bill, of unionizing every one of those State reserve associations into a Federal organization at Washington, which can mass all their resources and all their powers to meet dangers that are interstate or national in proportion.

It ought not to take us long to determine as to what the number of banks shall be. The other details of the bill can be easily adjusted when that question is determined, and I am in favor of determining that basic question by an early vote in the Senate or in party conference. I believe that the party has a certain responsibility with reference to this measure and that where we differ it is of the highest importance that we should determine upon some one basic plan. Whether that basic plan be one involving 4 banks or 8 banks or 48 banks, with the Federal reserve association at Washington added, giving it strength and security, I shall be glad to unite with the majority in speedy and effective legislation upon this subject.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I desire to invite his attention to the fifth subdivision of his resolution for the purpose of asking a question in relation to it. The fifth subdivision provides:

That there shall be organized in every State a State reserve association, in which the membership of all commercial banks, both National and State, shall be compulsory, as a condition of the continued existence of the national banks and of the privilege of continuing in interstate commerce as to the State banks.

I gather from the remarks of the Senator that his plan would be to prohibit the State banks, if they declined to come into the proposed system, from engaging in the transmission of money from one State to another.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the view of the Senator that such a power rests in the National Government?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think it does as a regulation of interstate commerce.

Mr. WALSH. I call the Senator's attention to Willoughby on the Constitution, section 293, as follows:

In Nathan against Louisiana—

I will say that the case of Nathan against Louisiana is reported in Eighth Howard, Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, page 73—

In Nathan against Louisiana the court lay down the doctrine that the buying and selling of foreign bills of exchange, while to be sure an aid to, and an instrument of, commerce, is not itself commerce. "The individual," says the court, "who uses his money and credit in buying and selling bills of exchange and who thereby realizes a profit * * * is not engaged in commerce, but in supplying an instrument of commerce. He is less connected with it than the shipbuilder, without whose labor foreign commerce could not be carried on." And also: "A bill of exchange is neither an export nor an import. It is not transmitted through the ordinary channels of commerce, but through the mail."

I do not desire to detain the Senator with a discussion of the subject now, but if the conclusion should be reached that it would be impossible to force the State banks into the general system, would he still hold to the view that there should be 48 banks, being a union simply of the national banks in each State?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would. Let me say with reference to that decision that I am familiar with it. It is a decision rendered a very long time ago, in 1850, I believe, upon a subject of taxation, as to whether a State had the power to tax the occupation of a broker who was engaged in selling foreign bills of exchange; and in that connection the court upheld the power to tax and gave the reason which the Senator has read. That reasoning is not, in my judgment, satisfactory, and will not, in my judgment, be adhered to. There has been since that time a vast advancement in the views of the courts regarding the powers of the Federal Government under the interstate-commerce power. We find that they have held that a whisper over a telephone between two States is interstate commerce; they have held that a message sent over a telegraph wire between two States is interstate commerce; and those decisions indicate a gradual enlargement of the views of the courts themselves as to the magnitude of the power of the National Government over interstate commerce.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to say, for the information of the Senator, if he will pardon a further interruption, that the Supreme Court now has before it again the consideration of the question as to whether insurance might justly be regarded as interstate commerce, and in the course of a week a further announcement is expected from that court on the subject.

SCOPE OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; but whatever may be the decision upon that case, I would not believe that it would be extended to this. Logically I can not see how interstate commerce can be conducted without embracing three things—interstate transportation, interstate trade, and interstate exchange. Transportation we have seized hold of in the most effective way, and the courts have been most liberal in their declaration of the Federal powers regarding transportation. Under it we seize hold of a State corporation whose railroad is entirely within the boundaries of the State, and we regulate it as an instrumentality of interstate commerce, because it carries passengers who have an interstate destination or because it carries freight that is ultimately destined for a point in another State. I can recall the time when every inch of ground with reference to that exercise of power was contested by the railroads and opposing views maintained by a large number of lawyers, yet those views have all yielded to the advance of the court's decisions.

I have been urging for years an interstate trade commission with a view to regulating the great corporations that are engaged in interstate trade, just as the railroads are engaged in interstate transportation. I can recall the time when Members of this body and Members of the other body would protest against such legislation as involving usurpation of the rights of the States, and yet now it seems to be generally admitted that that power can be exercised. So it is with interstate exchange and with all the various methods that the banks pursue with a view to supplementing transportation and trade by giving the facilities in the actual transport either of the money or of the credits necessary to satisfy the requirements of commerce. So, logically, I can not see how the courts can resist a regulation of a bank engaged in interstate exchange any more than it has resisted the regulation of corporations engaged in interstate transportation or in interstate trade.

I ask permission to add to my remarks some quotations and a statistical table, with explanation, furnished to me by the courtesy of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Williams. The table includes savings banks, which I should prefer to exclude, as they are not commercial banks, and does not show the cash reserves of the banks, which I would wish to include. Later on I shall present a table modified in these particulars, but there is so much desirable information in this table that I desire to have it printed now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to follows:

[NOTE.—Columns A, B, and C relate to National, State, mutual and stock savings, and private banks, and loan and trust companies in the United States and is from the Comptroller of the Currency for 1912. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that his resolution is still pending. What disposition would he like to have made of it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to have it referred to the Banking and Currency Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO SATURDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next at 2 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Saturday, November 29, 1913, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, November 26, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Spirit, Father soul, to whom we are indebted for all that we are and all we can hope to be, we rejoice that our destiny is involved in infinite wisdom, power, and goodness. "The soul lives only as it touches eternal life," hence we worship Thee, we praise Thee, and would hallow Thy name in the common daily duties of life. "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord." We thank Thee that in accordance with a long-established custom our people will assemble on the morrow at their homes, in their places of worship, and pour out their hearts in thanksgiving and praise for the preservation of our lives, our homes, our Republic, with its abundant harvests and continued prosperity, in peace and good will to all mankind, that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, November 22, 1913, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker has before him the credentials of Mr. CHARLES P. COADY, a Member elect from the State of Maryland, to succeed the late Representative KONIG. They are properly signed and certified by the State authorities. If Mr. COADY will present himself, the Chair will administer the oath of office.

Mr. COADY appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

ARCHIE LEWIS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes with reference to a tribute recently paid by the Supreme Court of the United States to one of its deceased employees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me appropriate to lay before the House and insert in the RECORD the following statements taken from Washington newspapers, showing the tribute paid by the Supreme Court of the United States to the memory and services of a deceased employee of that court. The Chief Justice and the Associate Justices and the officers of the Supreme Court in thus honoring Archie Lewis honored themselves, and he who performs his duty well in whatever station of life is an honor to us all.

[From the Washington Post November 23, 1913.]

FIVE JUSTICES AT HIS BIER—SUPREME COURT PAYS UNUSUAL TRIBUTE TO VETERAN NEGRO EMPLOYEE—ARCHIE LEWIS NEVER FAILED IN DUTY IN ALL HIS 64 YEARS AS A MESSENGER.

As a last tribute to a faithful servant five members of the United States Supreme Court, including Chief Justice White, crowded into the humble home of Archie Lewis, the court's negro messenger, yesterday and were present during the funeral services over the aged man. Lewis, who had been an employee of the court for almost 64 years, had always been true to his duty, and all of the justices were fond of him. The funeral was held from his small home on M Street, near New Jersey Avenue.

"He was a man of great character," said Justice Willis Van Devanter. "He had a wonderful disposition, and endeared himself to my associates and myself. He worked up to a few days ago, and died rather suddenly Wednesday."

The justices who attended the funeral were Chief Justice Edward Douglass White, Justices Willis Van Devanter, Joseph Lamar, William R. Day, and Oliver Wendell Holmes.

[From Washington Star, November 23, 1913.]

MEMBERS OF SUPREME BODY AT FUNERAL OF ARCHIE LEWIS, MESSENGER.

Chief Justice White and four of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States yesterday afternoon crowded into a humble little home in this city to pay final honors to Archie Lewis, who for 64 years served as the messenger in charge of the robing room of the court. Lewis died at his home, 426 M Street NW., Thursday, and it was there that the funeral services were conducted yesterday.

OTHERS PAY TRIBUTE.

Besides the five members of the Supreme Court there were present Maj. Wright, marshal of the court; James Maher, chief clerk; Charles Bell, assistant clerk; and Frank K. Green, crier of the court, and a number of other public officials, some of them from the public schools, in which Archie Lewis had been much interested for many years.

The funeral service was conducted by Rev. W. V. Tunnel. Music was given by a quartet. Many beautiful flowers decorated the house.

Lewis, who came to Washington from Virginia as a freedman, and who first obtained his place with the Supreme Court in 1849, was held in high esteem by all the members of the court and its officials. He was a man of high character and exemplary habits, and was faithful in the performance of his duties.

HIS LONG SERVICE.

When Archie Lewis first entered upon his work for the members of the Supreme Court, Chief Justice Taney presided over that tribunal. He was serving the court when three of the justices who attended his funeral yesterday were born—Justices Day, Van Devanter, and Lamar. Chief Justice White and Justice Holmes, the fifth member of the court attending the funeral, had not yet started to school when Lewis began his duties in the Supreme Court.

Lewis was born in 1831, and was 82 years old at the time of his death. He claimed to have served two-thirds of all the men who have occupied the Supreme Bench, and he had a fund of anecdotes about the celebrated men he had known.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—JOHN M. STEWART.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. Woods to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John M. Stewart. Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE TRINITY OF EVILS.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. WILLIAM H. MURRAY, of Oklahoma, at Columbus, Ohio, November 13, 1913, on the subject of the "Trinity of Evils."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the document named. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMERCE ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by Hon. Harvey D. Goulder, of Cleveland, Ohio, upon the subject of commerce on the Great Lakes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL SATURDAY.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to introduce a resolution which I have here.

The SPEAKER. Is it a privileged resolution?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to offer a resolution.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. I would like to know before the resolution is read what it is about.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is in reference to the high cost of living, a very vital and interesting subject at this time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, let us have the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Democratic Party in a platform adopted at Baltimore convention July, 1912, charged explicitly that the "excessive prices" and high cost of living resulted in a large measure from the protective tariff law enacted and maintained by the Republican Party; and

Whereas the Attorney General of the United States has announced his intention to investigate the present high cost of living and the combination of dealers in foodstuffs and cold-storage operators, notwithstanding the fact that the Underwood-Wilson tariff law is now in force; and

Whereas such action by the Attorney General is a virtual admission that the high cost of living in the United States did not result from the tariff laws enacted by the Republican Party: Be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House be authorized to appoint a special committee of 10 Members to investigate the reasons for the palpable failure of the Underwood-Wilson tariff law to fulfill the promise of the Democratic Party and reduce the cost of living, and to extend an apology to the Republican Party and to the American people whose votes established President Wilson's so-called new freedom.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say to my friend from Tennessee that there are so many absolutely inaccurate statements, so many misstatements of fact, contained in the whereas clauses of the resolution, that the House could not be expected to adopt any such peculiar resolution as this, even after an investigation by a committee, should the House desire to conduct such an investigation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in the interest of truth I object to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS SIGNATURE.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented to the President of the United States for his signature a joint resolution and bills of the following title:

H. J. Res. 139. Joint resolution to relieve destitution among the native people and residents of Alaska;

H. R. 8702. An act to authorize the county of Miami, Ind., to construct a bridge across the Wabash River in Miami County, Ind.; and

SENATE.

SATURDAY, November 29, 1913.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, the earth is full of Thy glory. Thou dost speak to us through a thousand voices. All Thy ministries are love. Thou dost appeal to the highest and best within us by a thousand providences that surround our lives. Thou art leading us to express the best we have in all the forms of activity in this life.

We seek for the light that cometh from above, for the revelation of Thy glory in the face of Jesus Christ. We pray that Thou wilt speak to us not only through the manifold ministries of grace and through the nature world about us, but touch our hearts with Thine own divine power and whisper Thy messages of grace to our listening ears.

This day may we follow God's voice and obey God's command. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, November 29, 1913.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN RANDOLPH THORNTON, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

JAMES P. CLARKE,
President pro tempore.

Mr. THORNTON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Secretary read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday last was read and approved.

BUZZARDS BAY BUOY, MASS. (S. DOC. NO. 245).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, acknowledging the receipt of Senate resolution of the 25th instant, relative to the placing of a buoy and the marking of that part of the public navigable waters of the United States in Buzzards Bay, which will become a much frequented trade route upon the opening of the Cape Cod Canal, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY (S. DOC. NO. 246).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of October 13, 1913, a report of the Board of Army Engineers, together with a report of the Geological Survey, relative to the Tuolumne, Stanislaus, Mokelumne, and Cosumnes Rivers in California.

Mr. BORAH. I understand there are exhibits and illustrations accompanying the report, and I ask that they may be printed in connection therewith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the request of the Senator from Idaho is granted. The communication and accompanying papers and illustrations will lie on the table and be printed, the bill relating to this subject having been reported.

Mr. BORAH subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate agreed to the printing of the illustrations accompanying the report from the Secretary of the Interior which was laid before the Senate this morning.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that 500 additional copies of the report be printed without the illustrations for the use of the Senate document room.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to and it was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That 500 additional copies of the communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of October 13, 1913, a report of the Board of Army Engineers, together with a report of the Geological Survey, relative to the Tuolumne, Stanislaus, Mokelumne, and Cosumnes Rivers in California, be printed without illustrations for the use of the Senate document room.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 2d day of December, 1913, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES—PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

Mr. KERN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the concurrent resolution which has just been received from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate House concurrent resolution No. 24, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 2d day of December, 1913, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. KERN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not ask for a ye-and-nay vote, but I do think a vote should be taken on agreeing to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented petitions of sundry citizens of San Francisco and Berkeley, in the State of California, and a petition of sundry citizens of De Kalb, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the city of San Francisco the right to use the waters of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of H. D. Hoover and sundry other citizens of the United States, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation granting to the city of San Francisco the right to use the waters of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURTON presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Steubenville, Ohio, remonstrating against the proposed dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a memorial signed by 95 leading citizens of the city of Keene, N. H., protesting against the so-called Hetch Hetchy bill. As the bill is on the calendar, I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS presented a petition of the Woman's Relief Corps of Indianola, Nebr., and a petition of Indianola Post, No. 154, Department of Nebraska, Grand Army of the Republic of Indianola, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation granting increase of pensions to widows of soldiers who served in the Civil War, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Sacramento, Cal., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of four new battleships and all necessary auxiliary boats, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Rotary Club of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the drainage of the western slope of the Rocky Mountains and the safeguarding of the water supply thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Waterville, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation granting flood protection to the lower Mississippi River and the reclamation of its alluvial lands, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 3487) granting a pension to Gertrude Smith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 3488) for the relief of Ernest C. Stahl; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 3489) granting an increase of pension to John F. Sacks (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3490) granting a pension to Ella Taylor (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3491) granting a pension to William W. McDaniel (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 83) authorizing preliminary examination and survey of the Willamette and Columbia Rivers from Portland to the sea; to the Committee on Commerce.

WORKS OF ART IN CAPITOL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 222), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 2,000 additional copies of Senate Document 169, entitled "Works of Art in the United States Capitol Building, Including Biographies of the Artists," be printed for the use of the folding room of the Senate.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the bill known as the Hetch Hetchy bill has been set down as the special order for Monday next. One of the most important features of the discussion will involve the question of the effect of the bill upon the water users and farmers of the San Joaquin Valley. I ask that the following telegram be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., November 27, 1913.

WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Water users and farmers earnestly protest against passage Hetch Hetchy bill. San Francisco does not need water, while every gallon is absolutely necessary for future development San Joaquin Valley. Official reports show 170,000,000 gallons daily can be developed from present sources. San Francisco enough 40 years. If additional needed, 200,000,000 daily can be obtained Eel River free from conflicting claims and delivered San Francisco for less than $30,000,000, including Snow Mountain power plant; water shortage here result failure to develop present supply. Power privilege, Tuolumne River, should be reserved for development San Joaquin Valley. Two hundred thousand acres will remain arid if storage right be given San Francisco. Valley's whole future depends on storage, as limit natural flow has been reached. Leaving for Washington to-day. Ample prepared to sustain every statement above made.

THEODORE A. BELL,

Attorney for Water Users' Association of Stanislaus County.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a letter was published some time ago and printed as a Senate document, as I remember, from Mr. Gifford Pinchot, giving the reasons why he is in favor of this bill. That letter has been circulated very generally and has caused considerable discussion and attracted a great deal of attention. Mr. R. U. Johnson, of New York, a man who has given great consideration to this subject, has written an answer to the same. I ask that it be read.

Mr. LANE. Who is the author of the letter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Robert Underwood Johnson, of New York. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

327 LEXINGTON AVENUE,
New York, November 6, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate, Washington.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have just seen the letter of September 18, 1913, addressed to Dr. Noble, of Spokane, from Mr. Gifford Pinchot, stating his attitude regarding the Hetch Hetchy bill. As this is a matter of public interest and Mr. Pinchot's letter has been published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I beg to reply to it point by point. Mr. Pinchot says:

"First. I am fully persuaded that there is no other comparable source of supply available at anything like a reasonable cost to the cities around San Francisco Bay."

Answer. The advisory board of Army engineers reports that there are several other sources of supply, any one of which would be available at a cost which, in the absence of any adequate and impartial investigation, the board estimates at $13,000,000 in favor of the Hetch Hetchy scheme. (Report, p. 50.) The board distinctly states that no thorough or complete investigation has been made of any other source except the Sacramento River. It is claimed that half a dozen other sources are available. Mr. Pinchot is here considering the "reasonable cost" to San Francisco, but that is only one side of the question. Of course San Francisco wishes to get its water as cheaply as possible and wishes the Nation to help foot the bills, but the question of reasonable cost is one that must be considered from the point of view of the Nation as well as of the city. It is being demonstrated that an overwhelming proportion of the people, including a host of conservationists, differ with Mr. Pinchot's view of what constitutes a reasonable cost to the Nation.

"Second. That the supply of surface water furnished by the Spring Valley Water Co. is adequate neither in quality nor in quantity."

Answer. Mr. Freeman, the expert for the city, in his report, page 16, says: "The present quality of the water furnished by the Spring Valley Water Co. is, I believe, thoroughly wholesome and safe." Here is a flat contradiction of Mr. Pinchot. As to quantity nobody doubts that it is desirable for San Francisco ultimately to supplement its existing supply, but this need not be done at the sacrifice of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which Mr. Pinchot in his testimony before the House committee admits is "one of the great wonders of the world." San Francisco has abundant water in the near-by Coast Range to serve it for 40 or 50 years. According to Mr. Freeman and the Army board the Hetch Hetchy plan is to provide for a time 50 years thereafter.

"Third. That the injury to the Hetch Hetchy by substituting a lake for the present swampy floor of the valley, all due allowances being made for whatever reduction in the height of the walls there may be, is altogether unimportant compared with the benefits to be derived from its use as a reservoir."

Answer. This is Mr. Pinchot's way of minimizing the immense and permanent benefits derived by the people from great natural scenery. According to John Muir the present floor of the valley is not swampy, and the beauty of the valley, all that gives it character and charm, will be destroyed by making of it a municipal water tank. Mr. Pinchot is measuring the value of our noblest scenery in dollars and cents. He has never shown any feeling for the conservation of great scenery, nor has he ever given any championship to the higher uses of such wonderlands as resorts for pleasure and repose, the inspiration of beauty and the cultivation of health. We believe the Creator's masterpieces should not be tinkered by engineers or politicians.

"Fourth. That the sanitary regulations included in the bill absolutely dispose of the plea, untenable at all times, that what San Francisco is asking for is control of half of Yosemite Park instead of merely the Hetch Hetchy reservoir."

Answer. This is very much like saying of a man that while his heart, lungs, stomach, and alimentary canal are in diseased condition, the rest of his body is in perfect health. The Tuolumne River, which runs through the Hetch Hetchy, drains a watershed that must be controlled by San Francisco if that valley is to be used as a reservoir. The bill would virtually prohibit camping within 300 feet of any stream. The watershed is a perfect network of streams, and this regulation would prevent campers from free access to the wonderful Tuolumne Cascades, which in many places are not 300 feet distant from sheer walls. With due respect to Mr. Pinchot, his argument on this point is a quibble. It would be the old story of the tent and the camel's head.

"Fifth. That much of the opposition has its root in the unwillingness of waterpower and transportation interests in and around San Francisco to see the city get possession of the large power it will develop if the grant goes through."

Answer. This statement, in my judgment, is entirely without foundation. The movement to oppose the bill, with which more than three-fourths of the members of the Sierra Club of San Francisco and many other organizations throughout the country have been connected, has had no relation whatever to such interests as Mr. Pinchot mentions. The endeavor to make this bill appear a measure to save San Francisco from a monopoly or from vicious commercial interests is without basis in fact. The president of the so-called monopoly is for the bill. In all the discussion of this question no one has yet mentioned, as far as I know, a single instance of opposition by commercial interests. Why are they not named? Even if there were such opposition it would not affect the conclusive objections to the scheme from the point of view of national policy.

"Sixth. That the public welfare will be immensely better served by the joint use of Hetch Hetchy for beauty and for utility than by depriving the future millions around San Francisco Bay of the use of a valley—a use which will not destroy its beauty—rather than by keeping it untouched for the benefit of the very small number of comparatively well-to-do to whom it will be accessible."

Answer. This is Mr. Pinchot's private opinion and contains no argument whatever. He entirely ignores the vast utility of beauty. Man does not live by bread alone. The beauty of Hetch Hetchy would be destroyed by flooding its floor and substituting an ugly dam and reservoir, and its continued use for the purpose to which it was dedicated will in no way deprive the future millions around San Francisco of water. When Mr. Pinchot speaks of keeping it untouched for the benefit of the very small number of comparatively well-to-do to whom it will be accessible, he makes an argument which would have dedicated the Yosemite Valley itself to San Francisco's use as a water supply. There was a time when the Yosemite Valley was "inaccessible." It also is being kept untouched for the benefit of a very small number of comparatively well-to-do people. Shall we make a water tank also of the Yosemite Valley? What is needed is a 9-mile road to make Hetch Hetchy easily accessible. This done, not only would one of the great wonders of the world, as Mr. Pinchot calls it, be open to the public, but the overcrowding of the Yosemite Valley by campers would be relieved by diversion to the equally feasible camping place in the Hetch Hetchy.

Mr. Pinchot says that "the intermittent æsthetic enjoyment of less than 1 per cent is being balanced against the daily comfort and welfare of 99 per cent." Apply this to the Yosemite Valley. The percentage of travel there is very small when compared with the number of residents in San Francisco. The enjoyment is intermittent and, in most persons, æsthetic. Must we, therefore, give up the Yosemite Valley? Mr. Pinchot's argument proves too much. Where is his imagination? What he should say is that the great permanent and phenomenal beauty of the Nation's national park, with all its possibilities of happiness for all the people and for the future, is being balanced against an assumed expense on the part of a city of $13,000,000 and against the fact that it is not necessary for the Nation to give up these treasures of natural scenery to the use of a municipality. It is simply absurd to say that the greatest of the three camping places in the Yosemite Park is not to be destroyed when the floor of this valley is flooded. People do not camp in 200 feet of water. To those camping places will resort an increasing number of the people of the hot and arid San Joaquin Valley. It is the potentiality of enjoyment and usefulness that makes it obligatory upon the Nation to save its as yet comparatively little used wonderlands. Nothing is more useful than beauty. Without it life is only a race for the trough. Mr. Pinchot speaks as though beauty existed only for dilettanti. In some form or other it is the lifeblood of happiness. Our countrymen are a beauty-loving people and jealously devoted to our superb scenery.

I have not said anything here of the fact that the waters that flow through the Yosemite National Park can be used without destroying the scenery by being impounded below the park for the use of the farmers of the San Joaquin Valley. This is testified to by Mr. O'Shaughnessy, city engineer of San Francisco, in a report to William H. Crocker, of San Francisco, which Francis Burton Harrison conveyed to Secretary Fisher. Mr. F. H. Newell, Chief of the Reclamation Service, told the House committee that this is feasible. Certainly if propinquity is to have any weight in this matter, the farmers of the San Joaquin Valley have a better right to the Hetch Hetchy watershed than the city of San Francisco. Senator WORKS, of California, is authority for saying that 99 per cent of these farmers are opposed to the bill. Mr. Vogelsang, one of the representatives of the city at Washington, admits that 98 per cent are in opposition.

The time has come to take the discussion of this matter out of the range of engineers' reports and into that of large public policy. I think the people of this country believe in the conservation that conserves, and that they think the conservation of natural beauty a matter of immense importance.

Mr. Pinchot is the one man chiefly responsible for this assault upon the national park system. In 1906, after San Francisco had entirely abandoned it, he revived the scheme in the following letter:

NOVEMBER 15, 1906.

MR. MARSDEN MANSON,
2010 Gough Street, San Francisco, Cal.

MY DEAR MR. MANSON: I can not, of course, attempt to forecast the action of the new Secretary of the Interior [Garfield] on the San Francisco watershed question, but my advice to you is to assume that his attitude will be favorable and to make the necessary preparations to set the case before him. I had supposed from an item in the paper that the city had definitely given up the Lake Eleanor [Yosemite Park] plan and had purchased one of the other water systems. If the possibility of a supply from the Sierras is still open, you should, I think, by all means go ahead with the idea of getting it.

Very sincerely, yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT, Forester.

Mr. Pinchot's action in this matter is of the opportunist complexion that has marked his later career. It was an endeavor to conciliate the widespread sentiment in the West of that time against "tying up" the water and timber of large sections by the conservation policy. Apparently he thought it necessary to give an object lesson in the fact that the water was to be for the use of the people, but he did not make the distinction—and here is the vital point—between the uses of the forest reserves, which are to conserve water and timber to supply the people, under proper official supervision, and the uses of the national parks, so admirably stated in the report of the Public Lands Committee of the House which recommended the creation of the Yosemite National Park in 1890. That report said: "The preservation by the Government in all its original beauty of a region like this seems to the committee to be a duty to the present and future generations. The rapid increase of population and the resulting destruction of natural objects make it incumbent upon the Government, in so far as may be, to preserve the wonders and beauties of our country from injury and destruction, in order that they may afford pleasure as well as instruction to the people."

The men who made this report (Judge Holman was one of them) were not "æsthetes," and they laid down an enlightened basis of legislation. The question of the destruction of a phenomenal health and pleasure resort of the Nation is not a mere matter of æsthetic nicety, a tweedledee and tweedledum distinction between two equally good kinds of scenery. The difference between the handiwork of the Creator and the artificial substitute by San Francisco politicians is the difference between worship and sacrilege.

Sincerely, yours,

ROBERT UNDERWOOD JOHNSON,
Chairman National Committee for the Preservation of the Yosemite National Park.

P. S.—Since the foregoing was written a conclusive judgment on this point has been announced in an article contributed to the Boston Transcript of November 19, 1913, by the foremost American authority on landscape, Mr. Frederick Law Olmsted, who has succeeded to the work and reputation of his distinguished father (of the same name) and who is the member of the National Fine Arts Commission representing landscape treatment of Government projects. Mr. Olmsted, in this thorough, careful, and candid article, after weighing all considerations impartially, comes to the conclusion that the Hetch Hetchy project would not only ruin the beauty of the valley but open the way to further destructive invasion of the national parks by false utilitarianism. Certainly on this point no one would think of comparing the opinion of Mr. Pinchot, an expert on the economic aspects of forestry, with that of Mr. Olmsted, a trained and recognized expert on everything pertaining to the conservation of landscape beauty.

HOOR OF MEETING ON MONDAY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate takes a recess today it be until Monday next at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, November 29, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art supremely wise and strong and good, our heavenly Father, by the faith which holds our course to Thee, by the hope that illumines the way, by the love that makes us one with Thee and pours itself out in self-sacrifice for the good of mankind, inspire us with high ideals, pure motives, and a sincere desire to fulfill our earthly destiny and leave behind us a record worthy of emulation, bearing with us into the great beyond a character woven into the tissues of the soul after the similitude of the Master's. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, November 26, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN MEMBERS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before that I desire to present a newly elected Member from Massachusetts to be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama withhold his resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I withhold the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PAIGE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CANTOR], Congressman elect from the twentieth district of New York, will come forward and be sworn in.

Accordingly Mr. CALVIN D. PAIGE, Member elect third Massachusetts district, and Mr. JACOB A. CANTOR, Member elect twentieth New York district, presented themselves before the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. Now Mr. LOFT, of the thirteenth New York district, will come forward.

Mr. GEORGE W. LOFT, Member elect thirteenth New York district, presented himself before the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds on examination that the credentials of Mr. LOFT are in proper form and has a protest against his being seated on a purely legal question. The Chair will have the protest read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NOVEMBER 24, 1913.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK.

Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On behalf of William J. Wilkins, a voter in the thirteenth congressional district of the State of New York, and of other voters in that district, I respectfully protest against the seating of GEORGE W. LOFT as a Member of the House of Representatives, based on his alleged election at a general election held in the State of New York and in the city of New York as Representative in Congress to fill a vacancy in that office occasioned by the death of Hon. Timothy D. Sullivan, September 1, 1913, on the ground that the said alleged special election, held at the date of said general election, is null and void, in that the executive authority of the State of New York did not issue a writ of election as provided by Article I, section 2, subsection 4, of the Constitution of the United States; and in that a proclamation purporting to conform to the said provision of Article I, section 2, subsection 4, of the Constitution of the United States, was issued and filed on the 28th day of October, 1913, one week before the date of the said special election called thereby, to be held on the date of the said general election, November 4, 1913, and that said proclamation so issued was in violation of the provisions of section 292 of the election law of the State of New York, which provided that in the event of the issuance of a proclamation by the governor of the State of New York for a special election the date of such special election to be fixed thereby must be at a day not less than 30 nor more than 40 days from the date of the said proclamation.

That it is undisputed that at the time that the purported nomination of the said GEORGE W. LOFT to fill the said vacancy was made by the congressional committee of the Democratic Party for the thirteenth congressional district on October 2, 1913, no writ of election had theretofore been issued by the governor of the State of New York and no writ issued, except as stated, on October 28, 1913.

On behalf of the protestants I desire the privilege of submitting to the proper committee of the House of Representatives precedents of the House of Representatives in similar circumstances.

I submit that it is a matter of grave concern that the provisions of the Constitution with respect to elections to fill vacancies in the office of Representative in Congress be enforced, such provision being mandatory and not permissive, and that the precedents of the House of Representatives be sustained, and to that end desire the privilege of appearing before the proper committee of the House of Representatives when the credentials of the said GEORGE W. LOFT are received.

The question of the validity of the election is now before the courts of this State, and an application to restrain the secretary of state of the State of New York from filing his certificate with the House of Representatives certifying the due election of the said GEORGE W. LOFT was denied pro forma at a special term of the supreme court, Albany County, and from that order an appeal has been taken. The learned justice at special term stated that it was a matter of grave public importance and should be passed upon by the appellate courts as speedily as possible.

Very respectfully, yours,

GEORGE EDWIN JOSEPH.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has investigated this preliminary proceeding and, unless the House determines otherwise, on the certificate Mr. LOFT ought to be sworn in and the papers in the case referred to one of the Elections Committees.

Accordingly, Mr. GEORGE W. LOFT, Member elect thirteenth New York district, took the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will refer the papers in the case to Elections Committee No. 2.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as that case has been referred to the committee of which I am a member, I wish to ask, in the absence of the chairman and the ranking member—I am third on the committee—whether I shall endeavor to obtain a meeting of the committee in the absence of those gentlemen?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair's own opinion is that the chairmanship temporarily of the committee runs down through the membership seriatim, and if the other two members—there are two other Democrats on the committee—

Mr. MANN. The rules specially provide for that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is true.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES—PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 24.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Tuesday, the 2d day of December, 1913, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman examined as to how far this session of Congress can provide for a joint meeting of the two Houses of the next session before it is ascertained that a quorum in each House is present, as will be ascertained by the call of the roll on Monday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, my investigation of the question leads me to believe that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet on Monday, not by virtue of the statute that calls the Congress together on the first Monday in December, but by reason of the fact that the House is in session, and that it is a continuous session, and that there will be no other session, but that next Monday will be a part of the session that began on the 7th day of last April.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Alabama says "from his investigation." I am quite sure, therefore, that he has not given the subject his usual careful study. The Constitution provides that there shall be a regular session of Congress commencing on the first Monday of December of each year unless Congress has otherwise provided by law. We have not otherwise provided by law, so that there will be a regular session of Congress commencing on Monday. That is not only the constitutional provision, but it is the construction of the Constitution which this House has made on more than one occasion. Not only is that the fact, but it will be found on investigation, although it does not settle the matter; that public documents now being printed are printed as of the Sixty-third Congress, second session, for presentation next week.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I remember this question was up some years ago. The issue came up then as to whether an adjournment a few minutes before the regular session was to begin constituted a new session. I recognize the fact that there was a disagreement as to whether it was a new session or not. At that time I opposed the granting of mileage for the new session, and took the position then that it was a continuous session. Of course, that was only my position, but the House itself at that time determined by a vote of the House that the Members were not entitled to mileage; at least, they voted down the mileage proposition on account of the new session. The gentleman says that the Constitution provides, unless it is otherwise provided by law, that there shall be a session on the first Monday in December, which is correct; but it has been determined by law otherwise, also. The law of the land, the Constitution, authorizes the President to call an extra session of Congress. He has called that extra session of Congress, and we are legally in session, and will remain in session under the law of the land until the two Houses of Congress, by a joint vote of the two Houses of Congress, determine to adjourn. There will be no resolution of adjournment of the two Houses of Congress, and therefore there will be no adjournment of this session of Congress, and for that reason I believe under the law and under the Constitution the session of to-day will be the session of next Monday. Of course, as to the printing of the documents, it is not material one way or another as to how they are printed, whether as of the first session or second session. When the precedent occurred in one of the Congresses several years ago—I have forgotten which one it was, but where there was only an intermission of a few minutes—it is true they did continue to print the documents of that Congress as of the first and second session, although, I believe, there was less than a minute's difference between the two sessions.

I do not think that that can affect this resolution in any way, even if the contention of the gentleman from Illinois is correct, with which I do not agree. This Congress is legally in session, and the two Houses of Congress, by joint resolution either at one session or another, can provide for the President coming here and delivering his annual address. In other words, if we had passed this resolution last October and intended to adjourn on the 1st day of November, I see no reason why the Congress on the last of October, before an adjournment, could not provide that when we met on Monday next there would be a joint session of the two Houses of Congress to receive a message from the President of the United States.

Any resolution that is introduced in the Congress does not die with the session. It lasts as long as the Congress remains in session; and any resolution passed by the concurrence of the two Houses that affects the meeting of the joint bodies would be just as effective if passed at an extra session, to apply to a regular session, as if you waited until a regular session came. So that I can not see, even if the gentleman's contention is correct, to the effect that next Monday begins a new session of Congress, how it possibly affects this resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will agree with me about the power of the two Houses to provide a joint meeting on Monday next, even if there be a new session. Of course, it has been the custom and the practice for many years, required under the Constitution, for a call of the roll to be had by States on the first day of a session. I take it that that will be done on Monday, notwithstanding the temporary opinion of my friend from Alabama that it is not required, and in addition a resolution will be passed on Monday, I take it, notifying the Senate that the House has met, that a quorum has developed, and that the House is prepared to do business, and that a committee will be appointed on the part of the House to join a similar committee on the part of the Senate to notify the President that the two Houses of Congress have met and have developed a quorum in each, and are prepared to hear any communication from the President. The custom has been for the President to notify that committee, which then notified the House, that the President was prepared to present a communication to the two Houses.

However, I have no objection whatever to making provision in advance for that, although it looks a good deal like placing the cart before the horse. But the gentleman from Alabama, having been very busily engaged otherwise recently, with the sympathy of most of us, I think is in error as to what took place before. When the special session, to which the gentleman refers,

SEAMEN'S BILL.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a reprint of Senate bill 136, the seamen's bill, so called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the seamen's bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONSERVATION.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of printing a speech delivered at Tulsa, Okla., on October 29, 1913, by Hon. SCOTT FERRIS before the International Dry Farming Congress on the subject of conservation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes concerning the Life-Saving Service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on the subject of the Life-Saving Service. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, recently there appeared in newspapers on several occasions statements attributed to the captain of a wrecked vessel to the effect that certain of the life-saving crews, or one of the crews, had purchased a shipwrecked vessel really at the expense of the owners. Believing that to be untrue, and that a gross injustice was being done the Life-Saving Service, I made inquiry of the Treasury Department, and I ask that the Clerk read in my time the following letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, November 26, 1913.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th instant inclosing a newspaper clipping in regard to the wreck of the schooner George W. Wells, which stranded near Hatteras Inlet, N. C., September 3, 1913. The charge is made in the article that the vessel was purchased by members of the Life-Saving Service, and you ask if life-saving crews are permitted to purchase wrecked vessels.

No person connected with the Life-Saving Service is allowed to purchase wrecked vessels or property, and keepers and members of crews are specifically forbidden to hold any shares, directly or indirectly, in any wrecking gear or company, or to have any interest in wrecking operations beyond such as their duties in the service involve.

In this particular case Capt. Joseph H. York, the owner of the wrecked vessel, was quoted in the Washington Post of September 15, 1913, as saying that life-savers had formed a combination to buy wrecked vessels and that he intended to bring charges in Washington against the men. A telegram was at once sent to Capt. York by this department, demanding that he substantiate his charge or withdraw it, but although diligent effort was made to reach Capt. York the department was unable to get any reply from him. It was expected, however, that he would file the charges as stated in the newspaper, and it was the intention, if the charges were filed, to have them thoroughly investigated. Nothing having been heard from Capt. York, however, a letter was addressed by the general superintendent of the Life-Saving Service to each of the three keepers of the life-saving stations nearest the place where the vessel stranded, calling attention to the charges and asking for a full reply to the complaint of Capt. York and for any information the keepers might have in regard to any of the allegations attributed to Capt. York in the newspaper article. Each keeper positively denied that there was any truth in Capt. York's complaint, and it is stated that the wrecked vessel was bought by Mr. Adolphus Burrus, a person in no way connected with the Life-Saving Service.

Under section 4 of the act of June 18, 1878, organizing the Life-Saving Service, the keepers and crews of life-saving stations are constituted public salvors, and they are given authority and are required by said act to take charge of and protect all property saved from shipwreck at which they may be present until it is claimed by parties legally authorized to receive it or until otherwise instructed to dispose of it by the Secretary of the Treasury. There are numerous provisions of the regulations of the Life-Saving Service intended to safeguard the public interest with respect to wrecked property. It is provided that no person connected with the service will be permitted to act as agent to sell for the owner, agent, underwriter, or any other person interested therein any wrecked property. It is also provided that the members of regular crews of stations are not entitled to salvage, it being a part of their duty to assist without charge in saving property from wrecked vessels so far as it can be done without interfering with the duty of saving life, which must always be the paramount consideration, and they are forbidden to solicit or receive any other compensation for the performance of such duty than that which the Government pays.

It is considered very unfortunate, as well as an injustice to the Life-Saving Service, that the false and misleading statements contained in the clipping referred to should ever have been published.

Very truly, yours,

BYRON R. NEWTON,
Assistant Secretary.

OVERFLOWED LANDS IN IDAHO.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the overflowed lands in Idaho by having printed a report of Mr. C. G. Elliott, chief of the drainage investigations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting, as required by section 397 of the statutes, a report of the public property in the Post Office Department on November 1, 1913 (H. Doc. No. 288); to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on examination and survey of Greenwich Harbor, Conn. (H. Doc. No. 289); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustration.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on examination and survey of Savannah Harbor, Ga., with a view to providing an adequate turning basin (H. Doc. No. 290); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustration.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 1, 1913.

(Legislative day of Saturday, November 29, 1913.)

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee again out of the blessed, hallowed influences of the Sabbath day, we trust with refreshment of mind and body, bringing to the duties of this new day fresh revelations of God. We take Thy name reverently upon our lips and ask Thy blessing upon us. With the thought of God, the infinite, the eternal, the Father of our spirits, we enter upon the duties of this day. We pray that every thought may be chastened by our own thought of God, and that Thy will may be revealed in the work Thy servants do in Thy name in this Senate this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that there are very few Senators in the Chamber, and I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Owen	Smoot
Bacon	Goff	Page	Sterling
Bankhead	Hollis	Perkins	Sutherland
Brady	James	Pittman	Swanson
Bristow	Johnson	Pomerene	Thompson
Bryan	Kenyon	Reed	Thornton
Burleigh	Lane	Robinson	Townsend
Burton	Lewis	Root	Vardaman
Chamberlain	McCumber	Saulsbury	Walsh
Chilton	McLean	Shafroth	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Weeks
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Williams
Cole	Nelson	Shields	Works
Commins	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Dillingham	Overman	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] is absent on public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a letter from Benjamin L. Fairchild, of New York City, relative to the Hetch Hetchy reservoir bill. The bill having been reported, I ask that the letter lie on the table. I also ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, November 29, 1913.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Permit me a word of protest against the Hetch Hetchy reservoir bill.

When this bill passed the House of Representatives it seemed to me beyond understanding how a majority could have been led into voting in favor of a measure which if enacted will seriously impair the beauties of the great Hetch Hetchy Valley and will prevent the use of this valley, the grand canyon, and the Tuolumne Meadows, as a national park by visiting American citizens.

Then it occurred to me as a possible explanation that while many Americans have been impressed with a knowledge of the Yosemite Valley only a few have had opportunity to learn of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, the grand canyon of the Tuolumne, and of the wondrous Tuolumne Meadows, which contain the headwaters flowing to the Hetch Hetchy Valley, and which are surrounded by the high and snow-capped mountains forming, in part, the sky-line of the Yosemite Valley.

My strong impressions of this region and the strong protest against its threatened spoliation arise largely from the trips which I have personally made with my son. With him I have traveled mule back over a thousand miles and more of mountain trails throughout the high Sierras, crossing and camping upon the several forks of the Merced, the San Joaquin, and the Kings Rivers, and along the Tuolumne River, and over the expanse of the Tuolumne Meadows, from which we have climbed to snow-capped peaks overlooking the Yosemite Valley.

I gave my son full opportunity to see with me his own country, including Alaska, before I took him to Europe. Among other places, for two successive seasons I traveled with him over the mountains and trails in California.

It thus happened that we became acquainted with the grandeur and beauties of the wonderful Yosemite National Park, which includes as important features the Hetch Hetchy Valley, the Tuolumne Grand Canyon, and the camping grounds of the Tuolumne Meadows. It also thus happened that our thoughts contemplated the future when Americans in large and increasing numbers would become better acquainted with this great playground of the Nation, and when the tide of American travel would turn westward across the continent to enjoy the wonders of our own country in preference to trips exclusively eastward across the Atlantic to foreign shores.

It was wise forethought for the Nation to establish the Yellowstone, the Glacier, and the Yosemite National Parks. Now it is proposed to close to the American public all that wondrous portion of the Yosemite Park through which flows the waters of the Tuolumne.

No one can visit this wonderful region without being aroused to a feeling of opposition and resentment against the present threatened spoliation. I wish it were possible that every Senator before voting on the proposition could have opportunity to view the grandeur and beauty of the scenery from which it is now proposed to shut out the American public. The defeat of the measure would then be assured.

Each Senator, no doubt, will receive descriptive sketches of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, of the Grand Canyon of the Tuolumne, and of the Tuolumne Meadows. It is not my purpose to enter into these detailed descriptions.

As one American citizen who has had opportunity to acquire knowledge at first hand, and to be inspired by the wonderful scenic beauties whose destruction for national park uses is now threatened, I wish only to enter a strong protest against this wanton scheme and to urge upon you to vote against the bill.

I have the honor to remain,

Yours, with respect,

BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WEEKS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Springfield; of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Hampden; of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of West Springfield; of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Hope Congregational Church, of Springfield; and of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Chicopee Falls, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the so-called antipolygamy bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Winchester, of the Woman's Club of Nahant, of the executive board of the Cabot Club, of Middleboro, all in the State of Massachusetts, and a memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Modesto, Cal., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Hetch Hetchy bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Federated Trades Council of Sacramento, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the city of San Francisco the use of the waters of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trustees of Crescent City, Cal., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction and maintenance of a breakwater or some other form of adequate, permanent, and substantial harbor improvement at the harbor site at Crescent City, Cal., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURTON. I present a petition signed by citizens of New Vienna, in the State of Ohio, favoring the repeal of the law exempting American vessels from the payment of Panama Canal tolls. The petition is comparatively brief, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, with one of the signatures.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, with one of the signatures, as follows:

NEW VIENNA, OHIO,
May 27, 1913.

To Hon. Senator BURTON and Congressman FESS:

The petition of the subscribers, citizens of New Vienna, Clinton County, Ohio, respectfully desire your aid in obtaining the repeal of that section of the law exempting American coastwise trade from the payment of Panama Canal tolls.

Believing the credit of our country demands the proceedings, and your petitioners will ever pray, etc.

W. C. HIGLEY AND OTHERS.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 3492) to amend section 237 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROOT:

A bill (S. 3493) granting an increase of pension to Isabella Reed; and

A bill (S. 3494) granting an increase of pension to Jane Meade Tiffany Porter (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. WEEKS. I introduce a joint resolution which I should like to have read and referred to the proper committee. It is very short.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) to provide for the transportation by sea of men, material, stores, and equipment for account of the United States, and of material, stores, and equipment for use in the construction or maintenance of the Panama Canal, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc. That hereafter the transportation by sea of (a) material, stores, and equipment for the use of the Army or Navy of the United States; (b) of the forces of the United States; (c) of materials, stores, and equipment from the United States for use in the construction of the Panama Canal; and (d) of all material and equipment for use on construction or maintenance of fortifications, harbors, navy yards, naval stations, or other works for account of the United States shall be restricted to vessels of the United States, and no others; and such transportation, when time will permit, shall be furnished by contract, after proper advertisement, by the lowest bidder complying with the requirements of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BURTON. The statement was made by the Presiding Officer on Saturday that the executive session on that day would be the last of the session. I so understood him, at any rate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand that there are some matters still ripe for executive session that ought to be disposed of this morning. I have none myself that I am especially interested in.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the unanimous-consent agreement that we have.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Monday, December 1, 1913, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7207) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way, etc., and that before adjournment on the calendar day of Saturday, December 6, 1913, the Senate will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

Under that unanimous-consent agreement I believe it is proper for the Chair to lay before the Senate that bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I agree with the Senator, but I thought the Senate was about to proceed with the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII. I think the proper course, first, will be to lay the consent agreement before the Senate. Under the terms of the consent agreement it is not necessary that the Senate shall continue exclusively to give its attention to that bill until the time for voting, but I think it ought to be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand the parliamentary situation; but if any Senator desires to speak upon the bill, then of course he has that right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I agree with the Senator that it should be laid before the Senate, and if anyone desires the attention of the Senate upon that bill he has the right to be heard.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, has House bill 7207 been laid before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the morning business is closed—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion that was made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw that motion, because I think it would interfere with the execution of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to rule that Monday, December 1, under the unanimous-consent agreement, has not yet arrived and will not arrive until 12 o'clock.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Chair's pardon. I did not hear what the ruling was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, which provides that on Monday, December 1, 1913, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, and so forth, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bill 7207, the Chair has ruled that that unanimous-consent agreement means at the beginning of the regular session of the Congress of the United States, and that the day mentioned in the agreement has not yet arrived. From that ruling of the Chair the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] appeals, and the question is—

Mr. SMOOT. May I just say a word? It seems to me, if the ruling of the Chair is sustained, that our record should certainly be changed. I call attention to the RECORD of Saturday, on page 6043, where the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] makes this motion:

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until Monday next at 10 o'clock a. m.

That is to-day. The Senate did not take a recess but adjourned to meet at 10 o'clock this morning. We met at 10 o'clock this morning under that adjournment; the Journal was read and morning business was transacted; so it seems to me, Mr. President, that under that action of the Senate this is the session of the Senate of December 1, and morning business having been concluded the unanimous-consent agreement is now in force.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not sure that there is anything in either the rules of the Senate or in any other authority which makes the hour of 12 o'clock the beginning of our legislative day, but it is certainly the universally recognized fact that 12 o'clock noon is the beginning of the legislative day. It is upon that fiction, Mr. President, that we assume the authority at the end of a Congress to sit in this Chamber on the morning of the 4th day of March up to 12 o'clock noon, although, under the law, the term of the House of Representatives and of a third of the Senators expire on the 3d of March; in other words, we do not observe the calendar day as the legislative day. The universal recognition is—and when I say "universal recognition" I mean in our practice here—that the legislative day begins at 12 o'clock and runs until—

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a minute and let me state my proposition before he interrupts me—the legislative day begins at 12 o'clock noon and runs until the succeeding day at 12 o'clock noon. If that is accepted as the rule of the Senate, the fact that the Senate on Saturday last adjourned to 10 o'clock to-day did not make the legislative day known as the 1st of December begin at 10 o'clock; but this is practically a part of the legislative day beginning Saturday last at 12 o'clock, and the legislative day of December 1 does not properly begin until 12 o'clock to-day. In other words, I do not think the regular session of Congress begins until 12 o'clock to-day. The situation is possibly a little awkward from the fact that it would have been better for the Senate to have taken a recess until 10 o'clock to-day, which was not done.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator—

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I will yield to him in one second, as soon as I am able to state the proposition. I repeat, it would have been better, undoubtedly, if we had taken a recess until 10 o'clock this morning; but, failing to do so, it was not the design of the Senate—we had no right to do it unless the other House agreed with us—to make the regular session begin at 10 o'clock to-day. What authority have we to make the regular session begin at 10 o'clock? The regular sessions of Congress are not regulated by the order of either House, but they are regulated by law, and the beginning of any regular session must necessarily be either by law or by the concurrent act of the two Houses fixing the time of meeting. One House could not meet at 10 o'clock as the beginning of the regular session and the other House meet at 12 o'clock as the beginning of the regular session. It would be an impossibility. Therefore I think that the ruling of the Chair is correct—that this is not a part of the legislative day of December 1, but is a part of the legislative day of November 30, in fact, and it ought to appear in the Record as a part of the legislative day of November 30. November 30, it is true, was Sunday, but there is nothing in the law which denies to Congress the right to sit on Sunday, and I have myself frequently seen Congress sit on Sunday.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BACON. I want, first, to yield to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], because he endeavored twice to interrupt me. I ask the Senator from Colorado to kindly forbear for a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator from Georgia this question: Has it not been the universal practice of the Senate in the past whenever they have held a session before 12 o'clock upon the day of a new session, if it ever happened—

Mr. BACON. It has happened before.

Mr. SMOOT. That they took a recess until 10 o'clock in the morning, or to whatever time the Senate might agree?

Mr. BACON. I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. And it was for that reason that I brought the matter to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. It would have been better, I think, to have done so in this instance.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Georgia refers to the regular session of Congress. By the Record I do not take it that the session of the Senate from 10 o'clock until 12 o'clock to-day is a part of the regular session of Congress. We are still in the first or extra session of the Sixty-third Congress—

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SMOOT. And shall be until 12 o'clock.

Mr. BACON. I think so, undoubtedly.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore it seems to me, Mr. President, that, notwithstanding what the Senate did last Saturday by way of adjournment, up until 12 o'clock to-day holds good, as if it had been any other day of a regular session, and whatever unanimous-consent agreement has been made should be followed out.

Mr. BACON. The unanimous consent, I understand though, refers to December 1.

Mr. SMOOT. It does refer to December 1.

Mr. BACON. And I say, in legislative understanding, December 1 necessarily has not arrived, and will not arrive, until 12 o'clock to-day. That is the point.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it has arrived by the record.

Mr. BACON. No; we can not have two legislative days of December 1; we can not make it arrive under the practice so well established as to be equivalent to law. December 1, which is fixed by law as the time of the meeting of Congress, does not arrive until 12 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, then we had no power whatever to adjourn to meet on Monday at 10 o'clock.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes; we had.

Mr. SMOOT. No; because the regular session begins at 12 o'clock; and that is the regular order.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. But the House of Representatives meets at 12 o'clock and the Senate meets at 12 o'clock; and if the position taken by the Senator is correct, then we are in the session of December 1.

Mr. BACON. By no means.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator wishes to interrupt me, I will yield with pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to say that I think the ruling of the Chair is correct and that the contention on the part of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is correct. I turn to the proceedings of a former session—that of 1903—and it appears that the Senate met at 11.30 a. m. on that day. I do not know whether it was on a recess motion or a motion to adjourn, but probably it was a recess motion, and that is the only essential point of difference. I think we ought to have taken a recess in this instance. In the case that I have cited morning business was transacted in the usual form and when the hour of 12 o'clock arrived the President pro tempore said:

The hour provided by law for the meeting of the first regular session of the Fifty-eighth Congress having arrived, I declare the extraordinary session adjourned without day.

That occurred at the hour of 12 o'clock, morning business having been gone through with in the usual form between the hours of 11.30 and 12 o'clock.

It seems to me clear that the intention when the unanimous-consent agreement was made was that at the beginning of the regular session the Hatch Hetchy bill should be taken up, and I feel sure there is no just ground for contention on this point, except that we made an inadvertent mistake in adjourning in place of taking a recess, and the record ought to be changed accordingly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

Mr. BACON. Pardon me just a moment. I will yield the floor in a second.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I only wanted to explain my position.

Mr. BACON. I do not want to trespass further upon the time of the Senate than to make the suggestion that the best way out of the difficulty is by unanimous consent to correct the record so as to make it appear that a recess was taken on Saturday instead of an adjournment.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the suggestion I made.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all I desire to have done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to state to the Senator from Georgia that no matter what language was used, whether the word "adjournment" or otherwise, really a recess was taken, because you can not adjourn a session to a time earlier than the beginning of the regular session. If that is not true, what will become of the nominations which have been sent in by the President? If this is a part of the regular session, the nominations not confirmed have expired, and the result would be the President would have to send in the nominations again. Consequently a motion to adjourn to a fixed hour before the time of meeting of the regular session becomes nothing but a motion for a recess, no matter what language is used.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. I wish, with the permission of the Senator, to ask unanimous consent that the record may be changed as I have indicated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, before that request is put, I desire to say to the Chair and to the Senate that my appeal from the ruling of the Chair was not intended for the purpose of delay. It was simply for the purpose of attempting to put the record straight. There is in my mind, with all due respect to the ruling of the Chair and to the views of the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from New Hampshire, still a question. On Saturday we did, as a matter of fact, adjourn; we adjourned to meet at 10 o'clock to-day; and it therefore became another legislative day.

I agree fully with the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia that the record had better be changed by unanimous consent, in order to conform to well-established legislative practice. If that course is to be pursued, so that the record can be made straight, I shall withdraw my appeal.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I did not question the ruling of the Chair, but stated that if the ruling of the Chair was correct then the record should be changed; and I am in full accord with the position taken by the Senator from Georgia in asking unanimous consent that the record be changed.

Mr. BACON. I now make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming having withdrawn the appeal from the decision of the Chair, the Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the record of the Senate of Saturday last be amended so as to show that the Senate took a recess until 10 o'clock on Monday. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the record will be corrected.

Mr. BACON. As this will be the last opportunity before the expiration of the extra session, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BURTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I beg to announce my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr.

FLETCHER]. He is absent from the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. LODGE] is absent on account of illness. I desire that announcement to stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Ashurst	Kenyon	Pittman	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Fern	Polindexter	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Lane	Pomerene	Stone
Bryan	Lewis	Reed	Swanson
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Thompson

Crawford	Jackson	Oliver	Tillman
Culberson	Jones	Penrose	Warren
du Pont	La Follette	Ransdell	Works
Fall	Lea	Shively
Fletcher	Lippitt	Simmons

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11.55 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess until 11.55 o'clock a. m., when it reassembled.

The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived,

The VICE PRESIDENT said: The hour having arrived at which, in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, the Congress of the United States is required to assemble in regular session, the Chair declares the extraordinary session adjourned sine die.
